There also are the fastnesses of infidelity, and atheism, and fraud, and political corruption, and multiform, hydra-headed, million-armed abominations all over the land. While the mightiest agencies for righteousness on earth are good and healthful newspapers and good and healthful books, and our chief dependence for intelligence and Christian achievement is upon them, what word among the more than one hundred thousand words in our vocabulary can describe the work of that archangel of mischief, a corrupt literature? What man, attempting anything for God and humanity, has escaped a stroke of its filthy wing? What good cause has escaped its hinderment? What other obstacle in all the land so appalling? But I cannot name more than one-half the battlements, the bastions, the intrenchments, the redoubts, the fortifications to be stormed and overcome if this country is ever taken for God. The statistics are so awful that if we had nothing but the multiplication table and the arithmetic, the attempt to evangelize America would be an absurdity higher than the Tower of Babel before it dropped on the plain of Shinar. Where are the drilled troops to march against those fortifications as long as the continent? Where are the batteries that can be unlimbered against these walls? Where are the guns of large enough calibre to storm these gates? Well, let us look around and see, the first of all, who is our Leader and will be our Leader until the work is done. Garibaldi, with a thousand Italians, could do more than another commander with ten thousand Italians. General Sherman, on one side, and Stonewall Jackson, on the other, each with ten thousand troops, could do more than some other generals with twenty thousand troops. The rough boat in which Washington crossed the icy Delaware with a few half-frozen troops was mightier than the ship of war that, during the American Revolution, came through the Narrows, gun at each porthole, and sunk in the Gate. Our Leader, like most great leaders, was born in an obscure place, and was a humble home, about five miles from Jerusalem. Those who were out doors that night said that there was stellation, and music that came out of the clouds, as though the front door of heaven had been set open, and that the camels heard his first infantile cry. Then he came to the fairest boyhood that mother was ever proud of, and from twelve to thirty years of age was off in India, if the traditions there are accurate, and then returned to his native land, and for three years had his pathway surrounded by blindness that he illumined, and epileptic patients to whom he gave rubicund health, a tongue that he loosed from silence in song, and those whose funerals he stopped that he might give back to bereaved mothers their only boys, and those whose fever pulses he had restored into rhythmic throbs, and whose paralytic limbs he had warmed into healthful circulation—pastor at Cernaum, but flaming evangelist everywhere, hushing crying tempests and tuning rolling seas into solid sapphire, and the rescue of a race submitted to court room filled with howling miscreants, a to a martyrdom at the sight of which the sun fainted and fell back in the heaven and then treading the clouds homeward like snowy mountain-peaks, till heaven took him back again, more a favorite to him he had ever been; but, coming again, is on earth now, and the nations are gazing to his standard. Following him were the Scotch covenanters, the Theban legions, the victims of the London Haymarket, the Piedmontese sufferers, the Pilgrim Fathers, the Huguenots, and uncounted multitudes of the past, joined by about four hundred millions of the present, and with the certainty that all nations shall huzzah at chariot-wheel, he goes forth, the monarch under his feet and the stars of heaven in his tiara—the Mighty Leader, he of Drumclog, and Bothwell Bridge, and Bannockburn, and the One who whelmed Spanish Armada, "Coming up from Edom, with garments from Bozrah, traveling in greatness of his strength, mighty to save, and behind whom we fall into line to do and march in the campaign that is to take America for God. Hosanna! Hosanna! Wave all the palm-branches! At his feet put down your silver and your gold, as heaven you will cast before him your crowns."

With such a Leader do you not think can do it? Say, do you think we can? Why, many ramparts have already been taken. Where is American slavery? Gone, and the South, as heartily as the North prays "Peace to its ashes." Where is the bestial polygamy? Gone, by the fiat of the United States Government, urged by Christian sentiment, and Mormonism having retreated in 1830 from Faye New York, to Kirkland, Ohio, and in 1838 retreated to Missouri, and in 1846 retreated to Salt Lake City, now dying from its superfluity of wives, will soon treat into the Pacific, and no basin smaller than an ocean could wash out its positions. Illiteracy going down under the work of Slater and Peabody funds, Sabbath schools of all the churches of denominations! Pugilism now made lawful by Congressional enactment, brutal custom knocked out in the round! Corruption at the ballot-box, law of registration and other safeguards made almost impossible! Churches swarming as large as the old ones, the enlarged supply to meet the greatly enlarged demand. Great cities, so often mentioned as great obstacles,—the centre of crime and the reservoirs of all iniquities,—are to lead the work of Gospelization. Who go most to home missions, to asylums, to ligious education, to all styles of humanitarian and Christian institutions? The cities. From what places did the most relief go at the time of Johnstown flood, and Michigan fires, and Charleston earthquake, and Ohio freshets? From the cities. What place will do more than any other place, by its contribution of Christian men and women and means, in this work of taking America for God? New York City. The way Paris goes, goes France. The way Berlin goes, goes Germany. The way London goes, goes England. The way New York and a couple other cities go, goes America. May the Eternal God wake us up to the stupendous issue!

Another thing quoted pessimistically is the vast and overtopping fortunes in this country, and they say it means concentrated wealth, and luxuriousness, and display, and moral ruin. It is my observation that it is people who have but limited resources who make the most splurge, and I ask you, Who are endowing colleges and theological seminaries? Did you ever hear of Peter Cooper, and James Lenox, and sainted William E. Dodge, and the Lawrences, Amos and Abbott, while I refrain from mentioning living benefactors who, quite as generous and Christian, are in this assembly, at this moment planning what they can do in these days, and in their Last Will and Testament in this campaign that proposes taking America for God? The widow's mite, honored of the Lord, is to have its part in this continental capture; but we must have more than that, and more right away. Many of the men that expect to get the blessing for bestowing the widow's mite will not get the blessing. In the first place, they are not widows, and in the next place, they have no "might."

The time is coming, — hasten it, Lord! — and I think you and I will see it, when, as Joseph, the wealthy Arimathean, gave for the dead Christ a costly mausoleum, the affluent men and women of this country will rise in their strength and build for our King, one Jesus, the throne of this American continent.

Another thing quoted for discouragement, but which I quote for encouragement, is foreign immigration, — now that from Castle Garden we turn back by the first steamship the foreign vagabondism, — we are getting people, the vast majority of whom come to make an honest living; among them some of the bravest and the best. If you should turn back from this land to Europe the foreign ministers of the Gospel, and the foreign attorneys, and the foreign merchants, and the foreign philanthropists, what a robbery of our pulpits, our court-rooms, our store-houses, and our beneficent institutions, and what a putting back of every monetary, merciful, moral, and religious interest of the land! This commingling here of all nationalities under the blessing of God will produce in seventy-five or one hundred years the most magnificent style of man and woman the world ever saw. They will have the wit of one race, the eloquence of another race, the kindness of another, the generosity of another, the aesthetic taste of another, the high moral character of another, and when that man and woman step forth, their brain and nerve and muscle an intertwining of the fibres of all nationalities, nothing but the new electric photographic apparatus, that can see clear through body mind and soul, can take of them an adequate picture. But the foreign population of America is less than eleven per cent. of all our population, and why all this fuss about foreign immigration?

But now what are the weapons by which, under our Omnipotent Leader, the real obstacles in the way of our country's evangelization, the ten thousand mile Sebastopols, are to be leveled? The first columbiad, with range enough to sweep from eternity to eternity, is the Bible, millions of its copies going out, millions on millions. Then there are all the Gospel batteries, manned by seventy thousand pastors and home missionaries, over the head of each one of whom is the shield of Divine protection, and in the right hand of each one the gleaming, two-edged sword of the Infinite Spirit! Hundreds of thousands of private soldiers for Christ, marching under the one-starred, blood-striped flag of Emanuel! On our side, the great and mighty theologians of the land the heavy artillery, and the hundreds of thousands of Christian children the infantry. They are marching on! Episcopacy, with the sublime roll of its liturgies; Methodism, with its battle-cry of "The sword of the Lord and John Wesley;" the Baptist Church, with its glorious navy sailing up our Oregons and Sacramentos and Mississippis; and Presbyterianism, moving on with the battle-cry of "The sword of the Lord and John Knox." And then, after awhile will come the great tides of revival, sweeping over the land, the five hundred thousand conversions in 1857 eclipsed by the salvation of millions in a day, and the four American armies of the Lord's host marching toward each other, the Eastern army marching West, the Western army marching East, the Northern army marching South, the Southern army marching North; shoulder to shoulder! Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! until they meet mid-continent, having taken America for God!

TREATING A PLEURISY PATIENT IN THE BOWERY MISSION FREE DISPENSARY.

The thunder of the bombardment is already in the air, and when the last bridge of opposition is taken, and the last portcullis of Satan is lifted, and the last gun spiked, and the last tower dismantled, and the last charger of iniquity shall have been hurled back upon its haunches, what a time of rejoicing! We will see it, not with these eyes, which before that will be closed in blessed sleep, but with strong and better vision, when the Lord once in awhile gives us a vacation among the doxologies to come down and see the dear old land which I pray may always be the lamb of the text, mild and peaceful, inoffensive, but in case foreign nations assail it, having two horns of army and navy strong enough to hook them back and hook them down, and a voice louder than a dragon, yea louder than ten thousand thunders, saying to the billows of Asiatic superstition and European arrogance, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed!"

The Mother of the Bowery Mission.

Mrs. Bird and her Labors for the Lost Men of New York—A Mission Laundry.

FOUR years have nearly passed since the remarkable missionary work conducted by Mrs. Sarah J. Bird became an essential part of the spiritual life of the Bowery Mission. Greatly beloved by all, her labors among the "Lost Boys of the Bowery"—as the outcast men and youths are affectionately called—have been the means, under Divine blessing, of reclaiming large numbers of them from lives of sin, and drawing them to the Saviour. In the colored illustration on the first page of this issue, a faithful representation is given of one of Mrs. Bird's Thursday night meetings of recent date. These gatherings, like those she holds on Sundays, are invariably crowded, and the men listen with rapt attention as the story of the Gospel falls from her lips—the old story, ever new, that gives hope to the hopeless, and invites the outcast and the wanderer to come of Jesus to save gives us courage and faith to see these sad, discouraged souls struggling for life.

"Should you pass our Bowery Mission any Sunday forenoon between ten and three o'clock, you would see men standing outside eagerly watching for a chance to get in. This is the only forenoon service exclusively for men held in our city. Every Sunday morning there are fifteen thousand men who come out of the lodging-houses in that locality, with no home, no friends, and no place to go. These are men who have wandered from God and home. They have come from every city on the face of the earth; if a man becomes engulfed in sin in any part of the world, his ambition is to get to the Bowery. This is the magnet that attracts the restless and vicious wanderer.

These men are often brought where they are surrounded by conditions that are beyond control. Parents and friends die, or there are hard fathers and unwise, thoughtless mothers; the boy leaves home and is soon stranded in a cheap Bowery lodging-house. I give the Gospel invitation to over forty thousand of these lost men every year; many of them men of fine education and birth, and compel them to come in through love and kind words. In this audience of lost men, the cry is going up continually to God for mercy, and when a man gets near enough to God to fall on his knees and plead for help, and God's spirit enters his life day by day, there is no transformation like unto it. I have never known such agony as I have seen when kneeling in prayer by the side of the poor prodigal, covered with rags and vermin, but he was the child of a King, and his Father accepted his penitence and saved him. How do I know he is saved? 'By their fruits ye shall know them.'

Although there is no perceptible abatement of interest in the winter, Mrs. Bird regards the summer-time as the harvest of her spiritual work. Many instances of remarkable conversions at these meetings have been recorded. Encouraged by past successes in the field of the Gospel, she continues her consecrated labors, devoting almost her whole time and much of her means to this work that lies very close to her heart and which has become a part of her life. The multitudes she has been instrumental in reclaiming regard her with love and veneration. "I put the ethics of Jesus above everything else in the world," she declares, and this is the keynote of her work and the secret of her success.

The past year has been marked by most encouraging spiritual results in the general work of the Bowery Mission. Every evening the Gospel meetings, led by Superintendent W. D. Hughes, have been large and enthusiastic, and at no time has there been a lack of witnesses to the saving power of the Gospel, as it is in Jesus. Another point which affords the greatest encouragement is that a goodly proportion of the converts remain steadfast.

In a material way, too, thousands are being helped at the Mission, whose clean, fresh, wholesome dormitories and spacious restaurant are of the greatest service in the work. A Night Laundry will shortly be opened by the Mission in the interest of cleanliness and comfort, and to teach the men self-respect. Rates will be nominal, viz: underwear, two cents apiece; shirts, three cents; stockings, one cent apiece. Thus even among the poorest of these waifs, dirt and vermin must give way before a system that holds absolute cleanliness as indispensable.

In the Mission's Free Dispensary (another new and highly appreciated branch of the work, lately introduced), the number of cases treated increases daily. Our illustration on this page (taken from life), shows a patient who has been stricken with pleurisy, being "cupped" by one of the attending doctors. It is beyond doubt that the Free Dispensary has already been the means of saving many lives and alleviating much suffering.

Less than a year ago, the first of the Bowery Mission Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meetings was held. These gatherings are now known in every part of the Union and hundreds of special requests for prayer are received every week and regularly presented and made the subject of supplication by the Converts. Already many remarkable answers to prayer have been noted, and every Sunday demonstrates afresh the all-prevailing power of earnest pleading in behalf of others, before the Throne of grace.

Mrs. Bird herself, writing of this remarkable work, says: "Sometimes, as I look down from my platform, I see some poor fellow kneeling in anguish of soul in front of me. No one but God knows the fight some of these poor fellows are having with temptations from without and from within, and only the mighty power Faithful and Unfaithful Servants.

Sunday School Lesson for March 22. Luke 12: 37-43. Golden Text, Eph. 5: 18. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

VERY often we find in the teaching of the New Testament the relation of Master and servant spoken of in connection with the Lord's coming. In writing his epistle to the Thessalonians, Paul says, "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven" (1. Thess. 1: 9, 10). It is servants to whom the pounds are committed with the charge, "Occupy till I come" (Luke 11: 27), and who, according to their faithful service, shall be appointed to positions in the coming kingdom of their Lord. It is servants who bid to the marriage feast of the King's Son (Matt. 22: 1-15), servants who are trusted with the talents to be put out at interest until he come to reckon (Matt. 25: 14-20). And our Lord's direction to his own people is, "Let your loins be girded about and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately" (Luke 12: 35, 36).

We are Servants, literally bond-slaves, the purchased property of our Master. Created to serve, redeemed to serve, indwelt by the Holy Ghost to serve our God. Until we fully take our true place as servants, Christ cannot say as he said to the twelve, "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you" (John 15: 15). Ignorance of God leads to presumption, and there are many who fretfully and pettishly complain that their prayers are not answered, when they have prayed without either faith, or reverence, or love, simply as an experiment whether by such prayers they could succeed in getting their own way when they have failed to obtain it otherwise. Such have never understood or accepted their position as the Lord's servants. God is infinitely superior to any of his creatures, and it becomes us as his servants, to bow down in deepest adoration that we are permitted to sustain any, the very humblest relation to him.

But there are faithful servants and unfaithful. The faithful servant sets the Lord always before him; he exists for God; it is the reality of his life, and explains everything in his conduct, that he is not his own, for he is bought with a price (1. Cor. 6: 19), and joyously acquiescing in this fact, he is all day long and every day at his Lord's disposal. Such a one works while he waits for his Lord, and all his waiting is in the midst of service which would be culminated and not interrupted if the Lord were to come. The work of a true servant is to know his Master's will and to do it. We can only do the will of God as we come to know it, and we can only know it as we enter into living communion with him in the study of the Word and the constant teaching of the Spirit of God, and put in practice at once that which we have learned. To know God's will without doing it is insulting to our God. Let us ask ourselves: Am I practically living as a true servant of the living God? Am I always ready to do his will? Am I doing it in every detail of my life? Is my life essentially in all its varied duties to my God? As a man of business, is my business a service rendered to God, and is his honor more to me than success in business? As mother of a family, is the guidance of my children a direct service to God, irrespective of whether I shall be understood by my friends? As a household servant, is my cooking and cleaning, my housework, my answering the door, a joyous offering of service to my God? As a clerk, do I, in my dealing with the customers, act as a servant of the Most High God, in truth, in patience, in all things, as Jesus would have acted in my place? Oh, it makes life another thing when God has taught us how everything, without exception, is a service to him in which we may occupy till he come!

An Offering of Service

"Let your loins be girdled about," ready for active service, and just as ready to desist from it if such is the Master's will. Not looking upon the service as ours, but as his. Oh, how many of the Christian workers of our day work as though the work were their right, their will, their promise, their kingdom, and they look on every interruption as a misfortune and as a wrong which they cannot deserve, since they live for the work of God which they have undertaken. In reality, they are in heart masters of the work, and in their prayers they seek from God help to enable them to do what they have undertaken. He is, in point of fact, the servant to minister to them. It is just these whose appeals for money are the strongest, and whose reproaches are the most constant, if they do not get the help they think they ought to get, because of the works they do. In their eyes the work everything must give way to it, it must be made to go, and everyone and everything must give way to it. Such may be the spirit of a master, but it does not become the servant with girded loins. The true servant has his eyes, not on the work but on his master. The work may come to a standstill if the Master should want him to leave it. If the money does not come in, he does not reproach his fellow-servants, but his eyes are toward his Master to know what he has to say in these circumstances. His light is ever burning, for his duty is to show others the way, and his attitude that of one who is ready on the watch, to open to his master at any, even the most unexpected moment. His loins are girded and his light is burning in view of His return. And "blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and shall make them sit down to meat and shall come and serve them." Even now, while we wait for him, he faithfully serves his girded and his shining ones. O, what histories of his exceeding faithfulness could some of his waiting ones tell of how their Lord has served them!

Must Go On,

"And if he shall come in the second watch or come in the third, blessed are those servants." If he does not come in the second watch, they do not count it a waste of time nor speak of their disappointment; their service, their vocation is to watch and to wait; they are bound by his time, not by theirs. If he does not come till the third watch, or even later, they have fulfilled their vocation during the waiting time, and it has been as truly his service as the time of active work. It would pay the master of a house to watch if he suspected that a thief were about to come and break in, and our Lord exhorts, "Be ye also ready; for in an hour that ye think not, the Son of Man cometh."

The Apostle Peter always sought to discover the bearing of what the Master said, and how far things would have to go. "Lord," he said, "speakest thou this parable unto us, or even unto all?" "Who then is the faithful and wise steward," Jesus answered, "whom his Lord shall set over his household, to give them their portion of food in due season?" It is for thee, Peter, to shew if thou art a true servant by doing true service. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Of a truth I say unto you that he will set him over all that he hath, he shall be no longer a bond-slave, but a king, for he shall reign. Only he who has learned to serve, as Joseph did in Egypt, will have the privilege of reigning with Christ. He has overcome as Christ has overcome, and is set down with him on his throne, as he is set down on his Father's throne" (Rev. 3: 21).

The true servant of Christ serves in his household and knows, by intimate direction from above, how to give the household of God "meat in due season."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

WATCHMAN AT THE GATE.

THE coming of the Lord was, in the Apostolic age, a much more potent and pervading thought than it has been since. Christ foresaw this fact and pictures the servant, saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming." He reproves him for saying so and for the laxity and inconsistent conduct which the thought produces. He wished his people to live in such a way that his coming would bring joy to them, not consternation. When the words were spoken, the disciples probably attached no definite meaning to them; but in a few short months, those words would be the most prominent and momentous of any the Lord had uttered. "When the Son of man cometh," were words which had a meaning, after the crucifixion and ascension, that they could not have had when Christ spoke. Then he was with the disciples, and, in spite of his warnings, they were looking forward to the time when he would sit on David's throne and be acknowledged King of Israel. But Christ's gaze was clearer and farther. Looking beyond the tragedy and the glory, he saw these few simple men alone in the world, with a great mission confided to their keeping. They would need some consolatory thought, some stimulating, energizing impetus to keep them vigilant and active in his service. The thought he gives them in the possibility of his return. In those days of slow traveling, the figure would be one perfectly familiar. The nobleman starts on his journey leaving his affairs in the hands of his servants. The time of his return is indefinite, but if the servants do their duty, they are ready to meet him whenever he may come and to give an account of their stewardship. The attitude required is not that of performing a task and [then sitting idly with folded hands and upturned eyes, waiting for the Master's coming, nor of spending time in watching for him; but of being continually busy in his service, having no associations, no occupations, that are inconsistent with devotion to the Lord's commission. Christ points out two dangers which were especially liable to assail his followers. They were to be on the watch against the disposition to oppression and self-indulgence. These dangers have not passed away. They are active all over the world. Even in schools and families, big boys tyrannize over the little boys, and the elder girls are often unjust to their younger sisters. There is also the same tendency still, to idleness and pleasure. Human nature has not changed. The follower of Christ has to be vigilant, that he does not get into habits which bring the soul into subjection to the body. Every boy and girl should gain as early as possible the power of controlling their physical propensities, lest they drift into the condition in which thousands of grown men are, of wishing to live clear lives, yet of being unable to do so. A man who cannot pass a certain saloon without going into drink, in spite of his resolve that he will not go in, is a pitiable creature. The boy is on his way to that condition who, knowing that it is time to get up in the morning and that he ought to get up, turns over in bed to take another nap. The watchfulness Christ enjoined should be inculcated in early life before the enemy has taken possession of the citadel. It is easier to keep him out than to turn him out.

"Blessed are those servants." The story is told of a pious peasant, who for many years never retired to rest without going the last thing to the window and looking at the sky to see if there was any sign of the coming of Christ. The first thing in the morning his eyes were similarly directed skyward, that he might see the first sign of the event he longed to witness. Although, he was disappointed, he continued his habit to the last. He was not to see his Lord appear, but was of those whose rising will not be prevented at the great day. The messenger of death summoned him and found him ready. The preparation that serves for the coming of the Lord, serves also for death.

If the good man of the house had known. Few people know themselves thoroughly. Many have failed in matters in which they deemed themselves strong. They were on guard against temptation to which they were prone, but did not watch against temptations to evil that were not dreaded. Peter, the boldest of the Apostles had, as the event proved, too much confidence in his courage. At a council of war, the commander of a besieging force astonished his officers by proposing to attack the strongest part of the fortifications. One of the officers urged that the assault be made on a point that was evidently weak. "No, no," said the commander, "they expect us there and are continually on the watch. We will attack the fort where we are not expected. I know just what will occur. The commander always takes a nap after his dinner. When we attack, a messenger will be sent to tell him. He will hate to be disturbed and will send his secretary to obtain confirmation. Before the secretary can return and convince him and get him to come and take the direction of the defence, the fort will be ours." The result was as the commander predicted.

To eat and drink and be drunken. An army officer now retired relates an incident of the early part of the war, intentionally concealing the names of the persons and places that he may not wound living relatives of the dead. He says that he was attached to a regiment which had penetrated into a dangerous district in which the enemy was known to be in superior force. A strong detachment would arrive on the morrow but until it came the regiment was in peril. Scouts were sent out just before nightfall and reported no enemy within sight for miles. The officer in command was not the regular colonel of the regiment. Feeling himself secure both from the enemy and from inspection by the General, he determined on a night of carousal. Long abstinence had produced a strong desire for drink and hilarity. Not long after sunset the fun began. Drink and songs were in full swing and nearly everyone of the party in the officer's quarters was intoxicated. Between midnight and one o'clock there was discord ending in a drunken fight between four of the officers present. When it was at its height the cry that the enemy was approaching was heard. There was no one fit to command. It was a rout, everyone flying for his life. The officers were all killed or taken prisoners and very few of the rank and file escaped.

Shall find so doing. No distinction is made as to the class of duty to be performed. The duties of some of us are very humble, but the fact will not deprive us of the commendation of the Lord. If we are found doing our duty when he comes, that is sufficient. In the old fable of the mill the question is put to the mechanism, "Do you not feel degraded by grinding beans instead of fine flour?" The answer of the mill was: "It is no concern of mine what I grind. My duty is to grind whatever my owner gives me to grind. My honor is not in doing fine work but in doing as well as I can whatever is given me to do."

THOUSANDS SAVED FROM STARVATION.

The Splendid Work the Relief Fund is Accomplishing in Armenia's Stricken Cities—Reports from the Missionaries—Miss Kimball's Cheering Letter.

AMID the general gloom and sadness that hang over Armenia, at the present time, there is one broad beam of light that affords consolation and encouragement. It is the general aid and Christian sympathy so promptly received from Dr. Kimball is as follows:

"Since the credit for the work here is so largely due to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, I may permit myself to say that the relief work is doing magnificently! We are proud of it as a proof to this people that while so-called Christian nations may, for reasons best and only known to themselves, fail to come to the rescue of their avowed proteges, still the individual Christian conscience is a real thing, and one to be relied upon to follow out the precepts of its divine Master. This succor to this deeply-afflicted people is really the only thing that keeps any courage in them or any hope. From both England and America the generous outpouring of money and sympathy is the one bright spot in their horizon. And conspicuous amid all the benefactions is the work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. As soon as we had assurance of the first $10,000, we pushed forward the work with renewed energy and vigor.

"This extension of work soon made larger quarters necessary to both do the business involved and to accommodate the crowds waiting for work or other help. During the warmer weather they could stay out of doors; but it was cruel to keep them standing for hours out in the cold and often stormy weather. To meet this want we found a very admirably adapted house, three stories, with large halls that will hold several hundred people, and give convenient office room for the various departments—all for the magnificent sum of $6.60 a month, and the owner is in great need of the rent to supply daily necessities. So here we have on the ground floor a store-house for raw material and the bed-making department; while the wide halls give standing-room for the waiting crowds; on the second floor are offices for receiving, weighing, and distributing the work of the spinners, weavers, and knitters; on the third floor is the cutting and sewing department, where a corps of cutters prepare the garments to be given out to women to make up; and on the same floor are the offices for the distribution of clothing and of bread tickets, and of the general management, where all new applicants are referred and their cases acted upon. Thus the work is well systematized.

"All applicants for help of any kind are required first to bring a letter of recommendation from the 'district-men' of the quarter in which they live; if city people, from the Village Refuge Committee, if of that class. Clothing is usually given simply on these recommendations; but the names of all applicants for work or for bread are recorded, and each day's list is given next day to our examiners, who go to the houses and make thorough investigation, leaving a signed memorandum of their findings with the applicant, who then presents it at the central office and receives help according to the testimony of need rendered by the examiners.

"The demand for work does not abate, and we are adding daily to the thousand workers in the Industrial Bureau reported January 1st, at the rate of from ten to twenty. Last week's pay-roll shows 1210 persons paid in total $445. The cost of the raw material is slightly less than the wages, so that with the cost of rent and other administrative expenses, we may put the cost of the Industrial Bureau at about $900 a week. The work accomplished by this expenditure also furnishes a living to considerably more than 5000 people, and at the same time to supply clothing without further cost (except that of the sewing of the made-up garments), to the department of Clothing Distribution. In this department, from Jan. 1st to 21st, was distributed 6895 pieces, including all kinds of underwear, stockings, 2608 goods in the piece, a few suits of men's clothing, and a considerable quantity of bedding.

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S bakeries are forging along magnificently and are the great famine-break-water to the entire community. There is no other source of supplies for the people, as the contributions of the Armenians themselves were exhausted before the Armenian Christmas, and they turned all their beneficiaries over to us. These cost about $480 a week, and the demand is constantly urgent for increase—a demand which we are meeting in as prudent a way as possible. We have seven weeks before us still: and at the end of that time we earnestly hope that the generosity of the Christian people at home and in England will still support us in helping the villagers who have been robbed of all their goods to go back to their homes and fields with something to begin life on. Five dollars will buy an ox. Seed corn will be needed, and other help to enable them to become self-supporting. Last Saturday was the Armenian Christmas, and on the day before we made special effort to see that as many as possible were supplied with the bare means of existence. On that day nine thousand were actually provided for through the different departments, and untold suffering relieved. We bless continually the generous people who make this work possible; and the Armenian people, though unable even to thank their benefactors directly (so strict is Government espionage) still do not fail in constant expressions of the profoundest gratitude.

G. N. KIMBALL."
Rev. W. N. Chambers writes from Erz-

IN FRONT OF OUR RELIEF HEADQUARTERS AT VAN.

Destitute Armenians waiting for Relief Cards—Turkish officials in front.

room acknowledging receipt of the contribution from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund of $2000 for relief work in Erzroom and Erzincan:

Allow me to thank you most heartily in the name of the thousands of suffering people here for the generous gift. Two days after the massacre of Oct. 30, I sent a telegraphic message to friends in Constantinople, urging an appeal for relief. The Armenian Relief Fund later assigned us $1000. I formed a commission by calling in three Armenian gentlemen, and we began work at once. The English consul, Mr. Cumberbatch, joined us. We have distributed in this city one hundred mattresses and coverlets, with a considerable amount of clothing and fuel. We are feeding daily 2600 persons. We issue bread tickets, one to each family, to be held for a week.

Our agents in Erzincan work on almost the same principle. There in the city we are feeding 1000 daily. The call for bedding, clothing, and fuel is very great. In the villages we are distributing a small quantity of wheat. We have men on this Erzroom plain distributing 500 bushels of wheat to 2000 people, i.e., one-fourth bushel to each person. There are at least 4000 people on the plain in need.

Our $1000 were expended and we were clamoring for more from Constantinople, for this work must go on, so I can assure you your gift comes in most opportunely. The distress is indescribable. The gratitude of the recipients of assistance is deep and most touching.

Rev. W. S. Dodd, of Talas, writes:

A Relief Expedition on a small scale was carried out by Mr. Fowle and Mr. Wingate who visited the villages in the Gemerek region about a month ago. They took several wagon-loads of clothing and bedding, and materials to be made up. The local government in Cesarea was very cordial in appointing and gave an ample military guard to protect them on the way. On arriving at Gemerek they made a storehouse of the dwelling of one of our native brethren there appointing him custodian of it. They then visited the villages within a radius of fifteen miles or so, seeking out the most needy families only in each place, and trying to give enough to cover those that were absolutely naked. In some villages they found that the stories told were exaggerated, in other places "absolute nakedness" expressed the absolute truth. Many families were sleeping in their straw-bins (for they have no hay in this country), as that was the warmest place they could find.

But in about a month from now the want will begin to show itself most imperatively. In preparation for that we are now seeking to buy up a stock of wheat and flour, and have it ready to use as soon as we are called upon for that form of aid. Seed for sowing will have to be furnished to many, and until the harvest time in the summer hundreds will have to be fed.

Rev. J. L. Fowle, Cesarea, writes:

Our preacher in Gemerek reports the destitution as increasingly appalling. We have sent orders that he purchase wheat and flour and are also sending some bales of cotton to be worked up into cloth. This latter will give them relief on the "self-help" plan.

In a recent issue of a native Armenian journal, is a letter dated Van, Jan. 15, which says:

The missionaries, especially those connected with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are supplying the sufferers with food and with clothing also, because they are almost naked, and the sum of the relief given weekly at Van alone amounts to about $1500. The refugees were supplied with shelter, fuel, and other necessities by the Armenian Committee, but the funds of that committee were exhausted some time ago, and the burden of the relief was transferred to the missionaries. At the present rate, the fear is that the relief of the missionaries may come to an end at a time when the refugees most need help, because when the roads are open and the snow begins to melt, hundreds and perhaps thousands more sufferers will crowd Van, and intensify the present distress. The fund sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been a God-send, and has really saved very many lives.

Three notable martyrdoms are related by a writer in the Missionary Herald. "The work of Rev. Garabed Kuludjin, the Protestant pastor at Sivas, was increasingly good. His wife had been for years a much prized and beloved teacher in the Girls' Boarding School at Marsovan, and their own four girls, the oldest not yet sixteen, had profited well by such a mother. On November 10 he preached to his flock an impressive sermon from the text: 'But there shall not a hair of your head perish.' On November 12, at noon, the crash came, shutting him with Armenian companions in an upper room at the khan. They were soon robbed and left, while the storm was raging outside. The pastor led them in prayer and watched till toward evening, when another squad of Moslems came to kill them. Something in the composed manner with which the pastor met them made them hesitate and offer him liberty on condition of denying his faith. He thought of his wife in delicate health, and of their daughters, but he answered: 'I not only believe Christ, but also spend my life persuading others.' 'Then we must kill you,' they said; and when he raised both hands toward heaven as a sign of settled trust they shot him twice. Next morning his body was found by friends stripped of nearly all clothing and tossed into the back yard of the khan. As the massacres were still in progress, he could not be taken to the unvalled Protestant burial ground, but joined the eight hundred who were piled into one huge trench at the Gregorian cemetery, whither an Armenian priest crept, to read one short prayer and leave them to earth and to God. Rev. Sarkis Merkashian, for years pastor at Choonkoosh, in the Harpoot field, with his family was robbed and burnt out of home and wounded. After that, Moslems tormented him three days to accept their faith. He had his wife and also six children to think of, but he remained true and was finally put to death. Fourteen faithful native preachers are known in that one field to have thus sealed their last sermon with their heart's blood. Hagop Pattain, a humble member of the Marsovan church, had made himself specially beloved by those of all beliefs during the last cholera epidemic in that city. November 15 the storm burst on him but found him prepared. As the blows of a murderous axe were falling on his head an acquaintance heard, through a door ajar, his last words: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do;' and then: 'Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit.'

All contributions to the Relief Fund will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Contributions during the week are acknowledged on page 214 of this issue.

REFUGEES FROM VAN PROVINCE.

extended by the good people of this country through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund and other sources, which alone kept alive the fires of hope in the hearts of the devoted missionaries and of great multitudes of destitute Armenians who must have perished by thousands, had not this God-given help come to their rescue. On this page, we print in the latest mail reports from four of sixteen CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Stations, which show how valuable and fortunate this aid has been. It takes a long time—usually a full month or more—to get a letter to reach the United States from Armenia, owing to the Turkish government's espionage of the mail service, and these letters were penned the work which they relate has been practically doubled. This is especially true of relief work in Van, where Miss Kimball is now feeding over 16,000 refugees, employing six large bakeries, besides the Industrial Bureau, which latter alone has over one hundred employees in all its various branches.

During the week, another remittance of $500 has been cabled to the field from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. $2000 to Harpoot, and $1000 to Marsovan—the places where it is unquestionably most severely needed.

The interest in the work is widening rapidly, and already a large number of pamphlets descriptive of Armenian troubles and explaining the distress, have been put out free by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD churches, church societies, and individuals interested in raising funds for the work.

Activity in well-doing is contagious, and the example afforded by the contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund has stimulated sympathy in many parts of the world. We have already received contributions to the Fund from a number of foreign lands. The latest is announced in a letter from the Countess Elisabeth of Frankfort-on-Main, wherein that noble lady states that "Pastor Lohmann, of this city, has placed 1500 marks at the bank of Marklin & Co., Frankfort, for the relief of the Armenians." She desires to inform her by cable to whom it could be remitted in Constantinople. The necessary instructions have been telegraphically requested.

Accompanying Miss Kimball's latest letter was a photograph of the scene in front of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Headquarters at Van, which is reproduced on this page. In the immediate foreground is a group of Turkish officials maintaining order behind them are the refugees to the number of several hundreds. This is a constantly changing crowd, those who are supplied with tickets being replaced by others as quickly as possible. A similar scene can be witnessed at all hours of the day at each of the six bakeries, and also in front of the Industrial Bureau. The let-

A Lenten Feast.

WELL," said Cynthia, folding up her coarse blue work, ticking it was, a stripe of white and a stripe of blue, and she was making overalls for father to wear in the factory, "You and Laura Jane may keep Lent if you want to. I won't."

"Nobody's asked you to," answered mother, who didn't like Cynthia's snappy way of speaking, "but if the girls would enjoy observing it, nobody's to hinder them. They can fast or they can feast. I won't interfere."

"Fasting's not a means of grace to me," retorted Cynthia, going out to the kitchen and stirring up flap-jacks for supper. It was a cold night, and father and the boys would come home sharp-set. If it hadn't been for Cynthia, I don't know what they would have done, for the rest of us hated cooking and all the rough work and the hard work fell on our grave, elder sister, who was as prickly as a chestnut burr.

"She grows crosser every day," said Laura Jane to mother, and mother sighed. Mother could not bear our "scrapping" as brother Ned called it, a sort of nagging and fussing that was not quite quarreling, but broke the peace as much to the purpose, as if that had been what was intended.

"Cynthia's sweet at the core," mother answered, "if she has an abrupt way. She gets that from her grandfather."

"We all get a lot from the people back of us, don't we," said Laura, musingly. "If we could only reform our ancestors what angels of goodness we should be; I often think we are not responsible in this house for our odd tempers, when there was Uncle Will, as queer as Dick's husband, and Grandmamma Lowe, with her eccentric temper, and oh! I don't know, it's all a muddle."

"Each of us," said Cynthia, coming in with a plate of steaming cakes, golden-brown and toothsome, and speaking in a soft sort of tone which surprised us all, "Each of us must answer to God for herself, and for himself. I've been crusty and horrid, but I'll try to do better, and you girls must help me."

That was the beginning of our Lenten feast. We had been a very outspoken family, priding ourselves on our candor, and boasting that there was nothing concealed, we always spoke our minds and that was the end of it, forgetting that there may be as much sin in the brutal speech that hurts like a blow, as in the deceit which smiles and hides a sneer.

If ever you have tried it, you know that it isn't easy to set up a new order of things in a home. Twenty times a day we bit our tongues, to keep back sharp stinging words, again and again Cynthia rose from her seat and went to the kitchen or upstairs, and staid out of sight till she had herself in hand. Father is a very unobserving man, and he took no notice for a long while, but one day he looked around quizzically and said, "Children, you're all coming out in new-fashioned garments, aren't you?"

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"Seems to me, you've all got angel robes tucked under your gowns. Things go as smoothly now, as skates over ice. It's just fine, and I hope you'll keep it up. Perhaps," said father, "it's too good to last."

I don't think of father's words, had anything to do with it, but the very next day we got into a breeze of discussion which set the whole family by the ears. Mother went to her room and cried, Laura pouted, Cynthia slammed the doors, and the weather was freezing all round the house. A more uncomfortable party than we were as we sat down with our sewing in the afternoon you don't very often find.

Just as our clock struck the half-hour, the bells of St. John's rang out in sweet, silvery chimes for the afternoon service which was held there every day in Lent. The church was so near us, that though we did not belong to that particular communion we somehow claimed the church, and had got to knowing who came in and went out among its people. Indeed, we often slipped into a back pew ourselves and heard a homily, which is a sort of short sermon, from the good rector, and we liked the music. There is something grand in an organ, which floods a great building with melody, and one hears the psalms and hymns long after their sound has died away.

I couldn't stand it in the house that afternoon, so I put on my hat and went out the door, shutting it very quietly, and just own door, we hugged and kissed one another, and confessed our faults, and promised amendment.

"The fact is," said Cynthia, "we've got to watch out for our tempers. Our besetting sin lies there. And now, I'm going to get up a regular company tea, and we'll have a Lenten feast, and make it a milestone of good resolutions."

So she did. We had out the finest white table-cloth with the clover leaf pattern, and the best white and gilt china, and the cut glass dish for preserves, and the real silver spoons and coffee-pot, the one that's been in the family a hundred years. Father and the boys were amazed at the state of things, as it wasn't Christmas or a birthday; but they bore up, even when persuaded to put on their best coats and neck-ties, as was most uncommon in their case. We had waffles and honey, fried chicken, hot biscuits, peach preserves and current jelly, and when supper was over, Laura went to the melodeon and played, and we all sang again,

Blest be the tie that binds.

So ended our Lenten feast.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

India's Sacred Rivers.

THERE are several rivers, beside the Ganges, that are regarded as sacred in India. Among the number are the Yenna and the Krishna. Led by the native priests to believe that by the mere act of bathing in these streams they are ragged. Sometimes we used to see him the street, with rags innumerable upon his person. In America we should have called him a crazy man; but ideas differ in different lands. Here he was a saint in whom one of the gods dwelt. When his saintship came to be known by the people, he was honored and worshipped everywhere. Men who ought to have known better would, on seeing him proach, leave their work, and run and prostrate themselves at his feet. His rags were removed, and he was clothed with robe of purple. No expense was spared to supply all his wants, and he was attended by two servants, furnished by the Prince of Ound.

"This rag-man, crazy-man, saint, did He had said previously, 'Wherever I go there let my tomb be built.' He died in the city, and there the people wished to bury him and erect a tomb which should ever after be an object of worship. The municipal officers interfered and ordered the body to be removed from the city. The Prince of Ound was summoned from his capital twenty-five miles away, and came as quickly as his horses could bear him. He owns a large place here, and he offered a corner of his compound for a burial place. But the officers of the court were inflexible. The Prince telegraphed to the Governor in Bombay, but permission was refused. So the body of the man-saint was carried in great honor to Mowli to be buried. And now a new temple will, doubtless, be added to the large number already existing at Mowli, and more gold will be added to the 330,000,000 in India."

Christ's Vertical Line.

IN a recent address on the Parables of Dives and Lazarus the following remarks were made by Rev. J. H. Jett, successor to the late Dr. Dale of Birmingham, Eng.: There is a very striking contrast between the way in which society is divided into sections by the world, and the way in which it is divided by Christ. The world takes society, and draws across it two horizontal lines, and says that all above the first line we call the Upper Classes. The second horizontal line has above it the Middle Classes, and all below the second line are called the Lower Classes. The world divides society into three horizontal sections—Upper, Middle, and Lower. Now the strange thing is that Jesus Christ never drew a horizontal line. He takes society, and draws a vertical line throughout the whole scale, dividing society into sections, and calls the one the right hand, and the other the left. He calls one the sheep and the other the goats. If I look at the right hand of Christ's vertical line I find the classes: rich and poor, working-men and millionaires. If I look at the left side of the vertical line I find the same mingling of classes. The world divides horizontally, according to money; Christ divides vertically, according to character. The world puts Dives in the upper class; Lazarus in the lower class; Christ puts Lazarus on the right hand, Dives on the left. Christ never respected money. He never bowed the knee to money; he never did homage to wealth. What he never did was never wants his followers to do. The man who prostrates his manhood before wealth is doing what our Lord calls bowing the knee to Mammon; and he who does so defiles his soul. Do homage to character, says Christ. But before money—before wealth—money—the teaching of the parable tells us to stand erect. Who needs money? The Church? The real wealth of the Church consists not in the length of its purse, but in the number of its redeemed and consecrated men and women, the men who will acknowledge no supremacy except that of virtue, goodness, and truth. Christ never bowed the knee to rich men, but on the other hand Christ never despised a man because he was rich. He looked behind the man's possessions to the man himself. He probed through a man's poverty, wealth, or condition, by searching questions of this kind—How does he regard his possessions? What is his conception of their source and use? How does he discharge his obligation to the sore need that crouches at his gate? How does he regard his health? If he belongs to the Lord's aristocracy, the aristocracy whose tenure of their nobility survives the grip of death, he will regard it with an unselfish and sacred reverence.

THE GREAT TANK, OR SACRED BATHING-PLACE AT STRIVILLIPUTTER, INDIA.

as I took my seat the prayers began, "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him." I bowed my head and made a little prayer of my own. When I looked up, somebody had come into the seat beside me, and who should it be but Cynthia, who gave a faint smile at the sight of me, reaching out her hand and squeezing mine under my coat. A few minutes later, with a whirl and a rustle, and an unlucky movement that upset a prayer-book, a footstool and an umbrella, in followed Laura Jane, and as she never did anything without more or less fidget and bustle we were almost ready to laugh, church service as it was. But we restrained ourselves, and the tears were nearer than the laugh was, when presently who should tiptoe timidly and bashfully into the sanctuary but the sweet little tired mother, and she came into the same pew. There we all sat, taking hold of hands and joining with our voices in the old hymn:

Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts and hands in love,
The Lord is in the land of the living,
Is like to that above.

Cynthia gave me one look. She has dark-brown eyes that can be eloquent, and her look expressed a volume. The hymn went on, old and familiar, and by-and-by we reached the stanza which runs,

When we are all one part,
In love and peace we'll meet.

Mother's voice dropped out here, and she looked sad and drew her veil over her face. I knew what she was thinking of. She never forgets the son who died in Memphis, and the twin girl, Laura Jane's twin, who went when only five years old.

By the time the service was over, we all went soberly home, and once inside our rendered free from their past sins, the credulous people flock thither in almost countless numbers, at certain seasons of the year. While the Ganges is the most sacred of all, those who live too far away seek some other sacred stream. At the junction of the Yenna and the Krishna at Mowli, multitudes of devotees may be seen bathing in the full expectation of winning the pardon of the gods by the act. Dead Hindus are also taken there, some to be washed and buried beside the twin rivers, and others to be burned on the ghats, or open-air crematories, after which their ashes are strewn on the bosom of the stream and quickly disappear.

Our illustration on this page presents a view of one of the famous "sacred bathing-places," the great tank of Strivilliputter, in the district of Tinnevely, South India. This tank has sometimes been called, "The Sea of Milk."

Granite steps lead down to the waters' edge, and in the early morning hundreds of men and women gather to bathe and to worship the sun. The water is stagnant and dirty, though it is esteemed as specially holy. Here the people wash not only themselves but also their clothes. Even the Brahmans, who regard the touch of a person of low caste as pollution, bathe in the same tank, though they have a special section set apart for their use. The cost of building these bathing places is immense, yet the people erect them in many parts of India because they think that, at any cost, provision should be made for the removal of sin.

"Three or four years ago when we went into Satara," writes Mr. Bruce, a missionary, "we used to see, sitting in the verandah of his house, an old man covered with Florida's Winter Flowers.

Bows of Bloom and Gardens of Perfume in February and March.

ALMOST every climate is represented within the borders of our native land. To the great multitude of those who have never traveled outside of the State in which they were born, it seems incomprehensible that, while they are looking out on snow-clad hills and icy rivers, somewhere else, yet under the same sunny flag, there should be millions of our Americans who are enjoying the floral delights peculiar to June in our Middle and Northern States. In Florida, at the present time, the face of nature is like a summer fairy-land. A short distance from St. Augustine, one enters the sub-tropics and revels in the attractions of a wonderful part of Uncle Sam's possessions, where the wealth of nature seems to have been lavishly spread for man's enjoyment. Luxuriant forests, musical with many bird-voices; river banks lined with grey palmetto, magnolia, palm, orange and banana trees, with abundance of bloom; beds of lush begonias growing untended; natural grassy lawns that put cultivated lawns to the blush for smoothness and beauty of verdure; fragrant pine-apples growing here and there a cottage romantically situated and embosomed by flowers that nearly hide the structure from view.

Our photograph shows such a restful spot in that Southern Eden of ours, where, apart from the busy, rushing world of the day, one may find a calm retreat, with the most delightful surroundings that can be imagined. Roses, almost as large as young cabbages, yet as perfect in form and delicate in perfume as the famed roses of Kashmir or Gulistan. In the air, which at this season is aromatic and bracing, there is a suggestion of the mingling of many perfumes—the first tribute of the flowers to the spring. It is not an unusual sight to see Florida gardens full bearing in February, with beans, peas, and tomatoes, while along the walks the flower-beds shine with color and enrich the atmosphere with their incense.

Every passing season adds to the popular knowledge concerning this wonderful garden State, which, together with its rich tribute of natural beauty, possesses restorative qualities that make its climate almost desirable one for invalids, who find in this peninsula, which is like a vision of paradise let down for our special delight.

Costly Hospitality.

One of the greatest causes of the decadence of the virtue of hospitality is the toil and expense of exercising it. Modern housewives do not care to undergo the labor and anxiety necessary in entertaining company. We doubt if they are any happier than they would be if they had larger households and more frequent company. One may serve God with plate and cutlery and brawn as certainly as she can with a psalm-book or a reading from Shakespeare. And it is not necessary to make costly entertainment every time we have a friend to dinner. Quite as much depends, indeed, upon the banqueters as upon the banquet, and if there be cleanliness, appointment and cheerful presiding at the table, what matter if the fare is plain? True hospitality consists much more in the spirit than in any outward show. We are commanded to care for others, and when we serve by entertaining we are doing one of the noblest duties required of us. Christian entertainment ought not to be a bondage, but a delight.

Where Clever Women Led.

It is frequently asserted by writers that woman has not distinguished herself in the line of invention and that her originality is inferior to that of man. However that may be, as a rule, there are many bright exceptions, and some of these, in justice to our modern mothers, wives and daughters, have been enumerated by a painstaking writer. Silk-spinning was first done by a Chinese woman. Lace-making on pillows was the invention of Barbara Uttman, in Germany, three hundred years ago, when the country was on the verge of financial ruin. The art spread with rapidity, and so much money was brought into the country by this means that the trouble was averted. The horseshoe machine, which turns out a shoe every three minutes, was a woman's work. Mrs. Manning and Elizabeth Smith, both of New Jersey, have invented and improved agricultural implements. The paper pail, rotary loom, furnace for smelting ore, screw crank for steamers, fire escape, self-fastening button, danger-signals, and many others, all originated in the brains of women, also many improvements in sewing machines and their attachments, and a machine for sewing leather. The deep-sea telescope was invented by Mrs. Mather, and perfected by her daughter. By its use wrecks can be inspected, and the bottoms of large vessels seen without bringing them to the dry-dock. A clever woman saw the need of a handy paper bag, and invented the satchel-bottom bag. The street sweeper owes its origin to a woman, who was tired of being spattered with mud while the streets were being cleaned by the clumsy street sweeper then in use. Harriet Hosmer has succeeded in producing marble from limestone. This invention scientists consider one of the most important discoveries of the age. These are still very far from exhausting the list of woman's triumphs in this direction. Then in the home itself, what delicate and comforting dishes has she not devised and prepared in the kitchen! It was a famous French philosopher who said that whoever invented a new sauce was a public benefactor, and in this quarter alone woman is a benefactor a thousand times over.

Wealthy Japanese Homes.

In a letter from Tokyo, Maud Whitmore Madden, a missionary, gives this charming picture of a Japanese home of the better class: "There were several rooms, quite large and comfortable. There were vases of flowers, pictures of friends and Japanese scrolls for ornament. Glancing into an inner room, we saw a bedstead! A thing only well-to-do people can afford in Japan. Not like our great American ones, but more like the trundle-beds of our fathers. The south side of the house opened into a beautiful garden. Fresh chrysanthemum blossoms, gorgeous red and yellow dwarf-maple leaves, tall hibiscus, with pink flowers peeping from the dark, glossy leaves, all mingle harmoniously with the somber green of the dwarf pine, the paler green of the arbor vitae, and the waving plumes of pampas grass. Oh, it was beautiful, such a feast to eyes just from those poorer homes! The quiet, well-trained servant set a nice hibachi before each of us, hoping we would be warmed; after which she served us with oranges and tea. The hostess, a very nice lady, is much interested in Christianity. Her husband, though indifferent, does not oppose her. And her two handsome little boys so love the missionary's house that they can scarcely wait for their baby sister to grow large enough to take with them. They have learned nearly every hymn in the hymn-book. Their mother says they Mutual Dependence.

MARCH ROSES—A FLORIDA HOME SCENE.

Husband and wife in the well-regulated home, are mutually dependent upon each other. That man is best prepared for home life who is trained to be dependent on his wife for wisely counsel, cheer, and services; and that woman is best prepared who is trained to be dependent on her husband for support and protection. It may be very well for the boy to learn how to sow on a button or cook a steak in case of need; but this is not his work; he is appointed to be the bread-winner of the family. It is important that the girl should have practical knowledge of affairs in general, and also some specific qualifications which she can put to useful service in bread-winning, in case of need. But, under ordinary circumstances, to be the bread-winner of the family is not her appointed task, and if she sacrifices training for the other, and, in most cases, really higher service, that she may acquire a money-making profession, she has made one of those unfair exchanges which is very apt to turn out a robbery.

Evening Hymn.

HITHER, bright angels, wing your flight,
And stay your gentle presence here;
Watch round, and shield us through the night,
That every shade may disappear.

How sweet, when Nature claims repose,
And darkness floats in silence nigh,
To welcome in, at daylight's close,
Those radiant troops that gem the sky!

To feel that unseen hands we clasp,
While feet unheard are gathering round,
To know that we in faith may grasp
Celestial guards from heavenly ground!

Oh, ever thus, with silent prayer
For those we love may night begin,— Reposing safe, released from care,
Till morning leads the sunlight in.

—J. T. FIELDS.

Possibilities of Country Life.

THERE are some who cannot be happy in the country, and it is unquestionable that the life of cities, with its whirl and swirl of human interests, attracts the young of both sexes to an alarming extent. Agriculture no longer appeals to men, and farm-houses no longer satisfy the ambition of women. The trouble is in the men and women, not in the farms. They don't know how to manage without being, as they style themselves, "slaves," and so they rush away from the dilapidated buildings and worn-out soil—the heated kitchens, with foul drains and swarming flies—to try slavery under city skies; to earn a few dollars per week, and spend them for food and a place to lay their heads. But I saw last summer, in a New Hampshire town, writes a lady, a beautifully-kept farm, where the farmer's wife often rides the horse-mower and hay-rake, and takes part in other out-door work, because she enjoys it, and really prefers it to all indoor work. Her husband is well-to-do, and she is a liberally educated young woman, who is not afraid to do what she thinks healthful because other women in her vicinity never do such things. She can easily procure magazines and keep up with the world's thought, and do it with far less strain than those who dwell amid "the madding crowd." So you will see that if you are a farmer's wife, and want to do your best for your daughters, I advise doing it on the dear old farm. The first thing to do is to procure good reading-matter on hygienic subjects, and put your newly acquired knowledge into speedy practice, for health for your family, and especially your daughters, is heaven's own law for mothers and housewives in city or country. Good health and a contented spirit, which every mother owes her child as a birthright, are a fortune to any girl. She will ennoble the man she marries and their home will be a scene of happiness.

Love Brightens Home.

Love will brighten even the poorest home and make it as pleasant as a palace. There is a story of a home so full of domestic love, where the graces of meekness, patience, contentment, and cheerfulness were in such lively exercise that the little ones, although crowded in an attic, never dreamed that they were poor. There are too many Christian homes where the burdens of poverty and sickness are increased a hundred-fold by the spirit of discontent. It is possible for even the lowliest home to be so full of love and joy that the children, breathing this atmosphere, will not suppose it possible for any home to be more beautiful than theirs.

An Ancient Marriage Proposal.

The passing of the centuries seems to have made little difference in certain social customs. Proposals of marriage, among the ancient Egyptians, were apparently made in the same formal fashion as has prevailed in later generations. A tablet made of Nile mud, recently found in the British Museum, contains in cuneiform characters the marriage proposal of a Pharaoh for the hand of the daughter of the King of Babylon. It was written about 3,500 years ago. Phrased in the dignified and courtly language peculiar to the country and the age, it might have furnished the model for a missive of the same sort from one potentate to another even in the present day, if we except the references it contains to the gods of ancient Egypt.

LOUIS KLOPFER, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.00 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should be made in the most convenient manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash. Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canada, and Mexico, a foreign postage of the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change our address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State can live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, March 11, 1878, at New York, N. Y., under Post-Office No. 100,000.

Good Reading.

AT every revolution of the Christian printing-press to-day, there are good books coming forth—books to make us better for this world, books to make us better for the world to come. There is not a day I do not thank God for the Christian printing-press; but the best religious literature written by the hand of man cannot be a substitute for that one book written by the hand of God. You go to the drug-store to get the mineral-waters. You find them healthful and refreshing; but if you want to get the most health and the most refreshment from the mineral waters, you go to the fountain at Sharon or Saratoga—the fountain where the water bubbles right up out of the rock. And in all these currents of religious literature there is much to help and refresh the soul; but you had better go every day of your life to the eternal rock of God's Word, and drink right out of the scoop of the rock that water of which if a man drink he shall never again thirst. Yet, how little Bible-reading among some Christians! You compare the number of hours you spend in secular literature, or merely religious literature, with the number of hours you spend in Bible perusal, and are you satisfied with the comparison? Not one of us is satisfied. Oh! cling to your Bible. Be ready to take part in this great battle against infidelity. There are so many now warring against Christianity, and warring with as little sense as did Thomas Paine, who declared that at the very time he was writing his infidel books he had not a Bible in the house, and had not seen a Bible for years. Young men—especially I say it to young men, for I know what you have to go through with in the way of caricature and scoffing in regard to Christianity—do not be content to say you believe the Bible from the first word of the first verse of the first chapter of the Book of Genesis to the last word of the last verse of the last chapter of the Book of Revelation. I do. Do you? God help you to believe a whole Bible. If one part goes, it will all go. Oh! the meanness of a man who would try to take our Bible from us. There is a scriptural injunction to the effect that you are an old sailor, and come up and say to the captain, "I have some advice that I think will be helpful." The advice is given, the advice is taken, and the ship in a few hours is out of all trouble. You did well. Thank you, in the name of humanity. You did well in giving the counsel and helping the ship and the crew. But suppose at the very time the storm was the worst, and the excitement was the greatest, and the anxiety of the captain and the crew was beyond all bounds—suppose you should go and pick up the compass and pitch it over the taffrail? Magnificent thing that would be for you to do, would it not? Why, that seems so dastardly mean there is nothing meaner. Now I say, if you have any better compass, give it to us.

I have for twenty-five years been willing to give up my Bible as soon as you can give me a better one—something that is of more solace to my soul, something that can throw more light upon the gate of the future. I am ready to surrender it now, if you can give me a better one. Propose to throw the compass overboard, do you? I have more love for the fangs of a rattlesnake than I have for a man who would sting to death the last hope of our race, substituting nothing, proposing nothing. But I can think of something meaner than that. There is an aged man on the mountain, and the night has overtaken him. He has a staff in one hand and a lantern in the other, and he is feeling his way along. You are in a mountain cabin, and you see him coming along. You go out to help him. You say, "I will take that staff away, and that lantern, and I will give you something better. Here is my arm, father. You seem to be lost, and far away from home. I will take care of you. Lean on my arm. I will see you through." You do well. Thank you. You do grandly. Thank you. But suppose you come out of your cabin and say to the man with the staff in one hand and a lantern in the other, "Here, let me have that staff," and you snap it on your knee, and you throw it down the rocks; and then you say, "Let me have that lantern," and you blow the light out and leave him on the mountain to perish! That is magnificent, is it not? That is what infidelity proposes to do. It says, "Give me that staff, old man; give me that light. I will break the one and I will blow out the other."

Rising from the Sea.

RECENT marine disasters set us to thinking what a surrender the ocean will make on the Last Day. How many brave sea captains, and ministers of religion, and men and women who adorned the world and the Church, will arise from the billow! Some struck the iceberg and went down. Some burned, like the Austria. Some were twisted in the cyclone. Some swamped by three successive surges which can founder the mightiest craft. In my boyhood the question was often asked, "What do you suppose became of George C. Cookman?" He was the father of this generation of brilliant and consecrated clergymen of that name. Visiting the United States on business for an English firm, he here entered the Methodist ministry, took front rank among orators, was Chaplain of the American Congress, went from appointment to appointment, a flaming evangelist, and was immortalized by one speech at the anniversary of a Bible society at New Brunswick, N. J. Then, wishing to visit his friends on the other side the sea, on March 11, 1841, he took the steamship President, which was never heard of afterward. For years the Church and the world waited, and expected, and wondered concerning him, and finally postponed the secret of his taking-off until the restitution of all things. The Atlantic and Pacific oceans are the Westminster Abbey of dead shipping, and the roll-call of the Last Day will find response in almost every submarine cavern from Sandy Hook lighthouse to the Straits. Whether the land or the sea gets the cast-off shell of our humanity, God will remember, and the two parts, the perishable and the imperishable, will be adjoined, not as here, for a few decades, but as that glorified composition called the resurrection of the body, with splendor like the morning and velocity like the light. Come together they must. Come together they will. Whether going down with the splintered decks of a foundering steamship, or from a calm pillow, bent over by a tearful household, it shall be found that death is a good thing to those who believe right and act right. We are in this world, the most prospered of us, kept on the limits. Ever and anon we run against the impassable, but when we get off this planet we will have the universe for our range. Heaven will be the headquarters from which we shall go forth, a million miles with one sweep of the wing. Around what centres! Sweeping what peripheries! Exploring what infinitude! Death the best thing! The breaking of shackles, the opening of doors, the multiplication of opportunities, the widening of prospects, transportation across immensities, the making of cherubic, seraphic, archangelic acquaintanceships. Congratulations for those who go! Sympathies for those who stay! We need reconstruction of all our ideas about transmission from world to world, about being handed up and on, about imparadisation and enthronement. How we hang onto this world, as if there was nothing after this attractive!

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Lemuel H. Ashton, Germantown, Pa. 1. Yes. Dr. Talmage had two sons. Thomas De Witt died in 1880. The other son, Frank Talmage, is now a clergyman in Pittsburgh. 2. You are right; he was not so christened, but adopted the middle name later in life. 3. Dr. Talmage edits THE CHRISTIAN HERALD alone and no other paper. 4. We do not know the paper you mention.

L. B., Toronto, Ont. Where are the following words first found in the Bible: Hour, day, week, month, year?

See Dan. 3:6; Gen. 1:5; Gen. 29:27; Gen. 7:11; Gen. 1:14.

Subscriber, Montgomery, Ala. How many pounds of white paper are used in an average edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD?

There were five weekly issues or editions in January of this year, and the quantity of paper consumed was 180,000 pounds. This is an average of 36,000 pounds, or eighteen tons of white paper for each edition, although the average for the year is somewhat larger.

Subscriber, Hepburn, Pa. Is it wrong for an unconverted person to join in singing songs of praise to God?

No; one may still be in sin and yet have cause for thankfulness; but such a one cannot sing from the heart, like a Christian whose spiritual awakening has made him conscious of the wonderful goodness of God in all his dealings with his children. In this sense, the unbeliever cannot have the same cause for thankfulness that the believer has.

Robert M., Zanesville. Who is Jameson, and how did he come to be the leader of the movement against the Biers?

He is a Scottish physician, who once nursed Hon. Cecil Rhodes through a dangerous fever, and thus made a warm friend. He also cured King Lobengula of an illness, and this resulted in his appointment as Administrator of Mashonaland. He successfully conducted the war against the Matabeles in Mashonaland. It is even said that at one time he saved the life of President Kruger.

Mrs. Pauline Schrader, Columbus, O. Do you consider it wise for a widow to invest her surplus money in any of the land schemes that are advertised so prominently?

We would advise the greatest caution. Many land-booming schemes have no substantial foundation. It is a good plan to invest in nothing of whose reliability you cannot satisfactorily assure yourself in advance. With respect to all such matters, while THE CHRISTIAN HERALD exercises the greatest care, in order to protect its readers, there is still a possibility of one being deceived.

Alfred Ironfield, Wilmington, Del. Who were the Anglo-Saxons?

The early Teutonic conquerors of Britain were tribes from the border-lands of Germany and Scandinavia, more conspicuously the tribes known in history as the Angles, the Saxons and the Jutes. The Jutes formed the first permanent Teutonic settlement in Britain; the Angles and Saxons settled later. Each gave a name to its settlement and at last the whole body of settlers gave themselves the common name of English, while by their enemies, the Celts—whose land they had invaded—they were called Saxons. Hence the conjoint term, Anglo-Saxon.

E. C. Weller, Des Moines, Iowa. How, and why, did the early Christians marry the multitude?

The earliest records show that Christian marriage existed in Apostolic times (see Eph. 5:22-33; 1 Cor. 7 chap.). In the early Christian Church (according to Tertullian's account) ecclesiastical form or rite had been arranged for marriages. This is the earliest clue we have to the matrimonial rite. The Gangran Synod (A. D. 470), in one of its canons, expressly denounced those who opposed or condemned marriage. In the fourth century, the civil law restricted itself to the repudiation of the material interests, leaving the Church to do with the spiritual conditions of matrimony. Gradually, by almost imperceptible degrees, the rite assumed its present form. It has practically undergone no change since the Reformation.

W. H. B., Fredericktown, Mo. Is the King James Version of the Bible used by all denominations of English-speaking Christians?

The Roman Catholics use the Douai version which differs from the King James in some important respects. We think all others use the latter, though in an increasing number of churches the Revised Version is used regularly or occasionally. There is no doubt of its superiority to the King James version, but the phraseology is endeared to us by association and long use so that we are reluctant to give it up. Probably the next generation or the following will use it altogether. The King James Version was a long time winning way into general use, though, as in the case of the Revised Version, its superiority over the one in use, was admitted.

Mrs. E. P., Vermont. 1. A woman has a stingy husband who never gives her a cent unless she borrows it, and then she must tell what she is to do with it. Is it stealing for her to take more from his wallet without his knowledge? 2. Works as hard as he does to get it, being a larger wife. 3. Have we anything to do with old Mosaic laws, or were they done away by Christ when he came?

1. Such a condition implies great hardship and a wife is certainly entitled to have her own considered as giving her a voice in domestic finances. There should be a possibility, however, of adjusting matters without resort to such measures as you suggest. Try the power of earnest Christian prayer and loving persuasion. 2. Believers are not now living under the Mosaic dispensation, but under grace. Jesus himself (even while asserting that he came not to destroy but to fulfill the law of Moses), repeatedly emphasized this, referring to the ancient system and immediately thereafter adding "but I say unto you etc.", implying that the Mosaic law, being fulfilled in himself, was now superseded. (See Mark 10:2-9; John 1:17; Romans 7:6, 7, 8, 9 other similar passages.)

J. M. S., Longren, Pa. What condition is that described in Heb. 6:6 as "falling away?"

This passage, like the one about the unpardonable sin, has caused much discussion and apprehension. The description in the previous verses of the persons to whom it refers, appears to indicate a condition of enlightenment and of personal experience such as some men who do not become true Christians, but return to the world. The writer appears to be speaking of a fact rather than enunciating a doctrine. Every Christian minister a worker knows how difficult it is to win backslider, especially one who has become a scoffer. The truth seems to have no effect upon them. Any person who fears having fallen into that condition can disprove the theory by going to Christ and asking forgiveness. Christ will receive him. The fact of being distressed about it, indicates that he has not fallen beyond hope. The man who needs to fear, is he who does not trouble about his state.

Chas. Kirkpatrick, Iowa. The duty is two per cent of publishers' prices. Inquire. They are degrees conferred after successful examination in mathematics, philosophy, logic, languages, and other studies of the higher grades. Mary B. Johnson, San Marcial, Old Mexico. I am already overburdened with similar requests which we are unable to take up at present. J. Lennon, Waverly, N. Y. About two hundred in—Ella J. Budd, Albion. Your idea is excellent. Why not carry it out in your own section. J. Barbour, Gallipolis, O. 1. He should ignore the but if they become unbearable he can easily get their company. 2. It is not necessary. I. Canthage, Tex. 1. Write to Harper's Weekly concerning the list you want. 2. Yes, you can obtain the Christian Herald Library by forwarding $2. Geo. M. Cole, Monango, N. D. Why not lay matter before your local representative in the Iowa Legislature?—Pearl Allen, Alfordville, Va. 1. Write to Revell Co., publishers, New York. 2. Presbyterians, we believe. 3. Earnest Reas, Greenwood, Mo. 1. Yes, but not usury. 2. It is substantially applied. 3. It is an excellent and a good plan. B. Brodvin, N. Y. 1. Yes. 2. At the Court discretion. 3. Yes, but not if persisted in and unpunished. W. R., Millboro, N. C. 1. Write to Agricultural Department, Washington, D. C., for information. 2. We cannot advise. S. M. I., B. port, N. Y. She is a daughter of Charles Kingsley the novelist, and she has twice visited Africa on exploring tours. H. V. Farmer, Beaver, Pa. 1. plan has been considered and is regarded as practicable. Dean, Fargo College, Fargo, N. D. Many thanks. The error had already been detected. F. B. B., Bessemer, Ala. Such a rate of price seems usurious, but under the circumstances, explain them, there would seem some justification for extra charges. Charles Pascale, N. Y. We are glad to know that you have a good home and that you like the pictures in the Christian Herald. Try to study hard and you will learn. S. T. T., Cooke, Mont. He is now heading toward Jerusalem. Subscriber, East New York, N. Y. You are quite right. Mrs. Stephen S. Greenville, Pa. Write to the Publishers' Weekly, N. Y. City. A. K. S., Siler City, N. C. 1. Hebr. 2. There was at one time, but is there no longer. G. M., Woodhull, N. Y. Write to International Bible Co., 100 Fifth Ave., New York. Alfred R. S. and you will receive the Teachers' Bible charges prepaid. S. W. P., Freeport, L. I. It is an intricate question of Presbyterian law. The person we know of whose decision could be regarded as authoritative is Rev. W. H. Roberts, the Sec. Clerk of the General Assembly, whose address is 100 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. Subscriber, Rochester, N. Y. Send 75 cents for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD binder.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Grave in the Transvaal.

MANY a family takes a sorrowful interest in the trench piled with great stones, of which a picture appears on this page. In that trench on the field of Krugersdorp are buried the bodies of the hundred and thirty men who were led in the raid which Dr. Jameson made in the Transvaal. In a previous issue of this journal the story of the raid and its glorious termination was fully told. At that time, Dr. Jameson and his fellow-prisoners have been turned over to the English authorities by President Kruger, and have been sent to England to take their trial for making war on a friendly state. Their reception showed that public sympathy is with them, but the government evidently intends to hold them to a strict account for their conduct. Among the prisoners was an American Captain who, on his arrival in England, was offered his liberty. He refused, however, to accept it, and declared his resolve to remain with Dr. Jameson and share his fate whatever it might be. Another American citizen, who has resided a long time in Johannesburg, and was intimately acquainted with the leaders of the raid, but left the country before Dr. Jameson started, has arrived in New York. He explains the circumstances which led to the expedition. He declares emphatically that there was no intention on the part of the leaders of annexing the country, but of giving armed protection to the Uitlanders and their lives and children whose lives are believed to be in peril, and of obtaining from the Boer Government a consideration of the grievances which have so long irritated the foreign population. It would appear from the press accounts of the raid, that after invoking Dr. Jameson's aid, the foreign residents made terms with the Boers and pledged themselves to be loyal to the Government. When, therefore, Jameson's party entered the Transvaal they received no co-operation from the men on whose behalf they had come. They complain bitterly that they were betrayed, but if their motives were disinterested as is claimed, they will rejoice in the recent news that their countrymen in the Transvaal are likely to benefit after all by the raid. It called world-wide attention to their grievances, some of which the Boers have promised to redress. There seems to be a mysterious law in the world that public benefits shall be won through the suffering of some who do not participate in them. The highest example of all is that of Him who was killed by the race he came to save and of Him it is promised:

He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied. (Isa. 53: 11.)

new Discoveries with X Rays.

European press dispatches report new applications of Prof. Roentgen's wonderful discovery. Prof. Salvioni has devised a screen and lens with which he can actually see by the light of the X rays through several opaque substances. Simultaneously another investigator has arrived at the same result, with a tube, the interior of which is coated with a material which assumes under the rays, the peculiar color known as fluorescence. The bones of the hand and wrist could be distinctly seen through the flesh, a coin placed between the leaves of a book was plainly visible, and a piece of metal could be seen through a pine board, two inches thick. This is a step in advance of Prof. Roentgen's discovery, as he was unable to see the objects themselves, though the camera revealed them. Evidently the discovery of the new light will be of the greatest service to science and will lead to other discoveries as yet unimagined. It will be well if it also leads those scientists who have been very dogmatic in pronouncing impossible certain things that Christians believe, to be less self-confident. In the light of this discovery they certainly cannot refuse to believe it possible that the wise king was justified in declaring that:

The eyes of the Lord are in every place beholding the evil and the good. (Prov. 15: 3.)

An Aeronaut's Peril.

The crew of a vessel engaged in the sponge industry off the Florida coast rescued a man a few days ago from a terrible death. He is an amateur aeronaut, who says he will never make another ascent. He can never forget the horrible feeling of helplessness that came upon him as the balloon fell from the air to the sea. It is the thought of such helplessness in going into a condition in which it is impossible to direct our course, or to save ourselves that makes the prospect of death so terrible. Happy are they, who as they contemplate the passage into the unknown region beyond the grave rely on the promise:

When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee. (Isa. 43: 2.)

A Disastrous Day.

Three marine disasters in one day in the port of New York will make February 29, the odd day of this leap-year, memorable in shipping circles. There was a dense fog on the lower bay from early morning until after sunset. It was so thick that the pilot of the steamer "New York" of the American Line, coming in from England, lost sight of the buoys which mark the channel, and the vessel ran ashore on West Bank between Sandy Hook and the Narrows. Her passengers were taken off in tugs, and no damage was sustained by the vessel which was whose captain took measures to avoid disaster. A similar coincidence has been observed in battle; it is notorious that a timid man is more likely to fall than a reckless one. God's children have had a similar experience, though there is no coincidence in their case, because we know how they are preserved. It is a proof of the courage that faith gives, when a man is able to say:

The Lord is my helper; I will not fear what man shall do unto me. (Heb. 13: 6.)

BRIEF NOTES.

In Response to the Continued Demand for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Library, we have had another edition prepared which will close our order for that premium. We have never submitted a premium proposition to our readers that has been so universally popular or one that gives greater satisfaction. Any of our readers, whose subscriptions expire at any time during this year and who wish to secure one of these Libraries, would do well to apply immediately for one of this last edition. If three dollars are sent now, we will send this Library at once and extend the subscription for a year beyond the date at which it expires. This is the fifth edition of this valuable Library that has been called for, and is positively the last we can produce. The opportunity of securing this beautiful set of books is consequently limited, and if it is missed now will be missed finally.

Our Armenian Pamphlet, for the information of those interested in raising contributions to the Relief Fund, is now ready and will be sent free to any address on application.

At Mr. E. P. Telford's Mission in South Shields, England, the large Methodist church was crowded with 1200 people, and many were turned away. Large numbers have decided for Christ.

A Young Woman of Santiago, Chili, the President of a Christian Endeavor Society, proved her fitness for the office by last year raising more than a thousand dollars for missionary and benevolent purposes.

Dr. A. T. Pierson is now on an Evangelistic tour in England. He addressed more than a thousand people in the Drill Hall, Colchester, on February 13 and 14. Many Nonconformist ministers from the town and neighborhood were present.

We are Glad to Hear that Dr. Joseph Cook is making satisfactory progress toward recovery. His attack of nervous prostration was severe, but the prospects of complete restoration are now considered bright. Dr. Cook is now at Clifton Springs, N. Y.

The Place for Holding the Baptist Anniversary meetings has been changed from Portland, Ore. to Asbury Park, N. J. The burning of the Publication House and several other causes have rendered a change of programme advisable.

Dr. Sheldon Jackson has given $50,000 to establish a college in Utah. The Presbytery of Utah has accepted the gift, with the conditions annexed. The conditions are that the Institution shall be one "in which the Bible is to be a regular text book, and which is never to be alienated from the doctrine and work of the Presbyterian Church in the United States." Another condition is that the Presbytery shall furnish a site. Eighty acres have already been purchased.

Major Hilton and Rev. Grant C. Tullar have been holding services in Colorado recently. Both at Boulder and Colorado Springs the attendance was very large. During their stay at the latter town, the Evangelists held a service on the Mining Exchange where the brokers received them very cordially and gave them close attention. At Boulder from twenty to twenty-five prayer meetings were held each morning in different parts of the town and a regular gospel service in the First Baptist Church every afternoon and evening.

Rev. S. G. Neil has been holding Revival meetings at Williamsport, Pa. Rev. E. A. Woods, Pastor of the First Baptist Church writes that the meetings were thronged every night and hundreds were turned away for lack of room. All the churches in the city have received an impetus from the work.

The Death of Rev. William Anderson is announced. He was eighty-four years of age and was believed to be the oldest African missionary. The deceased labored at Old Calabar for over forty years. He was superannuated, but he could not keep away from Africa. In September last he returned to Old Calabar. Soon after returning he preached to large congregations, but was lately stricken with fever and died.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins held meetings on Feb. 9, in the Methodist Tabernacle at Pasadena, Cal. They expected to be at Los Angeles at the close of February and have promised to hold meetings there. A very large congregation listened attentively to the singing and to Mr. Sankey's description of the circumstances that suggested several famous hymns.

Rev. Mr. Krikorian, who with his wife and children was recently killed in Armenia, was supported by Dr. Faunce's church in New York, where he was ordained for missionary work in his native land. Dr. Faunce, in his sermon on Feb. 23, spoke sympathetically of his martyrdom and called for a volunteer to take his place as a missionary representative of the Fifth Ave. Baptist Church. One of the students in Dr. Dowd's Medical School promptly offered himself.

Mr. D. L. Moody announces that there will be a Special Conference of Ministers and Christian Workers at the Bible Institute, Chicago, continuing from April 1 to April 30. Special lectures will be given by Superintendent Torrey, Dr. W. J. Erdman and Prof. W. W. White. A similar conference was held at the Institute last April with beneficial results. Board and room may be had for only a few cents for five dollars a week at the Institute.

GRAVE AT KRUGERSDORP, IN TRANSVAAL, WHERE DR. JAMESON'S MEN ARE BURIED.

had a good balloon and who has often made short trips in his air-ship. One morning lately, the sky being clear and the wind favorable, he entered the skiff and cast off. When he rose to a height of about a thousand feet, the direction of the wind changed. The balloon was carried over the gulf, in a westerly direction. The man was alarmed, but was powerless to do anything. Night fell and the balloon continued its course, but about midnight it began to descend and soon struck the water. The gas, however, was not entirely exhausted and the balloon retained sufficient buoyancy to ride the waves. Then began a terrible journey. The man clung to the ropes as the only chance of life and he was dragged through the waves by a series of jerks that caused him excruciating pain. Fearing that he might faint, he lashed himself to the skiff and soon afterward lost consciousness. He knew no more until he opened his eyes thirty hours later on board the schooner. The crew had seen the balloon plunging over the billows and thought it worth an effort to capture it. They were astonished to find a man in the skiff. They were only just in time to save his life for two sharks were following the skiff eager to make a meal of him. The aeronaut floated twenty-four hours later. An hour or so after the disaster to the "New York" the "George W. Clyde," bound for Wilmington, was proceeding down the bay, when she was struck by the incoming "Guyandotte" of the Old Dominion line. A great hole was made in her side and she was hurriedly run aground to save her from sinking. The third and worst disaster was that to the "Ailsa" of the Atlas line, bound for West Indian ports. When the vessel had proceeded as far as Fort Wadsworth, the captain cast anchor, to wait for the fog to lift. The fifteen passengers on board went down to lunch. They were suddenly startled by a great crash and the noise of rushing water. The "Bourgogne," outward bound, had run into the anchored steamer. With all speed the anchors were drawn up and she was headed for shallow water. But the damage was too serious to admit of her reaching it. The water put out the engine fires and the steamer sank within eight minutes of the collision. Happily, a number of tugs were at hand, which took off the passengers and crew, who had taken refuge in the rigging as the steamer sank. No lives were lost in any of the three disasters. It is a curious coincidence that the worst sufferer was the vessel

IN HIS HANDS

A NEW SERIAL STORY,
WRITTEN EXPRESSLY
BY THE
REV. EDWARD AUGUSTUS RAND
For the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

CHAPTER X.

How should Janet spend her life?

HOW should Janet spend her life? The question turned this way, and that seemed to assume new shapes from various aspects. How was it possible to leave it as my Captain had said, "All in his hands?" Janet would willingly have done so if she understood what it meant. But she did not think it meant to sit idly waiting for the Lord to take hold of her and set her to work. What did it mean?

She sat one night in her bed-room thinking over this question that had been in her mind all day. She had prayed about it, and when she rose from her knees, she sat down by her bed to think again. But she was tired and at last rose, despairing of getting fresh light, and undressed and lay down. Even in her sleep her mind recurred to the question, but her fancy in her dreams gave it a phase almost supernatural. In her dream, she saw a Presence. She could not distinctly outline the face, but she saw something of greater importance, the expression there of compassion and forgiveness, of sympathy and blessing, and there were outstretched hands of welcome. If she had any doubt at first about this presence, it all passed away when she saw marks in the hands.

"That is my Saviour!" she said. And she could not or did not resist a strange, irresistible drawing toward him. And it did not seem as if it were Janet Morton going to him, so much as John Morton, not the soul, careful and decent, but the reckless and prodigal. And all she had to give was just herself, her deficiencies and her failures in the past, all that she was then in the present, and as for the future, could she commit that to his keeping and trust God to take care of it and her?

"All into his hands!" she murmured, and seemed to throw herself at his feet in the deep, grateful rest of faith. Suddenly, she awoke, but around her the light of that Presence seemed to linger, and in her heart was peace. Was it only a dream? The conviction that it might have the emptiness of a night-vision was horrible. But might it not be continued in another form? If that was indeed the attitude of her soul, a willingness to put all into his hands, could she not, in her waking moments, express this purpose as well as in her dreams. She fell upon her knees. In the hands wounded for her peace, she left everything. And her pride, her father's pride, that had been transmitted to her, that had been satisfied with self's attainments, what did she do with this? Where else is it safe except in God's hands?

"My sins, myself, my future, all into his hands!" she murmured. And the peace of the vision of the night came back into her soul to abide there forever.

It is a strange world that we visit when we lay ourselves down to sleep. It is peopled by the ghosts of our waking hours, and they may be friends or enemies. While Janet was being quieted and tranquilized by the visions of the night, the man who had defrauded her was being harassed and worried by his mind's excursion into the realm of dreams.

Lawyer Skeele and Lavina were sitting at the table in the morning. Skeele at the last had been reluctant to move into it, but could allege no good reason against doing so, now that the house belonged to Lavina, as far as the mutilation of the will could make it hers. Lavina challenged him to explain his reluctance, but he could not, or would not. So Lavina went forward with her plans. She summoned carpenters to hammer and painters to paint. Great was the change made in the front part of the house, the closed blinds of the open curtains were rolled up. The carpenters tore down wood-work and hammered it up again. The painters gaily colored, the upholsterer laid down carpets. That darkened hall was compelled to receive a bath of sunshine. The old clock confessing its sins in the corner, made room for a new and cheerful timepiece. "Come, pa!" said Lavina, "we will move in now."

He was more reluctant to go than ever, but he knew that if he refused Lavina would think it strange, and would inquire uncomfortably into his unwillingness. That sharp nose was like a gimlet-headed screw, and could bore down disagreeably into any subject she had a mind to search into. She was a terror in domestic matters generally. There was no escape for it, and up to the old house, as to a prison, went Judson Skeele.

"See, father, are not those walls much better? Painted pretty gray!" Lavina remarked with animation. He was silent. "Look like gray granite walls of a prison," was his thought.

"And this entry, do you remember about it? A gloomy old hall. So nice and bright now. Now come up this way, father!" Through this prison corridor, where everything was open and staring, he was led to a room on the second floor.

"There," said his jailer, throwing open a door, "this is your room."

"Cell!" he thought she said, and he groaned, "Horror!"

"What, father?"

"Oh," he replied, recovering himself, "my rheumatism gave me a twinge."

"Well, you won't have it in this room. Nice, dry, bright room! Isn't it, pa?" He shrugged his shoulders. The peculiar rheumatism he had would be worse in this room than anywhere else. It was here he sat down—and he located the very spot occupied by his chair in which one day he made out a certain will.

"Can't you give me another cell?" he was about to say, but did not say it. Lavina would wonder why he refused, and he might reveal more than it would be comfortable to recall. There was no other way. He must occupy this room which he, not Lavina, had really fitted up, although she cried with enthusiasm, "See, what pretty furniture I picked out!" His furnishing was that of memories.

But if in the daytime he shrank from occupying that room, his objection was far stronger when night came. Skeele was not a superstitious man, but he did not like the idea of sleeping in a place so haunted with the associations of his crime. He scorned the very name of ghosts, but he was nervous and uncomfortable. He went to bed, however, at his usual time and made an effort to go to sleep. He argued with himself that it was childish to fear. What was there to fear? A sensible man, such as he, might dread the appearance of an officer of the law in the day, but not a visitor from the other world at night. Yet he could not argue himself into a state of somnolence. He was wide awake and particularly alert. It seemed to him that he did not close his eyes for hours and he grew so weary of lying there listening to the subdued noises of the night, that at last he rose and lighted a candle. He looked at his watch and found that he had not been in bed more than an hour. What a long night it would be! He sighed heavily and turned on in his pillow. His fancy would revert to that scene in that very room when Madame's sharp eyes ran over the will. He closed his eyes but only for a minute. "It would make quite a difference if that word 'Morton' did not stay there." Her very words and the very tone of her high-pitched voice! Was it his fancy or was it her voice? Skeele's face was wet with cold perspiration. He told himself that it was his dream, yet he could not convince himself. He could hear it no longer, putting on a long loose dressing-gown, he took up his candle, stole from the room and went down to the kitchen and sat before the warm stove among Paulina's cheerful rag-mats. These were to him the most agreeable objects in the house, and he and the lighted lamp kept them company until the dawn made a space of light over the dark fire without the window. Then he hurried upstairs, before Paulina's vigorous personality entered the kitchen.

While that front part of the house was filling up with various attractive objects, bought by Lavina with Mrs. Morton's money, there were two rear rooms that witnessed a process that was the reverse. It was one of emptying. The rooms were the kitchen and Paulina's chamber. Their floors had been beautified with rag-mats. Upon their walls, Paulina had tacked pictures from cheap prints, such as, "The Union Army," "Hurrah for the Flag!" or "The Clipper Seafoam." They were only a poor quality of engraving, but Paulina had bordered them with frames of paper, blue paper, yellow, too, and green, black, scarlet, orange. While she had flower-gardens and menageries on the floor, she had rain-bows and sunsets on the walls. Anyone watching the walls and floors would have soon seen that their occupants were thinning out. Pictures were coming down and rag-mats were coming up. What meant this emptying process going on in the rear, while in the front of the house, there was a filling up? Finally, from the rear rooms, color and comfort both seemed to have disappeared. Lavina noticed it. She saw the only remaining mat come up and then disappear, one day, when her father reached his home in great excitement. He found her also in excitement. Wearing a shabby dress, looking more like Cinderella in poverty than anything else, there she was, down on the cold, bare floor, before the kitchen stove, blowing with puffed cheeks the sullen fire and trying to fan it into a lively blaze.

"Lavina!" said the lawyer, "What do you suppose Sandy just told me — yes, me —"

He stopped in surprise.

"Daughter, how is this? Where — where's the girl?"

"You tell me about Sandy first and I'll tell you about Paulina."

"I met him out in the shed, and he stammered and said, 'Squire, I guess I must be leaving. I'll give you a week's notice and try to get you somebody else? It took me all back. Made me mad, too. Looks like deserting of you,' said I. 'Supposing you leave now. I don't want any such men round.' He left."

"Glad you packed him off. Well, that hussy, Paulina, I'll tell you about it. I noticed she was a-taking down pictures and a-rolling up mats, and yet I did not say anything. I know the pictures and the old rags—did you ever see such a pudding of colors! Well, I was saying I knew the pictures and the old rags were hers, and I thought she might perhaps be just a-cleaning up and would put them back again. But this morning, she let it all out. She said she did not want to leave me without fair notice, and so would give me a week's time, and perhaps she could get somebody for me, and —"

"Did she say it? It was like what he was trying to get off. The fools! I dare say they had some secret understanding with one another. A regular conspiracy! That is the way it always is with such creatures! I hope you packed her off."

"Yes, I did. That's what I did, pack her off at once. I told her, 'You need not be so particular to stay a week, preying on us and getting all you can, but you go at once! There's the door!' Yes, I packed her."

Lavina's tune though changed, another instant when she began to puff at the fire and it would not burn.

"Dear me! I wish I had her here long enough to give me a good blow at the fire. The bellows is all out of repair. There, father, I guess I shall have now to ask you to run out and get me some wood."

At the chopping block, Lawyer Skeele, groaning and perspiring away, did wish Sandy was back long enough at least to relieve him of this tiresome duty. But Sandy and Paulina were both off, and never would return. Sandy had the start of Paulina. Slowly moving away a small bundle of earthly goods in his hand, his big frame making no ordinary shadow on the ground, he happened to turn, and there was the handsomest woman in the world, as he thought, just coming out of the back gate. Under each arm was an immense roll, and beside these, she was trying to carry along a bundle of small treasures, — a variety package.

"If that ain't a livin', burnin' shame! To see a woman tuggin' that 'ere way!" exclaimed Sandy, promptly turning back.

Paulina saw her Hercules coming and her eyes kindled with joy.

"I'm a brute if I see you tuggin' at them things, P'leen."

"Oh, no, Sandy," said Paulina, faintly remonstrating. "You got your share."

"Haw, haw, haw!" roared Sandy, lifting his big beard as he let out a kind of organ-blast.

"If you don't lemme," threatened Sandy to the bearer of these huge rolls, "then — I'll take the hull of you, traps and all."

That brought to terms the giggling, blushing Paulina.

"Well, let's swap then, Sandy."

"All right!"

She took his bundle, while he threw his long arms about her load.

"Well, P'leen, I take it you got your walkin'-ticket."

"Yes, sudden, I tell ye!"

"Way I did mine."

"Aint I glad I got my mats! I carried off my pictures in the dark."

"Where do you want me to ship these?" "Down at father's. They won't expect me so soon, but that's where I'm agoin'."

Sandy made no reply. He was sadly wondering where he would go. When his mother was alive, he would "make harbor" there, but she died about the time that Madame Morton so suddenly left her house and her body. Since that time, Lawyer Skeele had found employment for Sandy about the Morton mansion, and he had found an abiding-place at night under the roof of that old home. It had been pleasant to be so near Paulina, and now going out into the world, it was pleasant to think that Paulina was going with him. But how soon their paths must separate?

"You know where you're goin' to stop?"

"No," said Sandy, gloomily. "I spect I can crawl into a fish-house."

"Oh, no," said Paulina, warmly. "I wouldn't do that."

"But I haven't any home." "Oh, oh, that's bad!" said Paulina, pityingly. To think that Hercules should not have a home, Hercules the strongest, the bravest, the pluckiest among the fishermen. "Oh, dear!" she moaned.

"You sick?" he asked, looking over his immense rolls.

"No, no, Sandy." "I—I—thought it was too bad you didn't have nary a home."

That touched Sandy. They now neared a pretty lane of green where in summer the shadows were deep and cool, where the birds made love to one another passionately. Autumn though was making the lane a glorious bower of color, and in among its rainbows and diamonds and marriage-rings hung all over the trees, walked Sandy and Paulina. This was a part of the way home.

"P'leen," said Sandy, admiringly, "I think you are the purtiest woman —"

Oh, how Paulina's heart did beat and the autumn-crimson stole out of the trees and into her cheeks.

"And if you'd have me—" continued Sandy.

Here Paulina began to cry.

"I won't stand that from nary woman," said Sandy, throwing down his big rolls of housekeeping goods and catching up the housekeeper instead.

Well, within a week the two were married by Parson Tapley.

Skipper Dan had often wanted Sandy for a son-in-law, and Jed's love for Sandy was like that of Jonathan and David in the Holy Book. How Skipper Dan could turn his aspirations into realities was too much for the man with a glass eye and a wooden leg. Sandy and Paulina had themselves solved the perplexing problem. The Skipper had a favorite room which he called the "cabin" and which he occupied. It was the only room suitable for his big son-in-law now that he was married, and Skipper Dan gladly relinquished it to the incoming couple. Skipper Dan's humble abode by the side of the Morton mansion would have been like a fishing-smack along side of a man of war, but the little craft held far more happiness. Only two, Lavina and her father, apparently occupied the mansion, but to Lawyer Skeele's aroused conscience the rooms were thickly peopled with accusing forms in which his guilty memories took shape.

(To be continued.)

Diligent in Business.

Questions on the Christian Endeavor for the Week Beginning March 22.
p. 6: 6-11; Joshua 22: 3.

AN impression is prevalent in some circles of society that a religious man is crippled and hampered in business by his religious principles. It is thought that a young man who "gets religion" is likely to succeed in business than he would have been without religion. He much truth is there in this notion? The are, it is true, certain prices that are common in business, which cannot be adted by the man who determines to conduct business on Cistian principles. He must not; he must not misrepresent the quality of his goods; he must not issue misleading advertisements; he must not "and the face of the poor" by resing to pay a fair price for the work that is done for him; he must not injure a competitor by slandering him; he must noake advantage of the ignorance of his customer, and the are other things of a like character that he must not do. But supposing that he might do anor all of these things, would th tend to make him a successful business-man? That th would give him a temporary advantage must be admitted. If he cheats a customer, he will probably make a lge profit on the one transaction, but if the customer has ormary common-sense, that is thonly transaction he has w the man who has cheated him. The large profit is balanced by the loss of a regular customer. A lie may serve its pose for the time, but it is at the cost of a loss of influence and of opportunity for making fure gains. The far-seeing sacious business man would, apt from religion, avoid the prices condemned by religion. That is the negative side of th subject. On the positive side the advantages are on the side of religion. An employee, w is a consistent Christian, is duable to his employer on acunt of his principles. He is strictly honest. He is conscientious; does not waste his employer's time, nor neglect his interests. He is faithful and reliable and he is required to be by his religious principles. A merchant or manufacturer is honorable and fair in his dealings. His goods are equal to the sample and the public has confidence in his integrity. Character wins reputation and commands respect. These things settled, all legitimate business methods are open to the religious business man. He is not debarred, or hauled back, from pushing his business with energy and persistent industry. Diligence is crined upon him. "If I were or a bootblack," said a Cistian merchant, "I should colder it my duty, for the honor of my Lord, to be the bootblack in the city." The Christian's place in the world is "the city on the hill." his duty is to shine as a light in the world. There ought, therefore, to be no just ground for reproach against him, no matter what his calling in life may be. He is under bonds to do his whole duty, because more is expected of him than of other men. Any remissness on his part w bring disgrace on his Lord and on the Cistian cause, so that he has an additional motive, which worldly men have not for diligence, energy and activity. A his conscientious conception of duty keeps him on the alert and sanctifies the most occupation. He does his work as the Lord and takes care that it is done the very best of his ability.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

SHINING FOR JESUS.

"THEY THAT BE WISE SHALL SHINE."—Dan. 12: 3.

LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

GEO. C. STEBBINS.

1. Are you shin-ing for Je-sus, my broth-er, Shin-ing so clear and so bright,
2. Are you shin-ing for Je-sus, my broth-er, Shin-ing in deed and in word?
3. Are you shin-ing for Je-sus, my broth-er, Shin-ing for truth and for right,
4. Oh!... shine out for Je-sus, my broth-er, Shine where He needs you the most;
5. Shine on-ly and al-ways for Je-sus, Then when your toil-ing is o'er,

That the souls that are per-ish-ing round you May be guid-ed to Him by your light?
Is your life by its pu-ri-ty show-ing, The like-ness of Je-sus your Lord?
Where bold un-be-lief and its min-ious Are pos-ing as an-gels of light?
And shine where the dark-ness hangs deep-est O'er the path of the stray-ing and lost.
In... man-sions of glo-ry e-ter-nal, You shall shine as the stars ev-er-more.

CHORUS.

Shin-ing for Je-sus, Are you shin-ing to-day? Shin-ing for Shin-ing, shin-ing, Shin-ing, shin-ing,

Je-sus, Shin-ing all the way. Shin-ing for Je-sus, In this Shin-ing, shin-ing,

world of care; Shin-ing for Je-sus, Shin-ing ev-ery-where.
Shin-ing, shin-ing

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2.

By per of the Publishers

The Master's Touch.

"HE touched her hand, and the fever left her."
He touched her hand, as He only can.
With the wondrous skill of the great Physician,
With the tender touch of the Son of Man.
And the fever pain in the throbbing temples
Died out with the flush on brow and cheek.
And the lips that had been so parched and burning
Trembled with thanks that she could not speak.
And the eyes where the fever light had faded,
Looked up, by her grateful tears made dim.
And she rose and ministered to her household.
She rose and ministered unto Him.
"He touched her hand, and the fever left her."
Oh, blessed touch of the Man divine!
So beautiful then to arise and serve Him,

When the fever is gone from your life and mine;
It may be the fever of restless serving.
With heart all thirsty for love and praise,
And eyes all aching and strained with yearning
Toward self-set goals in the future days.
Or it may be a fever of spirit anguish,
Some tempest of sorrow that dies not down.
Till the Cross at last is in meekness lifted
And the head stoops low for the thorny crown.
Whatever the fever, His touch can heal it;
Whatever the tempest, His voice can still it;
There is only joy as we seek His pleasure.
There is only a rest as we choose His will.
Ah, Lord! Thou knowest us altogether,
Each heart's sore sickness, whatever it be;
Touch Thou our hands! Let the fever leave us,
And so shall we minister unto Thee!

The Midnight Cry.

The Clues Prophecy Gives us as to the Nature and Characteristics of the Warning.

BY REV. E. J. HYTCHE.

Continued from page 101.

THE rapture of the wise virgins is not the only unique feature in the escape from the horrors incident to the reign of Antichrist. For the same change which will occur in the bodies of the dead saints—the supersession of a spiritual body for the present "body of humiliation," will apparently mark those saved ones who will become the bride of Christ without dying. Hence it is written "Flesh and blood cannot inherit incorruption. We shall not all sleep, but shall all be changed." We are therefore warranted to believe that at the very moment of their translation the wise virgins will receive their spiritual bodies, and so be fitted to become the bride of the Lamb. They will not have to quit their mortal bodies. A change will be worked on their bodies such as was worked on Christ's body in the tomb. He rose in the same body he had worn during life, as was proved by the wounds but it had new powers of locomotion, and of appearing and disappearing. The natural body had become a spiritual body, and this change will be worked on those who are alive when Christ comes. "We know," John wrote, "when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

The next question is a momentous one: What will constitute the midnight cry? How may we recognize it?

The preaching of the resurrected Elijah (Mal. 4: 5-6) to the Jewish remnant may possibly be one element in the midnight cry, for he will proclaim that the "Coming of the great and terrible day of Jehovah" is imminent. Unlike his former mission to his kinsmen, this warning will be successful—for it is predicted that he will "turn the heart of the father with the children, and the heart of the children with the father."

It is also possible that the "Sign of the Son of Man" may be a partial but most potent synonym for the midnight cry. That this sign will be something different to Christ's Advent is implied by the prediction of our Lord; for we read that not only as antecedent to, but as a portent of his near approach (Matt. 25: 30), "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then all the tribes of the land shall mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." This "sign of the Son of Man in heaven" may be some remarkable meteor such as was seen by the Magi, and which led them from their distant home to the birthplace of the Messiah. But whether this, the Star of Bethlehem, be the harbinger of Christ's coming or not, yet among the other tokens of his approaching advent, (Christ said (Luke 21: 11) that "Great signs shall be from heaven"—thereby implying that the stellar world shall certainly forecast the predicted coming glory.

But I am disposed to infer that the midnight cry will not only be supernatural, but that some member of the angelic host will be the agent employed to deliver the warning message. The Apocalypse, which tells in such detail of the physical judgments often intimates this.

To Be Continued.

GLEASON'S
NEW BOOKS

COVETOUSNESS.*

IN American Revolutionary days there lived in Virginia two bright young men, who, having each served a long time in the army, finally secured honorable discharge, and joyfully started on their homeward journey. One of these young men had only one relative living when he went to war—his mother; and he had many times wondered whether, after the tedious days in field and camp were over, he would find that good mother still living. As the two young soldiers pursued their homeward way, they talked of the long time since each had seen his dear ones, and how glad would be the reunion. "I very much doubt their being able to recognize us," said one to the other. "Let us try and see whether they will do so." Agreeing to reach their homes by separate paths, they journeyed on till the village where they lived came in sight. Then they shook hands, and with mingled feelings each took a near yet separate way to his own door. The soldier who had come only in quest of his mother found, as the door opened obedient to his knock, that, though living, she did not recognize him. He was scarcely disappointed at this, for his appearance had, indeed, been much changed by the war. As he stood hesitating before her, suddenly conceived the notion to pretend that he was a stranger seeking a lodging-place. She directed him to the hotel on the main street. But he told her that, as he had a little money in his possession, he was afraid of being robbed there, and should prefer to remain at her house if she would take him in. To this she finally consented, still unaware of the identity of the stranger. After the young man had retired, with every sense of security, and had fallen asleep, the mother, entirely ignorant of the fact that he could possibly be her son, as she believed him to have died in the war, called in a negro whose hut was near the house, and told him of the stranger's arrival, and that he undoubtedly had money. Together they planned to kill him. The negro agreed to undertake the terrible deed of murder alone. It was done. And now the supposed stranger lay dead in his own mother's house, slain by her fatal avarice. Upon the morrow, the other soldier came to see his comrade, but, in answer to his inquiry, was told that no one had been at the house. Realizing something wrong, he pressed his questions till the mother became very uneasy and in an agitated way stated that a man in soldier's dress had been at the door on the day before! From What Shall I Tell the Children? Object Lessons and Teachings by Rev. George V. Reichel. A excellent treasury of illustration and anecdote. Pp. 304; cloth covers; price $1.50. Wilbur B. K. Ham, New York, publisher.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

REAM of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

"Well, replied the soldier, "I was with that man within a few miles of the house last evening. There we separated, he to come here, and I to go to my home. Our plan was to see whether you would recognize him, and whether my people would know me, after so long an absence. He certainly must be here."
No sooner had this announcement been made than the awful truth flashed upon her mind. Yes, she had murdered her own long-missing son.
We will not stop to linger over the heart-breaking confession which this guilty mother made, as she took the horror-stricken soldier to a closet and there showed him the dead body of his comrade, crammed in behind the door.
Many a poor soul has lost itself for the gain of this world. Keep your fresh young hearts open to love of the treasures in heaven by seeking to give when you feel the disease of covetousness coming upon you.

A Memorable Fight.*
BECAUSE the "Guide" received information that a hostile fleet had been organized at "Graceless" to attack the vessels under his care, he led the way and soon found outside the harbor the enemy waiting to receive him. One ship of the enemy was named "Lust Of The Flesh;" another "Lust Of The Eyes;" a third, "Pride Of Life;" a fourth, "Spirit Of Slumber;" a fifth, "Lukewarmness;" a sixth, "Guilty Fear;" a seventh, "Earthliness;" an eighth, "Unbelief." Immediately they opened fire upon "Guide," for if they could disable him, the vessels he protected might be a prey to their malice. But "Guide" had already manned all his heavy guns and was training them upon the enemy.
The great gun of the Mosaic Record was brought to bear upon the privateer "Lust Of The Eyes." The first shot struck the side of the vessel with telling force, as revealing the fact that it is the artful devil who tempts men to lust with the eyes, for forbidden things.
This shot made a hole in the side of the Merit

Is what gives Hood's Sarsaparilla its great popularity, increasing sales and wonderful cures. The combination, proportion and process in preparing Hood's Sarsaparilla are unknown to other medicines, and make it peculiar to itself. It acts directly and positively upon the blood, and as the blood reaches every nook and corner of the human system, all the nerves, muscles, bones and tissues come under the beneficent influence of

Hood's Sarsaparilla
The One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.
Hood's Pills cure Liver ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

MUSIC MONUMENTS.
DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate
WHITE BRONZE.
It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.
NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
Cleaning. Crumbling.
Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-90 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT
PROF. RICE'S Self-Teaching SYSTEM.
All can learn Music without a teacher. RAPID, CORRECT. NOTES, CHORDS, ACCOMPANIMENTS, HARMONY. Established 12 years. 10 Lessons 10 Cents. CIRCULARS FREE.
G. S. Rice Music Co., 243 State St., Chicago, Ill.

NERVE
LIVER TABLETS & Treatise FREE
on Brain and Nerve Exhaustion, with NERVE, the popular health journal. 3 month's. 10 cents.
Address NERVE, Box 762, New York City

privateer near the water line. The second shot was a great shell which penetrated into the interior of the ship where the first shot struck, reaching the powder-magazine and blowing to atoms the pirate.
But let no one imagine, because "Lust Of The Eyes" was on this occasion blow to atoms, that the naval architect of the port of "Graceless" is dead, or that the plans and specifications of the pirate have been burned, or that there is any lack of material in the shipyard of Satan and Flesh for the building of hundreds of pirates like that destroyed.
The last of the pirates to be overcome and who made the most stubborn fight of all, was "Unbelief." Two shots from the "Words Of Jesus" caused "Unbelief" to haul off, and badly crippled return to "Graceless" for repairs.

BOOKS RECEIVED.
The Rule of the Turk: a revised and enlarged edition of "The Armenian Crisis," by Rev. F. D. Greene. This is the latest book on Turkey, the Armenians, the missionaries, and the recent massacres. It contains an autograph preface by Mr. Gladstone, a map and twenty illustrations. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents; 18th thousand. Cash orders for ten or more copies to one address will be sent for 25 per cent discount if addressed to Rev. F. D. Greene, Secretary, National Armenian Relief Committee, 45 William St., New York City.

Cuticura
FOR THE HAIR and
SKIN

A warm shampoo with Cuticura Soap, and a single application of Cuticura (ointment), the great Skin Cure, clear the scalp and hair of crusts, scales, and dandruff, allay itching, soothe irritation, stimulate the hair follicles, and nourish the roots, thus producing Luxuriant Hair, with a clean, wholesome scalp.

Sold throughout the world. POTTER DRUG & CHEM. CORP., Sole Proprietors, Boston, U. S. A.

PAAS EASTER EGG DYES
100 SHADES FOR 5c.
TABLETS—clean, easily used—a 5c. package makes 100 different shades. PAPERS variegated and print pictures. Enough for a dozen eggs, 5c. Like the old way (calico), but nicer.
FREE FROM POISON.
Look for above trade-mark. Both by mail for 10c. if your druggist or grocer hasn't and won't get PAAS. THE PAAS DYE COMPANY, Newark, N. J.

GIVEN TO EVERY LADY
A New Book on Fancy Work containing 50 handsome illustrations. Among them are designs for Sofa Pillows, Table Covers, Scarfs, Tray Cloths, Doilies, Celluloid Work, Tapestry Painting and Embroidery; also another book giving directions how to make all kinds of Rugs and Mats, 65c in all. These two books we'll mail you free if you will send 10c for a 3 months trial subscription to The Home, a 20 page paper containing stories, fashions and fairy work illustr'd. Send to The Home, 141 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,
45 Liberty St., New York, sells all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house to the world. Dealers supplied. 62-page illus. cat. free.

JOHN G. SMITH'S INK PAD

AAABBBCCDDDEEEFF
GGHHIIJJJKKKLLMM
NNOOPPQRSSSTTU
VWXYZZZZ&&&

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.
For printing cards, marking linen, books, etc. Contains everything shown in cut. Type, Tweezers, Holder, Indelible Ink, Ink Pad, etc. Thoroughly practical for business or household use and a most instructive amusement. Sent with catalogue illustrating over 1000 Tricks and Novelties, for 10c. in stamps to pay postage and packing on outfit and catalogue. Same outfit with figures 15c. Large outfit for printing two lines 25c.
Brownie Rubber Stamps—A set of 6 grotesque little people with Lik pad; price, postpaid, 10c.
G. A. R. series Rubber Stamps, 12 characters. Makes all kinds of Battles, Encampments and other military pictures, 25c. postpaid. Address
ROBERT H. INGERSOLL & BRO.
Dep't No. 61, 65 Cortlandt St., New York, Brownies 10c.

Faultless Form, delightful comfort, perfect health and grace—every breath a free one, every move an easy one—the invariable result of living in the

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE
CORSET WAIST
The favorite of all women who wish to dress well and feel well. Made in styles to suit every figure—long or short waist, high or low bust.
Children's, 25c. to 50c. Misses', 50c. to $1. Ladies', $1 to $2. For sale by all retailers.

3 FINE GERANIUMS 10c

Send 10 Cents For the above FINE GERANIUMS

The Big Six Geranium Offer for only 25c.

- A Splendid Double Geranium
- A Fine Distinct Single Geranium
- A Beautiful New Double Ivy Geranium
- A Lovely Sweet Scented Geranium
- A Distinct Golden Bronze Geranium
- A Charming Tricolor Geranium

THINK OF IT
The above collection of Geraniums for only 25c

- 6 Charming and Sweet Scented Tea Roses, lab'd 25c
- 6 Splendid Double Geraniums, all colors, lab'd 25c
- 6 Beautiful Single Geraniums, fine assortment, 25c
- 6 Sweetest and Best Carnations, choice colors, 25c
- 6 of the Loveliest Fuschias, double and single, 25c
- 6 Giant Prize Chrysanthemums, all fine colors, 25c
- The Grand African Blue Lily, 25c

Send 10c for our beautiful catalogue full of original illustrations. Our special bargain edition is free to all.
McCREGOR BROS., Springfield, O.

$250.00 FOR 4 FLOWER BEDS.
The following is the greatest collection ever offered for variety of colors, and I will pay $100 to person who grows the largest number of colors from it; $75 to second; $50 to third; and $25 to fourth. It will surprise you, and make a very interesting flower bed.

- 1 pkt. Alice Pansy—all colors, very grand.
- 1 pkt. Phlox—fancy mixed, all wonderful, showy colors.
- 1 pkt. Sweet Peas—Eckford's Mixed, over 30 kinds, splendid.
- 1 pkt. Chinese Pink—mixed colors, hardy and very showy.
- 1 pkt. Petunia—all colors, makes a gorgeous show.
- 1 pkt. Poppies—mixed, a wonderful selection of colors.
- 1 pkt. Mignonette—mixed, all kinds to be found; fragrant.
- 1 pkt. Chrysanthemum—all choicest kind—very choice.
- 1 pkt. Everlasting Flowers—all colors, flowers kept for yrs.
- 1 pkt. Mixed Flowers—over 100 kinds that grow and bloom.
- 2 bulbs Excelsior Pearl Tuberoses—sure to bloom early.
- 4 bulbs Gladioli, one each of White, Pink, Scarlet, Variegated
- 8 bulbs Gladioli, fancy mixed, lovely spikes, all colors.
- 1 bulb Gladiolus, Lemoine, earliest of all, butterfly colors.
- 8 bulbs Oxallia—sure to bloom—lovely color for borders.

These 10 pkts. of seed and 13 choice bulbs (worth $1.30), will all flower this season, and make a wonderful flower bed of many colors. I will send them with my 1896 catalogue, Pansy Calendar, full instructions for prizes and how to get the most colors, for 30 cents (silver or M. O.). Order at once, and you will be more than pleased. My catalogue shows a photo of such a bed.
"Cupid" Sweet Peas, the Floral Wonder, Free with each order.
F. B. MILLS, Box 147, ROSE HILL, N. Y.

G. A. R. 25c.

G. A. R. 25c.

SALFOLIO

Living, Trusting, Working.

(Written for "The Christian Herald.")

I AM living for my Saviour,
Walking in his blessed light,
Having by his love been rescued
From the gloom of endless night.
And it is my firm endeavor
To avoid the ways of sin,
That lead on to death and darkness,
Where so many enter in.

I am trusting in my Saviour,
In the Christ who died for me;
And who carried all my burdens,
When he hung upon the tree.
And I know that he will lead me
By the waters that are still,
Teach me here in earthly pastures,
How to do his blessed will.

I am working for my Saviour,
Trying some poor soul to save;
Through my Master's great atonement,
From a sinner's hopeless grave.
And I'm sure that he will help me
Something for his cause to do,
Till at last I sing his praises
With the holy and the true.

Neuman Grove, Neb. —J. N. GORTNER.

An Unselfish Christian.

Rev. Norman Macleod, the celebrated Scottish preacher and author, used to relate this incident: "Tom Baird, the carter, the beadle of my working man's church, was as noble a fellow as ever lived—God-fearing, true, unselfish. I shall never forget what he said when I asked him to stand at the door of the working men's congregation, and when I thought he was unwilling to do so in his working clothes. 'f,' said I, 'you don't like to do it, if you are ashamed—' 'Ashamed!' he exclaimed, as he turned round upon me. 'I'm fair ashamed o' yerself', sir. Div ye think that I believe, as ye I ken do that Jesus, who died for me, was stripped o' his raiment on the cross, and that I—Na, I'm proud to stand at the door.' There he stood for seven winters, without a sixpence of pay; all from love, though at my request the working congregation gave him a silver watch. When he was dying of small-pox, the same unselfish nature appeared. When asked if they should let him know, he replied, 'There's nae man evin' I like as I do him. I know he would come. But he shouldn't come on account of his wife and bairns, and so ye munna tell him.' I never saw him in his illness, never hearing of his danger till too late."

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have recently sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission:

J. D. Manning.
Mrs. S. R. Hinkson.
Mrs. W. M. Thorpe.
Mrs. Jas. E. Larkin.
Mr. and Mrs. D. B. K. Van Raalte.

Teachers and Students should take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It supplies just the material that is most wasted by brain work and nervous exertion—the phosphates.

New Cure—Kidney & Bladder Diseases

If you are a sufferer from kidney or bladder diseases, pain in back, or rheumatism, you should and for the new botanic discovery Alkavis, which will be sent you free by mail postpaid, by the Church Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is certainly a wonderful remedy, and you should try it, as it is offered you free.

No one who takes Hood's Sarsaparilla to purify the blood is trying an experiment. Its absolute merit is conclusively proved by the many testimonials received daily regarding its efficacy.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are the simplest and most effective remedy for Bronchitis, Asthma and Throat Diseases.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN.

Special Interest to Students & Teachers. R. H. WOODWARD COMPANY, of Baltimore, Md., making a most liberal offer of $200.00 to anyone who will send 200 copies of "Talks to Children about Jesus." This is one of the most popular books published. 150,000 copies already sold, but it is now selling faster than ever. Agents sell 10 to 15 copies for $2.00. An Extra Large retail price $270.00, given for selling 110 copies in three months. A $100.00 bicycle given for selling 80 copies in two months. A gold watch for selling 60 copies in one month. This premium in addition to commission. Complete outfit 3 cts. Freight paid, credit given. Agents wanted for our new book by Talmage. Three editions sold in 60 days. Same terms and conditions as on "Talks to Children about Jesus." Other popular books and Bibles also. They offer special and most liberal rates to Students and Teachers for summer vacation. During last summer, a large number of Students and Teachers canvassed for their books. Among the list, there were 23 who made over $20.00; 7 who won the $200.00 premium, and 76 made over $10.00 for their summer work. Write them immediately.

21 Experts compose the Bicycle Council that passes upon each detail of Columbia construction—engineers, metallurgists, designers, keen-eyed men of science. And they do no guessing. Back of them is one of the most complete Departments of Tests in this country. Such accurate scientific methods must produce standard machines.

Columbia
BICYCLES

Standard of the World.

$100

Hartford Bicycles are next best. $80, $60, $50.

To all Alike. The Art Catalogue of Columbia and Hartford Bicycles is free if you call upon any Columbia agent; by mail for two 2-cent stamps.

POPE MANUFACTURING CO., Hartford, Conn.

Branches and Agencies in nearly every town. If we are not properly represented in your vicinity let us know.

"Carmina for the Sunday-School."

By REV. LEWIS W. MUDGE, D.D., and REV. HERBERT B. TURNER. 293 Hymns, with Tunes; in durable Cloth Binding. Price, $35 per hundred.

The REV. E. MERVIN FERGUSON, Editor of New Jersey Sunday-School Messenger and Superintendent of the State S. S. Association, says (January 1896): "If you are going to get a new hymn-book for the Sunday-school, get one that the organist can play, the chorister can teach, and the school can sing. If the organist and chorister are all right, you need not worry about the school. If you want a well printed, cloth-bound book of moderate size and price, edited with rare wisdom and taste, and full of rich, sweet tunes, with strong harmonies and singable melodies, get a sample copy of 'Carmina for the Sunday-school.' The writer has played the book nearly through, and if there is a worthier collection in the market, he has not seen it."

Some recent adoptions:

Tompkins Ave. Congregational (Dr. Meredith), Brooklyn; 14th St. Presbyterian S. S. (Dr. McEwen), New York City; Fifth Ave. Baptist (Dr. Faunce), New York City; DeWitt Memorial S. S., New York City; South Presbyterian Chapel, Brooklyn; Hampton Institute, Virginia; 1st Congregational, Beloit, Wis.; 2nd Congregational, Beloit, Wis.; 1st Congregational, Calumet, Mich.; 1st Presbyterian, Trenton, N. J.; 1st Presbyterian, Scranton, Pa., and many others.

A copy of this book will be sent FREE to superintendents and committees FOR EXAMINATION on receipt of four 2-cent stamps. A. S. BARNES & CO., 56 East 10th Street, N. Y.

WHERE?

Write Gaze where and when you wish to travel, and they will inform you.

How and the Cost. Escorted Parties for Winter, Spring or Summer. Tickets issued for Independent Travel Everywhere. Choice Berths on all Steamships—no extra cost. See Tourist Gazette (by mail 10 cts.), and Save Money. State your wishes carefully: full information free. Address HENRY GAZE & SONS, Ltd., Universal Tourist Agents, 113 Broadway N.Y.; 201 Washington St., Boston; 220 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.; 135 S. Fifth St., Philadelphia.

WHEN?

LADIES!!!

Do you like a cup of Good Tea? If so, send this "Ad" and 15c. in stamps and we will mail you a 1-lb. sample Best Tea Imported. Any kind you may select. C. H. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P.O. Box 289. 31 & 33 Vesey St., N. Y.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

PERFECTION GASLIGHT BURNER

makes KEROSENE LAMPS give a brilliant gas light. No chimneys to buy or wicks to trim. Lasts for years. Cheaper than oil. Samples free. Address PERFECTION MFG CO., CINCINNATI, O.

Mallory Steamship Lines. DELIGHTFUL TRIPS BY SEA TO TEXAS, GEORGIA—FLORIDA. Tickets to all Winter Resorts in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida. Our 64-page Prospectus mailed free. C. H. MALLORY & CO., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my INVISIBLE Tubular Closures. Have helped more to good hearing than all other devices combined. Hearers! Help ears as glasses do eyes. F. Hiscox, 552 Broadway, N. Y. Book of proofs FREE.

A Lady's Sleeve Is no Small Matter

IN THESE DAYS.

But it is more important still to keep the arm that is inside of it beautiful and healthy, and this can best be done by using copco

TRADE MARK.

in the bath. Copco is the perfect soap. Price only five cents per cake. Ask for it at your dealers.

Made only by

The N. K. Fairbank Company, CHICAGO. NEW YORK. ST. LOUIS.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS

and a "Chautauqua"

Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .

100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE.—The combination offer of the Larkin Soap Manufacturing Co., although unusually generous, is genuine. From personal inspection of the factory and experience with their goods and premiums we know that they are all that is claimed for them and can heartily recommend them.—The Christian Work, New York.

NOTE.—We have examined the goods and premiums, as described above and know they will give satisfaction. We know the Company, have personally visited their establishment in Buffalo, have purchased and used the goods, and gladly say everything is as represented.—Epworth Herald, Chicago.

Consumption

If you value your Life

Or the Lives of those nearest and dearest to you,

Read!

"What I have seen of God's healing power through you demands of me that I speak for the good of others"

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs and Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis; together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order for $1.00 bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE, 367 Canal St., New York, and London, Eng.

"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

Spurgeon.

The above letter from the late eminent preacher, C. H. Spurgeon, is one of thousands of testimonials to the wonderful curative properties of my BALSAMIC ELIXIR, which not only cures consumption, but gives instant and permanent relief in cases of Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, La Grippe and all Chest affections.

It acts like a charm in ordinary cases of Cough, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough, Chills, &c., and should be kept in every home.

His Banner.

SURROUNDED by unnumbered foes,
Against my soul the battle goes!
Yet though I weary, sore distressed,
I know that I shall reach my rest:
I lift my tearful eyes above;
His banner over me is love.
Its sword my spirit will not yield,
Though flesh may faint upon the field;
He waves before my fading sight
The branch of palm,—the crown of light:
I lift my brightening eyes above,—
His banner over me is love.
My cloud of battle—just may dim,
His veil of splendor curtain him!
And in the midnight of my fear
I may not feel him standing near;
But, as I lift mine eyes above,
His banner over me is love.

The Joy of Giving.

There is a joy in giving that none but they who give with the heart as well as the hand can ever experience. Over sixty years ago Thomas Carlyle lived in a peasant's cottage in Scotland. The little fellow had saved up all his pennies and banked them in an earthen jar, which he kept on a high shelf above the fireplace. One cold, snowy day, when his parents had gone to market, there knocked at the door a poor, miserable, half-starved beggar who asked for help. The lad's heart was touched with pity, and climbing up on a chair, he reached down his jar and emptied the contents into the beggar's hand. When he grew up to be a great man, he described his feeling that day by saying with deep emotion: "I never knew before what the joy of heaven was like."

'1847'
Rogers Bros.
Silver Plate that Wears
Make sure of the "1847" if you wish the genuine original Rogers Silverware.
Meriden Britannia Company
MERIDEN, CONN.
263 Fifth Ave., NEW YORK.
Book of Illustrations Free.
Please mention this publication.

Macbeth lamp-chimneys are right if you get the right one for your lamp.

Let us send you the Index.

There is no other way to enjoy your lamp and avoid expense.

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa

What's Wrong?

Oh! everything, you say. If that's the case, your nervous system needs toning up. When everything is wrong, there's just one way to right it. Buy a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine from the druggist. He will refund the money if it fails to benefit.

Book on Heart and Nerves FREE.

Dr. Miles' Nervine Restores...Health

A NEW IDEA
which enables us to mail you for 10 cents, a PAPER PATTERN for any size or style of garment worn by ladies or children, guaranteed to fit, and equal in every respect to any pattern made, whatever its cost. A catalogue of over 500 up-to-date designs mailed for five cents in stamps. Monthly fashion sheet free.

802 NEW IDEA PATTERN COMPANY.
LADIES' POINTED YORE SHIRT WAIST.
Sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42.
West Broadway & Leonard St. New York.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN
for selling a book of great interest and popularity, "Story of Turkey and Armenia," with a full and graphic account of the massacres. R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore, Md., are offering $200.00 to anyone selling 200 copies of their new book. "Story of Turkey and Armenia." This is a work of great interest and popularity. Many agents sell 15 copies a day. A graphic and thrilling account is given of the massacres of the Armenians which have aroused the civilized world. Agents are offered the most liberal terms and premiums. Freight paid and credit given. Write them immediately.

O'NEILL'S, Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st St., New York.
The Big Store.

Fine Millinery, Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Cloaks, Costumes, Furniture, China, Glassware, Groceries, etc.

Every Woman Proud of Her Home will be interested in this Great Bargain which aptly illustrates The Big Stores' Profit-sharing method of merchandising

A Handsome Rocker

in Antique Oak or Mahogany finish, highly polished and regularly sold for $5.00, may be secured now for

$2.98

Send for our Catalogue — FREE.

We are now booking names for our Spring and Summer Catalogue, ready April 1st. Send for it and mention The Christian Herald.

All Paid Packages delivered by Express free of charge at any point within 100 miles of N. Y. City.

Kid Gloves.

We have been fortunate in securing a lot of Dressed Kid Gloves, with five Foster hooks — the most popular fastener in the world — which — although generally sold for $1.25 — we are able to offer and pay the postage.

AT 77c. PER PAIR

The newest shades in tan for Spring are included, and every pair is guaranteed. Money refunded if desired. Send size generally worn.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER,

Dry Goods.

Philadelphia.

A FEW OF THE STRONG POINTS OF THE B & H LAMP
B. Lig. Easy Lighting Device. Double Centr. Draught. Our Little Book Free. Telling more about our line of Gas and Electric Fixtures, Art M. Goods, &c.

Bradley & Hubbard Mfg. Co., Meriden, Conn., New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia

Pins of Quality

One pin that can't bend is worth a hundred that will—you can pin anything with Puritan Pins—you can drive them through a plank—sold everywhere—ask your retailer for them—if you can't get them in town, drop a postal card to American Pin Company, Waterbury, Conn., and free samples are yours.

SELF THREADING THIMBLE

Teeth and eyes saved! No threading conquered at last! A new patent thimble combines a needle threader through which a needle can be easily threaded. A thread cutter which never jams. Two ingenious attachments for biting thread, and a threading needle while sewing. The thimbles are highly finished and plated and resists corrosion. The threader is most perfect ever produced. A combination thimble and needle, retail for 10 cts, though they have been sold as high as a dollar piece. Agents make $10.00 Sample by mail postpaid 10c one doz. $5.00

H. T. ROOT & CO
34 Park Row, New York

HELLO!
Our New 50c. Telephone

Patented and original. The success of this telephone is due to the fact that it has no moving parts, no complicated mechanism, no delicate parts, no expensive material, no costly construction. It is a simple, sturdy, reliable, and economical device. It is a new and original invention, and it is a great success. It is a new and original invention, and it is a great success. It is a new and original invention, and it is a great success.

R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 CORTLAND ST. N. Y.

JUNE FIRST we will GIVE some FIFTY DOLLARS YOU IN Mothers only write for particulars to The Bahette Co., 493 Phila. Bourse, Phila.

FREE trial in your home. Cut this out and send to the Bahette Co., 493 Phila. Bourse, Phila.

ALFRED PEATS
Prize
WALL-PAPER

SAMPLES FREE FREIGHT PREPAID

We will mail you samples free of our Prize Patterns, 1896 Series, together with our guide, "How to Paper, and Economy in Home Decoration." If you will send us a description of the different rooms you have to paper, and what they are used for, we will carefully select the patterns and colorings most suitable. Our new $1.00 Prize Designs are the most artistic and delicately colored patterns in the market, and are better made than those of any other manufacturer. Prices.

10 cents and up per roll.
The New York World says: "Very so beautiful, so perfect, or offered so cheap."
These designs are the most artistic and delicately colored patterns in the market, and are better made than those of any other manufacturer. Prices.

3 cents and up per roll.
WE PREPAY THE FREIGHT.

Send us for samples, and you will positively get the latest colorings and designs to the market.

AGENTS WANTED. One agent wanted in each town who can furnish good references to all those who are interested in the business, and who will return a request for samples of our designs. Expenses not necessary. Agent's fee, 25c.

Prices and Samples are Our Best Argument.
Write to nearest address.

41-43 W. 14th ST. NEW YORK. 143-145 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO.

R. HUNTER, THE EMINENT LUNG SPECIALIST,

Completes a Half Century of Successful Practice in the Profession.

Devotion to Medical Science and its Amazing Results in the Cure of Consumption.

First Success in Authenticated Cases of Tuberculosis.

(March 4, 1896, Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 11th Street, New York, will have completed fifty years as a physician. His career has been remarkable. For 45 years Dr. Hunter has given his whole time to the study and treatment of the lungs and the diseases. Many will be glad to know why he is a lung specialist and how he achieved such brilliant success. His sympathy with sufferers from consumption is due to the fact that he was himself once a consumptive with all the misery and pain to life which that involves. Driven to despair by the failure of all stomach medicines to stop the progress of the disease, he resolved to act for himself, reasoning that consumption being a disease of the lungs, nothing put into the stomach reached its seat, and failed because it did not. It was the lungs that needed help, and he saw that that could only be obtained by gaseous medicines and medicated air breathed directly into the lungs. He reasoned that in no other possible way could they be reached by curative remedies, so he used the necessary instruments and began to breathe himself by inhalation. The rapid improvement and eventual cure of his own case led him to apply the treatment to others with the same gratifying results. Dr. Hunter is justly styled the Father of Inhalation, for he was the first to introduce, and successfully apply it to the treatment of consumption. With him it is a complete system of medicine adapted to the individual requirements of each case. Let living patients tell its wonderful results in their cases.

H. O. L. Waters, Fairhaven, Mass., says: "The lung disease fastened on me. My days were numbered. Could not wash my hands or face and not be fed. Dr. Hunter said he could cure me, and a few days I was able to walk up and down stairs." January 13, 1896, "I am in all respects a different man." January 22, 1896, "My lungs feel as they had been washed out and the distressed condition cleared off." February 11, 1896, "I walked the streets to-day. A short while ago I could not make my sitting-room."

J. L. Patrick, 79 Smith Street, Atlanta, Ga., says: "My wife's condition is a great deal better. She has gained seven pounds. Yours was the only treatment to control her cough. Her rapid improvement is remarkable."

M. Crittenden, wife of the Rev. Orrin Crittenden, Mt. View, Cal., says: "No more hemorrhages; soreness all gone; no chills or fever. I feel not have been alive but for your treatment."

M. Mendenhall, of Harper Bros., N. Y. City, says: "Treated by five physicians; could not walk a block; coughed and expectorated matter. Dr. Hunter cured me."

Lambert Miller, of H. B. Claffin Co., N. Y. City, says: "I had severe pains in lungs and throat like raw beef; abscess at base of lung. Am fully recovered and thank Dr. Hunter for his treatment."

Lydell Whitehead, 517 W. 15th St. N. Y. City, says: "Had coughs, pains in chest, lungs nervous and short of breath. Under Dr. Hunter's care I gained 35 lbs., and am now well."

A. L. Peer, 179 Washington St. Newark, N. J.: "Had hemorrhages, lost 40 lbs." Treated by Dr. Hunter, the hemorrhages ceased, to the amazement of his former physicians. "Dr. Hunter saved my life."

J. B. Cummings, of New Wilmington, Lawrence Co., Penn., consulted Dr. Hunter about his son, Rev. T. J. Cummings, and this is what he writes: "Dr. Neve, F. R. C. S., has twice examined me and reports my lungs completely healed. God this restoration is due to your treatment."

Mr. Henry Brown, 118 West St., N. Y. City, Miss Emily Kleiman, 513 Ann St. West Hoboken; Mr. Job Cassidy, 232 E. 34th St. N. Y. City; Mr. A. O. Lotze, 1,625 1st Avenue, N. Y. City; Mr. David Hiscoc, 390 Webster Avenue, L. I. City; all re-diagnosed by their physicians as consumptive but are now cured by Dr. Hunter's treatment.

Edward Raynor, Bensonhurst, L. I.: "Coughed up bloody matter; had hectic fever and night sweats; was nervous and lost flesh. Completely restored."

Rich Coery, 115 Columbia St., Brooklyn, says: "I had asthma and bronchitis and could not do a day's work. Now I feel like a new man."

Of these will answer letters of enquiry, as will so Mr. J. H. Van Derveer, New Brunswick, N. J.; Mr. R. L. Morrell, Port Washington, N. Y.; Mrs.

Milford Jones, Dover, N. J., who is "a living witness to the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of medicated air inhalation, having been cured of consumption after being declared a hopeless case."

E. M. Hunter, editor Vermont Record, Fairhaven, Vt.; Mrs. Thomas Eastman, Kearsburgh, N. J.; Mr. C. W. Buck, P. O. Box 1,069, Denver, Col.; Prof. Herring, Lutheran Seminary, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Holton, Kennett Square, Pa., and thousands of others.

The New York World, the Press, Advertiser, and other representative papers of New York City have investigated Dr. Hunter's success by interviewing his patients and have published the result to the world at large for the benefit of the afflicted.

After such a life's history and work as the Doctor's it is not to be wondered at that he grows impatient with the unwarrantable excitement over and importance given every new concoction or device presented to the public, whether with or without merit, knowing as he does that the condition to be met in every lung case, no matter how mild it may be, is too serious to be trifled with by nostrums which his experience has proved cannot even arrest for any time the disease that is sapping the patient's life. No one in the profession has the right to feel so strongly as this man of science who has given an ordinary lifetime to the study of lung maladies.

Dr. Hunter's treatment has passed from the region of theorizing, and become an established fact, verified by the word of reputable patients who do not hesitate to put their evidence on record. It remains but to congratulate sufferers from weak or diseased breathing organs that so far as human testimony can prove anything, the day of their recovery has dawned, if they are but wise enough to embrace their good fortune. They need no longer droop or dread that their will become "hopeless cases," while the inhalation of soothing, healing and germ-destroying remedies continue to work the undisputed cures it has done and is doing under Dr. Hunter's guidance.

When Your CAKE Is All Dough

Tea and Dinner Sets, Watches, Lamps, Curtains and other valuable and pretty premiums given away.

STANDARD TEA AND SPICE CO., W. M. Jones, Manager, 127 E. Front St., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS ARE SURPRISED

at the great demand for our new Electric Reflector. It makes the ordinary Kerosene Lamp equal the Electric Light. Fits any Lamp. Sells at sight. Sample postpaid, 15c. We make 50 other new fast sellers. PHOENIX MFG. CO., Dept. 3, Newark, N. J.

You have not read this before!

When your cake is heavy, soggy, indigestible, it's a pretty sure sign that you didn't shorten it with COTTOLENE. When this great shortening is rightly used, the result will surely satisfy the most fastidious. Always remember that the quality of COTTOLENE makes a little of it go a long way. It's willful waste to use more than two-thirds as much as you would of lard or butter. Always use COTTOLENE this way, and your cake and pastry will always be light, wholesome, delicious.

Genuine COTTOLENE is sold everywhere in tins, with trade-marks - "Cottolene" and "leer's head in cotton-plant wreath" - on every tin.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Montreal.

LADIES FURNISH FREE

All we ask is this: That you take your spare time and induce your friends and neighbors to join you in sending to us for their Teas, Spices, Baking Powder, Extracts, Toilet Soaps, Perfumes, etc. Get up a Club and send us an order for $10, and a Handsome Tea Set is yours. We prepay freight on set and goods, so you'll have no expense. All goods guaranteed to give satisfaction. It's Easy Work and you get Handsome Returns. Commission agents are making $10 to $20 a week. Send for Premium List, Order Blanks and full particulars at once.

STANDARD TEA AND SPICE CO., W. M. Jones, Manager, 127 E. Front St., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS ARE SURPRISED

at the great demand for our new Electric Reflector. It makes the ordinary Kerosene Lamp equal the Electric Light. Fits any Lamp. Sells at sight. Sample postpaid, 15c. We make 50 other new fast sellers. PHOENIX MFG. CO., Dept. 3, Newark, N. J.

You have not read this before!

The "Pass-It-On-Society."

Probably many of our readers have already heard of this society and its work. It was started on a suggestion made by the Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D., of Brooklyn, who writes, on February 8, 1895: "My Dear Sir: Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity, and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the 'Pass-It-On-Society.'" On December 5, 1895 (ten months later), Dr. Farrar writes: "I believe it is a real blessing to the afflicted." If you are suffering with Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever, Rose Cold, or any similar disease of the respiratory organs, send for HYOMEI, the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment comprised in Booth's "Hyomei" Pocket Inhaler Outfit, by mail, $1.00.

Your friend would not "pass-it-on" to you unless convinced of its merit. In ASTHMA Hyomei gives instant relief, stops the cough, the wheezing and gasping, and makes breathing easy in a few moments time. In CATARRH it removes the offensive accumulations, clears the head, removes catarrhal deafness and purifies the breath. It cures BRONCHITIS permanently and robs CROUP of its terrors.

HOW THE "PASS-IT-ON-SOCIETY" GROWS.

Griffin, Ga., July 8, 1895. Like Dr. Farrar, I want to join the "Pass-It-On-Society." I am so grateful for the good results that I have received from the use of Hyomei, and I have already spoken of it to a number of my friends.

C. I. STACY, Sec'y Y. M. C. A., Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1895. In thirty years' experience in the practice of medicine I have never given my name in support of a proprietary remedy, until I met with Hyomei, which I endorse with all my heart (professional ethics to the contrary notwithstanding). Since testing Hyomei in Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, I believe in it for itself, for what it has done, and I gladly add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

S. H. MORRIS, M.D., 159 Franklin St. P. S. - You are at liberty to use this as you may deem best.

Pass Christian, Miss. I have been a sufferer from Catarrh and Bronchitis ever since last August; my pastor, Rev. O. W. Flowers, advised me to try your remedy. He has been using one of your Pocket Inhalers ever since last Spring, and has derived much benefit from it.

MISS BERTHA B. STEWARD, Harrison County, N. Y. I have been troubled with Bronchitis for about four years. No medicine helped me. About two weeks ago I tried one of your Pocket Inhalers, which gave me immediate relief. Sunday evening my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Farrar, spoke with great difficulty, apparently from a heavy cold settled in his chest. I sent him one of your Pocket Inhalers. I enclose his reply.

HALSEY FITCH, 170-172 Chambers Street. (Dr. Farrar's reply is given above).

Greensboro, Ala., Sept. 15, 1895. Your Hyomei cured me of Catarrh after other remedies failed; will add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

W. M. SEAR. New York, Sept. 20, 1895. I take pleasure in adding my name to the long list of those whose lives have been made happier by the use of Hyomei. It is not only an instant relief to Catarrh sufferers, but will cure this disease entirely. I have been the instrument of inducing many friends and acquaintances to seek relief through its use. I have yet to learn of one who has not been benefited I want to "pass-it-on."

A. G. THOMPSON, 33 Wall Street.

AMERICAN UNION LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, 44, 46, 48, Cedar St., New York, February 19, 1896. Please find enclosed one dollar for which send one Pocket Inhaler Outfit to my friend, D. S. Waltour, 134 Franklin St., City. It has done me so much good that I never cease recommending it to my friends and as you know have bought as many as 12 or 15 which I have given to personal friends, and have influenced more than twice this number to buy them, and I have yet to meet one who has not thanked me for recommending it. It has completely cured my little daughter of Catarrh, from which she has been suffering for years.

Very truly yours, J. S. NUGENT (Treasurer).

Albany, N. Y., July 3, 1895. I will tell you candidly your remedy has given me more relief from my Asthma than anything I have used, and really I have been so enthusiastic over it that I have made a great many converts, not only in Albany, but West Troy. The effect Hyomei has on me is very pleasant; when I am oppressed for breath, I inhale a short time, and the great desire to cough is gone. The little Inhaler is my constant companion.

Mrs. SARAH E. BANTHAM, 359 Clinton Avenue.

Cures by Inhalation

HYOMEI does cure. Consultation and trial treatment free at my office.

Nothing has been discovered so effective for the purposes named. Price by mail, 50 cents.

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th St., New York.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.
We will mail on application, free of charge, information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. A litho.
Altenheim Medical Dispensary,
15 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

3 NOVELTIES HIGH QUALITY LOW PRICE.

TER, GIANT COMET WHITE. Immense. THE 3 NOVELTIES
 PID SWEET PEA. Six seeds. White. See out.
 Chinese Imperial Morning Glory. See out.
 Little Gem. White.
 Double. Very large.
 Anthus or Japanese Pink.
 Zinnias. Gens.
 Philox Drummond.
 mon Verbena. Fragrant.
 onette Giant Tree.
 Sweet Peas, 40 kinds.
 Verbena-Mammoth.

FULL-SIZE PACKETS OF ALL THE ABOVE FLOWERS FOR 25c.

To anyone sending for 4 of these collections from 4 people, with names and addresses enclosed I will send

FREE 5 BEGONIA BULBS IN 5 COLORS OR 5 BULBS 50 CENTS. Flowers are 4 inches across. Crimson, Yellow, White, Pink and Blotched. Bloom in pots in the house summer and winter; outside are smothered with bloom all summer. Try to secure 4 orders and get these free. Little work, good pay. Catalogue—Directions for Growing, Premium, and Prize Blanks with every order. You can make money selling my seeds.

MISS MARY E. MARTIN, FLORAL PARK, NEW YORK.

50c Trial Sets Of Choice Seeds, Plants and Fruits.

By mail postpaid, safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Order by the letters and the numbers from this advertisement NOW, as these are introductory sets, not in catalogue, an Elegant Annual of 164 pages, which will be sent free with first order. If none of these sets suit you and you want anything in our line send for CATALOGUE FREE. About 60 pages devoted to a COMPLETE SET OF FLOWER SEEDS, 70 to PLANTS and the balance to the CREAM OF THE FRUITS. Trees and plants in these sets are all thrifty and well rooted. Try them.

- J-10 elegant profuse blooming Roses, including one of the new famous Crimson Rambler, 50c
- E-16 pkts choice Vegetable Seeds, 16 sorts and 1 pkt. of our new Golden Hubbard Squash, 50c
- E-21 pkts choice Flower Seeds, 20 sorts, 50c
- E-10 fragrant Carnation Pinks, 10 sorts, 50c
- G-10 Prize Chrysanthemums, 10 sorts, 50c
- H-4 superb French Cannas, 4 sorts, 50c
- K-10 large flowered Geraniums, 10 sorts, 50c
- L-10 fine Gladioli, all flowering bulbs, 50c
- N-10 fine Rosebuds, 10 sorts, all flowering, 50c
- O-10 flowering plants all different, 50c
- P-6 hardy ornamental Shrubs, 6 sorts, 50c
- Q-6 hardy Climbing Vines, 6 sorts, 50c
- U-2 elegant Palms, strong plants, 2 sorts, 50c

One-half each of any two sets 50c., any 3 sets $1.25, 5 sets $2.00.
 Everything of the best for LAWN, CONSERVATORY, PARK, ORCHARD, VINEYARD and GARDEN.
 42nd YEAR. 1000 ACRES. 29 GREENHOUSES.
 THE STORRS & HARRISON CO., Box 71 Painesville, O.

$250.00 FOR TOMATOES. This is the most wonderful Tomato we ever others will not. It is a beauty, very smooth, and so early that it more than pleases every one. The seed need not be planted until April or May, and will give an abundance of fruit. Be sure to try it.

ALL-HEAD CABBAGE. Very early. Sure to be all head. Excellent quality and a good keeper. Single heads have weighed 60 lbs.

JAPANESE CLIMBING CUCUMBER. A wonderful variety from Japan, and will climb a trellis, wire netting, or any support 5 to 6 feet. Fruits early and continually; long, tender, excellent for pickling. Please all and a wonderful curiosity.

EARLY FORTUNE POTATO. A wonderful variety, earliest in the world, and 5 weeks after the Early Rose, matured at same time and yielded over 3 times as many. It is tested in every garden in U. S. this year and offer a Handsome Prize for largest yield in each State from one potato. Instructions with potato. SPECIAL OFFER. We will send a packet each of Early Tomato, All-Head Cabbage and Surehead Cucumber, 1 ear Tom Thumb Pot. Corn, and 1 whole Early Fortune Potato, packed from frost with a Garden Annual (nothing published like it) for only 25c. (See every person sending M. O. or silver for above Collection, and names of three friends, and $1.00. We will send "Success With the Garden," a monthly magazine, one year free, and 50c. Certificate for seeds. Order at once. Address FAIRVIEW SEED FARM, Box 42, ROSE HILL, N. Y.

Your Neighbor

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS COLICATE. She will tell you of its great convenience (it is made instantly, with boiling water or milk, of its purity, and its superior quality. In 1 pint and 1/2 pound tins.—All dealers.—Everywhere.

When F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

SPoons FREE

WANT LADIES to introduce our Baking Powder spoons. One doz. handsome Silver-plated Spoons, warranted for years free. Goods will be sent to you. They are sold at wholesale price if not satisfactory money refunded. Agents wanted. For exclusive territory, terms and prices write POSTLAND MFG. CO., Box 63 Portland, Me.

ALL-PAPER

Samples mailed free. Prices from 25c. to $3.40 a roll, 8 yds. KAYSER & ALLMAN, 602-34 Market St., 415 Arch St., PHILADELPHIA.

SOLD!

UNDER A POSITIVE GUARANTEE

As clean as can be done on the 75,000 in use. Washboard and with much more ease. This applies to 100's Perfect Washing Machine which will be sent out at wholesale price if not satisfactory money refunded. Agents wanted. For exclusive territory, terms and prices write POSTLAND MFG. CO., Box 63 Portland, Me.

SPRAY PUMPS

21 STYLES. BEST and CHEAPEST.

Catalogue and full treatise on spraying fruit and vegetable crops mailed free. Address WM. STAHL, QUINCY, ILL.

FLAVOR CUDAHY'S REX BRAND EXTRACT OF BEEF

Is delicious flavor for Soups, etc. Send 4c. for Book and 2c. for the Flavor Flair acutical Co. South Omaha, Neb.

Japanese Imperial Morning Glory. Regular price, 15 cts. a pkt.

A Woman Florist.

EVERBLOOMING ROSES Red, White, Pink, Yellow and Blush FOR 10 cts

ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER.

Send 10 cents for the above Five colors of Roses. I want to show you samples of the Roses I grow, hence this offer.

8 of the loveliest, fragrant, everblooming Roses, 25 cts.
 8 of the finest double Geraniums, all colors, 25 cts.
 8 Most charming single Geraniums, all colors, 25 cts.
 8 Carnations, the "Divine flower," all colors, 25 cts.
 8 Glorious varieties Fuchsias, double and single, 25 cts.
 8 Prize winning Chrysanthemums, world-beaters, 25 cts.
 10 Packets Flower Seeds, a choice assortment, 10 cts.

SPECIAL OFFER.—The above eight collections containing 63 Plants and 10 pkts of Seeds mailed to any address for $1.25. We guarantee satisfaction. Once a customer always one. Catalogue free. Address, MISS ELLA V. BAINES, SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

FLOWER SEEDS

SURPRISE COLLECTION

SPECIAL OFFER

Made to secure 500,000 New Choice tomatoes. 8 PKGS. Seeds sure to grow and blossom 10 cts. the Postpaid for 10 cts. the varieties—Pansy 50 colors, Philox 20 varieties, Pinks 15 finest shades, Petunia 12 latest colors, Balsam 10 grand sorts, Poiny 10 elegant shades, Mignonette, sweet, very fragrant, and Everblooming Sweet Alyssum.

E. U. Kimbark, Evanston, Ill., writes: "It is a pleasure to plant Buckbee's seeds—they always grow." Add three cents extra to cover postage and receive New Instructive and Beautiful Seed and Plant Book.

H. W. BUCKBEE,
 P. O. Box No 567
 Rockford Seed Farms, ROCKFORD, ILL.

FERRY'S SEEDS

Ask for them—get them, plant them. They are the standard seeds everywhere; sown by the largest planters in the world. Whether you plant 50 square feet of ground or 50 acres, you should have Ferry's Seed Annual for '96. The most valuable book for farmers and gardeners ever given away. Mailed free.

D. M. FERRY & CO.,
 Detroit, Mich.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

EGGLESTON'S ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

The old man I fitted 2 years ago when your trust about 80 days and said he was cured. Saw him last week and although he was 63 years old and a hard worker, he is as sound as when a boy.

Yours truly, M. C. Sims, M. D.
 St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 21, 1895.

I have had splendid result from your truss in quite a number of cases of grown people.

DEARBORN CITY, Pa., June 3, 1895.
 I received my truss the 27th and since I have had it have taken more comfort with it than any I ever have had. The last day I got it I put it on and moved grass all day and I never noticed that I had it on me.

ABOUT 3 years ago I bought one of your trusses I wore it about 6 months and it has made a final cure. Was badly ruptured. I would have written to you about this before but wanted to see if my cure was permanent.

$1,000 forfeited to you if every testimonial used by us is not genuine. Address
E. H. EGGLESTON & CO., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

15 LARGE PKTS. NEW FLOWER SEEDS FOR ONLY 15 CENTS

To pay postage and packing.

1 pkt New Japanese Imperial Morning Glory (as shown in cut). This grand, new variety is truly Wonderful; flowers very large, all colors, red, green, marbled, iridescent, white spotted with blue, and all of incomparable beauty.

1 pkt Mammoth Pansy, 1 pkt Cosmos, 1 pkt Crispum Eye Hibiscus, 1 pkt Chinese Pink, 1 pkt Aster, 1 pkt Galliardia, 1 pkt G. - daisy, 1 pkt Larkspur, 1 pkt Garden Cockscomb, 1 pkt Sweet Alyssum, 1 pkt Candytuft, 1 pkt Mignonette, 1 pkt Philox, 1 pkt Sweet Pea. 15 large packets choice vegetable seeds, all different kinds 15 cts. 15 cents New Gladioli 15 cts. We will send the direct seeds for the 15 cts. Remember we refund your money if not as represented.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

THE HARDY WHITE MEMORIAL ROSE. THE IDEAL PLANT FOR CEMETERIES.

THE MEMORIAL ROSE AS IT GROWS.

Growing in sun or shade, possessing the hardiness of the Oak, with a distinctive charm entirely its own, the Memorial Rose (Rosa Wichuriana) will be found a singularly appropriate plant for beautifying cemetery plots. It creeps along the ground just as an Ivy does, growing ten feet in a single season, forming a dense mat of dark green lustrous foliage, with thornless stems. The flowers are single, snow-white with a golden yellow disc, are from 5 to 6 inches in circumference, and have the delicious fragrance of the Banksia Roses. The flowers, in clusters, are produced in the most lavish profusion, and are in their fullest glory just after the June Roses are past. Seen then the clusters look like great masses of snow, and are a sight long to be remembered. But its use is not confined to Cemeteries, for not only is it also perfectly adapted for garden culture, but for screening rocky slopes, embankments and such places as it is desirable to quickly cover with verdure it is unsurpassed. Indeed, it adapts itself to every condition of growth, whether barren or fertile soil, rocky ledge, shady nook or sun-kissed slope.

Prices (free by mail), good plants, 40c. each, 3 for $1.00, 7 for $2.00, 12 for $3.00; extra strong plants, 60c. each, 2 for $1.00, 5 for $2.00, 12 for $4.50.

All purchasers of the Memorial Rose who will state where they saw this advertisement will be sent our MANUAL for 1896 of "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN" (100 pages, 6 colored plates and over 500 engravings). To those desiring the MANUAL only, we will mail it on receipt of 20 cents (in stamps), which is less than cost.

PETER HENDERSON & Co.
 35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK.

$18.50 Buy Direct from Manufacturers

Save Agents Large Profits. On receipt of $18.50, we will ship this new High Arm, High-Grade "Arlington" SEWING MACHINE anywhere, and prepay all freight charges to any railway station east of Rocky Mountains. Money refunded if not as represented after 30 days trial. We will ship C.O.D. with privilege of 30 days trial, no less; adapted for light or heavy work, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, automatic bobbin-winder, and complete set of best attachments in metal box free. 10 Years Written Warranty. If you prefer 80 days' trial before paying, send for our large illustrated CATALOGUE, with Testimonials, explaining fully how we ship sewing machines anywhere, to anyone, at lowest manufacturers' prices without asking one cent in advance. We are headquarters and have all makes and kinds in stock from cheapest to the best. Over 52 different styles. High-Arm "Arlington Gem" machine $14.00 and $18.50, guaranteed better than machines sold by others at $19.00 to $23.00. We also sell new Singer machines at $15.00, $15.50 & $16.00. We will sell you a better machine for the same money or the same machine for less money than you can buy elsewhere.

REFERENCES.—Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Agents or First National Bank, Chicago, whose capital is $10,000,000.00.

This special offer is made to introduce our machines and make new customers. Write today. Address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-163 W. Van Buren St., Dept. A-38, CHICAGO, ILLS.

STARK TREES BEARFRUIT

TESTED 70 YEARS

Wanted for GOLD plum etc. Stark, Louisiana, Mo., New York, Ills.

CRYSTAL FOUNTAIN GERM-FILTER

An absolutely perfect sanitary filter. Filtering cylinder of porous rock, cleaned instantly by revolving against automatic rock cleaner—without opening filter. No other filter has or can have this device. Full description and prices of filters in a book that will be mailed free to you. Send postal for it. Also Gravity Filters—in which we use the Crystal Fountain Rock Tube.

The Geo. L. Squier Mfg. Co.,
 Filter Dept. "C," Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A.

INCUBATORS, BROODERS, VEGETABLE and CLOVER CUTTERS. BONE and GRAIN MILLS.

A complete line of poultry supplies at lowest prices. Green corn bone will make HENS LAY in winter and produce fertile eggs for hatching. Send 4c. for catalog and valuable information on poultry raising.

PERKLESS INCUBATOR & BROODER CO.,
 612 Y Ohio St., QUINCY, ILL.

$15 WE GIVE PRICES. $5

100 Egg Self-regulating 8000 in use. As good as the best regardless of price or money refunded. Circulars free. Catalogue and Treatise on Artificial Incubation. Buckeye Incubator Co., Springfield, O.

OLD HEN Brooders 150 Chick, 4c. for No. 60

Cake

Easily removed without breaking. Perfection Tins require no greasing. Round, square and oblong. 2 round layer tins by mail 35 cents. Catalogue Free.

Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 6 St., Bath, N. Y.

SWEET PEAS FOR THE MILLION!

We are determined, so far as in our power, that every American garden shall have the best NEW SWEET PEAS in 1896. By making Purity and High Quality our aim, rather than low prices, we are acknowledged Headquarters for SWEET PEAS. We have thirty-two thousand pounds of the seed, and sell the usual grade Mixed Sweet Peas at 35 cents per lb., 3 lbs. for $1.00, postpaid,—BUT we recommend as far superior the most beautiful NOVELTIES here offered:—

25 Cents buys these Seven Superb Sweet Peas:—

BLANCHE BURPEE. Mr. HENRY ECKFORD, the noted English specialist, has stated repeatedly that he considers "BLANCHE BURPEE" the finest of all the famous Sweet Peas that he has originated. Flowers of purest white, and giant size.

DOROTHY TENNANT. Of large, expanded form, the flowers are exceedingly pretty and attractive. Standards a deep rosy mauve, with wings of bluish mauve. Very distinct and extra fine.

LADY PENZANCE. The standard is a beautiful laced-pink, touching orange, while the wings are a darker pink. Truly a superb flower, of large size and most exquisite color.

NEW LOTTIE ECKFORD. This is the improved new strain. Flowers are very large and remarkably beautiful, having a white ground delicately edged and suffused with lavender blue.

ROYAL ROBE. This is undoubtedly the best soft pink to date. A very lovely flower of large size; an exquisite variety.

STANLEY. Large, handsome flowers in fours on long stems and are of a rich dark maroon. By far the finest dark variety.

SPECIAL SUPERFINE MIXED. This mixture contains only the best Eckford New Sweet Peas. It is a choice blending of seventeen superb large-flowered new named varieties.

The Seven Superb Sweet Peas advertised above, in the same size packets, would have cost $1.00 in 1895, but are sold now for 25 cents.

"JUST HOW TO GROW SWEET PEAS; FULL DIRECTIONS BY AN EXPERT," mailed FREE with each collection.

Five collections mailed for $1.00, OR four collections and a 25-cent packet of our floral wonder, New Dwarf Sweet Pea,—Burpee's "CUPID."

CUPID has won the highest honors possible in Europe. We had plants grown in pots exhibited at The Royal Horticultural Society, in London, England, where, by unanimous vote of the Committee, it received an Award of Merit—the highest honor possible. We exhibited also in Paris, France, at the Société National d'Horticulture, where it received a First-class Certificate.

"CUPID." Foliage deep emerald-green; flowers pure white, of unequalled substance, and full size. The plants never grow over five inches high, and spread fifteen inches in diameter. CUPID is a wonderfully free bloomer,—a mass of white,—it carpets the ground from May until November.

In regular-size packets (each containing twenty seeds), per pkt. 25 cts.; five pkts. for $1.00, or twelve pkts. for $2.00, postpaid. In half-size packets (ten seeds each), per pkt. 15 cts.; two pkts. for 25 cts.; ten pkts. for $1.00, postpaid, to any address.

BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION for '96

Price 25 cents, contains TEN packets best seed of ten most beautiful and RARE NEW FLOWERS, which, at regular retail prices, are worth $1.20. We prepared for this special offer by growing large areas of all these last season, and guarantee all full-size packets of same finest quality as if purchased at regular retail prices. This is a bona fide offer. It is well known that we do the largest mail seed business in the world, and this offer is made to still further extend our trade.

For 25 Cents we will mail one packet each of all the following:—

AMARANTHUS,—Coleus-leaved. Entirely new; remarkable for size and beauty of its foliage. It grows into splendid large specimens, which may be mistaken for some huge variety of rare Coleus.

ASTERS,—Fordhook Favorites. This special mixture includes the new Comet Asters of all colors, Triumph and White-branching, together with all colors of the best Victoria, Pom-pom-flowered Perfection, and large-flowering Queen Asters. Never before has an equal assortment of the finest Asters been offered.

BALSAM,—Burpee's Defiance. Of wonderful perfection. Most beautiful flowers, double as a Camellia, two and a half inches across.

HELIANTHUS,—Double Sunflower. A peculiar new Double Sunflower;—no one would imagine a Sunflower could be so beautiful!

MIGNONETTE,—Giant Gabrielle. Large; of delicious fragrance.

NASTURTIUMS,—Fordhook Favorites. Most brilliant Tall Nasturtiums, including Golden-leaved and New Hybrids of Madame Gunter.

THREE NEW PANSIES. The bright Meteor, showy Kaiser Frederick, and dainty, iridescent Peacock—certainly three of the most beautiful Pansies.

THREE LARGEST-FLOWERING NEW PETUNIAS. Giants of California, Burpee's Defiance, and Giant Emperor in unequalled mixture.

PHLOX HORTENSIAEFLORA. Flower-clusters, like the Hydrangea.

RICINUS ZANZIBARENSIS. A new gigantic variety. Truly a most noble plant of sub-tropical appearance; the leaves measure four feet across.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS buys the entire ten varieties as above, with directions for culture. Five Complete Collections mailed for $1.00.

HOW CAN WE AFFORD IT?

will be the first question asked by thousands who read this advertisement. We answer that we cannot afford it, in the ordinary sense—the collection advertised above is sold at a positive loss,—but we charge the expense to advertising, and many years' experience have shown that a fair trial of the Famous FORDHOOK FLOWER SEEDS is the very best advertisement we can have. We have prepared 50,000 of these collections, and from the sale of these are sure to make thousands of new customers for BURPEE'S SEEDS. Do not hesitate to order—we guarantee entire satisfaction—and thus we can afford to wait another year for our profit from future sales at regular prices.

FLOWERS FOR EVERY HOME.

This new book tells how to grow successfully flowers from seed, both indoors and out. It has been written by E. D. DARLINGTON, who for many years has been the superintendent of the trial grounds at our famous FORDHOOK FARM. Few writers have had such opportunities to learn flowers, and what he knows the author tells in language that can be easily understood. Price 10 cents.

To keep abreast of the times, you should read BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1896.

4 PREMIUMS FREE!

packet each of the lovely novelty from California, "JUANITA," and the curious new Sweet Pea, "ODDITY," one copy each of our big booklets, "All About Sweet Peas" (by the Rev. W. T. HUTCHINS) and "Flowers for Every Home." ALL four premiums FREE with two-dollar order, any two with a one dollar order, or any one with an order for fifty cents,—always provided you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Seed Growers, Philadelphia, Pa

ECKFORD'S
New Giant White,—
BLANCHE BURPEE.

Accurately engraved from the photograph of a stem taken at FORDHOOK FARM.

For Eckford's
Own Illustration
see last page of
CHRISTIAN HERALD
February 5, 1896

BLANCHE BURPEE SWEET PEAS

This superb new white variety must be regarded as the finest of all the white Sweet Peas in form and size, and of a pure white color. It was raised by Mr. Eckford, a named BLANCHE BURPEE. Mr. Burpee is an eminent American horticulturist, and has taken great interest in Eckford's fine Sweet Peas, and is introducing them to considerable extent in the United States. I have repeatedly seen the variety in flower at various exhibitions, and compared it with existing varieties, and in its grand, well formed, stout standard its great excellence is particularly seen.—From THE GARDENERS' MAGAZINE, London, England, November 24, 1894, prior to its introduction in 1895.

Per pkt. 10 cts.; per oz. 40 cts.; 2 ozs. for 75 cts.

A Grand New Painting of SWEET PEAS

BY PAUL DE LONGPRÉ.

The original painting, size 13 x 16 1/2, cost $250.00, and has been faithfully re-produced in fourteen colors. It is truly a work of art that should adorn the homes of all flower lovers, whether in town or country. It bears no advertisement matter whatever, but a separate illustrated key is sent with each copy showing the varieties selected from our unequalled collection to group in this beautiful bouquet.

In order that all may secure a copy of this dainty work of art we will sell it (to our customers) at 10 cents per copy, mailed in a pasteboard tube; regular price 20 cents.

We have recently received from MESSRS. W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Philadelphia, a very handsome reproduction of a painting of Sweet Peas by the master flower painter of the age, M. PAUL DE LONGPRÉ. Messrs. W. Atlee Burpee & Co. are to be congratulated upon securing this study from so renowned an artist, Mr. De Longpré having spent several days at Fordhook Farm to make a careful study of the flowers in nature when in full bloom in July last. We take pleasure in calling attention of our readers to Messrs. Burpee & Co.'s advertisement Sweet Peas in another column, and will add that we know from experience that any statement they make can be relied upon.—From DEMOREST'S MAGAZINE, New York, N. Y., February, 1896.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1896

We could fill this entire page with editorial notices from many prominent papers, showing that this is recognized as "The Leading American Seed Catalogue." Its price is 10 cents (less than cost in quarter-million edition) but we will be pleased to mail it FREE to all who intend purchase BURPEE'S SEEDS this season. Those who desire it solely as "a Mirror of Horticulture" to date should enclose five two-cent stamps. A handsome BOOK of 1 pages. Tells all about the Best Seeds that Grow Rare Novelties for 1896. Hundreds of illustrations of beautiful colored plates, painted from nature.

SCOTT ROSES, famous for forty-six years, can be obtained by mail or direct from us. All lovers of Beautiful Flowers, as well as those who delight in the choicest Vegetables, will be interested in BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1896.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

EV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
Offices: — Bible House, New York C. ty.

COPYRIGHT 1896, BY LOUIS KILBURN

NEW YORK, MARCH 18, 1896.

NUMBER 12.

Price Five Cents.

A SUNNY CORNER OF THE DAY NURSERY AND KINDERGARTEN, GRACE CHURCH, NEW YORK. (See Page 202.)

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

HOW TO WARM THE WORLD.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Psalm 147: 17, "Who can stand before his cold?"

THE Almanac says that Winter is ended and Spring has come, but the winds, and the frosts, and the thermometer, in some places down to zero, deny it. The Psalmist lived in a more genial climate than this, and yet he must sometimes have been cut by the sharp weather. In this chapter he speaks of the snow like wool, the frost like ashes, the hailstones like marbles, and describes the congelment of lowest temperature. We have all studied the power of the heat. How few of us have studied the power of the frost? "Who can stand before his cold?" This challenge of the text has many times been accepted. October 19th, 1812, Napoleon's great army began its retreat from Moscow. One hundred and fifty thousand men, fifty thousand horses, six hundred pieces of cannon, forty thousand stragglers. It was bright weather when they started from Moscow, but soon something wrathier than the Cossacks swooped upon their flanks. An army of Arctic blasts, with icicles for bayonets and hailstones for shot, and commanded by voice of tempest, marched after them. The flying artillery of the heavens in pursuit. The troops at nightfall would gather into circles and huddle themselves together for warmth; but when the day broke they rose not, for they were dead, and the ravens came for their morning meal of corpses. The way was strewn with the rich stuffs of the East, brought as booty from the Russian capital. An invisible power seized one hundred thousand men and hurled them dead into the snow-drifts, and on the hard surfaces of the chill rivers, and into the maws of the dogs that had followed them from Moscow. The freezing horror which has appalled history was proof to all ages that it is a vain thing for any earthly power to accept the challenge of my text: "Who could stand before his cold?" In the middle of December, 1777, at Valley Forge, eleven thousand troops were, with frosted ears and frosted hands and frosted feet, without shoes, without blankets, lying on the white pillow of the snow-bank. As during our civil war the cry was: "On to Richmond!" when the troops were not ready to march, in the Revolutionary war there was a demand for warmth, and campaign until Washington lost his equilibrium and wrote emphatically: "I assure you, gentlemen, it is not enough to be clothed by a good fireside and in comfortable homes to draw out campaigns for the American Army; but I tell them it is not so easy to march in the winter without blankets and without shoes." Oh, the small army that followed around the American Army in the Winter of 1777! While the army was in the trap of the century. Remembered, senseless, dead! "Who can stand before his cold?" "Not we," say the frozen lips of St. John Evangelin and his men, dying in Arctic exploration. "Not we," answer Schwatka and his men, lying under the foot of the ice which they had tried in vain to capture. "Not we," say the abandoned and crushed decks of the Intrepid, the Resistance and the Jeannette. "Not we," say the procession of American martyrs returned home for American sepulture, De Long and his men. The highest pillars of the earth are pillars of ice; Mont Blanc, Jungfrau, the Matterhorn. The largest galleries of the world are galleries of ice. Some of the mighty rivers much of the year are in captivity of ice. The greatest sculptors of the ages are the glaciers, with arm and hand and chisel and hammer of ice. The cold is imperial and has a crown of glittering crystal and is seated on a throne of ice, with footstool of ice and sceptre of ice. Who can tell the sufferings of the Winter of 1433, when all the birds of Germany perished? or the Winter of 1658 in England, when the stages rolled on the Thames, and temporary houses of merchandise were built on the ice? or the Winter of 1821 in America, when New York Harbor was frozen over and the heaviest teams crossed on the ice to Staten Island? Then come down to our own Winters when there have been so many wrapping themselves in furs, or gathering themselves around fires, or threshing their arms about them to revive circulation—the millions of the Temperate and the Arctic Zones who are compelled to confess, "none of us can stand before his cold."

One-half of the industries of our day are employed in battling inclemency of the weather. The furs of the North, the cotton of the South, the flax of our own fields, the wool of our own flocks, the coal from our own mines, the wood from our own forests, all employed in battling these inclemencies, and still every winter, with blue lips and chattering teeth, answers: "None of us can stand before his cold." Now this being such a cold world, God sends out influences to warm it. I am glad that the God of the frost is the God of the heat; that the God of the snow is the God of the white blossoms; that the God of January is the God of June. The question as to how shall we warm this world up is a question of immediate and all-embracing practicality. In this zone and weather there are so many fireless hearths, so many broken window-panes, so many defective roofs that sift the snow. Coal and wood and fannels and thick coat are better for warming up such a place than tracts, and Bibles and creeds. Kindle that fire where it has gone out. Wrap something around those shivering limbs. Shoe those bare feet. Hat that bare head. Coat that bare back. Sleeve that bare arm. Nearly all the pictures of Martha Washington represent her in courtly dress as bowed to by foreign ambassadors; but Mrs. Kirkland, in her interesting book, gives a more inspiring portrait of Martha Washington. She comes forth from her hut, not a hut in the commonplace, the hut sixteen feet long by fourteen feet wide—she comes forth from that hut to nurse the sick, to sew the patched garments, to console the soldiers dying of the cold. That is a better picture of Martha Washington. Hundreds of garments, hundreds of tons of coal, hundreds of glaziers at broken window-panes, hundreds of whoresome men and women, are necessary to warm the wintry weather. What are we doing to alleviate the condition of those not so fortunate as we? Know ye not, my friends, there are hundreds of thousands of people who cannot stand before his cold? It is useless to preach to bare feet, and to empty stomachs, and to gaunt visages. Christ gave the world a lesson in common sense when, before preaching the Gospel to the multitude in the wilderness, he gave them a good dinner. When I was a lad I remember seeing two rough woodcuts, but they made more impression upon me than any pictures I have ever seen. They were on opposite pages. The one woodcut represented the coming of the snow in Winter, and a lad looking out at the door of a great mansion, and he was all wrapped in furs and his cheeks were ruddy, and with glowing countenance he shouted: "It snows! it snows!" On the next page there was a miserable tenement, and the door was open, and a child, wan and sick and ragged and wretched, was looking out, and he said: "Oh! my God, it snows!" The winter of gladness or of grief, according to our circumstances. But, my friends, there is more than one way of warming up this cold world, for it is a cold world in more respects than one, and I am here to consult with you as to the best way of warming up the world. I want to have a great heater introduced into all your churches and all your homes throughout the world. It is a heater of divine patent. It has many pipes with which to conduct heat; and it has a door in which to throw the fuel. Once get this heater introduced, and it will turn the Arctic zone into the Temperate, and the Temperate into the Tropics. It is the powerful heater, it is the glorious furnace of Christian sympathy. The question ought to be, instead of how much heat can we absorb? how much heat can we throw out? There are men who go through the world floating icebergs. They freeze everything with their forbidding look. The hand with which they shake yours is as cold as the paw of a polar bear. If they float into a religious meeting, the temperature drops from eighty above to ten degrees below zero. There are icicles hanging from their eyebrows. They float into a religious meeting and they chill everything with their jeremiads. Cold prayers, cold songs, cold greetings, cold sermons. Christianity on ice! The Church a great refrigerator. Christians gone into Winter quarters. Hibernation! On the other hand, there are people who go through the world like the breath of a spring morning. Warm greetings, warm prayers, warm smiles, warm Christian influence. There are such persons. We bless God for them. We rejoice in their companionship.

A general in the English army, the army having halted for the night, having lost his baggage, lay down tired and sick without any blanket. An officer came up and said, "Why, you have no blanket. I'll go and get you a blanket." He departed for a few moments and then came back and covered the general up with a very warm blanket. The general said, "Whose blanket is this?" The officer replied, "I got that from a private soldier in the Scotch regiment, Ralph McDonald." "Now," said the general, "you take this blanket right back to that soldier. He can no more do without it than I can do without it. Never bring to me the blanket of a private soldier." How many men like that general would it take to warm the world up? The vast majority of us are anxious to get more blankets, whether anybody else is blanketed or not. Look at the fellow-feeling displayed in the rocky defile between Jerusalem and Jericho in Scripture times. Here is a man who has been set upon by the bandits, and in the struggle to keep his property, he has got wounded, and mangled, and stabbed, and he lies there half dead. A priest rides along. He sees him and says: "Why, what's the matter with that man? Why, he must be hurt, lying on the flat of his back. Isn't it strange that he should lie there! But I can't stop.

I am on my way to temple services. Go along, you beast. Carry me up to my temple duties." After awhile a Levite comes up. He looks over and says: "Why, that man must be very much hurt. Gashed on the forehead. What a pit! Stabbed under his arm. What a pit! Tut, tut! What a pity! Why, they have taken his clothes nearly all away from him. But I haven't time to stop; I lead the choir up in the temple service. Go along, you beast. Carry me up to my temple duties." After awhile a Samaritan comes along—one who you might suppose through a national grudge might have rejected this poor wounded Israelite. Coming along he sees this man and says: "Why that man must be terribly hurt. I see his features he is an Israelite, but he is man and he is a brother. 'Whoa!' says the Samaritan, and he gets down off the beast and comes up to this wounded man, gets down on one knee, listens to see whether the heart of the unfortunate man is beating, makes up his mind there is chance for resuscitation, goes to work him, takes out of his sack a bottle of oil, and a bottle of wine, cleanses the wound with some wine, then pours some of the restorative into the wounded man's lips, then takes some oil and wine and it soothes the wound. After awhile he takes off a part of his garments for a bandage. Now the sick and wounded man is up, pale and exhausted, but very thankful. Now the good Samaritan says: "You must get on my saddle, and I will walk." The Samaritan helps and tenderly steadies this wounded man until he gets him on toward the tavern, the wounded man holding on with the little strength he has left, ever and anon looking down at the good Samaritan and saying, "You are very kind; I had no right to expect this thing of a Samaritan when I am an Israelite; you are very kind to walk and let me ride."

Now, they have come up to the tavern. The Samaritan, with the help of the landlord, assists the sick and wounded man to dismount and puts him to bed. The Bible says the Samaritan staid all night. In the morning, I suppose, the Samaritan went to look how his patient was, and ask how he passed the night. Then he comes out—the Samaritan comes out and says to the landlord, "Here is money to pay for the man's board, and if his convalescence is not as rapid as I hope for, charge me whole thing to me. Good-morning, and He gets on the beast and says: "Go along, you beast, but go slowly, for those bandits sweeping through the land may be left somebody else wounded and dead." Sympathy! Christian sympathy! How many such men as that would it take to warm the cold world?

Recently an engineer in the Southwest, on a locomotive, saw a train coming which he must collide. He resolved to stand at his post and slow up the train until the last minute, for there were passengers behind. The engineer said to the fireman, "Jump! one man is enough on this engine! jump!" The fireman jumped and was saved. The crash came. The engineer died at his post. How many men like that engineer would it take to warm this cold world up? A vessel struck a rocky island. The passengers and crew were without food, and a sailor hid a shell-fish under his coat. He was waiting for his last morsel. He heard a little child cry to her mother, "Oh, mother, I am so hungry, give me something to eat—I am so hungry!" The sailor took the shell-fish from under his coat and said, "Here, take that." How many men like that sailor would it take to warm the cold world up? Oh, with cheery look, with helpful word, with kind action, try to make the world warm!

Count that day lost whose low descending sun
Views from thy hand no generous action drew

It was his strong sympathy that brought Christ from a warm heaven to a cold world. The land where he dwelt had a serene sky, balsamic atmosphere, tropical luriance. No storm-blasts in heaven. No hill fountains. On a cold December night Christ stepped out of a warm heaven into the world's frigidty. The thermometer in Palestine never drops below zero, but December is a cheerless month, at the pasturage is very poor on the hill-top. Christ stepped out of a warm heaven into the cold world that cold December night. The world's reception was cold. The surf of bestormed Gallilee was cold. Joseph's sepulchre was cold. Christ came, the great warmer, to warm the earth, and at Christendom to-day feels the glow. He will keep on warming the earth until the tropic will drive away the Arctic and the Arctic. He gave an intimation of what was going to do when he broke up the funeral at the gate of Nain and turned it into a reunion festival, and when with his warm lips he melted the Galilean hurricane and stood on the deck and stamped his foot, crying, "Silence!" and the waves crched and and the tempests folded their wings.

It was this Christ who warmed the chilled disciples when they had no food by giving them plenty to eat, and when in the tomb of Lazarus shattered the link of death until the broken links of the chain of death rattled into the darkest part of the mausoleum. In his genial presence the girl who had fallen into the mire and the water is healed of the catalepsy and the withered arm takes muscular, healthy action, and the ear that could not hear an avalanche catches a leaf's rustle, and the tongue that could not articulate tells a quatrain, and the blind eye was restored.

Oh! I am so glad that the Sun of Righteousness dawned on the polar night of the nations. And if Christ is the great warmer, then the Church is the great hot-house, with its plants and trees and fruits of righteousness. Do you know, my friends, that the Church is the institution that proposes warmth? Geology informs us that it is as cold as the rock it hammers. The telescope shows where the other worlds are, but an astronomer is chilled while looking through it. Christianity tells us of strange combinations and how inferior affinity may be overcome by superior affinity; but it cannot tell how all things work together for good. World-philosophy has a great splendor, but it is the splendor of moonlight on an iceberg. The Church of God proposes warmth and hope—warmth for the expectant, warmth for the sympathies. Oh! how so glad that these great altar-fires have been kindled. Come in out of the cold. Come in, and have your wounds healed. Come, and have your sins pardoned. Come in by the great Gospel fire-door.

Oh! my friends, the Church of Jesus Christ is the world's fireplace, and the words are from the cedars of Lebanon, and there are fires of love, and with the silences of the altar we stir the flame and the light is reflected from all the family pictures on the wall—pictures of those who were here and are gone now. Oh! how close to the fireplace. Have your faces transfigured in the light. Put your cold feet, weary of the journey, close up to the blessed conflagration. Chilled though with trouble and disappointment, close up until you can get warm through. Exchange experience, talk over the harvests gathered, tell all the Gospel news. Meanwhile the table is being spread. On it, bread of life. On it, grapes of Eshcol. On it, new wine from the kingdom. On it, a thousand luxuries celestial. Hark! as a wounded hand raps on the table, and a tender voice comes through saying: "Come, for all things are ready. Eat, oh, friends! drink, yea, drink abundantly, oh, beloved!"

My friends, that is the way the cold world is going to be warmed up, by the great Gospel fireplace. All nations will get in and sit down at that banquet. While I was musing, the fire burned. Come in out of the cold, come in out of the cold!

Its Golden Jubilee Year.

Grace Church, New York. Fifty Years in Active Service—Its Wonderful Record of Christian Work—Its Care for Children.

Since the leading Protestant Episcopal Church of America, Grace Church, New York, may be truthfully said to stand at the front of its denomination in Christian and humanitarian work. Situated in the very heart of the metropolis, it has, during its half century of its existence, steadily extended its activities and multiplied its appliances and resources for the moral, physical and spiritual elevation of the people within the sphere of its influence, until it has attained a degree of efficiency such as has been reached by few other religious organizations on this continent. Yet, its work for the Master has been accompanied by no high-sounding popular clamor, but has rather been characterized by a silent zeal, an unflinching interest and an intelligent and consecrated energy.

Grace Parish has just celebrated its semi-centennial or golden jubilee with a joy and enthusiasm befitting such an occasion. Fifty years ago, in 1805, it was organized and the first church edifice stood on the south-west corner of Broadway and Rector street. Among its pastors were many clergymen of eminent piety and ability. Rev. William R. Huntington, D.D., the present incumbent, has been rector since 1884, and under his charge, the parish has advanced in the field of Christian activity and usefulness. For a number of years it has expended an average of one $100,000 per annum in charitable and philanthropic work, and it would require many columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to present an adequate record of its varied activities and their beneficent results. Its members and congregation have learned that the true secret of a church's strength and influence consists, not in the grandeur of its edifice, nor the richness of its equipments and decorations, but in what it can accomplish in Christian service, and that no church can continue to grow which does not strive, in season and out of season, to be an active missionary factor for the betterment of mankind. As a result of this principle, Grace Parish is to-day a net-work of missionary effort, so thoroughly and skillfully conducted and enthusiastically prosecuted that its influence is felt throughout a population of over 2,000,000.

Few sacred edifices have a more imposing or attractive exterior than the beautiful structure on Broadway, between 10th and 11th streets, where for many years the entire work of Grace Church, spiritual and philanthropic, was carried on. Since the opening of its new adjunct, Grace Chapel, the energies of the good people of Dr. Huntington's congregation have found new avenues of expansion and the Chapel—which is really a large, commodious group of buildings—has become a busy hive of humanitarian effort. This cluster of buildings is connected by corridors and cloisters and includes the Chapel proper, a Morning Chapel, a Hospital, a "Parish House," Clergy House and Club House. The Chapel and Hospital front on East Fourteenth street, and other buildings on East Thirteenth street, the whole group being situated just east of First avenue. This new and splendid auxiliary to the general work of the church is the result almost exclusively of consecrated gifts from godly men and women. In the Morning Chapel, prayers are offered daily for all the residents and workers in the little colony; connected with the Hospital Building are homes for old men and women, the deacons and the children, special provision of ample play-room being made for the little ones. In the Parish House there are an excellent gymnasium and swimming bath. There are also rooms for the different societies of Grace Church, a Sunday School room, industrial class rooms, (where manual training is given to both boys and girls), a cooking school, reading room, library, boys' club and other features. The Training School for Deaconesses has also been removed from Grace House on Broadway to the new buildings. Complete in every department and with an essentially modern equipment, the Hospital is one of the most prominent features of this cluster of buildings. Its right wing is devoted to men, the left wing to women and the centre to children. Another and very interesting branch of the Christian work of Grace Church is the Day Nursery at 94 and 96 Fourth Avenue. Our colored illustration on the first page of this issue shows the Nursery rooms at the luncheon hour with a group of the little children being cared for by the trained attendants. The Nursery is open from 6.30 A.M. to 7.30 P.M., and for five cents each a day, a poor mother can leave her children there, while she herself goes out to work. Youngsters of all ages, from the mere infant to the bright hopeful of nine or ten years, are accepted, and there is no distinction on account of creed. The older children are sent to the Twelfth Street Public School and the others are cared for and taught at the Nursery kindergarten. Twice a day there is a short simple service for the little ones held in the Oratory and in winter they sing at afternoon prayers in the Chantry. While in the Nursery, they are fed, cared for, and kept clean and comfortable. Their wash averages 600 or 700 pieces a week, all of which is done without cost to the parents. With their mothers, the little proteges receive an abundant dinner, both at Thanksgiving and Christmas. In the course of a year, hundreds of garments are presented by friends of the Church for the use of the children and nothing is lacking to make them comfortable and presentable. Mrs. Gardner, the House-mother, is in charge of the Nursery and with her assistant, Deaconess Barker, a physician, a kindergarten, and an efficient corps of servants, makes the lives of the little tots flow on happily and smoothly. Thus health, good food, and religious training are assured to several hundred poor children every season. In summer, when the attendance is largest, the children are transferred to Grace-House-by-the-Sea, at Far Rockaway, Long Island, where the hottest weeks of the season are passed and the little folks sport in the sand, and are tanned and made hardy and strong by the sun and the sea-breezes. Grace Church, regarded as a whole, presents the inspiring picture of a great organization of godly men and women, united and alert for self-sacrificing Christian work and for the uplifting of mankind. Its Sunday Schools, Missionary and Benevolent Societies, Industrial Schools, and Diet Kitchen; its special organizations for the care of the sick and needy; its work among prisoners, its five Temperance Societies, its Fresh Air work which goes on summer and winter; its libraries and educational branches, and its twelve strong and active Friendly Societies and Brotherhoods, working together in harmony and with the best results all prove, more potently than sermons or ceremonials, that the true life of a Christian church to-day is to be found outside of itself. It spends itself for others, thus fulfilling the will of the Master and doing the best possible service to the cause of religion and humanity.

GRACE CHURCH CHAPEL.

Good Causes Helped.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

For the Bethesda Home for Friendless Women.	For The Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.
Previously ack'd. $6.00	Previously ack'd. $6.00
— Pleasantville, Pa. 1.00	Mrs. N. G. Kimball. 1.00
Mrs. H. C. Sober. 1.00	Mrs. I. R. Hill. 5.00
— Mores Mill, N. Y. 10.00	L. C. Tobias. 1.00
Total. $18.00	— Wimer, Ore. 1.00
For Mrs. Bella Cook's Work.	P. Young. 1.00
Previously ack'd. $1.00	Sophie D. Ewell. 2.00
— Pleasantville, Pa. 1.00	Carrie Thomas. 1.00
Thomas Bridgman. 2.00	Reader of the C. H. Andrew Co. Mo. 5.00
Total. $4.00	Mr. and Mrs. D. B. K. Van Raalte. 2.00
For the Jerry McAuley Mission.	R. W. Jones. 1.00
D. L. M. In His Name 1.00	C. O. Diefenbacher. 2.00
For Foreign Missions.	Miss L. M. Prevost. 1.00
Previously ack'd. $5.50	J. McLean. 1.00
Pleasant Grove Missionary Society 5.00	Mrs. J. Daglish. 2.50
Friend Lanesboro. 1.00	Total. $36.50
R. W. Jones. 5.00	For Mrs. Williamson's Home.
Total. $16.50	Previously ack'd. $25.00
For American Board's Home Missions.	Joseph Forsheim. 1.00
Mrs. J. Hazard. 5.00	Fred'k L. Colwell. 1.00
Mary A. Gill. 1.00	Friend and lover of the work, Lansing. 5.00
Harriet M. Foulke. 1.00	S. Dreschner. 1.00
— Chicago. 2.00	E. S. Talcott. 43.00
W. J. Allen. 2.50	Hector M. Hinchings. 3.00
In Christ's Name. 2.00	Strong and Ireland. 5.00
Clarton, Pa. 2.00	Richard M. Chapman. 2.00
H. Brooklyn, N. Y. 5.00	Jenkins & McCowan. 2.00
Geo. W. Stockwell. 5.00	Total. $88.00
— Springfield, Minn. 3.00	For Mrs. Lamadrill, St. Andrews' after needs.
— Hamilton, Neb. 16.00	Friend in the Adirondacks. 1.00
Mrs. James Gamblin. 3.00	Friend d. Calumet. 60
F. G. S. Montreal. 5.00	Mich. 1.00
Total. $37.66	Total. $1.60
Home Missions.	For The Christian Herald Children's Home.
Previously ack'd. $.50	Previously ack'd. $3.00
Pleasant Grove Missionary Society 5.00	J. M. Stowe. 5.00
Total. $5.50	J. E. Baird. 1.00
For Mrs. Jamal's Training School, Denmark.	Mrs. A. Moulton. 1.00
Previously ack'd. $3.50	Total. $14.50
Mrs. E. A. Peers. 2.00	For Miss Emma Nason's Work among Lumbermen.
B. E. Smith. 2.50	Previously ack'd. $2.00
— Pleasantville, Pa. 1.00	— Pleasantville, Pa. 1.00
R. W. Jones. 1.00	Total. $3.00
Mrs. F. H. Tufford. 5.00	For Any Good Cause.
Total. $15.00	Previously ack'd. $3.50
For the Door of Hope.	P. M. Bowden. 1.00
— Pleasantville, Pa. 1.00	Mrs. Elizabeth J. Ag. 2.00
J. H. N. Summit, N. J. 50	Total. $6.50
Total. $1.50

REV. WM. R. HUNTINGTON, D.D.,
Pastor of Grace Church, New York.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER.

S. S. Lesson for March 29. Golden Text :
Luke 12 : 8.

THE ground to be covered by this week's Review comprises the first twelve chapters of Luke's Gospel. They bring the story of Christ's life down to a period within about five months of the Crucifixion. The subjects selected for the twelve lessons of the past quarter, were simply the salient points of the narrative. Neither the events, nor the teachings, were exceptional, but were rather specimens of the wonderful words and works of which that divine life was full. Three of the lessons related to the preliminary period, prior to the eighteen years of Christ's life about which the Evangelists are silent. Those three were: the announcement to Zacharias about John the Baptist and his mission; John's ministry, and the finding of Christ in the temple by his mother. Then there were three lessons relating to the miracles: The healing of the man sick of the palsy who was let down from the roof; the healing of the centurion's servant and the raising of the widow's son from the dead, at Nain; and the raising of Jairus' daughter with the incidental miracle of the healing of the woman, on the way. Three other lessons were on reports of Christ's teaching: The sermon at Nazareth; the Sermon on the Plain; and the teaching as to prayer. The remaining three include the teaching on the duties and difficulties of discipleship; the parable of the Good Samaritan; and the warning to constant watchfulness.

In considering these twelve subjects, so diverse, yet so essentially united, we need a clear view of the one central force from which they radiate. This was the personality of Christ. It is remarkable how much this differed from the personality of other teachers. All the points included in this survey and indeed in all the Gospels, become parts of one consistent whole, when we view them in this relation. Other teachers, philosophers and reformers have diligently sought to instil certain principles into the minds of their followers and to depend for their success on the operation of those principles. The ablest and most successful of them have tried to establish their personality in their work. Christ never did this. His influence was not due to any special quality of his personality, but to the essential royalty. He sought to make his followers in himself, and not in his personality. He wanted them to be like him, not to be like him. He detached his disciples from everything that might be a hindrance to their loyalty. John and Peter had evidently houses of their own, and Christ did not ask them to give them up. Said he to them, "Forsake all, and follow me." "Don't thou believe that I am able to do this?" he asked on one occasion. On another he worked a miracle, as he stated explicitly, that persons present might be convinced that he had the power to forgive sins. The few recorded words that he addressed to his mother, whom he evidently tenderly loved, showed how this sense of his own inherent dignity was inwrought in his nature. We cannot in this day conceive of the real boldness involved in the Sermon on the Mount, in which he reiterated again and again the words, "Moses said unto you . . . but I say unto you," something entirely different. What must have been the sensations of a Jew accustomed to venerate Moses next to the Almighty, when he heard the words of the great law-giver superseded by a young Galilean Carpenter, who did not condescend to argue, but calmly assumed the imperious and authoritative manner of some one superior to Moses! And he intended the influence of this personal character to be perpetual. The one ceremony he instituted—the only rite apart from the initiator, one at baptism, was a distinctly personal one.

HEM OF HIS GARMENT.

"This do in remembrance of me." And at the very last, his final instructions were not as to the institutions and polity of the Church, which, as he knew, would grow up to be called by his name; but an injunction to watch for his coming, to look for him. He would distribute rewards and inflict punishments. The very acts of kindness and compassion he enjoined, the bread to the hungry, the visiting of the sick and the prisoners, were to be identified with him. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto them, ye did it unto me." Even in the trying circumstances of his passion, when bound and beaten and dragged contemptuously before Pilate, he declared himself a King, and spoke with dignity of "My kingdom." Throughout his whole life this note of personality rings in his teaching and works.

It is this personality, this insistence on personal loyalty to himself, as the supreme test of discipleship, that sets Jesus apart from all other teachers and reformers and has made his religion different from all others. The Christian is not so much a member of a Church, as the subject of a King. His creed is of less importance than the fact that he believes on Jesus and acknowledges fealty to him. The utmost liberty of thought and mode of worship is allowed him, if he is only loyal to Christ in word and deed.

"WIST YE NOT THAT I MUST BE ABOUT MY FATHER'S BUSINESS." (Luke 2: 49)

If this fact is realized, the twelve subjects falling under review in this lesson, take their appropriate places in the survey. They are all concerned with him. The miracles are recorded, not to excite wonder, but to produce faith in him; the facts of his life are set down, that we may know him and love him. The teacher will find that there is no principle so grow older and take part in social entertainments that no one ever leaves a party in which you have had a hand, with lament that Jesus was not in the company.

Doctors of the law sitting by. (Luke 5: 1) A minister was called to visit one of his members. He was astonished to find a man afraid to die. He was still more surprised to find him ignorant of the way of salvation. "I have explained all," said the minister, "from the pulpit over and over again. You must have heard me." "No, I have not," said the man. "When you began to preach I used to begin a review of my last week's business and make my plans for the next week. I never paid attention to the sermon. I wish I had now." "Thus 'the doctor of the law' were sitting by and the power of the Lord was present to heal them," but the only man benefited was the man who was in bed and knew it, and who was let down from the roof.

They could not find by what way. (Luke 5: 19). The crowd's sense and if the men had been in earnest they would have given up and taken the man home again. But these men were determined and when people are determined they generally find a way of accomplishing what they set out to do. When Whitefield arrived in Philadelphia on one of his later visits he was told that permission to preach in the churches had been refused to him. Did that silence him? No. "Thank God," said he, "the fields are open," and he preached there and had larger audiences.

Let me pull out the mote. (Luke 6: 42) A mote is a speck of dust, or small object. The Lord's words were in the nature of a rebuke. The idea of a man with a beam in his eye undertaking to put out another who had a speck of dust in his eye was grotesque. Yet Christ saw this practice going on all the time around him. Then there were men with murder in their hearts, reproving a man for carrying a bed on the Sabbath. So there were desperate criminals who were very particular not to eat meat on Fridays.

Neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. (Luke 6: 43). Mr. Moody described a man settling in a new house, and his neighbors warning him that the family who lived there before him lost several children by typhoid fever. They tell him that the water in his well is foul; that any one drinking of that water will swallow deadly microbes and will die. The man goes and pumps up some of the water and looks at it, but can see nothing wrong with it. He decides that it is only necessary to paint the pump and he will be right. That man would be considered foolish. Painting the pump could do no good while the water continued poisonous. cleaning up the life and refraining from certain sins is not sufficient to fit a man for Christ's kingdom. The indispensable condition is that the heart must be pu-

"MADE HIMSELF."

"HE HAD COMPASSION ON HIM."

Letter and what Came of It.

MAY I ask what you are doing, Florence?" said Mrs. Seymour entering a little parlor where a young girl was very much absorbed in piecing out a great many tiny bits of paper, with a puzzled and baffled air, as of one who had undertaken to put together a puzzle too hard for her.

"Oh! nothing much, Aunt," the girl answered going on with her work. Presumably she uttered a very impatient exclamation and her aunt looking at her, observed that her face was flushed deeply, and her eyes were full of tears.

"Why, darling!" she exclaimed, putting a tenderly caressing hand under the dimpled chin and lifting the soft flower-like face, so that she could read its meaning. "Why, darling, what has happened to cloud your sunshine? This is a torn letter, I see, and you are trying to fit the bits of it together again. Why did you put it up in the first place, my dear, and from whom is it; not from Francis, is it possible you would tear his letter up? Al! if you did, couldn't you remember the contents, and let it go? Surely it's not worth these tears and this trouble."

"Aunt," said Florence, "I have quarreled with Francis, because he tells me my faults. If he is my friend, he ought not to see my faults, nor even own that I have any. Yesterday he as much as told me right out that I was quick-tempered and impulsive, and sometimes speak before I think, and that I am disrespectful to mamma. I was furious, and left him in the drawing-room to console himself with the chairs and curtains, and this morning, when his letter came, and a bunch of roses, I sent the roses off to Cousin Mary, who is ill, and tore the letter into fragments. And now, Aunt, I'm sorry and repentant,—I want the roses back, and I want to be friends again with Francis. And he's gone off to Colorado, and won't be back for a month."

Mrs. Seymour smiled and sighed. Her niece's loving disposition had always been stirred by a temper which went off at a touch, like an explosive, and the strictures of Francis were true. Yet it was singularly unwise in him to make them, and Mrs. Seymour did not wonder that Florence was annoyed. Very, very seldom can people endure being told of their faults. They seldom receive such criticisms amiably, and Francis, when he sent his fragrant peace-offering, had realized that he had made a mistake.

These two young people had been sweethearts a long while, and they loved one another dearly. But one was hot and impetuous, and the other stubborn and stern, and observers in their circle often wondered how they watched them, in much doubt as to whether their marriage would turn out.

"Florence," said Mrs. Seymour, "every word Francis said to you was true. You are a prickly creature, but you have a soft heart, and you do not mean to be wrong. What you need is to cultivate self-control. Better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

"Ah, don't I know that? And 'a soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger,' and 'Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth,' and the tongue is a fire, and all those other verses. Well, I am sorry, Aunt, and I've done so on my knees, and I'm going to say, in a letter, to Francis, if ever I can see his precious letter together."

"How came you to destroy it?"

"Well, I was still mad over yesterday's quarrel, if I must own the truth, and I didn't stop to consider; I just bundled off Francis's messenger, and sent away the roses, and never said 'thank you.' I was as hateful and horrid as a girl could possibly be, and I was dolefully unhappy, too. Then I tore up the letter and threw it into the waste-basket, and was just going out to walk when this telegram came:

"Off to Denver. Brother Charles dying. No time to say good-by."

"Poor Francis!" said Mrs. Seymour, "and poor Florence! Now I'll help you adjust your letter and we'll paste it on a slip of paper, or rather a sheet, and you can telegraph your love and sympathy to the boy, all the way to Denver, so that it will meet him on his arrival. Let us hope that Charley may live to greet him. We can both pray for the brothers and leave them with the dear Lord."

Well, the letter was pieced, and Florence put it safely in her desk under lock and key. It was a dear letter, but not one for any eyes, but its recipient's. You girls with such friends know how sweet and precious are such missives as they entrust to the care of the mail-bag. The roses did a world of good in the sick-room they visited, and all went tranquilly in Florrie's home until one morning there fell a bomb-shell.

In the paper at breakfast time, Ned Seymour, Florrie's visiting cousin, read the announcement of a great fire in Denver! Loss of life. Hotels and boarding-houses burned. Several Eastern people among the missing."

He stopped suddenly, for he saw Florence's sudden white and deathly pallor, and he observed at the same instant, that the name of Francis and Charles Dunbar were among those who were supposed to have perished in the flames of one of the beautiful caravanseries which were destroyed.

Charles had not died, but had revived and been much better and in a more hopeful state since Francis had gone to him. And now, there had been happy talk of Francis's speedy return, and Florence, who was trying hard to bear herself as one does who possesses the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, was almost walking on air, each hour set to the melody of pleasant anticipation. But this dreadful news, sent its eclipse over her life for that day and the next, and the next. No telegram was answered. No tidings of denial or confirmation came, and so a fortnight passed, and Florence grew thin and looked like a ghost, with her wan eyes looking out from her white, heart-broken face.

One evening, will she ever forget it if she lives to be a hundred, there was a ring at the door, a ring she knew, and joyful feet came hurrying in, and she was caught with a whirl into two great furry arms, while a kiss, and another, and another, brought the color to her cheeks.

"My own sweet love!" It was Francis who spoke, out of the great bear-skin coat and through the tangled beard.

"Are you dead, Francis, and have you come to life?" she faltered.

"Dead, my darling! Not I. Charley and I were not in Denver at all when that fire took place. We had gone off on a journey, he was so much improved that it was safe, and I've brought him home quite well and strong, and we've been snowed-up and detained, and everything has happened that could happen, and I wanted to surprise you, so I didn't write. And, don't be angry love, but I didn't know of the reports in the papers and all you were suffering, or I would have sent you word."

"Francis," said Florence solemnly. "I'll never get in a tantrum again with you or anybody. I'm cured. I'll be good from this time forth."

"You are always too good for me," he answered, as he gazed into her sweet face, "and I'll never tell you of a fault again, as long as I live."

Colorado's Famous Mountain.

PROBABLY the most picturesque of all the Colorado mountains is that known as the "Mountain of the Cross," which is shown in the photographic illustration on this page. There are many parts of Colorado where the eye rests on a panorama of bewildering beauty; grand, rugged hills, at whose base are great table lands which in summer are rich with the fruits of husbandry, or give pasturage to vast herds of cattle. Among the lofty points of the Rocky range, Long's Peak and Table Mountain are easily discerned, while not far away is Lily Mountain, whose gigantic cliffs attain an altitude of 13,500 feet above sea level. Some of the natural wonders of this region are thus described by a traveler: "Mountains appear, like legions, to the right, to the left, upon all sides. To the southward (if we ascend to some elevation), we can discern the hazy heads of Pike's Peak and its twin brother, Cheyenne Mountain, while a hundred miles away to the northward is dimly discernible the range of bluffs east of Cheyenne City. If the sun should not be obscured by clouds, the atmosphere will be so clear that one can see a remarkable distance." To the southwest may be discerned the famous mountain upon whose breast are two singular furrows in the form of a cross, and these, being filled with snow of the surest white, which lingers there unmelted throughout the greater part of the year, have given to the lofty elevation the appellation of the "Mountain of the Cross." Close beside it is Jackson Peak, whose pale outlines blend into the larger and more rugged profile. This wonderful natural cruciform design on the larger mountain has given inspiration to many who have visited that region. Almost under the vertical cliffs on the northeastern side of the mountain is a little lake, whose basin has been scooped out of the granite by some volcanic upheaval in by-gone ages. On all sides are evidences of glacial erosion; great boulders and debris, chasms and ravines and gorges, in whose depths gurgles clear, cold streams. Altogether the region is one of wild natural beauty and grandeur, such as well repays the toil of a visit.

For the photograph from which our picture is engraved, we are indebted to the courtesy of Mr. J. L. Bowden, of Denver, Colo., a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Christians in Africa.

A report recently issued by the Church Missionary Society in Africa contains some remarkable statistics of the results of missionary effort. From a carefully compiled statement it appears that there are now in Africa 1,000,000 Protestant native adherents, of whom over 100,000 are communicants, more than 1200 European missionaries, and some 1000 mission stations. It is further stated that during the seven years, 1888-95, the number of converts and communicants in Uganda has practically doubled year by year. The number of adult baptisms in Uganda in 1894 was over 1000. Some of the heathen in that country bear unconscious testimony to the change wrought in the lives of the converts. They say that at the baptism of converts to the new faith, "an incision is made in the head and a powerful medicine is rubbed in which kills the old heart, and then there comes in its place a new religious heart that does not lust for anything." During the great persecution of 1886 in Uganda, the native Christians exhorted one another with the words, "Be willing to die rather than deny." More than two hundred natives lost their lives because of their faith. The Christians of Uganda have sent twenty-one missionaries to tribes outside Uganda. In the report of the late General Portal on Uganda, one of the factors of the question is said to be "the firm hold taken by Christianity on the country." In regard to West Africa it is pointed out that seventy-five years ago the darkest heathenism prevailed in Sierra Leone, whereas now there is a self-supporting native church with its own missionary society. At Bonny, on the West Coast, a church, to build which the natives gave $10,000, now stands close to the spot where formerly was a heathen temple, part of the walls of which consisted of rows of grinning human skulls.

THE "MOUNTAIN OF THE CROSS," COLORADO.

"But you must, or I'll lose my temper," was the inconsistent reply.

They had been married six happy months before Florence showed her husband the mended letter.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Daily Work.

IN the name of God advancing,
Sow thy seed at morning light;
Cheerily the furrows turning,
Labor on with all thy might.
Look not to the far-off future,
Do the work which nearest lies;
Sow thou must before thou reapest,
Rest at last in labor's prize.
Standing still is dangerous ever,
Toil is meant for Christians now;
Let there be, when evening cometh,
Honest sweat upon thy brow;
And the Master shall come smiling,
At the setting of the sun,
Saying, as he pays the wages,
"Good and faithful one, well done!"

Italy's Great Disaster.

Her Army of Invasion in Abyssinia almost Annihilated—A Crisis at Home.

IT is perhaps one of the most remarkable and unexpected events in modern history that the throne and kingdom of Italy—the proud empire of the Caesars and once the greatest military and political power in the

GEN. BARATIERI.

would have been shaken to its foundations by a comparatively obscure African potentate. Yet this is what has been lately accomplished by Menelek, king of Abyssinia, whose armies have inflicted upon the Italian invaders such a series of overwhelming defeats as have astonished Europe and set King Humbert's realm wild with excitement.

Italy's war in Africa is one of conquest alone. In the great struggle now going on among the European nations for supremacy in the Dark Continent, the rights of the native peoples have been ignored and trampled upon. England, France, Germany, Belgium and Portugal, in the hot desire for colonial advancement and jealous of each other, have seized large tracts of land, driving out or subjugating the native races. Italy's efforts were directed to the extension of its colonial lines from the port of Massowah westward, and for many months it had contemplated the invasion of the ancient kingdom of Abyssinia, whose reigning monarch, the Negus, claims to trace his descent in unbroken line from Solomon. Menelek's country was coveted for many reasons. Its highlands are salubrious and its valleys are well watered and fertile—in striking contrast to the hot, fetid, pestilential plains that stretch from Massowah far inland and whose equatorial climate is swept by Sahara-like waves of temperature that wither European life. It was not anticipated that the expedition which Prime Minister Crispi's government authorized to proceed against Abyssinia, would encounter any serious obstacles. Menelek's strongholds captured, the programme included an effort at the ultimate wresting of the Soudan—the richest region of Central Africa—from Mahdist control, probably in conjunction with an Anglo-Egyptian force operating for the same purpose. This ambitious scheme, however, has been effectually spoiled by recent events.

Menelek, ruler of Abyssinia, now seems to have long foreseen the trouble with Italy, for he had made ample military preparations for repelling an hostile invasion of his country. To an army trained by European officers and armed with modern rifles, he has added tactical skill of a high order, either on his own part or that of his leading generals. Menelek is by no means a savage monarch. Although he has not been a friend to Christian missions, his reign has been characterized by a love of peace and justice, and a hatred of war as an enemy of progress. In the present instance he and possibly some of his State councillors would probably have temporized with the Italians and endeavored to avert trouble by arbitration, but a spirit stronger than Menelek's was felt in Abyssinian politics. Taytou, the into Menelek's country. Gen. Baratieri, the Italian commander-in-chief, had at his disposition corps commanded by Gens. Albo, Arimonde, Albertone, Dabormida and Ellina. On March 1, after capturing the mountain passes leading to Adowa, the Capital, they were attacked by an overwhelming force of Abyssinians, and utterly and ignominiously routed at all points. Gen. Dabormida is said to have died on the field, together with a large number of Italian officers and over 3000 Italian troops. Some estimates place the slaughter as high as 5000. Dispatches state that the Italians fought bravely, but became panic-stricken, and that whole battalions were hurled over precipitous cliffs by Menelek's forces. A large number of prisoners were captured and vast quantities of military stores and provisions. The remnant of the Italian army fell back step by step, abandoning Kassala and all the positions they had formerly occupied. At latest accounts the victorious Abyssinians were advancing toward Massowah, driving the scattered invaders before them.

Rome was astounded at the news of the disaster that had overtaken her armies. All the great Italian cities were stirred to intense excitement and riotous demonstrations took place in which the Ministry was severely blamed for the blunders of the campaign.

Premier Crispi and his Cabinet, smarting under the blow, have resigned and a new ministry under the Marquis di Rudini have assumed office. It is understood that Italy will not withdraw its troops from Africa, but will endeavor to urge forward the campaign, although it is not probable that any aggressive military operations will be attempted in Abyssinia for the present at least.

A Converted Drunkard's Gift.

"Some time ago," writes an aged Christian pastor, "a collection was being taken for the foreign missions, and, to the surprise of the minister, a member of the congregation, in by no means affluent circumstances, gave a donation of $100. The clergyman was pleased, but there was a misgiving as to whether the giver could afford such a sum, and he thought it his duty to see his parishioner about it. Accordingly, he called upon him, and after inquiring about his wife and family, he said, 'Now, John, are you sure that you can give away $100? Will it not make you short of money for your family wants? Will it not cause some of your debtors to wait for their money? You know, John, you must be just before you are generous.' 'Oh, sir,' said the man, 'you know what I was before I was converted. I was a drunkard, with scarcely a coat to my back, or a shoe to my foot, but God saved me, and has prospered me since then. I have now a comfortable home, my wife and children are well clad, I have some money in the savings bank, and I do not owe a cent. Oh, sir, as I cannot go to preach the Gospel myself, as I have not the ability to tell the story of Christ, all I can do is to give of my substance to enable others more suited for the work to tell forth the name of Jesus throughout the world.' That man had the true missionary spirit; and we can all be foreign missionaries in the very practical way that he was if we give to the cause our money while others give their lives."

ADOWA, THE SCENE OF THE ITALIAN DEFEAT IN ABYSSINIA.

Native African Currency.

Cloths or Mats, Cowrie Shells, Coin or Paper, According to Usage and Locality.

WHEN, in 1484, the great Portuguese navigator, Diogo Cao, discovered the Congo River, the people he found there were not naked savages, living without laws or a knowledge of the useful arts. He found a great kingdom, extending from the Atlantic to the Kuango River and Stanley Pool, and occupying the coast from Cape Lopez to south of the Quanza River; claiming suzerainty over Angola and Loango, and divided into feudal provinces, governed by dukes, counts, and marquises. He found the people robed in decent textile fabrics, made apparently of fine and supple straw, in reality of a fibre called mbusu, furnished by the frond-ribs of a species of palm tree, called mbadi in Kongo, ditombe dionene in Angola. This cloth—which the English in West Africa call "grass-cloth" or "grass mats," when single pieces are spoken of—was used then, and is used now, not only as loin-cloths, or shoulder-cloths, not only for spreads, wall-paper, sacks, or cushions, but also as currency, almost as greenbacks. When the white men invaded the country, they at first adopted the national currency. In Loanda, the Senate marked every single mat that was to be used as currency by the whites with a royal "R," and established the value of each mat, mbongo, at fifty reis of Portuguese money (equal to five cents). A bundle, mukuta, of ten such mbongos was therefore worth fifty cents. The stencil for marking the mats was jealously guarded by the Procurator of the Senate, who alone had authority to stamp the mats. These are generally called in Angola ma-bella. During the wars connected with the Dutch invasion of Angola, 1629-1649, the Portuguese lost a considerable amount of this perishable money, and in 1694, one hundred and ten years after the discovery, the Portuguese government

They form there the prevailing currency and are most highly prized. As mabellas are not manufactured in the District of Loanda, although the fishermen of the island use them for making sails, and the natives of the mainland use them for various purposes. The caravans of Kuango people which bring such mats to Loanda always find there a ready market for the merchandise.

A CABINDA WITH HIS LOIN CLOTH.

Last time they came while Mr. Chatelain was at Loanda, in 1892, they found the supply of cowries too scanty, and some were compelled to accept copper coin in payment for their mats. With the copper they subsequently bought iron-hoops, cotton bales and trudged homeward under crushing loads. Owing to this stringency in the cowrie money-market, Mr. Chatelain had a chance to buy several hundred mabellas from those primitive traders of the far interior.

These mabellas are known to be used for clothing by the whole Kongo nation and by the Tupende and Bashilange. When the Bashilange in 1881 saw the first white men with civilized garments, they immediately set about cutting and sewing the grass cloth in imitation of the European coats and trousers and made a comparative success of it.

Many persons who have seen Cabinda swagging through the streets of the coast towns of Angola, in their holiday attire, with dazzling white collars and cuffs, fine broadcloth coats and vests, and hats of latest style, have been puzzled by the incongruity of their upper apparel with the lower, which invariably consists of blue and white loin-cloth reaching down to their feet. This long blue loin-cloth, the national characteristic in the costume of the modern Cabindas, who are of Kongo stock. It is also a survival of the mabella loin-cloth. The mabellas can be used by civilized peoples in a variety of ways: as table-spreads, as covers for chairs or cushions, as decorations. They may be embroidered or printed, dyed, washed, and ironed. It is Mr. Chatelain's purpose to send them to the patrons of the Philafrican Liberator's League, lately organized in the hope that these African curios will serve as mementos of the land whose enslaved people they are endeavoring to liberate and educate. The address of the Liberator's League is 511 United Charities Building, 22d street and 4th avenue, New York City.

The photograph on this page affords an example of the Cabinda holiday costume.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon the proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

ARMENIA'S CLOUD LIFTING.

Missionaries Write that the Crisis has Passed, Peace Prevails, and the Refugees are Returning to their Village Homes—The Relief Fund to Close April 15.

THE sun of hope has again arisen in Armenia, and its valleys and plains, lately silent and desolate, are once more being filled with the sounds of life and the signs of human activity. Peace, long a stranger to Armenia, has returned, and the thousands of refugees who fled from their persecutors and sought shelter in the great cities, are coming back to their old homesteads. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has letters from a number of missionaries who have been distributing our Relief Fund to the destitute, which indicate that the crisis is passed. Extracts from some of these letters are given below. There is, of course, still much suffering, but the return of peaceful conditions and the abundant relief measures adopted for reaching even remote points, make the outlook much brighter. In view of these circumstances has been decided to close THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund at an early date, and no contributions will be received after April 15. All who desire to aid the relief movement should do so promptly before the date fixed. It is not probable that the actual relief work done in the field will be ended until several months later. Meanwhile, it is a blessed and comforting assurance to know that through the Fund raised by our readers and their friends, many thousands of Armenians have been saved from death by starvation and cold. These consecrated gifts have been the means of keeping alive a multitude of mothers and children who would otherwise have been filling nameless graves.

Another cause of gratification is found in the fact that not a dollar of the Relief Fund (which has been sent by cable through the American Board) has been lost in transmission or has failed to reach the proper field. In many instances, the money has been given out in the form of food and clothing to the starving refugees in Asia Minor within forty-eight hours of the time of calling from the United States.

Miss Kimball telegraphs us from Van that the outlook is rather better. The Government is now affording strong military protection to the Christian villages, and the missionaries are sending the refugees to their homes and diminishing the relief work in the city of Van. Seed and cattle will be supplied to give the villagers a new start. The Industrial Bureau in Van will be continued for some time longer.

Harpoon is not so fortunate, and there is still much unrelieved suffering. In the city the missionaries are giving out rations of bread daily. The ladies have distributed 1200 shirts and drawers, 60 pairs of stockings, 100 mattresses, and 200 quilts. These garments were manufactured by the destitute women, with regular wages of three or four cents a day. At Aintab the missionaries with the relief moneys are feeding 16 persons, at Erzerum 2500, at Erzurum 1000, and also large numbers at Van, Diabekir, Oorfa, Arabkir, Malatia, Tarsus, Hadjin, Cesarea, and Sivas.

One of the very darkest of all the gloomy chapters of Armenia's sufferings is disclosed in the following letter from Oorfa. The letter is dated January 12, and tells in the most graphic language how 3000 Christians were martyred by fanatical Mohammedans.

"For two months," the writer says, "before the 29th of December, the Christian population of Oorfa experienced all the miseries of a veritable 'Reign of Terror.' This was inaugurated by the previous massacre, which began on Oct. 27th and dragged on for the greater part of the interval between these dates. During all this time the Christians ventured beyond the precincts of their own homes only at the risk of their lives. Nor were they secure even in their homes. For six or seven weeks the soldiers of the government went from house to house almost daily, and after forcing an entrance, offered the inmates the option of becoming Moslems, or being killed on the spot. Those who chose the former were at once taken to Governor's palace, where they were obliged to submit to the rites of their new faith, and were afterwards registered as Mohammedans. On the roofs of the homes where the inmates professed the Moslem faith, a white flag was placed to announce the fact and to secure the inmates against further assault. All those who refused the immunities which a change of religion insured, were at once either shot down or despatched with swords.

"When the general onslaught began on December 29, the Christians sought the refuge of their churches and every other possible place which they hoped might shelter them from the fury of their fiendish assailants. Many took refuge in wells, some under manure heaps, while others had their friends cover them under piles of charcoal. For some of these their shelters proved to be a living grave, while many others, after remaining thus concealed for three or four in the centre. This church is built entirely of stone and may be said to be absolutely fire-proof. It was to this edifice from fifteen hundred to two thousand of the people fled when the general massacre began on the 29th, and the story of what took place within its walls on that awful day will never be fully known. These nearly two thousand victims were at the mercy of the merciless soldiers and the worse than merciless mob. The soldiers were first to enter, but they soon allowed the promiscuous rabble to follow and share with them in the carnival of debauchery and blood. The fiendish fanaticism of these Moslems had its climax in setting fire to the victims of their wild fury. How this purpose was accomplished I am unable to state. There being no wood finishing on the inside of the church, and little or no inflammable furnishings, one can only conjecture how they succeeded in transforming this multitude of human sacrifices into the great mass of bones and ashes to which they were all reduced by the following morning. That this end was attained, my informant had the opened at their command, and in slaughtering the male members of the households. The women and small children generally were spared, except in cases where they attempted to offer any resistance. It is for this reason that of the total number of persons killed outside of the great church on that day, probably not more than ten per cent. were women and children. Other sets of soldiers were told off to drive the women of the households to the neighboring mosques or khans. The houses being thus freed from all possible resistance, the rabble was left a clear field for the third act in the tragedy, namely, that of plundering these homes of every vestige of furniture, clothing, bedding and winter stores. And throughout the whole of this performance the Moslem women—wives, mothers, and sisters—cheered on their brothers and husbands in their cowardly onslaught upon these defenceless victims of their brutal fanaticism. They did this by shouting, rather than singing, a popular Turkish wedding chant.

GIRLS OF THE AMERICAN MISSION SCHOOL, OORFA

"Between the rifle shots and above the pleadings for mercy and the groans of the wounded could be heard this weird yelping of Mohammedan mothers and maidens, resembling more the barking of jackals than the voices of human beings—a most fitting orchestral accompaniment to the bloody tragedy which was being enacted.

"Christian women and children who were driven to the mosques and khans were detained there for a day or two, and then counselled by the government authorities to return to their homes. By this time, however, nothing remained of their homes but the bare walls and ceilings. This was all they had to return to. Not only was the winter's supply of food all carried off, along with everything else in their homes, but the fathers and brothers—those who had been the stay and support of these households—are now no longer there. The only remaining traces of these dear ones are the pools of blood in the deserted homes. Apart altogether from those killed and burned in the church, the bodies of over 1500 by actual count were dragged, usually by the legs, and in considerable numbers at a time, by animals, to a large trench dug for the purpose on the outskirts of the city. There they lie to-day, in one, irregular mass, awaiting the day when all wrongs shall be righted.

As many as three hundred bodies are said to have been taken from one of the large cistern wells some days after the massacre, while another furnished over fifty and yet another about thirty. Scarcely a single Gregorian or Protestant home escaped the general pillage and bloodshed and the total number of victims in this last massacre in Oorfa must now be put down at 4000. There are now in Oorfa alone from 10,000 to 12,000 persons, chiefly women and children, utterly dependent upon charity." This pitiful story of massacre and outrage is, fortunately, the last of the great massacres to be recorded in connection with the present persecution. No massacres have occurred since the rising at Oorfa, and Christians everywhere will pray that they may never again be saddened by such recitals.

The illustrations in this article have come to us through Rev. F. D. Greene, author of The Armenian Crisis, recently a missionary at Van, where he was associated with Dr. Grace N. Kimball.

Contributions to the Relief Fund during the week are acknowledged on page 234 of this issue.

AN ARMENIAN HOME AT OORFA.

whom eighteen are suffering from dangerous wounds—rifle shots and sword cuts. During the six weeks immediately following the first massacre, this devoted missionary heroine was obliged to keep all but constant vigil, and was unable through all this time to undress even once, and retire to her room for a night's rest. Any rest or sleep obtained was on a lounge and for but short intervals, while others kept watch. Her constant anxiety was not so much for her own personal safety, as for that of those whom she was attempting to succor. The zeal of the government authorities to protect this American missionary from personal violence, and so avoid complications with the American government, was shown by their placing an extra guard of soldiers on the mission premises during the second massacre. One of our photographs shows the Christian portion of the city of Oorfa, with the large Armenian Church standing, four-square, days, were rescued by their friends.

THE AMERICAN MISSION AT OORFA.

"Two hundred and forty-six persons took refuge in the home of the American missionary. Miss Shattuck, of most painfully convincing evidence in the fact that for two or three days afterward a number of hammals (Turkish porters), were engaged in carrying the bones and charred remains of these victims from the church to a place close in the rear of the American mission premises, where they were dumped over a portion of the old wall of the city.

"At the further end of the city may be seen the belfry tower of the Protestant Evangelical Church, and beside it is located the American Mission house. The story of the founding and growth of this Church together with the history of its able and faithful pastor for the last quarter of a century and who was also the architect and builder of the church edifice, would form the subject for an extended and interesting sketch. When the massacre began, he happened to be at the home of a friend where he and seventeen others who were in this house when it was attacked by the soldiers and the mob, all met the same fate. Nine of the ten Armenian priests in Oorfa had taken refuge in the large Armenian Church and were of course slaughtered there with the members of their flock. While this fiendish programme was being carried out in the large church, the whole of the Christian portion of the city was one scene of carnage. The manner in which this part of the bloody work was executed manifested a measure of 'method and madness.' First of all one set of soldiers was detailed to lead the attack on each home. The duties of these consisted in forcing an entrance, by breaking down the doors when they were not

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage

EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the latest money available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Names. Your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Printed at the Christian Herald Press, New York, by Samuel J. Fassett.

Reformation.

THE trouble is we have no God in American politics. We have a devil, yea! a whole gang of devils,—the devil of office-seeking, the devil of fraud, the devil of injustice, the devil of wastefulness, but no God. We have plenty of gin, and plenty of old rye, and plenty of schnapps, and plenty of city and state and national swindle, but no God. I am far from wanting to see a union of Church and state in this country, but I would like to see a party that would recognize, openly and above board, and without disguise, and without cant, the God in whose name Columbus took possession of this country, and in whose name Washington achieved our independence, and in whose name so many blessings have come to us,—the God of our great harvests, the God who protected our armies in 1776, and in 1812, and in 1864; the God of our peaceful and beloved homes. Blessed be his glorious name forever! "Oh," says some one, "that would not be fair, to put a recognition in the platform of a political party, when there are so many people that do not believe in a God." Well, there are a great many people who do not believe in the sanctity of the marriage relation, a great many people who do not believe in the rights of property, a great many people who do not believe in any style of government,—people who rob and steal, and murder. Do you refuse to make laws against criminals because there are criminals? Will you refuse to recognize God in governmental affairs because there are men who do not believe in a God?

All good people believe in a God. Your political parties come on with a preamble, and say "Whereas this," and "Whereas that," and it is simply a hash of old political hacks. There is overwhelming victory for that party which shall come and have enough courage to say in its preamble, "Whereas, This nation has been blessed of God as no other nation has,—blessed in its harvests, blessed in its health, blessed in its civilization, blessed in its peace, and in its freedom." Therefore, we, in convention assembled, do hereby declare our faith and hope for the continuance of his mercy, and in the name of God we now set up our banners." A party that had the strength to say that, establishing such a preamble, followed by common-sensical and righteous resolutions as to what should be done for the agricultural, the commercial, the manufacturing, the mining, the literary, the artistic, and the moral interests of the country, would sweep the whole land, from sea to sea, with an overmastering triumph. Among the magnificent men in our city, state, and national councils, there are those who could lead forth in such a movement if they would. Let some one now arise, north, south, east, or west, with enough talent and with enough good character to marshal a movement in which the moral idea shall be dominant over all others, and then you will see the Gehenna of modern politics ploughed under. I wait for the formation of such a party: I wait for the coming of such a man. Where is the Joshua? We are, as a nation, on the way either to reformation or to destruction. A flight of doves discovered to Columbus the direction of the land. We shall come to new and regenerated America by a flight of prayers.

Permanent Residence.

THANK God for your home—not merely the house you live in now, but the house you were born in, and the many houses you have resided in since you began your earthly residence. When you count over the number of those houses in which you have resided, you will be surprised. Once in awhile you will find a man who lives in the house where he was born, and where his father was born, and his grandfather was born, and his great-grandfather was born; but that is not one of a thousand cases. I have have not been more perambulatory than most people, but I was annoyed when I came to count up the number of residences I have occupied. The fact is, there is in this world no such thing as permanent residence. In a private vehicle, and not in a rail-car, from which one can see but little, I rode from New York to Yonkers and Tarrytown, on the banks of the Hudson—the finest ride on the planet for a man who wants to see palatial residences or fascinating scenery. It was in the early spring, and before the gentlemen of New York had gone out to their country residences. I rode into the grounds to admire the gardens, and the overseer of the place told me—and they all told me—that all the houses had been sold, or that they wanted to sell them, and there was literally no exception, although I called at many places, just admiring the gardens and the grounds and the palatial residences. Some wanted to sell or had sold, because of financial misfortune, or because their wives did not want to reside in the summer time in those places while their husbands tarried in town in the night, always having some business on hand, keeping them away. From some houses the people had been shaken out by chills and fever, from some houses they had gone because death or misfortune had occurred, and all these palaces and mansions had either changed occupants or wanted to change. Take up your city directory and see how few persons live where they did twenty years ago. There is no such thing as permanent residence. Those are the wisest people who "seek a city yet to come."

The Skies Brightening.

CHRIST has more disciples than ever, the Bible more readers, the institutions of religion more friends. The troops are drawn up in right position, and all we want is a spirit of holy enthusiasm to run all along the line. Our cities are going to be taken for God. It is only a question of time. If you think that these fortresses of alcoholism and these haunts of sin are going to keep their places, you have more faith in the powers of darkness than I have. The Lord will destroy them with the brightness of his coming. God could send across these cities one wave of religious influence that would drown out all the evil and uplift all the right. Those days of revival will surely come. God gave only a hint of his gracious power when, under Peter's preaching, three thousand were converted, and when, in 1857, the new disciples were counted by hundreds of thousands. In those stirring times, at Albany, during a session of the Legislature, some of the members, at half-past eight in the morning, held a prayer-meeting in the room of the Court of Appeals, and the meetings, which began with six in attendance, at the fifth session overflowed the rooms. Think of it! A revival in Albany Legislature! May there be another there this season, and one at Washington, and one in all the State capitals. I expect to see the day when all classes, high and low, will be moved by the power of the Gospel, and as we are promised that nations shall be born in a day, I pray God that our own nation may be the first regenerated.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Dr. Talmage emphatically declines to be held responsible for the book "Gems of Religious Thought," which a concern in Baltimore claims to have been written by him. The same concern publishes a "Story of Turkey and Armenia" which they claim contains contributions from the Editor and one of the Associate Editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Neither of the two gentlemen are conscious of having contributed anything to its pages.

Mrs. D. O. W., Whiting, Kan. Should a person forgive another who has wronged him, even before this offender asks forgiveness?

Yes, we should forgive freely and spontaneously. The true child of God will not hold hatred in his heart toward another. See (Matt. 5: 23, 24; 5: 44; 6: 15; Luke 11: 4; Col. 3: 13.)

Ruth A., Shamrock, N. C. How did Russia come to own Alaska?

It was discovered and explored by a Russian expedition under Behring in 1741, and was subsequently settled by Russians, who were engaged in the fur trade. It thus became Russian territory by right of discovery.

Reader, Pa. 1. What was the Trajan celebration? 2. Who was Diocletian?

1. It was the memorable "triumph" accorded to him on his victorious return to Rome in 106 A. D.—a "triumph," eclipsing all others in splendor and costliness, lasting four months. 2. Diocletian was a Roman Emperor of the third century, whose reign was marked by a frightful persecution of the Christians.

Interested One. How large is Assam, what is its population, and how many missionaries of all denominations are there?

Its area is 55,384 square miles, and population about 5,000,000. The missions are the American Baptist Missionary Union, the Lutheran Church, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (English), and the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Missionary Society.

J. H. R., Geneseo, Ill. How long will the necessity exist for aiding Armenians?

Our letters from the missionaries who are distributing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund intimate that the worst distress is about over, and that the refugees are returning to their villages. It has therefore been decided to close the Relief Fund on April 15 and no contributions can be accepted after that date.

Mrs. C. A. M., Huron, S. Dak. Who were the historians who wrote the history of Ireland in early times, and are there any modern historians of that country and nation?

The Encyclopaedia Britannica contains a digest of the leading histories of Ireland from the earliest times. A very interesting recent work is that of Rev. Joseph Sanderson, published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, New York.

H. P. D. C., Trenton, N. J. Can a man who has believed in Christ and has had his sins forgiven, be rightly termed a sinner? Can a man sin who has been born of God?

Experience must answer your question. The man who is born of God does sin. He is God's child, and is therefore no longer under condemnation, but he is often a wilful and disobedient child, needing correction. He does not delight in sin any more, but he must be very blind to his own faults if he says he does not commit sin.

Mrs. L. J. L., Toledo in a sermon in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, entitled, "Washington for God," this expression: "As surely as God lives, and he is able to do so, he says he will, this country will be evangelized from the mouth of the Potomac to the mouth of the Oregon, from the Highlands of the Nevada to the Golden Horn." Where is the mouth of the Oregon? And is Nevada referred to in Sullivan county, New York?

The great Oregon river, the Columbia (which is probably referred to), enters the Pacific between C. Disappointment and Pt. Adams. The Neversink or Navesink Highlands are off the New Jersey coast, south of Sandy Hook.

Reader, Waco, Tex. Is a Christian who believes in the direct power of the Holy Ghost to convert and to be nurtured in withstanding from a church where conversion and the new birth are wholly disregarded, and where the people are led together by an endless series of suppers and entertainments?

No church can properly claim to be called a Christian Church where conversion and the new birth are wholly disregarded, and any Christian would be justified in preferring a church which complied with the spirit and essence of the Master's life and work to one that was spiritually moribund. Apart from other considerations, the social life of a church is a thing to be encouraged, within proper bounds; but the substitution of purely social attractions, to the neglect of the matters that relate to our eternal welfare, is a mockery of the Christian religion and a disappointment to all who look to the church for spiritual guidance and consolation.

J. G., Pictou, N. S. 1. Does the statement in Rev. 21: 27, exclude a man from heaven if he has told a lie and has not repented? 2. Would you consider a man converted who refuses to pay his just debts when he is able to do so? 3. Is the cleansing promised in 1. John 1: 7 contingent on good works?

1. We cannot imagine a man who hopes to go to heaven being conscious of having lied with out repenting of it. The true Christian abhors untruth, and if under temptation he does tell a lie, he would seek an opportunity of confessing his sin to the person he has deceived as well as to God and seeking pardon. We do not like to say what excludes from heaven. No man should be dogmatic on such a subject. Our duty is to repent of sin and seek pardon through Christ, and be very careful to avoid sin in the future. 2. If the facts are as you state, we should have serious doubts of the genuineness of the conversion. 3. Good works are rather a vague expression. The cleansing not contingent on such matters as charitable gifts, or meritorious services. Good works, consistent godly life, kindly disposition, an effort to serve Christ, follow the cleansing as rule. The cleansed man is impelled to such things. He does not do them to win or merit salvation, but being saved, or born again, does them by the prompting of his new nature.

E. J., New York City. Will there be a judgment of the dead in Christ? Does not the Scripture say there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus?

We infer from the Parable of the Taler and of the Pounds and from other passages that the dead in Christ will be judged, not in condemnation, but as to degrees of reward. There are some whose sufferings and service will be recognized and honored, while others will barely be saved. Christ spoke of some who would be last and some who would be first in the kingdom, and Paul speaks of a star differing from another star in glory (See I. Cor. 15: 41.)

W. H. Sutcliffe, New York City. Is there any in the Bible written by a Gentile?

We do not know who wrote the Book Job, but if we may judge by the entire absence of any reference to Jewish law and ritual we would be inclined to think the author was not a Jew. He may have been, but if he were, it is remarkable that he did not quote from the law when there were so many quotations that would have been appropriate. The New Testament the Gospel of Luke and the Acts of the Apostles bear indications of Gentile authorship. Very little is known about Luke, but the little that is known favors opinion that he was a Gentile.

Subscriber, St. Louis, Mo. I notice in your column "From Manger to Throne" the statement that the body of the Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites in Egypt has been found and is on exhibition. Was he not drowned in the Red Sea?

The body referred to is that of Rameses, the great king, who is believed to have been the oppressor of the Israelites. By turning Exodus 2: 23 you will see the record of his death. It is generally believed that it was Menepthah, the son of Rameses, who was king at the time of the Exodus. It is not at all certain that even he was drowned in the Red Sea. He was of a timid; vacillating disposition, and extremely likely to remain behind when his army followed the Israelites. The reference in the Psalms and elsewhere to his overthrow would be natural, even if the king himself escaped destruction.

Mrs. M. J. Wardwell, Haverhill, Mass., can back issues of this paper or other religious reading matter to advantage in Christian work.—A. B., North Dartmouth, Mass. We believe not.—G. F. Reader, Perkasie, Pa. Luther was born at Eisleben, Lower Saxony, Nov. 10, 1483, and died Oct. 18, 1546. His remains were interred in the pulpit in the Castle Church at Wittenberg.—Miss Eva Seday, Knoxville, Tenn. Write to the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, Mass.—A. J. C., Bemis, Cal. 1. To a considerable extent, the proceeds are used for that purpose. 2. We have sent your letter to Rev. Josiah Strong, who will probably write to you.—W. J. B., Montavilla, Ore. We cannot inform.—Mrs. A. H. J., Toledo, O. Address the Philadelphia. 2. The case you mention is quite unusual, but not wrong. The office of trustee is a natural one. A regular contributor, who is a member of the congregation, though not a member, may be permitted to vote by the church's consent. A. F. Wagnall, publishers, N. Y.—Miss Lillian, Waverfield, Mass. You will find the verses in recent editions of Fennimore.—Ellen Dingle, Chillicothe, Mo. Read Baedeker or Murray. Do not know why such a tour should be any less than usual.—A. W. Johns, Elgin. The allegation is not endorsed by any scholar or lover of reputation, and is probably untrue.—G. L., Iron Mountain, Mich. It is Columbia, the great American liberty.—Mary W. Russell, Lancaster, Pa. Yes, she is still living and engaged in Christian work.—L. B., Somerville, Mass. Write to Congressman for conditions.—Mrs. H. S., Gates, N. Y. In the poem of "The Courtship of Miles Standish" (1858), a poem based on a legend in the early history of the Plymouth Colony.

THE

BIBLE AND THE

NEWSPAPER

Spanish Insult to the Flag.

SPAIN is stirred throughout with resentment at the sympathy, openly expressed in the United States, with the Cuban insurgents. The popular anger culminated on Sunday, March 1, when the people read the news of the action of our State, urging the recognition of the insurgents as belligerents. In Madrid, there was a demonstration, which required all the force of government to prevent outrage. About, estimated to number twenty thousand persons, lined the streets, singing patriotic songs and denouncing the United States. A strong force of police and soldiers was posted outside the American Legation, and prevented the mob from attacking it. Derisive cries and cat-calls were yelled by the people and severe rushes were made, which were checked with drawn sabres. At Barcelona, the excitement was even more intense. The mob smashed the American consulate, breaking the windows. A large American flag was obtained in some way, and after flinging mud upon it, the mob tore it to pieces and trampled the fragments under foot. The excitement continued to a late hour, when bodies of cavalry cleared the streets. At Valencia there was another angry demonstration. The students of the University held a meeting to protest against the action of the Senate, and afterward paraded the streets shouting, "Viva Spanish Cuba! Live with the United States!" There were riots also at Cadiz and Santiago.

On Sunday March 8 the disturbances were renewed, and at Valencia became more serious. The police and soldiery were armed with revolvers and stones when they tried to prevent an Anti-American meeting. One gendarme was killed and several citizens were badly wounded. The Governor of the province proclaimed martial law so as to enable the authorities to act more decisively against rioters. At Ecuelna also there was a renewal of the disturbances and it was necessary to protect the American Consulate with caution. The stern action taken by the authorities shows that the Government has no sympathy with the outbreak. The Prime Minister has been profuse in his apologies to our Government, and by closing four Universities, the students of which were prominent in the riots, has shown his desire to prevent demonstrations of ill-will to this country. It is a significant fact that although Spain is so ignorant at a mere proposal to recognize the Cuban revolutionists as belligerents, it was one of the first European nations to recognize the Confederate States as belligerents in our war. Her people appear to have overlooked the fact that we have a much right to sympathize with people at war with them, as they had to show their sympathy with one of the parties in our difficulty. But nations like individuals are apt to forget Christ's rule: " whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do even so to them." (Matt. 7: 12.)

United in Church.

A remarkable meeting in a church is reported in a journal of Toledo, O. It appears that among the early volunteers from Ohio in the war was a young man from Fremont. He was tenderly attached to his sister, the only relative he had in the world. Her husband also volunteered, and the two young men were constant companions and warm friends. The husband was killed, and it became his friend's painful duty to inform his sister that she was a widow. Shortly afterward he was taken prisoner, and in some way there was an error in the reports, for his sister saw his name among the list of dead. She mourned over this double bereavement and lost all interest in life. She obtained a position by which she was able to support herself, but for a long time she could not bear the sight of a newspaper. She had no friends but the family she had entered, and as they moved several times, all trace of her was lost. Her brother wrote to her several times, but his letters were not received, and she continued to mourn him as dead. After his release he made diligent search for her, but without success. He wandered about for some years, and finally settled six years ago in Toledo, O. He had long before concluded that his sister must be dead. Nearly thirty years had elapsed since he saw her and he had no expectation of seeing her again. A few weeks ago he united with the Church of the Disciples. His name was read among others before the church, and to his amazement a woman walked up to him and threw her arms about his neck and kissed him. She was his long-lost sister. She was a member of the church, and had lived for five years in the same street as her brother in Toledo. During that period they probably often met in the street without either recognizing the other. It needed the spoken name to give the clue to recognition. That the woman should have heard it in church gave additional interest to the event. It is there that members should find their brothers, who being brethren in the Lord are in closer and more enduring relationship than the ties of flesh can give.

A STREET IN BARCELONA.

All ye are brethren. (Matt. 23: 8.)

Unique Mail Delivery.

Probably the most unique method of transporting mails is that described in a Colorado journal, as being in use between the two towns of Telluride and Smuggler. The postal authorities do not guarantee a regular postal service with Smuggler, as it lies in a basin high up in the mountains far above the timber-line, and it is impossible to keep a trail open in the winter. Besides this, there are dangerous snow-slides which render travel perilous. In the autumn the burro carries up the supplies needed by the miners in their nest twelve thousand feet above the sea-level: but on the advent of winter some other means has to be adopted. This is the endless chain in connection with the tram rails. Huge buckets containing half a ton of ore, attached to the chain, supply the motive power. These, descending to the town of Telluride, at the head of the gulch, draw up a number of other buckets filled with the supplies the miners order. One of the buckets is painted a bright red, and the inscription, "United States Mail," painted on it in black letters indicates its use. People in Eastern cities would feel almost scandalized at seeing such an apparition and the Killisnoo tribes of Alaska Indians, in which a Sitka woman was killed. Reparation was demanded to the extent of blankets worth $160. The tribe could not or would not pay, and after many palavers the matter was settled by the Killisnoo tribe giving to the Sitkas a slave who had been stolen from the Hydahs. Slaves at that time were very valuable, and this one, a young man twenty years old was regarded as more than an equivalent for the blankets. He was kept in slavery and was harshly treated until the end of last year, when he died. The Sitkas, thereupon, renewed their demand for the blankets, contending that they had nothing to show in the way of reparation for the woman's murder. The Attorney very properly refused to endorse the demand and told them that they had already violated the law in holding the man in slavery; but apart from that, their acceptance of the slave barred them from making a further demand. We recognize this principle as obvious in such a case, but it is often difficult to get the burdened, anxious sinner to perceive how it applies to him in his relations to God. The slave redeemed the tribe, by his life of service, from their obligations for their crime and no just claim could be made against them for a further penalty. So it is that when Christ gave his life for men, they are free from the penalty of sin.

The chastisement of our peace was upon him. Isa. 53: 5.

BRIEF NOTES.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is frequently in receipt of letters from Evangelists who are away from home, desiring to know if it is possible that these travelling Christian workers keep us informed of their whereabouts in order that we may forward their mail promptly. They would also do well to give us their permanent address. A church which an Evangelist has served, often needs to communicate with him after the lapse of a year or two, and does not know where to find him. In all such cases, where the letters are sent to this office, we forward them as speedily as possible, but could do so with much more certainty if the Evangelists would send us a Postal card when they move from one town to another.

The Most Important contribution to temperance literature in the last decade has been ex-U. S. Senator Blair's pamphlet on Temperance Reform. A limited number of copies of this pamphlet may be had at five cents each by addressing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Evangelists Elliott and Butts have been holding successful revival services at St. Paul, Wash. The meetings were held in the First Methodist Church. The Presbyterians and Congregationalists were in the movement.

The American Bible Society has been notified that the two missionaries expelled by the Government of Peru from Cuzco last August, have succeeded in their appeal against their expulsion. The Peruvian Government must pay them one thousand dollars as indemnity for the damages sustained.

Remarkable Action on the subject of usury has been taken by the trustees of a Jewish Synagogue at Glasgow. A member of the synagogue was proved by evidence given in a lawsuit to have charged extortionate interest. The trustees notified him that in consequence of his conduct they would decline to rent him a pew in the building after the term for which he had paid had expired.

When Mr. Henry M. Stanley was at Lake Victoria eighteen years ago, there was not one missionary there. To-day, he says, there are 200 churches and 40,000 native Christians, many of whom are enthusiastic converts.

The Practical Results of Six Years of Christian Education in an industrial area are witnessed in the Grace Lutheran Church of Springfield, Ill. From the society one missionary has gone to India, two young men are preparing for the ministry, and one has just assumed his first pastorate. This is in addition to generous missionary gifts and home labors by the members.

Martha's Rest at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., is arranging for the opening of its second season. It is a place of rest for self-supporting women, whose total earnings are less than ten dollars a week, and who are in need of rest to recuperate. The charge is only four dollars a week for board and lodging. The committee would like to receive without any expense at all, some who are unable to pay even so small a rate as four dollars. They could do this, if kindly disposed persons would pay the cost of such needy beneficiaries. During last season the Home was the means of saving two lives, which would in all human probability have been lost if it had not been for the benefits the Home afforded. Contributions sent to this office will be forwarded to the Treasurer.

THE SPANISH ANTI-AMERICAN RIOTS—SCENE IN THE PORT OF BARCELONA

atus dignified by the title of the United States Mail; but the miners do not care, so long as by some means they can get their letters. It is the contents of the letters that they care for, and are not concerned as to whether they are handed to them by a polite letter-carrier in uniform, or reach them in a bucket. It is much to be wished that people felt the same way about the Gospel message, recognizing it as the Word of God and not being over-critical as to the manner in which it is delivered to them.

When ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God. (1. Thess. 2: 13.)

The Last Slave.

A report from the United States District Attorney, at Sitka, shows that contrary to the general belief there was up to the end of last year at least one man in slavery in the United States. The fact was disclosed through the appeal of an Indian of the Sitka tribe to the District Attorney. From his statement it appears that many years ago there was a quarrel between the Things God Hates.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning March 29. REV. 6: 6-19; 8: 13-17.

QUESTIONS as to man's origin, as to his station in life, or as to his mental capacity, fade into insignificance compared with the question, What things keep him from God? Our own reason and experience in investigations of nature would convince us apart from the Bible teaching that man is a failure unless he waits until he places himself in the hands of the Almighty. When he tries to fulfill the object for which God designed him he will succeed, he will become the greatest thing possible to man, when he opposes that object he meets and must meet disaster. He opposes himself to the controlling force that pervades the universe and is inevitably crushed in the struggle. The line of development is the line of God's purposes. The wise king saw in his day and confessed it, though his own life was a conspicuous illustration of the failure of knowledge and wisdom to control conduct. He declared that there were seven things that were abominations to God. That is, they were hateful to him not in a practical, captious sense, but because they were hateful to themselves. They must therefore be avoided not only from a desire to please him, but because they produce alienation from him, and consequently bar man from his chief end. Solomon specifies these seven alienating influences. They are: pride, lying, murder, evil thoughts, evil deeds, anger and mischief-making. Two sins of the heart, three of the tongue and two overt acts. It is worthy of notice how in this, as in all God's relations with men, the distinctions of position of which we make so much, are ignored. The questions involved are points of character and apply to the poor equally with the rich. The central precept is the source and origin of the other six. The heart devising wicked imaginations is the root of the evil. The impure heart, the man who loves evil and longs for it is offensive in God's sight. God deals with men as reasonable beings. He would have them choose the good voluntarily, not under threat, or fear, or compulsion. The man who hungers for righteousness will be filled. This is a consolation to so many of us whose conduct is not on the level of our aspirations. We desire to be holy our desire is in the way of God's will for us, and though the path to it may be toilsome and there may be many and grievous falls on the way, we shall have God's help and shall eventually have our desire. It is the man who loves sin and would indulge himself with it, if he were not restrained by the dread of eternal punishment, who is in evil case. It is in this purity of heart that our hopes rest for the outward conduct. Lying, murder, and the rest are not committed by the pure in heart. It is when the inner citadel holds the traitor that the outer works of conduct are captured. Therefore reform, and regeneration, must commence there. The man who is on the high road to development, is the man who loves good, who intensely desires to be free from sin, and who resists the low thoughts and wicked imaginations that will intrude into the heart. They ought to be unwelcome guests, intruders who must be expelled promptly and without parley. Here is the real battlefield and he who wins here will be the victor in conduct. To fail there, to become like the whited sepulchres, to which Christ compared the Pharisee, fair in appearance, but corrupt within. As he said, "The kingdom of God is within you."

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

WE'LL MEET IN THE MORNING.

E. E. HEWITT.

CHAS. EDW. PRIOR.

1. We part for a lit-tle, but partings will cease, We'll meet by the riv-er in mansions of peace,
2. The bonds of af-fec-tion u - nit - ed in Him, Are grow-ing with lus-tre no a - ges can dim,
3. We part for a little, we whisper "good night," And then comes the dawning all glorious and bright,

With sadness and weeping we whisper "good night," But soon dawns the morning of fade-less de-light. They can-not be bro-ken by death's ruthless hand; To- geth - er with Je-sus, re-joicing we'll stand. When gather'd in glad-ness on Fair E-den's shore, We'll join in the an-them of peace ev-er-more.

Chorus.

We'll meet in the morning, the clouds rolled away, We'll meet in the morning of heav'n's glorious day;

Then trust-ful-ly, hope-ful-ly, whisper "good night," We'll meet in the morning, and all will be right.

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From HIGHEST PRAISE FOR SABBATH SCHOOLS.

By per of the Publishers

Mutual Kindness.

DEAR ties of mutual succor bind
The children of our feeble race,
And, if our brethren were not kind,
This earth were but a weary place.
We lean on others as we walk
Life's twilight path with pitfalls strewn;
And 't were an idle boast to talk
Of treading that dim path alone.

Amid the snares misfortune lays
Unseen, beneath the steps of all.
Blest is the Love that seeks to raise
And stay and strengthen those who fall;
Till, taught by him who, for our sake,
Bore every form of Life's distress,
With every passing year we make
The sum of human sorrows less.

—BRYANT.

My Trust.

I KNOW in whom I put my trust,
I know what standeth fast.
When all things here dissolve like dust
Or smoke before the blast:
I know what still endures, howe'er
All else may quake and fall,
When lies the prudent men ensnare,
And dreams the wise enthrall.

It is the dayspring from on high,
The adamant rock,
Whence never storm can make me fly,
That fears no earthquake's shock;
My Jesus Christ, my sure defence,
My Saviour, and my light,
That shines within, and scatters thence
Dark phantoms of the night.

Who once was borne, betrayed and slain,
At evening to the grave;
Whom God awoke, who rose again,

A conqueror strong to save:
Who pardons all my sin, who sends
His spirit pure and mild;
Whose grace my every step befriends,
Who ne'er forgets his child!

Therefore I know in whom I trust,
I know what standeth fast.
When all things formed of earthly dust
Are whirling in the blast;
The terrors of the final foe
Can rob me not of this;
And this shall crown me once, I know,
With never-fading bliss.

The Happy Life.

HOW happy is he born and taught
That serveth not another's will;
Whose armor is his honest thought,
And simple truth his utmost skill;

Whose passions not his masters are,
Whose soul is still prepared for death,
Untied unto the worldly care
Of public fame, or private breath;

Who hath his life from rumors freed,
Whose conscience is his strong retreat;
Whose state can neither flatterers feed,
Nor ruin make oppressors great;

Who God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend,
And entertains the harmless day
With a religious book or friend.

This man is freed from servile bands
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all.

—SIR HENRY WOTTON.

The Midnight Cry.

The Clues Prophecy Gives us as to the Nature and Characteristics of the Warning.

BY REV. E. J. HYTCHE.

Continued from page 211.

ALTHOUGH it is not intimated what the "great voice" of the angels will say, I cannot but think that we are warranted in concluding that they will announce that "the Bridegroom cometh," and give them the welcome summons, "Go ye out to meet him." This summons will be effectual in arousing both the wise and the foolish virgins, or in other words, the faithful and the worldly sections of the Church of Christ. For immediately on the cry being heard, "all those virgins will rise and trim their lamps;" but as only those who are termed the wise will be really ready for the great transition, they alone will be admitted into the marriage feast, by being first "caught away to meet the Lord in the air." The rest will be left behind as the penalty of their folly and sin, to suffer the horrors of the great tribulation. But, happily, there is mercy in store for those, for they will ultimately (1. Cor. 3: 15), "be saved, yet all through fire." For, in spite of their worldliness, these foolish virgins will have sufficient grace to refuse to worship the lawless one, and so be (Rev. 20: 4), martyrs for this act of faithfulness to the Most High.

In connection with the translation of the saints it has been questioned whether the world will hear the midnight cry, or whether it will be confined to the wise and foolish virgins. As no such event—save in the individual cases of Enoch and Elijah—has marked Church history, the question cannot be answered with absolute certainty. But there is a somewhat parallel case which may possibly throw some light on the subject. For when the apostle Paul was on his memorable journey to Damascus, and was stopped in his mad career by our Lord, it is stated that (Acts 9: 3 and 7), "Suddenly there shined about him a light from heaven—and the men who were with him stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no man." So may it be with the rapture of the saints. Though the mass may "hear the sound" like Paul's escort, they may not hear the angelic summons, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." All that Christ has revealed is this (Luke 18: 34), "I tell you in that night there shall be two men in one bed—the one shall be taken, and the other left." And all that the one who is left behind will know will be that his bedfellow has disappeared in the night.

Happily, the question whether there will be any premonitions of the midnight cry can be more easily answered than questions as to its nature, for just as an unnatural stillness forewarns of the coming cyclone, so, though the exact date is not given, yet certain events are recorded as occurring prior to, and so heralding its clarion peal. One unmistakable premonition will be the division of the revived Roman Empire into its former eastern and western divisions, as precursors of the empire of Antichrist. These two divisions will be exactly ten, neither more nor less, in correspondence with the prediction of Daniel's ten toes (Daniel 2: 41, 42), and John's ten horns (Rev. 13: 1). Some of these kingdoms are already in existence; namely, in the western moiety, England, France, Spain and Italy; and Greece, Egypt and Syro-Persia in the east. The Asiatic section is fast crystallizing; for events proceed so rapidly, especially in Asia, in these days that it is probable that before many years all the last ten kingdoms will be established. If so, the startling midnight cry cannot be far off.

IN HIS HANDS

A NEW SERIAL STORY,
WRITTEN EXPRESSLY
BY THE
For the
CHRISTIAN HERALD,
REV. EDWARD AUGUSTUS RAND

CHAPTER XI.

"ARK!" Sandy hearkened. "Hark there!" To this second invitation from Jed, Sandy again listened. He held up to his ear a big hand, big enough to catch all the sound wandering between the shore and the "Three Sisters," long, low, black reefs lying outside the harbor and anything but sisterly in their treatment of ignorant mariners.

"Don't ye hear it?" cried Jed. "Come to the winder, Sandy." The two young men stood side by side at a window of the little, unpainted fish-house perched on a yellow hummock.

Sandy now nodded his head. He also said, "Yes, I hear it. Hain't heard that sound comin' cross Castaway Ledge for sometime. 'Mary's a-tollin' sure."

Castaway Ledge was a big rock but a short distance from the shore. A tongue of sand reached from it to the shore, and at low tide one could easily walk out to the ledge. It was an easy and favorite walk. Many were the young people that wandered out to it during the summer. When the tide was low and the moon ran high and full, lovers were fond of a stroll in the evening out to this rock. It was unlucky for them if so sentimental that they forgot the very practical matter of a seasonable walk home. People had been caught by the returning tide, and were either obliged to wait in patience for low water again or else had been rescued by their friends coming off in boats. In storms, the great waves would break in fury clear across the ledge, and instead of a dark rock people ashore saw only a turbulent swash of foam. Sometimes a very high tide would visit the shore and it would go over the ledge, even in weather that was not stormy, and there were several ugly stories afloat and carefully kept drifting and enlarged now and then by gossip talkers.

One projection of this ledge was called Mary's Rock. It was named after one Mary Hudson. She had had trouble with those at home, and in a mood of revenge, had gone, when a storm was threatening, to Castaway Ledge, and there waited in desperation for the tide to carry her away. Before the water touched her, she changed her mind, her courage failed her and she was seen on the ledge that ever after bore her name, frantically beckoning for help. A boat put off to her rescue, and as the rowers approached they could hear her piercing cries above the roar of the storm. But they never found her. It was thought that she descended from the ledge to meet the boat and somehow missed her footing and fell into the water and was drowned.

Jed had often heard the story from Skipper Dan, who used to tell it with variations of coloring, retaining main facts. Other people told it, too, and the legend was known to everyone who knew the rock.

Of course, superstition used the legend. When the wind was in a certain quarter and a storm threatened, the sound of a distant church-bell could be heard. The wind brought the sound across Castaway Ledge from a hamlet farther up the coast. It might be "the second bell," calling slowly to the funeral, or it might be a funeral. When it came echoing pensively across Castaway Ledge with its melancholy sound, it was known as "Mary's a-tollin'."

Jed hearing it, now exclaimed, "That's it sure! Mary's a-tollin'! Makes me shiver."

Sandy, meeting a large telescope with his hands and looking through it, declared, "Yes, I tell you, there's something on Mary's Rock. And the tide's a-bilin' all round that 'ere ledge—"

"You don't say, Sandy." Jed made a second telescope with his hands and excitedly added, "Sure as you're alive! And the rock is a-moster kivered. And I see 'em a-wavin' suthin'. Sandy, come on! Come on, old boy. My boat is off, but we will get one."

Sandy did not need a second invitation. Somewhat as a hound scents his game and springs away, so Sandy was already rushing out of the fish-house. The beach was only a few feet distant, but his boat had been borrowed and was hauled up several hundred feet away. The two fishermen soon reached it.

"Now for her," cried Sandy as they laid their firm, strong hands on the gunwale of the boat. Down the sand it was rushed and into the water. The oars were grasped and the little craft was quickly in deep water, Sandy and Jed pulling vigorously.

"See anything out there over the rock?" cried Jed to Sandy, who had given his neck a fierce, backward twist.

"See suthin'! I'm sure of that! Don't jest make the pusson out!"

"Pull away, Sandy!" They pulled lustily. They were eager for the unusual even if they had to go into the water after it. But who was it off there on Castaway Ledge?

That day Janet Morton had started out for a walk. She hardly knew where or why. She wanted to go somewhere. There was a question pressing upon her. Her work in the future was pressing upon her an unfinished question in her mind. What to do, or where to go—neither of the two could she answer? It made her restless. She thought she had decided to leave it all in God's hands, and yet would not God direct her through her judgment, perhaps through the counsel of others? He would not be likely to flash his directions upon her through a dream by night, or a sudden, mysterious voice overhead by day. In Bible times God left his foot-prints in such paths of communication, and I would not say now-a-days that he might not use the way of a dream as an avenue by which he reaches men. But what he does use without doubt to-day is the supplicant's own judgment quickened and helped, or his messages may come to us through the suggestions of another. God is not shut out from our sleep. No way has to him a barred gate. But the paths he plainly marks are those we must look to find him in to-day, when our turn as seekers may come. "Then," concluded Janet, in whose mind the wheels of all these thoughts were turning over and over, "I must myself reason out my future work, and may be, unaided by any human counselor, find it. Now, John told me I would do for a nurse. I wonder if that is to be my calling, or to be a nurse in the war, he said." So holding one hand up to God, asking for a light to be placed therein, with the other she felt her way along a path that was very uncertain and shadowy to her, where she could only grope and wait for the coming of light. If in her plans, the way was thus dimmed, at present there was no shrouding of the path she ultimately took. She now went down to the sandy shore, passed the fish-houses, and then strolled along the solitary beach. On one side, were the hummocks, whose billows of sand changed their form only as the waves pounded upon them and tried to beat them down and make them over. Before her was the gray sand of the beach, a cold steel gray near the water, a softer, warmer shade higher up the beach, and at the foot of the hummocks, it was almost white, tufted with blackened clumps of drift-wood. Then beyond the sands to the right, was the cold, blue ocean, an intense blue to-day, stretching out without a barrier until it touched the misty folds of cloud, lowered like a curtain all along the distant horizon line.

"Oh so cold, so cold!" said Janet looking off on the great sea. Not in the temperature of the atmosphere, but in the coloring of the sea, and yet an augury of the winter not far away, when to the touch as well as to the sight, the waves would be icy. The sea was quiet, and its approach to the land was almost playful, sending not its roaring lions, but its gentle lambs that sportively shook their white fleece up and down the beach. The sea though, off in the distance, did scowl, and there were cloudy spaces of the sky that looked sullen. Glancing at the sky now and then, but fastening her gaze almost continuously upon the sea, Janet walked on. It was a pleasure to see her walk, so even was her pace, so graceful her carriage. Far more interesting was her face. There was a certain sweetness to her expression, a nobility and dignity, an aspect of resources which she possessed and controlled wisely, that made her face a pleasant and interesting study to all thoughtful minds. She was now opposite Cast-away Ledge. There was a cleared pathway between it and the shore, but the tide was rising and the bridge of sand would soon be flooded.

"Wonder if I haven't time to walk out there before the tide shuts in," thought Janet.

She looked back at the shore and exclaimed, "Why, why, what is that?"

It seemed like the movement of a big crab over the sands, making its contortions as irregular and emphatic as possible. When these contortions, though, were analyzed, they were resolved into the efforts of Skipper Dan to bring along at the same time and in some kind of decent dignity, his wooden leg, and that young ward of skipper Dan, petted and beautiful, but now wilful and resisting, little Ethel. She was holding back and drawing away from the iron grip that had closed upon her left hand. With the other hand she clasped a flag. Like a mariner rounding a difficult point, he kept his eye on the fish houses ahead, and then dragged along little Ethel and his wooden leg.

"Why, what is the matter?" asked Janet.

"Matter!" growled Skipper Dan, noticing Janet, but not stopping at all. "She is not a good little gal to-day. She's been away down the beach. Come, come, Ethel! Go stiddy! You act like a mack'rill sloop in a squall." Not a moment did the Skipper stop or cease pulling. He tugged away incessantly. Ethel made no reply. She only waved that flag of her country defiantly, shut her mouth tightly, and pulled back all she could.

"I am sorry, very, Ethel! You ought to be good," said Janet.

"Don't want to be!" said Ethel sulkily.

"That's it!" exclaimed the Skipper. "Now you see the sperrit in her. Oh I don't see what she wants to trouble Gampsie for!"

The tone of this last sentence seemed to touch Ethel, for she went along more readily, or less resistingly, rather. The Skipper, though, did not halt for an instant. He felt that he had an important cargo to get into port. He was the only tug that could do the work. On, he must go, and Ethel must go with him. The contortions of the crab were continued up the beach, and soon were more violent than ever. Janet watched the crab awhile, and then turned toward Castaway Ledge. "The sand is still uncovered. Time yet to get across and back," murmured Janet. "Just about time to get over and back before the tide comes in deeper."

She hurried over the sand, reached the ledge and sat down near Mary's Rock.

"I will sit down," she said.

All the while that rising tide was creeping up the sides of the ledge. It was spreading over the sand-strip between the ledge and the shore. But none of Janet's thoughts were on the tide. She was sitting on Mary's Rock. Her face was turned toward that cold sea, so wide, restless, and so menacing even in its mildest moods. But her thoughts were not on the sea in front any more than the sand-strip behind her. She was thinking of John Morton, his sickness, and her conversation with him. She remembered what he had told her about the war, and she recalled his opinion that she would make a good nurse for soldiers, and then like these very rocks coming out of the water with outline distinct and firm rose up out of her memory all of John's words about Winthrop Melrose! Was Winthrop still at the war? Was he on the march or in the hospital? Was she could not think longer on that subject. She bowed her head and covered her face with her hands. How much like that sea was her heart? Out of its depths what sudden storms might arise! What thoughts, like strong winds, might sweep across it! How serious the agitation, bringing up things supposed to be buried deep on the bottom! How little the thought of that heart were under the control of the woman walking the beach a short time since, calm and sedate, her face placid with its expression of self-control! Now she was bending low, crouching on Mary's Rock, agitated just as that unfortunate maiden was disturbed years ago when the waves swept about this very ledge, and crash!—sh—sh! What did Janet hear? A wave had struck Mary's Rock and dared to throw its venturesome spray within a few feet of Janet. She shrank back in alarm! Then she turned, thinking of the sandy strip between the ledge and the beach. That tongue of land was smothered with water!

"Why!" she exclaimed, rising up in alarm. "How—how is this?"

The answer was prompt and the reason plain. While she had been attending to something else, the tide, attending to its own work, had been steadily rising, and stealthily cut off from the shore Castaway Ledge, Mary's Rock, and Janet Morton. No look of astonishment, no dissatisfaction, indignation, or remorse could change the situation. She could see a little school-house half a mile from the beach, tucked into a pine grove at the foot of a hill. She had taught in that school-house.

"Why," she now said, "I used often to say to my scholars, 'Remember it is easy to get off to Castaway Ledge, but it may be hard to get back,' and by it I used to illustrate the ease of getting into all kind of mischief, and the difficulty in getting out. And here I am, a prisoner! In this very place! So mortifying!"

How mortifying, only a Morton well stocked with the Morton pride could say.

"What if my scholars saw me? How the scamps would enjoy it! I can almost see them pointing their fingers at me, a row of them over there on the shore, yes I can see them! But the question is, how to get ashore! I'll try! I suppose I must wade. Mortifying!"

She had scolded Ethel for her wading tendencies, but now Miss Janet Morton must turn herself into a duck.

"Stop one moment! There are boys—no! I wish somebody would come along and see me and come after me—no, no, will wade!"

She was ready to imitate the ducks in minute, but turned back from her essay quickly. The water deepened steadily in the direction of her attempt, and she was obliged to come back. Then she remembered this peculiarity about the sand tongue which the beach thrust out to the ledge. It was not a broad attachment, but quite narrow, and on either side the water deepened abruptly. Had she gone to the right or the left of the strip of sand?

All this time, the malicious tide kept strengthening, deepening, little waves breaking at her feet. It was like the sound of many chuckles as if they said "Now we have you! Caught a Morton! Don't do that every day!" Yes, the voices seemed to be a series of "Caught caught! Caught, caught! Caught caught!"

What would she do, or rather, what could she do? One thing might be done. She might possibly attract the attention of some one going by in a boat or walking out on the shore, that though would be an acknowledgement of her imprudence which she hated to make. How it could be to up in the village voiced among the home retailed with his sugar by the store-keeper over his counter to the farmer who had just arrived in his green wagon, who turn would take it away and give it out with his potatoes. Lavina Skeele would hear of it and chuckle over it and tell it all in the sewing-circle which would make thirty tongues nimbly fly, though it might stay thirty needles. Then a newspaper the neighborhood might get hold of it and chronicle Miss Janet Morton's "rash venture out to Castaway Ledge when the tide was down—or partially so—and a mortifying imprisonment there when the tide was up."

"Vexatious!" exclaimed Janet. "I be caught in this way! There, I wish did not have so much pride!"

(To be Continued.)

A School on a Battle-Field.

The Christian Herald's Sunday School Missionary Organizes a New Work on the scene of an Indian Massacre.

OUR readers will be glad to learn that God is wonderfully blessing the work of establishing and fostering Sunday Schools to which they contribute by their support of the Rev. George W. Sharp, the Christian Herald's Sunday School Missionary. The latest report shows that during the preceding twelve months the number of new Sunday Schools organized was 1,763. In these the number of teachers and scholars gathered was 65,977. And—better than all—no less than 10,002 hopeful conversions were reported from the schools during the year. More than one-third of these new schools are organized in the South-Western Department, in which Mr. Sharp labors. The work is arduous, involving almost constant traveling through a rough and sparsely settled country, but to a man so devoted to the cause of Christ as Mr. Sharp is, the reward far more than compensates for the hardships and privations attendant. In many instances he has found settlers far removed from church and school, their children growing up without religious advantages. There he has started a school, out of which a church has grown, that is now flourishing and doing good work. Sometimes, for years, the school is the only sign of religious life in a community and there is nothing besides to mark the difference between the Lord's day and other days of the week. But it exerts its influence and as the children grow up and take their places in life, the effects of the Sunday School training is seen in their characters. Many testimonies have been given to the value of this work, which in some districts would probably not have been commenced if it were for the visit of the missionary. Even when there are pious families in a neighborhood it often needs the missionary's energy and organizing faculty to get a school established. It is thus a patriotic work directly influencing the life and character of the rural population.

Dr. Paxson, who has charge of the Southwestern Department, speaks in the highest terms of our Missionary's energy, self-denial and enthusiasm. Mr. Sharp, he says, is one of his most valued and successful workers, and he is anxious to give the benefit of his help for another year. Feeling sure that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers would wish us to continue good work, we have notified the Committee of the Sunday School Union that the necessary funds would be provided, and Mr. Sharp has accordingly been commissioned. The entire cost of the year's work will be nine hundred dollars. We have no doubt of the money being supplied. Our readers have too much interest in such work to allow it to languish for lack of funds. There ought to be no communities without religious services in this Christian land, and especially there ought to be no children growing up in ignorance of the Gospel. It is to those who are now children that the country must look for its leaders as the older people die, and we want to have those children Christians, fearing God and serving him. Therefore we want a Sunday School in every village of the land. Our readers can aid in achieving this most desirable object by contributing to the support of the Missionary, who devotes his whole time to that work. In the course of a letter recently received from Mr. Sharp, he gives the following report of his recent movements, and incidentally describes the historical associations of the site of a school he has organized:

In this month I have visited and addressed three flourishing Sunday Schools in a village where I had previously organized a school when they had none. They are all working harmoniously—all are now conducted in church houses, and identified with churches which have enjoyed precious revival meetings, and to which large additions have been made on confession of faith. All the services held while I was there were well attended, and I found the state of religion very gratifying. From that place an influence is spreading to communities in out-of-the-way places by the counsel of its workers.

One of these neighborhoods is called Battle Creek, in Schuyler Co., Mo., where I organized a school several years ago. The creek acquired its name from a battle between the Indians and the early settlers of this portion of the State about the year 1831. The State had been admitted into the Union eleven years before, but the Indians still had the privilege at a certain season of the year of coming in to hunt the game—bear, deer, wild turkey, etc.

Daniel Boone, the famous pioneer, having obtained a grant of land from the Spaniards in 1798, had settled north of the Missouri River beyond any inhabited limit, at Charette, where he died in 1822. His friends having settled in that vicinity, they formed the nucleus of the settlement that took the name of Howard County.

A volunteer force from that and the three intervening counties proceeded to the camp of the Indians, with whom they held a parley with the prospect of a peaceable adjustment of the difficulties when, all of a sudden, a white man saw an Indian who, he said, had disturbed his family, and the white man shot him.

The alert Indians assailed the whites instantly in return. Confusion reigned on all sides. The rash act of the white man had precipitated a battle, for which his comrades were not prepared. They were beaten. A few were killed and fell into the hands of the Indians who burned their bodies near a large walnut tree.

Why

Do people buy Hood's Sarsaparilla in preference to any other,—in fact almost to the exclusion of all others?

Because they know that Hood's Sarsaparilla cures when others fail.

The question of best is just as positively decided in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla, as the question of comparative sales. Remember,

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills

cure Liver Ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

Quick as a Wink

You can make a delicious cup of chocolate if you have the right kind—that's WHITMAN'S Instantaneous CHOCOLATE. Perfect in flavor and quality. In pound and half pound tins. At confectioners, grocers, etc. STEPHEN F. WHITMAN & SON, Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia.

DIABETES FLOUR
Also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuits and Pastry Flour. Unrivalled in America or Europe. Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free. Write Farwell & Rhines, Westport, N. Y., U.S.A.

I was well acquainted years afterwards with three excellent citizens, all Christians, who were in the battle, and who severally gave me the above facts, and described the ground accurately on which the encounter occurred. In my missionary work, when I came to the creek I easily found the location though the forest was gone. But there was the northern slope of the hill up which the whites had retreated, some on foot, some on horseback, the latter sometimes dismounting to place a wounded comrade on his horse, that he might escape the vengeance of the savages. William Blackwell was one of those men who gave his horse to a wounded man, and by firing and running for a long distance escaped the fury of his pursuers. He lived to a good old age, and reared a large family, one of whom became a useful Methodist Minister.

How had the scene changed when I organized Battle Creek Sunday School! From the summit of the hill a beautiful and well cultivated field rolled north toward the creek. The meeting was held on a Thursday night. The address was listened to with earnest interest, the effort to organize a Sunday School met with hearty approval, and its success was assured from the beginning, and the field, once of carnage and death, became a field of salvation and life from the Prince of Peace.

GEO. W. SHARP,

Christian Herald Missionary of Am. S. S. Union.

Women and Women only

Are most competent to fully appreciate the purity, sweetness, and delicacy of CUTICURA SOAP, and to discover new uses for it daily.

In the form of washes, solutions, etc., for distressing inflammations, irritations, and weaknesses of the mucous membrane, it has proved most grateful.

CUTICURA SOAP appeals to the refined and cultivated everywhere, as the most effective skin purifying and beautifying soap, as well as purest and sweetest for toilet and bath.

Sold throughout the world. British depot: F. NEWBERRY & SONS, 1, King Edward-st., London. POTTS, DRUG & CHEM. CO., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

WALL-PAPER

Samples mailed free from the largest concern in U. S. Prices 80% lower than others. PAPERS from 2c. to $3.40 a Roll—5 Yards.

DEALERS can have large books by express with TRADE DISCOUNTS.

A MILLION ROLLS—An Unlimited Variety. 982-984 Market St. 418 Arch St. PHILADELPHIA.

You Dye in 30 minutes

If you use Tonk's French Dyes. No other dyes like them. Dye cotton as permanently as wool. Our turkey red for cotton won't wash, boil or freeze out—others will. Carpets, dresses, capes and clothing of all kinds made to look like new. No failures with Tonk's dyes; any one can use them. Send 40c. for 6 pages, or 10c. for one—any color. Big pay to agents. Apply now and mention this paper.

FRENCH DYE CO., Vassar, Mich.
HOW DO WE DO IT? 855 Tremont Oxford Organ, 10 years, 10 steps, guaranteed for 10 years. Instructions book and color FREE. OXFORD DYE CO., 242 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE
AND THE GROWTH PREVENTED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.
"Discovered by Accident."—In Commencing, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the hair of the hand, and on washing afterwards it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. It was then discovered and named MODENE. It is perfectly pure free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It is absolutely but sure, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few moments and the hair dissolves and falls off. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for this purpose, and is a scientific discovery over all other such wonderful remedies. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be not completely removed it will remove it permanently. The heavy growths such as the beard on men may require two or three applications before the roots are destroyed. Enough hair will be removed at each application, and without the slightest injury or consequent itching, when applied over and over. MODENE is a scientific fact, and is recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Used by people of refinement.
Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a prophylactic in MODENE which dissolves away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who had an embarrassing growth of hair coming should use MODENE to destroy its growth. MODENE sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid (recently sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. (If Correspondence is desired, please send a stamped envelope.) MODENE is a scientific fact, and is recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Used by people of refinement.
LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS WANTED.
MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A.
Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations.
You can register our letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery.
We offer $4,000 FOR FAILURE or the SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

The Cough Which Lingers

because of a run-down condition of the system, and is not affected by ordinary cough medicines, will yield readily to because it gives strength to the weakened body and enables it to throw off disease.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

50 cents and $1.00 at all druggists

SCOTT & BOWNE

Manufacturing Chemists, New York

FREE!

We Direct Special Attention to the Following Remarkable Statements:

25 years I was almost totally deaf; could not understand a word; had to carry a slate so that people could "talk" to me. In one week after commencing Aerial Medication, I surprised my friends by discarding the slate. I steadily improved, and now can hear the slightest noise and can understand conversation perfectly. Edward E. Williams, Lead, S. Dk.

For 22 years I suffered untold agonies from Fetid Catarrh. Aerial Medication cured me in 1889, and I am still entirely free from the disease. Mrs. I. F. Sharp, Twinville, Tenn.

REID, Texas.—I am satisfied I had consumption, had a very distressing cough and profuse expectoration which has been cured, and my health fully restored by the use of Dr. Moore's treatment. Rev. I. H. Hoskins.

Medicines for 3 Months' Treatment Free.

To introduce this treatment and prove beyond doubt that I will cure Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send medicines for three months' treatment free. Address, J. H. MOORE, M. D., Cincinnati, O.

THE IMPROVED

Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss that is so constructed that it will wear, absorb moisture, and keep the patient comfortable under the hardest exercise or severe strain, and without a permanent and speedy cure. Elastic Truss, 822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.

Send name and address to the printer, and you will receive a complete printing outfit for 10c. The outfit includes a complete set of type, galleys, and all the necessary tools and materials for printing. It is a complete outfit for the home or office. Send your name and address to the printer, and you will receive a complete printing outfit for 10c. The outfit includes a complete set of type, galleys, and all the necessary tools and materials for printing. It is a complete outfit for the home or office. Send your name and address to the printer, and you will receive a complete printing outfit for 10c.

MAY BE YOU CAN'T make $40 or $50 a week like some agents selling our 3-acre $100 farms on instalments of $1 weekly, but almost anybody can earn half as much. Send for full particulars. D. L. RISLEY, 211 S. 10th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

During the past week the following contributions have been received for the relief of the Armenian sufferers:

Prev. ack $32,922 90	Edmonds, F.H.	25
Adams, Mrs.	Edward, Francis	20
Adams, Mrs.	Elmer, Mrs. John	100
Allard, Bert	20	Eichelberger, H.L.	100
Alyen, Mrs. O. E.	100	Elkridge, Henry	50
Anderson, M. E.	500	Eldridge, I. C.	100
Arnold, Hugh	50	Eldridge, Irvin	100
Arnold, S.	200	Eldridge, Lida	25
Arnold, S. Otto	100	Elkridge, Walter and	100
Aschbach, Ben	100	Arthur, S. C.	100
Ash, Mrs. J. Frank	200	Eldridge, Wm. C.	100
Aycox, Percy	200	Elliot, Mrs. A.	100
Aycox, Mrs. S. C.	200	Evans, J. R.	100
Aycox, Geo. I.	200	Evans, Wm. R.	200
Aymor, M. F. & L.S.	200	Ewing, Jas.	50
Barley, E. R.	200	Ewing, E.	50
Barley, J. M.	50	Evans, Wm. E.	50
Barley, Jacob	50	Farmer, Mrs. W. L.	100
Barley, J. Frank	35	Farm, Miss	100
Ball, H. A.	50	Fennellson, Mrs. M.	200
Ball, J. H.	500	Fetter, Mrs. F.W.	500
Barnes, Rev. & wife	50	Foster, Mrs. Dr. H.	100
Barnett, Samuel	25	Fisk, H. R.	100
Barnett, J.	100	Flanders, H. E.	100
Baxter, Miss Asenath	100	Folsom, Julia	200
Bayer, Mrs. L. M.	100	Isle, Ida	100
Baker, Mrs. Albert	200	Forney, J. K.	300
Bell, Mr. & Mrs. L. M.	200	Foster, Isaac	200
Bergman, Mrs. M. T. &	100	Foster, Mrs. Isaac	300
Albert H.	210	Foster, Mrs. Rebecca	300
Bennett, Mrs. L. S.	100	Fraser, Frank	100
Benton, Louie	50	Frantz, Ferdinand	100
Bernstedt, J. G.	100	Fraser, O. M.	200
Bender, Leola	100	Freeman, Mr. & Mrs.	200
Benson, Mrs. J. M.	100	Chas. S.	200
Bibbs, Mrs. G. L.	140	Frimann, Paul	100
Bischoff, D. A.	500	Fries, L. A.	25
Bischoff, N. M.	500	Frink, L. M.	200
Bischoff, Wm.	150	Frank, O. M.	200
Bischoff, E. C.	200	Fuller, Mrs. E. J.	100
Bischoff, John H.	200	Fuller, Mattie	150
Bradley, E.	100	Gaighly, J. T.	50
Brady, Mrs. Mellin	100	Gaighly, M. J.	50
Brenenstahl, Mrs. L.	250	Gaighly, O. R.	25
Brenenstahl, Wm.	100	Gaighly, Ralph	5
Brown, Mrs.	100	Gaighly, T. T.	25
Brown, Agnes V.	50	Gardeman, Geo.	100
Brown, Mrs. M. J.	100	Gratton, Mrs. M. A.	100
Brown, Isabella M.	50	Graves, T. A.	100
Brown, Carrie	60	Gray, Mary	300
Bryner, Geo. M.	100	Gray, Mrs. J. D.	500
Bryner, Nellie	100	Garlock, Jas. P.	200
Buell, J. I.	200	Gartnert, P. T.	100
Bullard, Mrs. E. J.	20	Gatz, Anna	45
Bullock, Mr.	50	Gault, Wm.	100
Bullock, Mrs.	100	Gilman, Mrs. A. H.	200
Bullock, Miss F.	100	Gilman, Mrs. Arthur	35
Caio, Mrs. S. E.	100	Gilman, Mrs. Jos.	50
Callie, Link	35	Goddard, Mrs. S. K.	500
Cameron, Mrs. John	100	Godfrey, Mrs. A.	100 collected by	950	Gostrey, Julia A.	150
Campbell, H. M.	100	Gostrey, Mrs. C.	50
Cardwell, John L.	200	Goode, Mrs. C.	100
Cardwell, John L.	200	Goode, Mrs. C.	100
Carrie, Emily	100	Goodrich, E. B.	100
Carter, Mrs. E.	100	Gord, Hans	50
Carter's daughter	100	Gorsnell, J. W.	50
Mrs.	100	Gosnell, Jesse T.	100
Cassidy & others, H. C.	225	Gould, Mrs. A. B.	200
Cavett, R. B.	100	Graham, T. A.	25
Chamberlain, J. D.	100	Graham, Mrs. M.	100
Chambers, Mrs. L. S.	100	Grassie, Caroline	100
Chase, Mrs. M. E.	200	Green, Abby W.	500
Chase, Mrs. H.	150	Green, Eva F.	100
Chewing, J. H.	500	Gregerson, J.	100
Christenson, E. N.	500	Guth, Mrs. R. H.	200
Christenson, Mrs. H.	500	Guld, Mrs. A. A.	100
Christenson, E. N.	500	Guld, Edith	100
Clarkson, J. H.	200	Hanson, A.	25
Clifford, Mrs. M. J.	100	Hart, Mrs. E. E.	25
Clois, John	25	Hall, Mrs. S. E.	100
Cobb, Mrs. A. H.	200	Hamilton, Mrs. C. P.	100
Cole, Floyd	10	Hampson, Mrs. R. M.	200
Coleman, Mrs. Fannie	100	Hand, Mrs. Martha	100
Colthart, Walter	50	Hand, Mrs. Walter	50
Coleman, D.	100	Hannan, Mildred	150
Congdon, S. G.	100	Harden, J. B.	100
Cook, John	100	Harrison, Mrs. B. E.	200
Cornie, Pearl	200	Hartman, Wm. D.	200
Cornie, Mrs. H.	500	Hart, L. C. & wife	500
Cornie, J. J.	500	Hartzler, Mrs. J. Y.	100
Couch, T. S.	200	Havens, Jennie	100
Culter, Mrs. & Mrs. R.	200	Hicks, A.	25
Coulter, W. L.	100	Hicks, J. B.	100
Craig, Mrs. E.	100	Hicks, Mrs. J. A.	100
Crawford, Mrs. M. M.	100	Henderson, Mrs. A. L.	22
Crawford, John H.	100	Henn, R. E. & Kirk	25
Cregar, Mrs. John H.	100	Hennemann, P. W.	500
Cregar, J. H.	400	Hill, D. C. & wife	500
Cresce, Benjamin	25	Hilber, Jas.	100
Cresce,

Killam, R.	2.00	Solt, E. J.	3.00
Kilpatrick, Stacy	2.00	Spangler, Hannah	1.00
Klepser, D.	2.00	Spangler, J. C.	1.00
Knight, J. C.	5.00	Sperry, A. R.	25
Knight, J. W.	2.00	Sperry, F. L.	25
Knox, J. J.	2.00	Spillman, Wm.	1.00
Koehler, F. W.	3.00	Sprague, H. B.	1.00
Kuist, F. L.	5.00	Staples, A. A.	1.00
Kuist, Mrs. J. D. D.	1.00	Staples, A. B.	25
and Mrs. Laura and		Stearns, H. F.	1.00
Lee Frick	1.30	Steats, Omer L.	5.00
Lang, Georgia	25	Stewart, Francis L.	5.00
Landers, Mrs. S. C.	1.00	Stewart, Rev. & wife.	2.00
Landrop, H. & family.	75	Stranahan, G. P.	1.75
Latta, Mrs. W. H.	1.00	Stratford, M. A.	1.00
Law, A. R.	50	Swain, Horace	25
Leavert, Rev. D. H.	1.00	Swain, Horace	25
Lew, A. R.	1.00	Sweet, C. T.	25
Law, Robt R.	1.00	Sykes, H. & Mrs E.	1.25
Leeper, Mrs J. W.	1.50	Sylvester, J. W.	3.00
Lemont, Niles	25	Taber, Laura V.	1.00
Lewis, Mrs J. H.	1.00	Ten Geo	5.00
Lewis, Mrs. S. D.	1.00	Thomas, Mrs T. J.	1.00
Lippincott, P. T.	1.0	Thompson, A. G.	5.00
Little, Mrs H.	3.00	Thorpe, L. S.	1.00
Llewellyn, Saml	7.00	Thorsen, Thos	2.00
Logan, B. F.	1.12	Tolbert, Gertie	1.00
Logan, Geo	2.00	Tomkins, J. B.	2.00
Loranson, Jonas	2.00	Towle, Mrs Carrie	25
Lorimer, Mrs J	2.00	Town, J. B.	1.00
Lowe, Mrs J. D.	5.00	Townsend, Wm J.	1.00
Lowman, Mrs RE	1.0	Treat, Mrs E. W.	25
Lutton, C. H.	50	Trull, Henrietta D.	1.00
Lyne, Mrs EG	1.00	Tucker, Mrs L.	1.00
McBride, Jas	2.00	Tucker, R. S.	1.00
McCaughy, W. H.	1.00	Upham, H. Jr.	1.00
McCauley, Johnston	1.00	Upham, G. L. & Mrs	1.00
McCullough, S. D.	2.00	Vanarsdell, M. E.	1.00
McDaniel, Mrs L. and		Vanarsdell, Jackson	2.0
Leon	1.25	Vanarsdell, Mrs J.	2.00
McHenry, Nellie	2.00	Vandyke, T. F.	1.00
McKay, Mary	50	Van Fleet, Miss	50
McKean, Mr & Mrs T	40	Van Fossen, E. & wife	5.00
McKean, W. W.	1.00	Van Noeman, Rev. J.	5.00
McKee, Isabella	1.00	Van Noeman, Rev. J.	5.00
McKinlay, Mrs Wm P	1.00	Van Sickle, G. W.	200
McMartin, Wm	1.50	Vaughn, Miss E.	1.00
McMurry, Susan	1.00	Vitrum, Mrs Warren	5.00
McNeeben, John	5.00	Wagoner, C. F.	5.00
MacKenzie, Wm	2.00	Wakefield, Mrs Chas.	1.00
Mallory, Mrs E. M.	1.00	Wakefield, H. L.	25
Mallory, Mrs S. D.	5.00	Walker, G. L.	1.00
Marr, Ellen	50	Waller, Dr E. B.	1.00
Martin, Ann L.	5.00	Wallace, Mrs. Miss
Martin, J. G.	5.00	Brittan, D. Meach-
Mason, F. H.	1.00	am, H. Loems, F. Stam-
Mason, Wm H.	1.00	land, Miss Moulton,
Masters, G. D.	1.00	Miss Wilkin, A. J.
Mathews, Thome	50	Wilton, and Mrs
Mathers, Mrs Mary B	1.00	of the Americas
Mathias, M.	1.00	Mission Board	27.70
Mathews, Rev J. T.	1.00	Walters, Geo	50
Maynard, F. C.	25	Watts, Ida	12
Merrihew, Mrs Elisha	2.00	Webb, E. T.	25.00
Meserve, F. M.	25	Weidenaar, Mrs F.	1.00
Meyer, S. D.	1.00	Wenger, I.	50
Migher, E. L.	5.00	Whitaker, Mrs A.	25
Miller, Mrs John	1.00	Whitely, Mrs Laura	50
Miller, Mrs Sarah	1.00	White, E.	50
Mills, Frank L.	2.00	White, I. H.	2.00
Monday, I. S.	25	Wingo, J. W.	50
Moak, Mary C.	1.00	White, M. & H. B.	5.00
Mohr, Mrs M. D.	1.00	White, Mrs Margaret	2.00
Mowser, Rollin	10	Wilton, Mrs E. & Mrs	1.00
Needles, Mrs Jas	25	Whitcomb, N. P.	1.00
Neeley, H.	2.00	Whitford, Mr N.	25
Newburg, Mr & Mrs.	1.00	Wilbur, Sarah	25
Newton, Wm A.	1.00	Wilder, Mrs J. F.	1.00
Nielsen, Mrs Mary	2.00	Williams, David	1.00
Nielsen, Wm	1.00	Wilson, Jane	5.00
Nolton, Mrs M. D.	1.00	Wilson, E. W. & Mrs	1.00
Northham, Annie S	1.00	Wing, G. C.	3.50
Oliver, Alice	50	Wing, Mrs Laura	4.00
Olson, I. B.	1.00	Wood, Miss Ella M.	6.00
Olson, Swan	5.00	Wunner, G. H.	50
Ordway, Mrs Carlos	1.00	Inasmuch, Holliston	2.30
Osborn, Mrs H. T.	1.00	" Cross Creek Vil.	1.00
Painter, H. B. M. D.	1.00	" N. Plymouth.	1.00
Palmer, Miss Helen	1.00	" N. Plymouth.	1.00
Palmer, Mrs Mary E.	1.00	" Nashville.	1.00
Pardee, Sarah M.	5.00	" So Rockwood.	1.00
Parker, W.	5.00	" Goldman	2.00
Parks, Mrs C. B.	50	" Pine Plains	1.00
Parsons, Mrs H. E.	25	" Moundville	1.50
Parsons, Mrs M. V.	50	" The Braes	5.00
Pascoe, Charlie	10	" Columbus.	1.00
Peck, Mrs J. T.	1.00	" Decorah	10.00
Perry, D. J.	1.00	In Jesus Name, Ev-

Nartin S S	5.22	SS Advent, E. Roeh'ter	3.18
New Alexandria C E		Nashua S S	3.05
Soc	10.00	Lattle Soldiers of the
C E Soc, Perrineville	2.00	King, Brasher Falls	55
C E Soc, Atoneinent		Damascus Command-
Pres Ch, Pa	10.00	ery No 5, K of M, Pa	2.51
C E Soc, Pres Ch,		Class of boys, Meth,
Pleasant Ridge	3.25	S S, Cadillac	50
Junior Soc of C E,		Lakeview School, ND	3.50
Lakeland	3.20	Big Pond School	1.00
Junior C E Soc, Beth-		Two Girls, L'Abri	2.00
an Pres Ch, Ore	4.00	Two Christians, Bev-
Waldensian Baptists,		erly	2.00
Monet	4.25	Two Sisters, Lake
Walton Epworth Lea-		Beaumont	2.00
gue Chapter	2.00	Mother, Alpena	50
Woman's Foreign		2 Kenwood Sisters	2.00
Miss's Soc, Durham	5.00	Mother & Daughter,
Woman's Foreign		Sandwich	4.00
Miss's Soc, M E Ch,		Christian People, In-
Chattanooga	5.00	diana	4.45
Cochecton Historical		Red Cross Knight	5.00
Club	12.00	People of Lake Helen	21.00
Bethel Epworth Lea-		King's Daughter, Mt
gue, Cal	6.50	Vernon	1.00
Ladies Foreign Miss'y		A Jr Supt of C E N Y	1.00
Soc, Mtory MP Ch	8.00	King's Daughter, Mc-
German S S Ev Ass'n,		Keesport	4.00
Rochester	5.75	Epworthian Toga Ctr	1.00
Lehigh University		Sorrowful, Middlet'n	5.00
Christian Ass'n, Pa	5.00	Unknown, Dover Hill	1.00
Woman's Club, E		For his dear sake,
Aurora	3.00	Richmond	1.00
Young People's As'n,		A lover of the poor, M
Malad	1.00	E W	3.00
Spring City YWU TU	5.00	E W	1.00
Woman's Foreign		Total	$84,774.10
Miss's Soc, Meth		And over 500 others to be
Ch, Cypress River	38.45	acknowledged next week

THESE WISDOM
MIGHTY CHOICE

CLEVELAND'S
SUPERIOR
BAKING POWDER

B P

ONLY 10 CENTS.

Stamping outfit, 91 patterns, outline designs 5x8, conventional design-card, patterns for painting & embroidery & 40 in. high 2 alphabets. A large forget-me-not pattern, and many others very desirable. All this and a 32 month's subscription to The Home, a 16-page story-paper, with fashions and fancy work, should be sent for only 10c.

The Home, 141 Milk St Boston, Mass.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME.

Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School.

$50 per 100 copies.

Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People.

$50 per 100 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of lower price. The best are cheapest!!

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

75 East 9th St. New York 215 Wabash Ave. Chicago

WHICH CATALOGUE SHALL I SEND YOU?

Mandolins, Violins, Violin Music
Violin Cases Violin Bows
Banjos, Banjo Music
Guitars, Guitar Music
Flutes, Flute Music
Cornets, Cornet Music, Harmonicas.

C. C. STORY, 26 Central Street, Boston, Mass.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best

For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new

Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

UNLIKE OTHER BELL

SWITTER, MORE DUR

ABLE, LOWER PRICE

OUR FREE CATALOGUE

TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O

3000

AGENTS

WANTED

TO SELL IT.

ARMENI

By Rev. GEORGE H.

Churchman. End

and the clergy generally.

A portion of present mem

by mail postpaid. A GR

50 cents for outfit and m

Write for circulars and

THE AMERICAN PUBLI

$1
&
bottle.

Forest Fringe Violet

Is the F. F. V. of Perfumery and has the odor of the gathered flowers of the forest. There is no violet odor that equals "Forest Fringe Violet". It is delicate and very fine. Ask your dealer for it.

Special Introduction Offer.

Actual bottle five times larger than above cut.

IF within the next 30 days you will order from us one large size bottle of Forest Fringe Violet (sending $1.00 in money order or postal note or postage stamps) and mention the name Christian Dior we will send you the bottle of Forest Fringe Violet perfume, in beautiful embossed case and in without extra charge 1/2 dozen cakes of Forest Fringe Violet soap and Glycerine Soap free, prepaying all express charges on soap and perfume.

HUNDREDS OF READERS of the various nals in which we have advertised have themselves of our liberal offer and have ex-their delight upon receipt of the goods.
David S. Brown & Co., Bank St., N. Y.

EASTER
*
MUSIC

"Messiah Victorious," prepared by Hall, is a Service containing Responsive Readings, interspersed with appropriate songs. Price, 5 cents single copy.

"Easter Selections," Series G, for contain pre carols, preceded by a set of selected Respo Readings. Price, 5 cents per single copy.

A Special Circular

Containing a list of our large and varied stock of music for Easter will be sent free on application.

The new music for 1896 is very fine including in addition to the two publications above named, splendid solos, duets, and fine anthems for the choir.

CANTATAS FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.
Flower Praise (30c.) Festival of the Flowers. Under the Palms (30c.).

The Musical Visitor for March will contain supplement of Easter Anthems. Price, 15 cents.

THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY
Cincinnati. New York. Chicago.

WHERE? Write Gaze where and when you wish to Travel, and they will inform you. How and the Cost. Escorted Parties for Winter, Spring or Summer. Ticketed for Independent Travel Everywhere. Choice Berths on the Steamships—no extra cost. See Tourist Gazette by mail 10 cts., or Save Money. State you wish carefully: full information Free. Address: HENRY GAZE & SONS, Ltd. Universal Tourists, Agents, 118 Broadway N.Y.; 201 Washington St., Boston; 225 W. Clark St., Chicago; 135 S. Fifth St., Philadelphia.

$200.00 IN GOLD GIVEN
for selling a book of great interest and popularity, "Story of Turkey and Armenia with a full and graphic account of the massacres."

R. H. Woodward Company, Baltimore, Md., offering $200.00 to anyone selling 200 copies of their book, "Story of Turkey and Armenia." This is a book of great interest and popularity. Many agents 15 copies a day. A graphic and thrilling account given of the massacres of the Armenians which aroused the civilized world. Agents are offered most liberal terms and premiums. Freight paid credit given. Write them immediately.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS
IN THE WORLD
OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.
OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS.
SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Mallory Steamship Line DELIGHTFUL TRIPS BY SEA TO GEORGIA - FLORIDA Ticket
 Winter Resorts In Texas, Colorado,
 Arizona, California, Mexico, Georgia
 10c Our 64 page Prospectus mailed
C. H. MALLORY & CO.
 Plot 20, E. R. New

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, a messenclius, Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage.

S. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y.

AND HER PEOPLE
ILIAN, banished native pastor of the Evangelized by DRS. R. S. STORRS, HENRY VAN DYKE, Historical and Physical Armenia—Causes and Agres and atrocities. Fully Illustrated.—Price $1.00
SELLER. Agents, men and women, want a first and second choice of territory and save a liberal terms. Mention this paper. Address: HING CO., Hartford, Conn., (Cincinnati or Boston)

ONLY 10 CENTS.

Stamping outfit, 91 patterns, outline designs—50c. Commercial designs—60c. Patterns for painting & embroidering—40c. high 2 alphabets—14 large forget-me-not pattern, and many others very desirable. All this and a 3-months' subscription to The Home, a 16-page story paper, with fashions and fancy work—50c. Sent for only 10c.

The Home, 141 Milk St Boston, Mass

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME.
Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School.
$50 per 1000 copies.
Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People.
$50 per 1000 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of low price. The best are cheapest!!

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 East 9th St. New York 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

WHICH CATALOGUE SHALL I SEND YOU?

Mandolins, Violins, Violin Music
Violin Cases Violin Bows
Banjos, Banjo Music
Guitars, Guitar Music
Flutes, Flute Music
Cornets, Cornet Music, Harmonicas.

C. C. STORY, 26 Central Street, Boston, Mass.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Decorative, Durable and Best
For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new
Send for Catalogue B.
H. C. NORTON, 22 Clinton St., New York

BLYMYER
BELL CHURCH
BELLS.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

3000
AGENTS
WANTED
TO SELL IT.

Requests for Prayer.

The Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Mar. 8, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

the Conversion of Children. J. S., Blooming Valley, Pa., for the conversion of a son.

Widow, Petersburg, Va., that six children who are all out of Christ might be returned; also that sons-in-law one of whom fallen under the power of drink, might be saved. — J. E., for a son who is broken down under severe domestic affliction, that he be the means of leading him to Christ. — Reader, Welda, Kans., for the reclamation of a son. — L. M. R., Henry, Ill., who has sons unsaved, that God would draw to himself. — M. M. L., Danville, Ill., that a son who is sick might be led to Christ's sickness. — "Anxious and Burdened Reader," On behalf of her eldest son, that he turn from his evil ways and give his heart to God; also that he may obtain employment, that he can help to support a needy family.

the Conversion of Relatives and Friends. M. A. W., Fairfield, Tenn., for the conversion of her husband. — M. J. S., Coates, Pa., that a brother and sister might be saved. — "One of the Least," Afion, Va., for one who is sick and has not the consolation of God, that he might come to know Jesus. — "Anxious Believer," Bradfordsville, Ky., for one that he may think less of the world and more of Christ with all his heart. — Two Sisters, Burg, Pa., for the conversion of their husbands. — Believer in Prayer, W. Va., that one for whom many prayers have been made and who was converted in his youth return to his first love. — J. S., Bloomington, Pa., that her husband might be saved. — N. C., Geneva, N. Y., for the salvation of several friends, one of whom has deserted his wife and is now in New York living as a P. West Liberty, Iowa, for the conversion of a family. — J. M. S., Aurora, Ill., for one who has been led by trouble to the religion and has turned against his friends, that God would give him a new the Restoration of Health. The following persons afflicted with various maladies ask prayers for recovery. — E. A. D., Frankton, Ind.; M. C., N. Y.; Substantia, Lexington, O.; H. M., Mass.; G., Philadelphia; "Believer," Mich.; Sisters, Pittsburg, Pa.; R. A. M., Volunte, S. D.; that a daughter-in-law whose mind is unbalanced might be healed and restored to her family creature in Christ. — M. M. L., Danville, Ill., that God would recover a sick son if it be his will. — M. A. P., Portage, Wis., that a beloved sister might recover her hearing. — S. E. P., Ind., that a dear sister, heavily afflicted be healed. — E. B. B., Arbor Vitae, Wis., that God will heal a Christian mother of whose restoration physicians despair. — T. D. W., Turney, for the recovery of his wife who is suffering from "Writter," for two friends, both very beyond human hope, one of whom would be buried if she died. — "Hopeless," for the restoration to health of a whole family every member of which is sick. — "Grateful Reader," Perkins, that a dear Uncle may be restored from his loss of senses. — "Sorrowing Father," Aurelia, Ia., for recovery of a daughter who for ten years has been suffering from a distressing nervous disease. — Reader, Racine, Wis., for the recovery of wife. — "Believer," Princeton, Ky., that a beloved mother in great affliction may be restored to health and comfort of the Lord.

the Special "Earnest Seeker," Nebraska. A church member who has fallen into sin, that he may be forgiven and may receive strength to resist temptation. — J. J. B., Westville, Co. That in some way financial help might be obtained to save a family from losing a boy to which they are much attached. — "Darkness," New York City, who is in straits, having lost the sight of one eye and the other partially, and who is consequently unable to go out to work, that God would give her grace to trust in him in spite of all, and would relieve her of the fear of some way she must have offended him. — "But food and fuel and liable to be turned out of her room, she begs speedy and urgent prayer for succor in this terrible crisis. — "Anxious Wife," Maryland, who is distressed by vile thoughts obtruding themselves apparently from some unseen tempter, still have the power that has been given her to put them away from her, and that she may be relieved of the painful experience. — "Shamed," New York, that God would cleanse her heart of wicked desires which she at times uncontrollable. That God would in mercy keep her from falling into sin, and give her a heart so full of love to him that there is no room in it for love of sin. — Prayer Meeting of forty persons in Baltimore, Md., send through the pastor of the Church, a request that the Bowery Mission send readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to plead that the needs lying close to the hearts of persons present at the meeting may be supplied in God's own way.

"Believer," That a young man afraid to undertake the responsibility of church membership may realize that Christ will give him strength to be consistent, and may confess his faith. — "One who Believes," Belvidere, Ill., that a town organized on the pledge that no saloon should be opened in it, might be kept free in spite of the efforts of the liquor interest. — "Believer," Connecticut. That a place now for sale may fall into the hands of some Christian family, so that the neighbors may have a good and not an evil influence near them. — "Anxious Christian," Boston, Mass., that a beloved son might have the way opened to him to earn a livelihood in some business where he would not be required to work on Sunday. — E. I. R., Vergennes, Vt. For strength to resist a powerful temptation, and that grace may be given to lead a consistent Christian life amid surrounding apathy and frivolity. — "Christian," Huntington, Pa. For a blessing on a new occupation, and that it may be the means of enabling him to meet pressing obligations and provide a support for a young family dependent on him. — M. S. Upton, Mass., a little child who is anxious that in some way her prayer might reach the Lord Jesus and has written a letter to him to be forwarded. She so wants her father who has left her mother and his home, to be found and sent back to those who love him and long for his return.

L. E. S., Boston, Mass. That a family proud of its unblemished name, respected in several generations, but now threatened with terrible disgrace, might be saved from the impending trial, but if that be not God's will, that grace be given the head of the family to bear it as becomes a Christian, and that he have the magnanimity to pardon the wrongdoer who has caused the trouble, and may not drive her from under his roof. — M. J. F., Wheatley, Ark. That God would give his Holy Spirit, so that amid many temptations none might separate from him, but only strengthen faith and patience to hold on to him to the end. — "Submission," N. Y., for speedy help in a pressing financial difficulty. — R. A. D., Attleboro, Mass., that God will send suitable weather this year for farming operations, that there might be an abundant harvest to relieve some farmers whose savings are now exhausted.

J. A. F., Silver City, Idaho, that God would bless that neighborhood with the knowledge of himself and incline the hearts of the people to serve him. — "Believer," Harrisburg, Pa., who is discouraged because of unanswered prayer, that God would give him a token for good, and if it be consistent with his will grant the petition long urged. — B. B., Lake Providence, La., for stronger faith that in God's good time parents will meet a dear dead daughter in the Heavenly home. — Seven Friends at Forkville, Pa., that God would give them grace to live nearer to him. — C. J. W., Fort Hunter, Pa., for strength and courage to testify for Christ, and that God would bless a dear father recently bereaved.

G. O. T., Lamartine, Colo., that in a neighborhood where there is little vital religion, the power of the Holy Spirit might quicken cold Christians and convict the wicked. — A. A. Singhampton, Canada, who has been raised up from a bed of sickness, that God would give grace for a life of gratitude and service. — S. E. P., Westfield, Ind., for divine guidance in a business matter of great difficulty.

Firm Believer, Racine, Wis., that in some way a man out of employment and whose wife is sick might be able to earn an honest livelihood. — "Reader," Iowa, for the reconciliation of two former friends now estranged.

I. H. N., Gamewell, N. C., for more faith. — "Young Woman," Baltimore, Md., for grace to overcome a besetting sin and that God would care for her in the future. — A. R. G. E., Galveston, Tex., that God would bless an effort being made for the rescue of the fallen, homeless and destitute in that city. — M. P., Rochester, Minn., that a wanderer may return to his anxious old mother before she dies.

Thanks for Answered Prayer. V. S., Emporium, Pa., writes: Permit me to acknowledge a positive and beautiful answer to prayers which you offered at my request, a short time ago. May I now ask you to thank God for us and to praise him for his loving kindness.

Jesus Loves You.

Do you know how Jesus loves you?
He your sins and sorrows bore,
Gave up all in earth and heaven,
Till he could not give you more.
Do you know he came to save you?
Poured his soul out unto death!
Do you know that he forgave you
With his latest dying breath?

CHORUS.

Jesus loves you—he would bring you
To his blessed home above;
Jesus loves you—Jesus loves you
With an everlasting love.

Do you know that Jesus loves you,
Tho' a sinner you have been?
That a loving Saviour wants you,
As you are—with all your sins?
Tho' your heart be sadly hardened,
He will make it glad and blest—
And no sin shall be unpardoned,
If it freely be confessed.

Tho' your soul be steeped in sorrow—
Though it be by sin enslaved—
You may have a blessed morrow,
If your precious soul be saved.
Do you know how Jesus loves you,
With a boundless love and care?
How in heaven he prayeth for you,
And how much he wants you there?

Inland, N. Y. —MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

10 TIMES 10
OUT OF

The New York Journal recently offered ten bicycles to the ten winners in a guessing contest, leaving the choice of machine to each.

ALL OF THEM
CHOOSE

Columbia
Bicycles

Standard of the World.

Nine immediately, and one after he had looked at others. And the Journal bought ten Columbias. Paid $100 each for them, too. On even terms a Columbia is chosen

10 TIMES 10
OUT OF

POPE MFG. CO., Hartford, Conn.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE

COMPANY OF NEW YORK

RICHARD A. McCURDY PRESIDENT

STATEMENT

For the year ending December 31 1895

Assets	$221,213,721 33
Liabilities	194,347,157 58
Surplus	$26,866,563 75
Total Income	$48,597,430 51
Total Paid Policy-holders in 1895	$23,126,728 45
Insurance and Annuities in force	$899,074,453 79
Net gain in 1895	$61,647,643 36

NOTE—Insurance merely written is discarded from this statement as wholly misleading, and only insurance actually issued and paid for in cash is included.

I have carefully examined the foregoing Statement and find the same to be correct
CHARLES A. PRELLER Auditor

From the Surplus a dividend will be apportioned as usual

Report of the Examining Committee

Office of The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York

February 11, 1896

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of this Company, held on the 18th day of December last, the undersigned were appointed a Committee to examine the annual statement for the year ending December 31, 1895, and to verify the same by comparison with the assets of the Company.

The Committee have carefully performed the duty assigned to them, and hereby certify that the statement is in all particulars correct and that the assets specified therein are in possession of the Company.

In making this certificate the Committee bear testimony to the high character of the investments of the Company and express their approval of the system, order, and accuracy with which the accounts and vouchers have been kept, and the business in general transacted.

(SIGNED) H. C. VON POST
CHAS. R. HENDERSON
JAMES C. HOLDEN
ROBERT OLYPHANT
WM. P. DIXON
J. M. HERRICK
COMMITTEES

ROBERT A. GRANNISS VICE-PRESIDENT

WALTER R. GILLETTE General Manager
ISAAC F. LLOYD 2d Vice-President
FREDERIC CROMWELL Treasurer
EMORY MCCLINTOCK Actuary

SAVE TWO PROFITS We sell our entire line direct to consumers. Special Offer to Agents Free, for Diamond Knives and Knife Sharpeners. Diamond Cutlery Co. 60 Rway, N.Y.

SALESMEN WANTED to sell our celebrated 24 Pains to measure. Extra postage paid to any part of the U. S. Send stamp for terms. Faultless Custom Pants Co., Chicago.

Five Cents Per Cake
COFCO
TRADE MARK
The Perfect Soap
At your dealers.
Made only by
The N. K. Fairbank Company,
Chicago, New York, St. Louis.

PAAS EASTER EGG DYES
100 SHADES FOR 5c.
TABLETS—clean, easily used—a 5c. package makes 100 different shades. PAPERS variegated and print pictures. Enough for a dozen eggs, 5c. Like the old way, but nicer.
FREE FROM POISON.
Look for above trade-mark. Both by mail for 10c, if your druggist or grocer hasn't and want get PAAS. THE PAAS DYE COMPANY, Newark, N. J.

MONUMENTS.
DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate
WHITE BRONZE.
It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.
NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
Cleaning. Crumbling.
Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

1896 High Grade Bicycles
Shipped anywhere C. O. D. at lowest wholesale prices.
$100 Oak wood for $37.50
$35 Arlington for $15.00
$65 for $25.00
$20 Bicycle for $10.75
Latest models, fully guaranteed; pneumatic tires, weight 17 to 20 lbs.; call and see and prices. Large illustrated catalogue free.
Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B. Chicago

DEAFNESS
and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums.
New scientific invention, different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.
WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
223 West Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
Offices: 1122 Broadway, New York.

Money Saver
$55. Printing Press
Print your own cards & stationery. Press for circulars & other small newspaper. Catalogue free, presses, type, paper, cards, etc. from fully equipped maker KELSEY & CO., Meriden, Conn.

MUSIC SALE
To close out our stock we send 100 pieces, full sheet music, new and instrumental, all parts complete, all for 20c.; or 4 for 50c. Money back (in cash) "Only One Girl in the World for Me," and 100 Songs with music, 5c. C. H. Bessie, 330 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NERVE
LIVER TABLETS & Treans FREE to Brain and Nerve Exhaustion, with NERVE, the superior nerve tonic, 3 Bessie's, 10c. each.
Address: NERVE, Box 762, New York City

HOMESTUDY
Book-keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, Short-hand, etc. thoroughly taught by Mail at student's home. Low rates, refund satisfaction. Cat. free. First lesson free.
BRYANT & STRATTON, 75 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

Joe. Dixon Crucible Company, Jersey City, N. J.

The Gospel for Mongols.

IN a letter to the American Board from Mr. Roberts who is laboring at Kalgan in Northern China, he says: "We were notified recently by the subordinate official, Badam Daroga that Mr. Larson must not live any longer in the house of Boyinto. If he persisted in staying and preaching, Boyinto would be beaten, as it was not safe to beat the foreign preacher."

So Mr. Larson rode nearly all night on a fast horse, and came here. The next day a man came from the Yamen to inspect the house, and Boyinto was alarmed and rode away by night and came here too. A few days after the affair quieted down somewhat, and Boyinto returned home. I had a petition prepared in Chinese in due form, and on September 21 presented it to the Tu T'ung, who is the highest magistrate in Kalgan and governs the Mongols in all the region near us on the north, asking him to send a letter to the Yamen, commanding the official there to notify Badam Daroga that, according to the law of the Chinese Empire, we have the right to preach the Christian religion, and that the natives have the right to practise their religion and must be protected. My petition at first was pigeon-holed by the underlings, but by repeated visits to the Yamen I at last got it taken into the Tu T'ung, and received at once the promise that my request should be granted.

The next day Mr. Stenberg and I started on a tour into Mongolia to take the good news to Boyinto. We saw him at his home, and were glad to learn that he had not been beaten. After we returned to Kalgan I inquired whether the letter had been sent by the Tu T'ung, according to promise, and learned that it had been sent on October 11. So I am quite sure that Boyinto and the missionary brethren will be protected from harm in the future.

I will mention a few facts that betoken the hope of the gospel reaching the Mongols at last. Last year a Norwegian missionary, Mr. O. S. Nastegard, located in Urga; he has bought from the Russians a large piece of ground for mission work, expects several more missionaries to join him this year, and reports his Mongol teacher, a Lama, as already converted and become a true helper and refusing to pay to the 'Living Buddha,' though offered twelve horses and four cows as a payment to do so. Mr. Nastegard has built a large Mongol tent and a teacher from Urga for Mr. Larson. Boyinto and others in his village have been called to the Liang Huang Ch'i Yamen to hear the word sent by the Tu T'ung, doubtless saying that we foreigners have a right to teach the Christian religion at Hara Oso, and the natives have a right to believe it. "I have finished revising the Mongolian technicalism, and have had my Mongol teacher carve two blocks for printing street tracts: one of the Ten Commandments, and the other the Lord's Prayer, both in his own language. A Mongol almanac is being copied here by Mr. Stenberg, and is nearly finished, and will be sent to Urga, so that Mr. Nastegard may pay it also. The Mongol-German-Russian dictionary is being translated into English by Mr. Ericson, at Wang Yeh Fu, place in the Ortoos desert, fifty miles from Ning Hsia Fu, in Kansuh Province. These facts, with the added hope of the speedy coming of other missionaries for Mongolia, seem to give some hope for the angelization of that country.

The Mohammedan rebellion in Kansuh causing great distress there. Liang Chou has fallen, and the war is raging around Si Ning Fu. If the rebels should be reformed by many armed Mohammedans from Ili or Turkestan, they could reach Kalgan in three weeks and Peking in four weeks, as all the boats on the upper part of the Yellow River are owned by Mohammedans. An order came to Kalgan from Peking recently, requiring that all the Mohammedans should be counted."

Converted Through Peril.

Mr. Hughes, an English evangelist, relates this instructive incident: "A young man was making his way home after having what he called 'a jolly time' with a few companions at the village public-house. His way home crossed a railway; there was a bridge provided at some distance from the village, but it would save a walk if he pushed his way through a weak part of the hedge, crossed the line, then took his way across the fields. There was no danger to a sober man, but in the drunken state in which he was, he failed to see a train approaching, and was through the hedge and about to stagger on to the rails when the engine dashed past him, drawing behind it a long load of wagons. So near was he to death that the shock sobered him. He went cautiously home, and that night, for the first time for years, he knelt down and returned thanks to his God for his watchful care. From that night he was a changed man; he frequented the church, he gave his heart to the Lord, and, instead of spending his time among drinking companions, all his leisure was given to the service of God."

Not a Patent Medicine.

In cases of

- Paralysis
- Vertigo
- Dyspepsia
- Insomnia
- Constipation
- Sick and Nervous
- Headaches

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant.

has been prescribed by over forty thousand physicians with wonderful success. Sample by mail, 25 cents; regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., sent to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

Absorbs Like a Sponge.

AMOLIN

the only

odorless Antiseptic Dress Shield

DESTROYS all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

A new coal tar product

The Only

A New

Remedy

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

New Discovery for Kidneys and Bladder

We can give sufferers from kidney and bladder diseases, pain in back and rheumatism good advice, and that is to use the free treatment of Alkavis to the cure. Kidney Cure Company, 465 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is a wonderful remedy, and will be sent to you free and postpaid, if you send your name and address.

Persons afflicted with impure blood or any of the vast variety of ailments which it causes will be most certain to find relief and cure in Hood's Sarsaparilla, the one true blood purifier.

Cobwebs

are usually a sign that a woman has more than enough to do; that all her time and strength are utilized in doing heavy work; that she don't use GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER. If she did use this great cleaner, her heavy work would be so lightened that the little things needn't be neglected.

GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER

gives a woman time to rest, time to go, time to read, and time to sew. Every housewife should have a supply of this great help.

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY,
Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia.

Take a Combination Case of the

LARKIN SOAPS

and a "Chautauqua"

Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .

- 100 Bars Sweet Home Soap.
- 9 Packages Boraxine.
- Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.
- 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
- 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . . . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE.—It is a pleasure to be able to state that the Larkin Soap Company is perfectly reliable. We can speak intelligently regarding the firm, as for two years past we have used their combination box, together with the Chautauqua desk or chair as a premium, offering it with the Advocate. We have sent them a large number of orders, and we do not recall a single instance in which the purchaser complained. On the contrary many have freely and fully expressed their satisfaction regarding the contents of the box and the finish and quality of the premiums.—Northern Christian Advocate, Syracuse, N. Y.

These Three Epithets

BEST - FITTING
BEST - WEARING
BEST - LOOKING

... ARE FOUND TO BE APPLICABLE TO THE ...

Shawknit Half-Hose

THEY, OR THEIR EQUIVALENTS, OCCUR IN NEARLY EVERY TESTIMONIAL.

None Genuine unless stamped Shawknit on the toe.

Descriptive Price-List, free, to any applicant.
Beautiful Castle Calendar, free, to any applicant mentioning this publication.

SHAW STOCKING CO.
LOWELL, MASS.

PIANOS! ORGANS! FREE!

TEST TRIAL FOR 30 DAYS IN YOUR OWN HOME, NO MONEY REQUIRED

PIANOS-ORGANS FROM $25.00 UP

Including a Complete Musical Outfit. CASH OR EASY PAYMENTS.

NEW SOUVENIR CATALOGUE

A work of art illustrated in 10 colors. Worth its weight in Gold. We pay charges on it and send it FREE, all you have to do is to ask for it to-day please. Remember this is the old established house of CORNISH & CO., the only firm in the world selling exclusively from factory to family direct. A single instrument at wholesale price. We save you from $25.00 to $250.00. Write at once to

CORNISH & CO., Estab. 30 years, Washington, N. J.

Mention Paper.

WANTED

THE OPPORTUNITY OF A LIFE TIME. Men and women to act from 8 to 12 daily selling BRAMHAMS PATENT PENS. The most wonderful invention of the age. WITH ONE DIP OF INK, IT WRITES 20 TIMES LONGER than ordinary pens and PREVENTS BLOTTING. Nothing like it ever before placed on the market and is worth ten times what we ask for it. All our assignees are making big money and we give you the opportunity of establishing a good, steady, permanent, profitable business. Write us for terms to agents or send ten cent coin for five samples.

THE BRAMHAM PEN CO., Cincinnati, O.

"Say aye 'no' and ye'll ne'er be married. Don't refuse all our advice to use

SAPOLIO

The designation of the family name belongs not only to every family member of it, but is also generously conferred upon the numerous animals on which the family de-

Spurgeon at Home.*

* Four Personal Reminiscences of Charles Haddon Spurgeon by Rev. W. Williams. This is not a biography of the famous preacher, but a fascinating essay by one of personal acquaintance by one of Mr. Spurgeon's most intimate friends. Pp. 288. Published by The Fleming H. Revell Company, New York and Chicago.

FOR 12 CENTS and the name and address of two of your friends who grow flowers. I will send, postpaid, the complete collection, one of each of the ten varieties enough for any ordinary garden! This is a BONAFIDE offer, made to increase my home-grown flower seeds to new customers and which I guarantee to please you or the amount paid refunded and the seeds given as a present.

MRS. C. H. LIPPINCOTT
319 and 223 South St., MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

WANTED AGENTS To sell SASH LOCKER'S Door Holes, Sample Sash Lock free by mail for 25¢. Stamp. Best sellers ever invented. Best weights 12 lb. Write quick. BROWNE & CO., Box 23, Philadelphia.

THE GOSPEL FOR TIBET.

Writing to a friend in England Miss Annie Taylor reports that she has made advances in acquaintance with Tibetans and is assured of a cordial welcome. She says, "The Tibetan chiefs want me to sit a sort of cottage hospital. I will have to take time to pray and think about it; my hands seem full already. The lamas, who are now returning to Lassa, sent me lately a present of a piece of Tibetan yellow woolen cloth with which to make a gown. We are leaving that at Gnatong to take care of itself, another God will protect it for us. The attacks on us in the Indian papers have done good; so far the Tibetans are concerned, they got to know about me before I did, and told me not to fear, they said, 'This is our country, and we wait you here.' The Lhasa chiefs paid me a long visit last Sunday, and some days before the Tibetan chief at Phari-zong came to the shop. I have taken over a hundred rupees for medicines and goods. The house here is as comfortable as you can make it in these parts. We have no choice as pioneers; we can but take the houses open to us, or tell our Master that he is expecting too much of us. It is the Lord's will that the Gospel should be preached in Tibet. The command is 'to every creature and to all the world.' Be content with such things as ye have' does not mean grumbling and growling at every life inconvenience. I am here for Jesus, as he is here with me. That makes the home into a palace, and 'home, sweet home.' I expect in the spring the way will open further on into Tibet."

Mission Worker Called Home.

Since the publication in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its issue of Feb. 5 last, of the article concerning the work of the Union Chapel Mission in New Orleans, the conditions of the mission have suffered a loss in the death of their associate, Mrs. M. B. Hyard. She passed away full of the life of immortality, with Jesus as her Saviour. Her entire devotion to the work led her to overtax her energies, and her fatigues were the result. The mission is a very promising field, and has already accomplished much good. It is greatly in need of copies of the Gospels and New Testaments for distribution at the regular Sabbath school services. All religious literature sent to the Mission, at No. 3 Keller St., Magnolia street, New Orleans, should be prepaid. The projected new building for the Mission—for which Mrs. Hyard was one of the most indefatigable workers—is meeting with much encouragement, and is greatly needed for the expansion of the work which has outgrown its present quarters.

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

The following persons have recently sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission:

- Mrs. J. F. Williamson; E. J. Mangum; Mrs. Roxa Jones; R. W. Jones; Louisa Jaeger; J. D. McLaughlin; Jane M. Waters; Mrs. Williams; Mrs. A. A. Baverly; C. O. Diefenbacher; F. H. Mulford; Mr. Jago; D. L. M.; "In His Name"; J. McClun; Mrs. C. C. and Miss W. M. C.; H. Brooklyn, N. Y.; Eli and M. C. Bateman; Miss L. M. Prevost; A. R. G. Edwards; Mrs. J. B. Crockett, Tex.; Louis DeLanay; Julia A. Reed; Mrs. A. H. Veseluch; Maggie E. A. Funk; Mrs. J. Hazard; A. Friend, Md.; E. G. Mansfield, Jr.; Miss P. L. Saunderson; A family being led by Jesus, Mr. Bend, H. L. Herman; R. G. Dun & Co.; E. F. Browning; Mollie Perry; H. J. Evans; L. C. Allen; Mrs. A. A. Ford; Mr. and Miss H. Borden; F. W. George; Mrs. G. Galbraith; Mrs. S. J. Bird; A. M. Hall.

Patrons of the Bowery Mission, whose names are already enrolled, may send in their annual contributions in aid of the work during the present week, each giving according to ability and as personal interest in the spiritual progress of the work suggests. All contributions will be promptly acknowledged by mail.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Farmington, W. Va., writes that it cured him of asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Ford of Groesbeek, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down at night, and that the matter sure, and that he is not other cures are so rare, under the name of a notary public. So great is their faith in the wonderful curative powers, the Kola Plant Cure, 101 Broadway, New York, is sending out trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing if you should surely try it.

BY SPECIAL REQUEST!

Requests have poured in from readers of this paper, asking that the Crayon Portrait offer be extended. These we had taken advantage of The Christian Herald Coupons, have found the work far-spread, and our assistants in fact a regular $12.00 to $15.00 bargain. Now their neighbors and friends who had held back are clamoring that another opportunity be given them to secure a free-hand, life-size 16 x 20 Crayon Portrait bust with a handsome burnished Carved Gilt Frame—size 30 x 34—at a Special Price.

Although it was originally intended to at once restore the price to its original figure, at the intercession and request of The Christian Herald readers, we will say that the offer is extended for 30 day longer.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF NEW READERS we will repeat the offer, which we hope all will avail themselves of, now that it has been learned that it is bona fide.

Cut out the Coupon below, mail or send it with a photograph, tin-type or daguerrotype, single or group, of the person—dead or living—whose picture you desire enlarged, and a deposit of One Dollar. Within eight or ten days you will receive by express a free-hand, life-size Crayon bust with Elegant Frame, complete like illustration with privilege of examination. If satisfactory, pay balance due of $4.50 and express charges. If not satisfactory your deposit will be cheerfully returned. Your original picture returned with finished crayon. Send coupon and deposit to:

The Favorite Portrait Studio, (Near Tiffany's) 17 Union Sq., cor. 15th St., New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD COUPON. Entailing the bearer to one free-hand life-size Crayon Portrait bust with an elegant burnished Carved Gilt Frame—size 30 x 34, for $5.50 on deposit of $1.00; balance due when Crayon is delivered, with privilege of examination. $5.50

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

Good until April 15th, 1896.

ORDER TO-DAY, AS THIS MAY BE YOUR LAST CHANCE.

50c TRIAL SETS Of Choice Plants, Bulbs, Seeds & Fruits. Our Sunrise Set of 12 Chrysanthemums valued at $1.40 prepaid by mail for only 50c

The Rose is the Queen of Summer the Chrysanthemum of Autumn. Just think! Distinct large flowered Mums for 50c. Planted out or grown in pots or boxes they will make a grand show. The Sunrise set and the following are offered to induce you to try our goods, confident that if you do so once their superiority will make you a constant customer. Every plant labeled and as strong and well rooted marked postpaid, safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Order by the letters and the numbers from this advertisement now, as these are introductory sets, not in catalogue. An Elegant Annual of 168 pages, which will be sent free with first order. If none of these sets suit you and you want anything in our line send for Catalogue, Free. About 60 pages devoted to Vegetable and Flower Seeds, 20 to Plants and the balance to the Cream of the Fruit.

Set J—10 elegant profuse blooming Roses, including one of the new famous Crimson Rambler, 50c
B—15 elite choice Vegetable Seed, 15 sorts and 1 pkt. of our new Golden Hubbard Squash, 50c
E—20 pkts. choice Flower Seeds, 30 sorts, 50c
F—10 fragrant Carnation Pinks, 10 sorts, 50c
H—4 superb French Canas, 4 sorts, 50c
K—10 large flowered Geraniums, 10 sorts, 50c
L—30 fine Gladioli, all flowering bulbs, 50c
N—10 Tuberoses, double sorts all flowering, 50c
O—10 flowering Plants, all different, 50c
P—5 hardy ornamental Shrubs, 5 sorts, 50c
Q—5 hardy Climbing Vines, 5 sorts, 50c
T—1 elegant Palm, strong plants, 2 sorts, 50c

One-half each of any 2 sets 50c, any 3 sets $2.00.

FRUIT TREES, ETC. MAIL SIZE. 50c
104—Apple, 4 sorts, 50c
105—Pear, 2 sorts, 2 Cherry, 2 sorts, 50c
106—Grape, 5 sorts, 50c
107—10 Grapes, all Concord, 50c
108—4 Gooseberries, 4 sorts, 50c
109—10 Currants, 3 sorts, 50c
110—3 Raspberries, 5 sorts, 50c
111—4 Strawberries, 5 sorts, 50c

EVERYTHING OF THE BEST FOR LAWN, CONSERVATORY, PARK, ORCHARD, VINEYARD AND GARDEN. 42nd YEAR. 1000 ACRES. 29 GREENHOUSES. THE STORRS & HARRISON CO., Box 285 Painesville, Ohio.

Buy Seeds of BURPEE

Get the BEST and Save Money!

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL, —The Leading American Seed Catalogue.

A handsome new BOOK of 184 pages; Beautiful Colored Plates.

Tells all about the BEST SEEDS that Grow! Rare NOVELTIES for 1896, that can not be had elsewhere. Price 10 cts. (less than cost), but mailed FREE to all who intend to purchase Seeds, Plants, or Bulbs. Write TO-DAY!

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

INCUBATORS

Our 184 page, finely illustrated Combined Poultry Guide and Catalogue will tell you what you wish to know about

PROFITS IN POULTRY

We manufacture a complete line of Incubators, Brooders and Poultry Appliances. Guide and Catalogue 10c (stamps or silver) Worth one Dollar. Reliable Incubator & Brooder Co., Quincy, Ill.

NEW CATALOGUE FOR 1896:

Printed in colors that are correct. Best and finest illustrated Poultry Catalogue ever printed. Our 184 pages and be convinced. It tells about the best breeds of poultry, the latest in poultry raising, the best remedies for diseases, also latest prices of fowls and eggs. If interested in poultry this book is what you want. Sent post paid for 25 Cents.

The J. W. Miller Co., Box 129, Freeport, Ill.

THE IMPROVED VICTOR INCUBATOR

Hatches Chickens by Steam. Absolutely self-regulating. The simplest, most reliable, and cheapest first-class Hatcher in the market. Circulars free.

GEO. ERTEL & CO., Quincy, Ill.

CATARRH. Send name for FREE booklet. Cure, sent post paid to you. G. N. STOLARD, 1225 Niagara Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

WHY PAY RETAIL PRICE

When you can buy a custom made harness at wholesale prices from the mfrs. at wholesale prices. Send 2 stamps for illustrated Catalogue, giving full description.

KING & CO., Mfrs., 42 Church St., Oswego, N. Y.

Incubators and Brooders

Best in the world, just from patentees. Will hatch any kind of fowls. Sent post paid for 25 Cents. Shoemaker Incubator Co., Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

THE HARDY WHITE MEMORIAL ROSE.

THE IDEAL PLANT FOR CEMETERIES.

Wichuraiana

THE MEMORIAL ROSE AS IT GROWS.

Growing in sun or shade, possessing the hardness of the Oak, with a distinctive charm entirely its own, the Memorial Rose (Wichuraiana) will be found a singularly appropriate plant for beautifying cemetery plots. It creeps along the ground just as an Ivy does, growing ten feet in a single season, forming a dense mat of dark green lustrous foliage, with thornless stems. The flowers are single, snow-white with a golden yellow disc, are from 5 to 6 inches in circumference, and have the delicious fragrance of the Banksia Roses. The flowers, in clusters, are produced in the most lavish profusion, and are in their fullest glory just after the June Roses are past. Seen then the clusters look like great masses of snow, and are a sight long to be remembered. But its use is not confined to Cemeteries, for not only is it also perfectly adapted for garden culture, but for screening rocky slopes, embankments and such places as it is desirable to quickly cover with verdure it is unsurpassed. Indeed, it adapts itself to every condition of growth, whether barren or fertile soil, rocky ledge, shady nook or sun-kissed slope.

Prices (free by mail), good plants, 40c. each, 3 for $1.00, 7 for $2.00, 12 for $3.00; extra strong plant's, 60c. each, 2 for $1.00, 5 for $2.00, 12 for $4.50.

All purchasers of the Memorial Rose who will state where they saw this advertisement will be sent our MANTAL for 10c of "EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN" (100 pages, 6 colored plates and over 500 engravings). To those desiring the MANTAL only, we will mail it on receipt of 20 cents (in stamps), which is less than cost.

PETER HENDERSON & Co.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST. NEW YORK.

FENCING

For HOGS, POULTRY, and all fence purposes.

McMULLENS

Thousands of Miles in Use.

Always gives satisfaction. Sent post paid. Freight paid. Take no other. Catalogue free.

McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS FOR DUMPING Horse Carts

Wide and narrow tires. Steel axles. Low rates of freight. Write for catalogue.

Tatamy, Pa., or Hobson & Co., No. 4 Stone St., New York

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

Altenheim Medical Dispensary, 107 East 11th St., New York.

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY BOOK

50 pages, printed in 6 colors. Shows views of latest Poultry Fairs. Tells about Chickens, Pheasants, Geese, Turkeys, Ducks, and all the latest in poultry raising. Sent post paid for 25 Cents. Price only 10c. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

STARK TREES BEARFRUIT

TESTED 70 YEARS

GOLD STAR BRAND

Stark, Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

A STARTLING OFFER!

All Our Previous Offers Eclipsed!

bargain ever offered by a reliable house. Six of the handsomest full size heavy triple-plate silver souvenir teaspoons ever made and only Ninety-nine cents, prepaid by mail.

The stock of famous coffee spoons is NEARLY EXHAUSTED. We are now offering the balance, OUR TEASPOON much larger and finer than the coffee spoons and we say without reserve or hesitation that no such opportunity as this ever before existed. They must be sold! We cannot afford to carry them longer. After you see these spoons you will readily understand why we held them back until the coffee spoons were disposed of.

THINK OF IT!

You will pay the same times the price for ordinary teaspoons with plain bowls—here you get the prettiest patterns and GOLD-PLATED BOWLS—the entire bowl inside and outside plated with gold, and each bowl representing a different World's Fair Building. Money cannot buy them elsewhere. They are the identical stock sold on the World's Fair Grounds for $90 a set, but you can now have the set of six for only—99c., about one-tenth their original price.

This is the first souvenir collection ever produced of the World's Fair. Every family and every individual ought to have a set as a SOUVENIR or as a beautiful collection of spoons for extraordinary occasions, or for a BIRTHDAY or WEDDING gift, or as a set for EVERY-DAY-USE. You may never have another chance to get such exquisite silverware at such a remarkably low price. The thousands and thousands of subscribers to religious papers who bought our After-dinner Coffee Spoons will read this offer with delight. THEY KNOW THAT ANY OFFER WE MAKE IS A GENUINE BARGAIN and cannot be duplicated anywhere. There are twelve different buildings:

SET No. 2—Comprises the Manufacturers, Horticultural, Woman's, Fisheries, Machinery Hall and Transportation buildings.

SET No. 3—Includes the Administration, Art, Agricultural, Electrical, Mining and Government buildings.

In your order please be explicit and say whether you want set Number 2 or Number 3. The set is put up in a very neat box, handsomely lined with plush, and is sent by mail securely packed and PREPAID.

Send us 99c by Post Office or Express Money Order or registered letter only, as we do not accept personal checks.

Our references are the First National Bank, Chicago; the Mercantile Agencies, and all the Express Companies. If the spoons are not exactly as represented you can have your money back. You know our advt. would not be in this paper if the offer were not genuine.

We still have some of the After-Dinner Coffee spoons on hand.

Address in full LEONARD MFG. CO., Dep't B, 152 and 153 Michigan Ave., Chicago.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

COPYRIGHT 1896, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 13.

R. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
Places:—Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, MARCH 25, 1896.

Price Five Cents.

FANNY J. CROSBY, THE BLIND POET, AND IRA D. SANKEY, COMPOSING A NEW HYMN. (See Page 243.)

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

DIVINE MISSION OF NEWSPAPERS.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Ezekiel 10: 12, "And the wheels were full of eyes." Acts 17: 21, "For all the Athenians and strangers which were there spent their time in nothing else but either to tell or to hear some new thing."

WHAT is a preacher to do when he finds two texts equally good and suggestive? In that perplexity I take both. Wheels full of eyes? What but the wheels of a newspaper printing-press? Other wheels are blind. They roll on, pulling or crushing. The manufacturer's wheel, how it grinds the operator with fatigues, and rolls over nerve and muscle and bone and heart, not knowing what it does. The sewing-machine wheel sees not the aches and pains fastened to it—tighter than the band that moves it, sharper than the needle which it plies. Every moment of every hour of every day of every month of every year there are hundreds of thousands of wheels of mechanism, wheels of enterprise, wheels of hard work, in motion, but they are eyeless. Not so the wheels of the printing-press. Their entire business is to look and report. They are full of optic nerves, from axle to periphery. They are like those spoken of by Ezekiel as full of eyes. Sharp eyes, near-sighted, far-sighted. They look up. They look down. They look far away. They take in the next street and the next hemisphere. Eyes of criticism, eyes of investigation; eyes that twinkle with mirth, eyes glowering with indignation, eyes tender with love; eyes of suspicion, eyes of hope; blue eyes, black eyes, green eyes; holy eyes, evil eyes, sore eyes, political eyes, literary eyes, historical eyes, religious eyes; eyes that see everything. "And the wheels were full of eyes." But in my second text is the world's cry for the newspaper. Paul describes a class of people in Athens who spent their time either in gathering the news or telling it. Why especially in Athens? Because the more intelligent people become, the more inquisitive they are—not about small things, but great things.

The question then most frequently is the question now most frequently asked, What is the news? To answer that cry in the text for the newspaper the centuries have put their wits to work. China first succeeded, and has at Peking a newspaper that has been printed every week for one thousand years, printed on silk. Rome succeeded by publishing the Acta Diurna, in the same column putting fires, murders, marriages, and tempests. France succeeded by a physician writing out the news of the day for his patients. England succeeded by publishing the news of the Spanish Armada, and going on until she had enough enterprise, when the battle of Waterloo was fought, deciding the destiny of Europe, to publish the news of the battle. The Morning Chronicle, about as much as the newspaper of our day gives of a small fire. America succeeded by Benjamin Harris's first newspaper, the Benjamin, published in Boston in 1690, and by the first daily, the American Advertiser, published in Philadelphia in 1784.

The newspaper did not suddenly spring upon the world, but came gradually. The genealogical line of the newspaper is this:

The Adam of the race was a circular or news-letter, created by Divine impulse in human nature; and the circular begat the pamphlet, and the pamphlet begat the quarterly, and the quarterly begat the weekly, and the weekly begat the semi-weekly, and the semi-weekly begat the daily. But alas! by what a struggle it came to its present development! No sooner had its power been demonstrated, than tyranny and superstition shackled it. There is nothing that despotism so fears and hates as a printing-press. It has too many eyes in its wheel. A great writer declared that the King of Naples made it unsafe for him to write of anything but natural history. Austria could not endure Kossuth's journalistic pen, pleading for the redemption of Hungary. Napoleon I., trying to keep his iron heel on the neck of nations, said: "Editors are the regents of sovereigns and the tutors of nations, and are only fit for prison." But the battle for the freedom of the press was fought in the court-rooms of England and America, and decided before this century began by Hamilton's eloquent plea for J. Peter Zenger's Gazette in America, and Erskine's advocacy of the freedom of publication in England. These were the Marathon and Thermopylae in which the freedom of the press was established in the United States and Great Britain, and all the powers of earth and hell will never again be able to put on the handcuffs and hobbles of literary and political despotism. It is notable that Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of American Independence, wrote, also: "If I had to choose between a government without newspapers or newspapers without a Government, I should prefer the latter." Stung by some base fabrication coming to us in print, we come to write or speak of the unbridled printing-press; or, our new book ground up by an unjust critic, we come to write or speak of the unfairness of the printing-press; or, perhaps, through our own indistinctness of utterance, we are reported as saying just the opposite of what we did say, and there is a small riot of semicolons, hyphens, and commas, and we come to speak or write of the blundering printing-press; or, seeing a paper filled with divorce cases or social scandal, we speak and write of the filthy printing-press; or, seeing a journal, through bribery, wheel round from one political side to the other in one night, we speak of the corrupt printing-press, and many talk about the lampoonery, and the empiricism, and the sans-culottism of the printing-press.

But I desire now on a subject you have never heard—the immeasurable and everlasting blessing of a good newspaper. Thank God for the wheel full of eyes. Thank God that we do not live like the Athenians—to go about to gather up and relate the tidings of the day, since the omnivorous newspaper does both for us. The grandest temporal blessing that God has given to the nineteenth century is the newspaper. We would have better appreciation of this blessing if we knew the manner, the means, the means, the expenditures, the anxieties, the wear and tear of heartstrings involved in the production of a good newspaper. Under the impression that almost anybody can make a newspaper, scores of inexperienced capitalists every year enter the lists, and, consequently, during the last few years, a newspaper has died almost every day. The disease is epidemic. The larger papers swallow the smaller ones, the whale taking down fifty minnows at one swallow. With more than seven thousand dailies and weeklies in the United States and Canadas, there are but thirty-six a half century old. Newspapers do not average more than five years' existence. The most of them die of cholera infantum. It is high time that the people found out that the most successful way to sink money and keep it sunk is to start a newspaper. There comes a time when almost every one is smitten with the newspaper mania and starts one, or have stock in one he must or die.

The course of procedure is about this: A literary man has an agricultural or scientific or political or religious idea which he wants to ventilate. He has no money of his own—literary men seldom have. But he talks of his ideas among confidential friends until they become inflamed with the idea, and forthwith they buy type and press, and rent composing-room, and gather a corps of editors, and with a prospectus that proposes to cure everything, the first copy is flung on the attention of an admiring world. After a while one of the plain stockholders finds that no great revolution has been effected by this daily or weekly publication; that neither sun nor moon stands still; that the world goes on lying and cheating and stealing just as it did before the first issue. The aforesaid matter-of-fact stockholder wants to sell out his stock, but nobody wants to buy, and other stockholders get infected and sick of newspaperdom, and an enormous bill at the paper factory rolls into an avalanche, and the printers refuse to work until back wages are paid up, and the compositor bows to the managing editor, and the managing editor bows to the editor-in-chief, and the editor-in-chief bows to the directors, and the directors bow to the world at large, and all the subscribers wonder why their paper doesn't come. The world will have to learn that a newspaper is as much of an institution as the Bank of England or Yale College, and is not an enterprise. If you have the aforesaid agricultural, or scientific, or religious, or political idea to ventilate, you had better charge upon the world through the columns already established. It is folly for anyone who cannot succeed at anything else to try newspaperdom. If you cannot climb the hill back of your house it is folly to try the sides of the Matterhorn.

To publish a newspaper requires the skill, the precision, the boldness, the vigilance, the strategy, of a commander-in-chief. To edit a newspaper requires that one be a statesman, an essayist, a geographer, a statistician, and, in acquisition, encyclopediac. To man, to govern, to propel a newspaper until it shall be a fixed institution, a national fact, demand more qualities than any business on earth. If you feel like starting any newspaper, secular or religious, understand that you are being threatened with softening of the brain or lunacy, and throwing your pocket-book into your wife's lap, start for some Insane Asylum before you do something desperate. Meanwhile, as the dead newspapers, week by week, are carried out to the burial, all the living newspapers give respectful obituary, telling when they were born and when they died. The best printer's ink should give at least one stickful of epitaph. If it was a good paper, say, "Peace to its ashes." If it was a bad paper, I suggest the epitaph written for Francis Chartreuse: "Here continueth to rot the body of Francis Chartreuse, who, with an inflexible constancy and uniformity of life, persisted in the practice of every human vice, excepting prodigality and hypocrisy; his insatiable avarice exempted him from the first, his matchless impudence from the second." I say this because I want you to know that a good, health long-lived, entertaining newspaper is an easy blessing, but one that comes to through the fire.

First of all, newspapers make knowledge democratic and for the multitude. The public library is a hay-mow so high up that few can reach it, while the newspaper throws down the forage to our feet. Public libraries are the reservoirs where the great floods are stored high up a way off. The newspaper is the tun that brings them down to the pitchers all the people. The chief use of great libraries is to make newspapers out. Great libraries make a few men and men very wise. Newspapers lift whole nations into the sunlight. Better have five million people moderately intelligent than one hundred thousand Solons. A true impression is abroad that newspaper knowledge is ephemeral because periodicals are thrown aside, and not one out of ten thousand people files them for future reference. Such knowledge, so far from being ephemeral, goes into the very structure of the world's heart and brain, decides the destiny of Churches and nations. Knowledge on the shelf is of little worth. It is knowledge afoot, knowledge harnessed, knowledge in revolution, knowledge winged, knowledge projecting, knowledge thunder-bolted. So far from being ephemeral, nearly all the best minds and hearts have their hands on the printing-press to-day, and have had since they got emancipated. Adams, and Hancock, and Otis used to go to the Boston Gazette and compose articles on the rights of the people. Benjamin Franklin, De Witt Clinton, Hamilton, Jefferson, Quincy, were strong in newspaperdom. Many of the immortal things that have been published in book form first appeared in what you may call the ephemeral periodical. Macaulay's essays first appeared in a view. All Carlyle's, all Ruskin's, all Hawthorne's, all Sydney Smith's, all Hazlitt's, all Thackeray's, all the elevated work of fiction in our day, are reprints from periodicals in which they appeared as serials. Tennyson's poems, Burns's poems, Lowell's poems, Emerson's poems, Lowell's poems, Whittier's poems, were once fugitive pieces. You cannot find ten literary men in Christendom, with strong minds and great hearts, but are or have been somehow connected with the newspaper printing-press. While the book will always have its place, the newspaper is more potent, because the latter is multitudinous, do not conclude it is necessarily superficial. A man should from childhood to old age read only his Bible, Webster's Dictionary, and his newspaper, he could be prepared for all the duties of this life and all the hardships of the next.

Again, a good newspaper is a useful terror of life as it is. It is sometimes complained that newspapers report the truth when they ought only to report the good. They must report the evil as well as the good, or how shall we know what is to be reformed, what guarded against, what fought down? A newspaper that pictures only the honesty and virtue of society is a misrepresentation. That family is not prepared for the duties of life who, knowing the evil, is taught to select the good. Keep children under the impression that all is fair and right in the world, and when they go out into it they will be poorly prepared to struggle with it. A child who is thrown into the middle of the Atlantic and told to learn how to swim. Our only complaint is when sin is made attractive and morality dull, when vice and deeds are put in obscure corners, iniquity set up in great primer and righteousness nonpareil. Sin is loathsome, make it loathsome. Virtue is beautiful, make it beautiful.

It would work a vast improvement if all our papers—religious, political, literary—should for the most part drop their personality. This would do better just newspaper writers. Many of the strongest and best writers of the country live in obscurity, and are denied their just fame. The vast public never learns who they are. Most of them are on comparatively small income, and after awhile their hand forgets it cunning, and they are without resources, left to die. Why, at least, have his initials attached to the most important work? It always gave additional force to an article when you occasionally saw added to some significant article in the old New York Courier and Enquirer J. W. W., or in the Tribune H. C., or in the Herald J. G. B., or in the Times H. J. R., or in the Evening Post W. C., or in the Evening Express E. B. While this arrangement would be a fair and just thing for newspaper writers, it would be a disgrace for the public. It is sometimes said that things damaging to private character are said. Who is responsible? It is "we" of the editorial or reportorial columns. Every man in every profession or occupation ought to be responsible for what he does. No honorable man will write that which he would be afraid to sign. During loss of temper a man may say that for which he will be sorry in minutes; but a newspaper injustice is first to be written, set up in type, then proof taken off, and read and corrected, and then for six or ten hours the presses are busy running off the issue. Plenty of time to correct. But all that is hidden in the impersonality of a newspaper. It will be a long step forward when it is changed, and newspaper writers get credit for the good and are held responsible for the evil.

Another step forward for newspaperdom will be when in our colleges and universities we open opportunities for preparing candidates for the editorial chair. We have in such institutions medical departments, law departments, why not editorial departments? I know men may tumble by what seems accident into a newspaper office as they may tumble into other occupations, but it would be an incalculable advantage if those proposing a newspaper had an institution to which they might go to learn the qualifications, the responsibilities, the trials, the temptations, the dangers, the magnificent opportunities, of newspaper life. Let there be a lecture-ship in which there shall appear the leaders of the United States telling the story of their struggles, their victories, their mistakes, how they worked and what they found out to be the best way of working. There will be strong men who will climb up without such aid into editorial power and efficiency. So do men climb up to success in other branches by their grit. But if we want learned institutions to make lawyers and artists and doctors and ministers, we much more need learned institutions to make editors, who occupy a position of influence a hundred-fold greater. I do not put the truth too strongly when I say the most potent influence for good on earth is a good editor and the most potent influence for evil is a bad one. The best way to reinforce and improve the newspaper is to endow editor-professorates. When will Princeton, Harvard, or Yale, or Rochester, lead the way?

Another blessing of the newspaper is its foundation it lays for accurate history of the time in which we live. We for the most part blindly guess about the ages and ante-date the newspaper, and are dependent upon the prejudices of this or that historian. But after a hundred or two years what a splendid opportunity the historian will have to teach the people the lesson of this day. Our Bancrofts got in the early newspapers of this country, in the Boston News-Letter, the New York City, and the American Rag Bag, and the Gazetteer and Independent Chronicle, the Massachusetts Spy and the Philadelphia Aurora, accounts of Perry's victory, Hamilton's duel, and Washington's death, and Boston massacre, and the oppressive foreign tax on luxuries which turned Boston harbor into a teapot, and Paul Revere's midnight ride, and Rhode Island rebellion, and South Carolina nullification. But what a field for the chronicler of the great future when he opens the files of a hundred standard American newspapers, giving the minutiae of all things occurring under the social, political, ecclesiastical, international headings! Five hundred years from now, if the world lasts so long, the student looking for stirring, decisive history will pass by the misty corridors of other centuries and say to the librarians: "Find me the volumes that give the century in which the American Presidents were assassinated, the Civil War enacted, and the cotton-gin, the steam locomotive, and telegraph, and telephone, and cylinder presses, were invented."

Once more I remark, that a good newspaper is a blessing as an evangelistic influence. You know there is a great change in our day taking place. All the secular newspapers of the day—for I am not speaking now of the religious newspapers—all the secular newspapers of the day discuss all the questions of God, eternity, and the dead, and all the questions of the past, present, and future. There is not a single doctrine of theology but has been discussed in the last ten years by the secular newspapers of the country. They gather up all the news of all the earth bearing on religious subjects, and then they scatter the news abroad again. The Christian newspaper will be the right wing of the apocalyptic angel. The cylinder of the Christianized printing-press will be the front wheel of the Lord's chariot. I take the music of this day, and I do not mark it diminuendo—I mark it crescendo. A pastor on a Sabbath preaches to a few hundred, or a few thousand people, and on Monday, or during the week, the printing-press will take the same sermon and preach it to millions of people. God speed the printing-press! God save the printing-press! God Christianize the printing-press!

When I see the printing-press standing with the electric telegraph on the one side gathering up material, and the lightning express train on the other side waiting for the tons of folded sheets of newspapers, I pronounce it the mightiest force in our civilization. So I commend you to pray for all those who manage the newspapers of the land, for all type-setters, for all reporters, for all editors, for all publishers, that, sitting or standing in positions of such great influence, they may give all that influence for God and the betterment of the human race. An aged woman making her living by knitting, unwound the yarn from the ball until she found in the centre of the ball there was an old piece of newspaper. She opened it and read an advertisement which announced that she had become heiress to a large property and that fragment of a newspaper lifted her from pauperism to affluence. And I do not know but as the thread of time unrolls and unwinds a little further, through the silent yet speaking newspaper may be found the vast inheritance of the world's redemption.

Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till suns shall rise and set no more.

Singing for the Saviour.

Gentle Fanny J. Crosby, the Blind Poet, still Praising Jesus in Immortal Hymns—Ira D. Sankey's Marvelous Voice that has moved Thousands throughout the World.

Ever a harp was concealed within a human breast, it lies hidden in the heart of Fanny J. Crosby, where it has for over thirty years, been attuned to the sweetest melodies that ever found expression in words. While still very young, this bright little woman, who had been blind from infancy, first gave evidence of the poetic fire that burned within her. Her first hymn:

We are going, we are going,
To a home beyond the skies, was written in New York City for Wm. Bradbury Feb. 5, 1864, and since that, time so diligently and harmoniously have brain and pen wrought that Miss Crosby, up to the present time, has composed over four thousand hymns, many of which have become favorites in all Christian lands. Before she began her career as a writer of hymns, she had already written a number of secular pieces for George F. Root, the famous composer, and had dedicated a little poem of welcome to Henry Clay on the occasion of his visit to New York after the close of the Mexican War. She had the honor of being the first woman whose voice was ever heard in the United States Senate Chamber, where she recited a poem by invitation to a most distinguished audience.

In the course of her long career as a hymn writer, Miss Crosby has attained, in an unsurpassed degree, the faculty of moving the heart and the affections by her verses. Her sense of rhythm is absolutely perfect. The slightest incident affords her inspiration, and her productions have been the means of softening the heart of many a sinner. Sometimes she writes both words and music and until recent years could accompany her playing in a clear and sweet soprano. Her blindness makes the services of an amanuensis necessary when she is engaged in composing verses.

Fanny Crosby was born at Southeast, Putnam county, N. Y., March 24, 1820. Her blindness dates from her sixth week, when an affection of the eyes was subjected to improper treatment, resulting in total loss of sight. But the affliction only served to bring out all that was strong and beautiful in the young girl's nature. In 1847 she began to teach school among the blind in New York, having herself received a good education in the institution. From the time of writing her first hymn in 1864 until the present day she has rendered active and consecrated service to the cause of Christ and religion. She is personally widely known, and her gentle, patient nature and amiable disposition make her a general favorite. Among her best-known hymns—which have sung many into the Kingdom—are "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour," "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," "Rescue the Perishing," "The Bright Forever," "Jesus, I Come to Thee," "So Near to the Kingdom," "Through the New Jerusalem," "Saviour, More Than Life to Me." Her mind is so well stored with Scripture that passages suited to every phase of experience readily occur to her as she composes, and greatly facilitate her labors.

In our colored illustration on the first page of this issue are two portraits that will be readily recognized by many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Ira D. Sankey, the sweetest of America's Gospel singers, and Fanny J. Crosby, the Gospel poet, who, though blind like Homer of old, can still move the souls of men, have during many years been frequently brought into the closest relations in their spiritual work—the one as hymn writer, the other as musical composer. Some of Miss Crosby's finest pieces have received a musical setting and found vocal expression at Mr. Sankey's hands and through his marvelous voice. The famous vocalist was born in Edinburg, Pa., Aug. 28, 1840, and is still in the zenith of his powers, with a voice of undiminished volume, range, and quality. Ever since his seventeenth year, when he was converted, he has been identified with Gospel work in church and Sunday School, but especially in the Service of song. As a very young man, he became the musical leader of children and congregation, and his magnificent voice soon led him to wider fields of Christian usefulness. Mr. Sankey has sung the message of salvation to the hearts and souls of men in almost every land under the sun. The story of his long association with Mr. Moody, in whose company he has crossed oceans and continents and held vast audiences spell-bound by the charm of his voice, is too well known to need recapitulation here. His divine gift of song, supplementing the eloquent appeals of Mr. Moody, has brought many to Christ. Probably no man in the present day and generation has been able to express the Gospel message with such rare skill and pathos. Only a few months ago, in company with Mr. Moody, this grand singer for souls visited Mexico on an evangelizing tour, and excellent spiritual results from their united efforts were reported.

Mr. Sankey has for many years been an active worker in Y.M.C.A. circles, and has furnished inspiration to many a flagging group of Christian young people, who were cheered and encouraged by his robust piety and pervading cheerfulness. He has been a prominent factor at numerous Y.M.C.A. conventions, for a quarter of a century, and, in more than mere words has given evidence of his hearty interest in Association work. With his own means he built and presented to the Y.M.C.A. at New Castle, Pa., the handsome edifice in which they now meet, and his generosity in other directions has been also noteworthy. Like Fanny Crosby, Ira D. Sankey's heart is in the work of soul-winning, which he has made the absorbing pursuit of his life. He can speak as well as sing for the Master and a rich blessing has followed his efforts, wherever they have been put forth.

Leprosy Cured by Prayer.

A remarkable experience is related by Miss Mary Reed, a missionary in India, who has been entirely cured by prayer of the leprosy with which she was stricken several years ago. Miss Reed was appointed to mission duty in North India in 1884, where she became an active worker in the zenanas of Cawnpore. After five years of faithful service she returned to America in January, 1890, with impaired health. For many months she was in Christ Hospital connected with the Deaconess' Home in Cincinnati. While there, she noticed a constant tingling sensation in the tip of one of the fingers of her right hand. The doctor spoke lightly of it, but later other symptoms were present, and the thought came to her, "this is leprosy;" and then came to her a view of Pithoragarh, India, with its leper asylum, and the thought, "there lies my future work." Having assured herself by consultation that it was the beginning of the dread disease she hastened back to India, without telling any of her family, except a sister. She went as rapidly as she was able, only stopping at Bombay, from whence she sent a letter telling her people the cause of her sudden departure. Having reaching Pithoragarh, she hastened to take up her residence at Chandag, where the leper asylum is located. And from there she wrote: "I find his grace sufficient. The everlasting arms are underneath me upholding and keeping me trustful. Through prayers offered for me, to all outward appearance, the disease has been stayed, but I am painfully conscious that I am not healed." Rev. Mr. McMahan, presiding-elder Kamaun district, India, said lately: "If Miss Reed were living in Bible times and would now show herself to the priest, she would surely be pronounced well." A recent letter is said to report her complete cure.

THE BLIND HYMN-WRITER, FANNY J. CROSBY, Dictating to her Amanuensis.

The Resurrection of Christ.

Sunday School Lesson for April 5. Luke 24: 1-12. Golden Text, Luke 24: 6. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

AS yet they knew not the Scripture that he must rise again from the dead (John 20: 9), was the comment of the Evangelist John, who was the only disciple of the twelve who saw and believed, when he and Peter had visited the empty sepulchre of their risen Lord (John 21: 1-10): "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God" (Mark 12: 24), said our Lord to the sceptical Sadducees, who came to him with the question about the woman, who had the seven brethren in rotation as husbands, "In the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven?" It was in order that his disciples might realize the truth of his resurrection that, on the evening of his resurrection day, Jesus "beginning from Moses and all the prophets," interpreted to the two disciples going to Emmaus, "in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself," and, later on, opened the understanding of all the eleven, "that they might understand the Scriptures" (Luke 24: 27-45). Paul, in his defence before Festus, affirmed, "I stand unto this day testifying both to small and great, saying nothing but what the prophets and Moses did say should come; how that the Christ must suffer, and how that he first by the resurrection of the dead, should proclaim light both to the people and to the Gentiles" (Acts 26: 22, 23). The resurrection of Christ rests on the indubitable testimony of the incorruptible Word of God.

On the morning of the resurrection day, a little company of Christ's disciples, women who had followed him from Galilee, and who had heard, as the twelve had heard, his repeated teaching about his coming sufferings, his death and his resurrection, came to bring spices to the sepulchre. Their thought was to honor the dead body of him through whom so much light and blessing had come to them, but, like the disciples, and the Sadducees, "they knew not the Scriptures, nor the power of God." In the tomb of Jesus they sought in vain for death, and their antidotes to corruption were proved to be useless things. Death and corruption found no abiding place there. He who was for a short time the tenant of that grave, had "brought life and incorruption to light through the Gospel" of his death (II. Tim. 1: 10).

All they met with was a surprise, and contrary to their expectations. They had looked for a sealed stone, which should separate between them and the corpse of their dear Master, and first they found no stone there; it had been rolled away, they knew not by whom. Had this no voice to them? Could they not now understand the words of the Scriptures? "He had suffered many things, he had been rejected and condemned to death by the Jews, and that which he had been killed; it was now the third day;

Was He Risen?

There is no mention made that even the thought occurred to them. They entered in, and found not the body, and yet they did not suppose the body was risen as he said. All we read of is their perplexity, and their question was to them as though he had never mentioned it; they had heard it with respect to the resurrection, but they had set on an earthly kingdom and earthly glory. Suddenly, without announcement,

"two men stood by them in dazzling apparel." No wonder heavenly beings should haunt the spot, when death had been conquered by the Lord of life. But the women did not understand; "they were affrighted and bowed down their faces to the earth." Grief, perplexity, despair filled their hearts in the empty grave, when the fact of the resurrection was calculated to have inspired them with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." But "they knew not the Scriptures," they saw things only as they appeared, faith was inactive. Oh, how many of God's children are thus, filled with despair, apprehension, perplexity, and trouble, just when, if they knew the Scriptures, they would most rejoice!

"Why seek ye him that liveth among the dead? [R. V., margin.] He is not here, but is risen:

Remember How He Spoke

unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying that the Son of man must be delivered up into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his words." Then all was changed. O how many of God's children fall into doubt and darkness, perplexity and despair, because they are occupied with death instead of believing in a real, living, risen Christ, who dwells in their hearts by faith, when they are "strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man." (Eph. 3: 16, 17.) The women expected to sit by the tomb, and weep, and sigh, mourning over their loss. Many Christians do the same. They spend their times of communing with God in lamentations over love grown cold, resolutions broken, habits of prayer forsaken, zeal declined, etc., etc. They come with spices, attempting, in a half despairing way, to counteract the evil of the past by their present sorrow and devotion. They try to reproduce old experiences, they try to make alive within them gratitude for what Christ has done for them; they go over their conversion, repeat their consecration, make new resolutions, etc., etc. And all the time Jesus is not there. "Why seek ye him that liveth among the dead?" Dwelling in your heart by faith, as ye know the Scriptures (Col. 1: 27), and believe, is "Christ in you, the hope of glory." He is our Life, he is our Love, he is our zeal. Don't go to the grave to seek him, all is corruption there, go to the Scriptures—the living Word—to find the living One, and you will find to your great joy that he is risen, and that you were also through faith in the working of God who raised him from the dead. (Col. 2: 12.) Self is the place where only death and corruption are to be found—don't seek the living there. Seek in Christ dwelling in you, what you have sought in your own efforts, and hopes, and resolutions and a new life will dawn upon you.

Raised With Him

You will not find it so hard to take your true place as buried with Christ in his death, buried away from all hope in yourself, or pride in yourself, or expectation from yourself; you will not find it so hard to come to the realization that in yourself you are an utter failure, if at the same time you know by the Scriptures that you are also raised with him, and that he, the risen One, lives within you his own life as you trust him, yield to him, and continually acknowledge his presence. Do not seek him that liveth among the dead. As long as you hope anything from yourself, you are seeking only yourself. You want to have the credit of the love and zeal, the penitence and all else which you try to produce from the dark grave of your own heart. It is in vain. God will never give you credit for anything that comes from yourself—all is under the curse.

"They that are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom. 8: 8). But as you yield up point after point to Jesus, and live "by the faith of the Son of God" (Gal. 2: 20), he, dwelling in you, will do in your life as in his own earthly life—"always those things which please" God (John 8: 29).

The women "remembered his words, and returned from the tomb and told all these things to the eleven and to all the rest." The truth of Christ's resurrection, once having dawned upon them, they lost interest in their spices: they could not but speak the things they had seen and heard; a new life had opened before them; their horizon was enlarged from time to eternity. An untold dignity and power had come into their lives. What mattered it now that he whom they had followed, and for whom they had left all, had been ignominiously crucified, and was everywhere spoken of as an executed malefactor?

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

THE WIDE AND STRAIT GATES.

Resurrection, which is to be considered in any case on June 21. As Mrs. Baxter has dealt with the latter subject in her article on this page, it may be well here to take the other subject suggested by the Committee. It is based on Luke 13: 22-30, which records Christ's warning against superficiality and apathy in seeking membership in his kingdom. The warning was necessary in his day, because, in spite of all he had said, many were attracted to him by the belief that he was about to establish his throne in Jerusalem and reign there with a magnificence surpassing that of Solomon. People who had witnessed the miracles could well believe that he was able to do so if he chose. There was apparently no limit to his power over men and the forces of nature. None who had seen his mighty works could doubt his ability to defend and maintain his kingdom even against the power of Imperial Rome. What then more natural than for ambitious men to seek place and influence in that kingdom by allying themselves with him at a time when their help was needed? Instead of welcoming them, and being grateful for their help, Christ astonished them by uttering warnings as to the nature of their services, the qualifications indispensable in those who entered it, and the difficulties, hardships and privations that they would have to bear in it. As they listened, even the disciples wondered and asked if the number of the saved would be few. There are always people who want their curiosity gratified, who put questions no one can answer and seek information that would be useless to them if it could be given. As Christ's custom was, he gives the question a practical turn, skilfully using their curiosity for their own benefit. It does not concern them to know whether there will be many or few saved, but they would do well to remember that there would be some who would try to enter the kingdom and would not be admitted. The fact might stimulate them to earnestness and vigilance. Christ drew a vivid picture of the closed door and people clamoring without and protesting their right to be admitted. They have eaten and drunk in his presence; they have had a place at the Lord's Supper; Christ has taught in their streets; they have been regular at church—what more was necessary to secure admission? The answer reveals it. Christ does not know them; they have had no dealing with him, have never sought from him the life he came to impart. There has been no change in their lives and characters; they were worldly, following world's prizes, satisfied with its pleasures, so they are left with the world now with separation is final. The moral of all this is, that the members of Christ's kingdom are people whom he knows, who are like him, who lead spiritual lives, who seek spiritual knowledge and development, the highest good and regard all else as trivial in comparison. That this alone will bring men into the kingdom and with it they will be rejected, though they have church connection, baptism, confirmation, absolution and all other certificates of claim to the name of Christians.

The strait gate. A narrow entrance, in oriental cities there are usually two gates, one of which is high and wide, through which a camel may go with its burden, and the other low and narrow, through which foot-passengers may go if they are not carrying an unwieldy load. Christ tended to teach that a man who clung to his property and thought more of it than his soul and his religious life, could not enter the kingdom. He must be ready to leave down anything, no matter how precious that hindered him in religious progress. The story is told of soldiers being surprised by the enemy. Many of them threw down the precious things of which they had been looting a town and ran for their lives. Others who were carrying clocks and jewels and other valuables, and could not bear to abandon them, lost both property and life. In a shipwreck men have been known to take off their belts in which they carried their gold and fling them away, lest the weight should endanger their lives. Christ does not condemn wealthy men because they are wealthy, but if any man is making an idol of his wealth, he must be required to give it up. The way to life is through the strait narrow gate, which every man may enter if he will leave his sins and his worldly affections behind.

Many will seek to enter and shall not be able. A minister relates that a young man came to him in great distress, saying that he feared his soul would be lost. He had been seeking Christ with all his soul, but could not find peace. "Are you sure you have been with all your soul?" the minister asked. The young man said "Yes," but there was a little hesitancy in the answer. The minister pressed him. "Are you doing something that your conscience does not approve?" "Well, there is a place I go to sometimes, that I am not quite sure about. It is not wrong and I am very fond of going, but I notice that after I have been there I am not so much in earnest about my soul." The minister then put the pointed question, "If you knew that this thing was keeping you from Christ, would you be willing to give it up?" The young man said, "I do not think it is keeping me from Christ." "That is no question," said the minister. "Could you give it up if you knew that it was the strait gate?" The young man thought a moment and then said, "I am afraid I could not, even to save my soul." "Then," said the minister, "there is no hope for you. If there is one thing you could not give up, you will never attain what you are seeking." It was several months afterward that he came back and said, "I have repented. I would give up all now if it is necessary." There was no more difficulty after that. He had entered the strait gate.

When the master of the house . . . shall shut the door. A traveler in Syria describes an instance in point. It was a feast in connection with some public festival, at the great man of the village gave a general invitation. The door of his house was wide open and all were welcome. At the time set there was a movement about the door, but the host called out that there were some who might have mistaken the hour. Half an hour afterward, concluding that all had come who intended to come, the order was given to close the door and the guests sat down to their meal. Comes to ascertain how far the custom to which Jesus alluded, still obtained, he applied to the servant who stood before the door, telling him he was a stranger and begging to be admitted. But the servants were inexorable. "We have our master's orders," said the servant. "No one is to be admitted now; a half hour's grace was given and that was sufficient." "We pleaded and argued in vain," says the traveler, "the door was not opened."

Alexander Smith's Sermons.

THE minister at Salt Beach was not old nor weary, nor out of touch with the young people, though he had not so many young people in his church as might have been desired. Mr. Alexander Smith was under thirty, a tall, pleasant fellow, with soft brown eyes, and a pleasant smile. But even his young wife who adored him, admitted to herself she was a dull preacher. Iron pincers would not have extracted such a confession from her; she always hated herself for making Alexander was tedious in the pulpit, but she sometimes remembered the sermons she had heard as a girl—sermons one could not forget if she tried, sermons one carried home and lived on through the week. Mending Alexander's worn socks and dusting his study, Betty Smith chided her own disloyalty.

"Tap, rap, at the door. It was pushing in, and a brown tangled head showed itself.

"Here's the minister's mail, Mrs. Smith; I was passing and I brought it. There are letters for you, too."

"That's nice," said Mrs. Smith. "Thank you, Harry, I don't know what I should do, it were not for my good neighbors, and you are always so thoughtful. By the way, if your Aunt can spare me some money, will you bring over a dozen on your way to the Y. M. C. A. to-night?"

"As ma'am," answered Harry, delighted at the chance to serve his friend, and away he went. Mrs. Smith dropped her duster and sat down to enjoy her letters. One was from Nannie Page, an old schoolmate. "You don't invite me to visit you, Betty, but I'm coming without an invitation," said this young lady, "I've had a hard winter, a hard spring, a hard summer, a letter on a city newspaper hasn't much to spare, but now I've earned a vacation and I'm flying to you. By the time you receive this, I'll be well on my way, and you may expect me without further delay to supper on Tuesday night."

It was now Tuesday morning. The girls were on terms of intimacy which justified Nannie's visit, but Betty was not quite so glad. Down in her heart of hearts, she did not want Nannie Page to see Alexander preach.

It was not a very pleasant state of affairs, and Mrs. Smith was ashamed of her feelings, as she proceeded to the kitchen to get the larder ready to show.

There was a ham, pink and white, and appetizing; she had potatoes and flour, butter, sugar, honey, tea, coffee, the materials for a very good meal. Alexander was off for the day, visiting distant parishioners; the little wife took advantage of this to give the small paragon a thorough going over and cleaning, though it did not need it, for floors, windows, and doors under her reign were always speckless.

At due time Alexander returned, and was hospitably glad to hear that his wife's mail was coming. He fed the pony, harnessed him again, and they together drove to the station to meet Miss Page.

After a few days, Nannie said to Betty, "Don't me, dear, but you are too good a housekeeper."

"What do you mean, Nannie?"

"What I say, your husband rarely settles down in his study, that you do not try to assist you in some household way, to drive a nail, or uplift a refractory window, or to do something else which might as well wait for another time. At the other morning, you interrupted the Bible reading to say, 'Alexander, I would kneel on that newspaper, you get so much fluff on your trouser-knees, when you kneel on this carpet!' Think of it! Interrupting a man at family worship for such a thing as that! And when he's not actually studying or visiting, you won't let your husband read, because you want him to talk to you. If a bit of mud comes in the house, you don't rest till it is removed.

"Now, all this would be unpardonable in me, if I did not love you devotedly, Nannie, and I hope you won't be angry."

"Nannie Page," said Mrs. Smith, contritely, "you are right. I see that I am not a good wife to Alexander. I don't respect his requirements as I ought. He needs a degree of thoughtful care that he hasn't had. You know I don't care much for books myself. I'm a woman of activities."

"Then," said Nannie Page, "Mr. Smith ought to have more books. How can a minister keep up with the fresh thought of the day, if he hasn't plenty of good books."

"My husband cannot buy many books," said Mrs. Smith, firmly.

"I beg your pardon, dear," replied Nannie Page. "I'm afraid I've been too forward and too candid."

"I had to speak out." "And I'm grateful to you for doing so," said Mrs. Smith.

Mr. Smith had never complained of interruptions. He was too amiable and too much in love with his wife for this, but when, in succession, he had three long mornings in his study unbroken by a request that he would see a caller, or go on an errand, or find out why the oven would not burn, he did much better work. A man whose mental processes were slow, he had not dreamed how much his sermons suffered from lack of the right background for building them against. Betty's eyes were opened. But not even Miss Page guessed how this youthful pastor longed for good, new books. The rows of commentaries on his shelves were helpful, but they did not stimulate him; he was in a place remote from a town, where he did not have the friction of mingling with brothers in labor, and where everybody looked up to him. If ever a man needed the aid of fresh literature, that man was Alexander Smith.

Nannie Page went home. Her visit had been a pleasant one, for the talk I have related was a mere episode: she carried with her a great respect for her friend's husband, and a strong desire to help him, but saw difficulties in the way. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Smith would bear patronage, and they did not wish charity.

Nevertheless, there came a day when the post office brought a bulky package for the pastor of Salt Beach Church. Opened, it contained four volumes, each most inviting to a student, two or three new stories, and a monthly review, with the subscription for the year paid. With the package was this letter:

MY FRIEND IN THE GOSPEL.

I am an old lady, without ties, and with more money than I know how to spend. Some years ago I devoted the interest of a certain fund to the purchase of helpful volumes for ministers under forty years of age, who were doing Christ's work in quiet places, and with small stipends. The business of my life, and its chief gratification, is in finding such people out. I heard of you by accident, if in God's providence anything can be called an accident, and I am more than happy to add these publications to your library. MEDORA MARCH PRIME.

It is noticed that people come from all over now to the Salt Beach services, many of them young men.

Mr. Smith's sermons are constantly improving, and Mrs. Smith no longer compares him unfavorably with anybody.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A Hot Coffee Mission.

Evangelist Gibbud, of Syracuse, Establishes a Novel Aid to Mission Work.

Mr. H. B. GIBBUD, Superintendent of the Rescue Mission at Syracuse, N. Y., whose Christian work is well known to our readers, has introduced a new feature of Gospel work in that city. He writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"My 'Gospel Coffee Can' will hold sixty cups of coffee. Under the part containing the coffee I had a box made to contain oil, with three burners, so that the coffee was kept 'red-hot.' I would fill the can when I went out to the night work, and when I met a crowd of girls on the street I would ask them to take a drink with the missionary, and then turn out a cup of coffee, and while it was cooling I had an opportunity to preach the Gospel to them. It was much appreciated by these poor women. Many a half-frozen tramp has had a warm drink from it, as well as a message, and I have heard more than one who has been saved tell how the hot coffee from the 'Gospel Coffee Can' has warmed their hearts toward the Gospel invitation."

"It was the best way, I found, of getting at the policemen, who often took a 'drink with me' on a cold night. Since coming to Syracuse I have used it at some of the large fires. It is filled, and when a fire breaks out on a cold night I start the burners. My wife makes the coffee and I start for the fire. At the great fire here, a year or two ago, I was out with it two days and one night, giving coffee to the firemen and policemen. It was appreciated, as the weather was bitter cold, and for the first day the men were unable, many of them, to leave their posts on account of the fire."

"Lately, I spent a night with the cabmen. It was an awful night and the men stood around, trying to keep warm. When we drew near with the can and offered them a drink, there was a good deal of swearing for a few moments, expressing themselves about 'how good the coffee was,' etc.; but when they found there was a missionary at the other end of the can, and they recognized him, the swearing ceased. They were ready to hear the Word and to receive gladly religious reading to be taken home. As the night wore on and the missionary came around again, their hearts were touched and they expressed their gratitude. One man took the missionary aside, and told of a wrecked home and family through drink, and said 'in all probability I should have been drunk before this, but for the coffee; that's better in the long run than whiskey.' The talk led to earnest conversation about the new life in Christ. The goodwill of the 'cabbies' was won. They sometimes drop into our meetings.

"So, on bitter nights this 'Gospel Coffee

EXPLORER C. E. BORCHGREVINK.

Can' makes its way to those who have to breast the storm. Conductors and motormen are ready to stop the car, take a drink to warm them up, then dash on to make up for lost time. And the message—'red-hot' like the coffee—also warms them up and touches their hearts."

To Find the South Pole.

Explorer Borchgrevink's Quest and its Prospect of Success.

IN these days of daring adventure, it is not surprising to find, if only by way of variation, that the South Pole is beginning to have an attraction for the explorer almost as great as the North Pole, in search of which so many expeditions have gone during the last three-quarters of a century. In 1841, Sir James Ross discovered the South Victoria Continent, and two years ago, the steam whaler Antarctic left England on a scientific expedition for the South Pole. Among those on board the whaler was Carsten Egeberg Borchgrevink, a young scientist of remarkable promise and great energy. On his return recently, after an absence of a year and a-half, he gave to the world his idea of the possibilities of the great unknown continent—the equal of Europe in size—which exists in the Antarctic circle, and, as he declares, can be reached within fourteen days' sail from Melbourne. Speaking of this Southern land, Mr. Borchgrevink says: "This great country is terra incognita. It seems strange that for fifty-four years the Antarctic solitude should have remained absolutely unbroken. Victoria Land promises to be quite as interesting as, and certainly covers a much larger field for scientific work than the North Polar region. The immense continent round the South Pole is certainly not less than Europe in size. It will prove invaluable for the whaling industry, for sealing, and guano."

There is much zoological, botanical, geological, and other scientific work to be done in the new field. Traces of large mammals have been found, giving promise of attraction for the hunter. Mr. Borchgrevink is now organizing another scientific expedition, which will start from Melbourne, equipped with huts, dogs, sledges, and snow-shoes, and will sail due south for Cape Adair, the northernmost point of Victoria Land. After fixing camp and preparing for the winter, the expedition will divide, one party of five starting for the interior, with a trip in prospect equal to Nansen's Greenland journey, while another party explores the bays and coast line. They will reunite after an absence of three months, and in January, 1897, will sail for home.

Mr. Borchgrevink is a native of Christiania, where he was born in 1864, of Norwegian and English parents. He is an enthusiastic sailor, and has been at sea ever since he was fourteen years of age.

EVANGELIST GIBBUD'S "GOSPEL COFFEE CAN."

THE FOREIGN MISSION CRISIS.

An Effort to Place the Work of the American Board Beyond Immediate Peril—"Hard Times" and Foreign Missions—True Giving—The Duty of Home Christians.

THROUGH the prompt generosity of the Christian men and women of the United States, the debt of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, amounting to $115,000, has been cancelled, and a surplus of several thousand dollars left in the Board's treasury. This news will cause rejoicing, especially in the fields where the devoted missionaries are toiling. It has been decided that no debt will be incurred in the future. The Board is now making an effort to arrange that the salaries of missionaries, recently reduced ten per cent., may be restored, and that the reduction which affects the native pastors and teachers, may also be placed at the usual figure. To this end, an advance movement has been inaugurated under the lead of Misses Mary and Margaret Leitch, faithful missionaries of the Board in Ceylon, who are undertaking to raise the necessary funds. If this is accomplished, not only will the salaries be restored and the ordinary work carried on, as in previous years, but new missionaries will be sent out and new stations opened. In the article printed below, contributed by the Misses Leitch to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the situation is clearly explained and the need set forth:

Although the debt of the American Board has been cancelled, yet, unless the sum of fifty thousand dollars additional can be pledged at an early date, and paid before September 1st, the very serious and sweeping reduction of the work in the foreign field, which has been ordered by the Prudential Committee will have to be enforced. The reduction which has been ordered on the regular work of the American Board is as follows: A reduction of ten per cent. on the salaries of all male missionaries, including both single and married men, (Asiatic Turkey excepted), and a reduction of over thirty-five per cent., as compared with the last year, on the appropriations for the regular work, including all foreign agencies.

Can it be possible that Christians at home will allow this reduction to be made in their foreign work? We see no good reason why the churches at home should take such a backward step at this time. One could imagine such poverty and distress and wide-spread disaster that, looking into the face of Christ, the churches might be able to say, "Dear Lord, Thou knowest that we cannot go on with our foreign mission work." But does any such state of affairs exist? Look at the way in which the majority of Christians are living. Are not their homes comfortable and even luxurious? Are not their tables loaded with dainties? Do they not "fare sumptuously every day?" Are they not "clothed in purple and fine linen?" Do they not have magnificent churches in which they may worship with one, or perhaps two, highly paid choirs? We have heard a good deal about the present very hard times and we think we have come to understand about what the term means. A business gentleman, one of the ablest business men in Boston, kindly took the trouble the other day to explain to us about the hard times. He said: "It is impossible this year to give to home or foreign missions. Times are so hard." We said to him, "Just what do you mean by hard times?" "Why," he replied, "My business brought me in this year just $100,000 less than I should have made." "Well," we said, "you cleared expenses, did you not?" "Yes," he replied, "I cleared expenses, but did not lay up a cent." We said to him, "You have not cut down your living expenses, have you?" "You suppose I will do that?" he asked. "I still have my horses and carriages, my family took a trip to Europe last year, and we suppose you are planning for another trip to Europe this year." He admitted that what we said was true. "Could you not take out a little of what you laid by in prosperous years, when you were clearing $100,000 a year, just to tide the home and foreign missions over a year?"

times are hard will you not make a reduction in your living expenses before you make a reduction in the work which you are doing for your Christ? Christ made a reduction in His living expenses for you when He left highest heaven, came to this earth, was born in a stable and laid in a manger, and during a part of His life had not where to lay His head." He said to us, "What you say is right. I could give something, perhaps I ought to give something from what I have laid by." All that is within us rebels at the thought of any reduction being made at this time, to say nothing of the reduction proposed, which is a sweeping one. We see no good reason for it. We think that Christians at home cannot allow this reduction to be enforced without bringing a great sin and a consequent judgment upon themselves.

The Christians at home have sent their missionaries to the front. These missionaries, responding to their call, went out in good faith, believing that the churches would stand behind them and in an honorable way sustain them and their work. But if this reduction is enforced the missionaries will be obliged to do things that many a heathen man would be ashamed to do. For example, the missionaries have picked up the brightest and best young men—consecrated Christian men—in the communities in which they labor, and have employed them in mission work. They are giving these men, as a salary, just enough to hold soul and body together. Many of these are able men who, had they chosen to enter government service or other lines of secular work, would have earned four times what they are now receiving. But these men, now in middle life, cannot enter government service or get other suitable employment. They have been fitted for mission work, and have become unfitted for other work. If these men are now—without any fault on their part—to be turned off, a great injustice will be done to them. Must missionaries, after years of labor in building up schools and training helpers now be forced to largely undo the work of these years by having to close schools and dismiss many of their trained workers? If missionaries may be thus treated, the churches will repel from entering the foreign mission service, the young men and women in their midst who may now be considering the question of offering themselves to Christ and to the churches for this work. Perhaps in the minds of many young people this question is hanging in the balance. The world, the flesh, and the devil bid for these young lives. The Holy Spirit of God is striving with them and urging them to give themselves to Christ. But if they hear that not only are no new recruits to be sent out, but that some of those who are now at the front are to be recalled, what can they do but turn back? And when again will young people have sufficient confidence in the good faith of the churches to offer for this service, if the churches now put it on record that after missionaries have given the best years of their lives to building up mission work, gathering children into their schools and training catechists, evangelists, and teachers, the churches may at any time go back on them and say to them, "Close your schools and dismiss your native workers."

The missionaries must not turn back in their work now. They are face to face in the foreign field, not only with faiths which are false and degrading, but with an antagonism which is now aggressive. The common people have been kept in the thralldom of ignorance and superstition long enough. Do we not know whereof we speak? Have we not seen our heathen brothers and sisters in Ceylon, standing before heathen temples, piercing their flesh with irons, smiting their faces on the ground, and rolling in the dust before their gods? Have we not heard the hopeless wail of heathen mothers when death took a child and they knew not of a God who is a Father and whose heart is full of infinite love? Have we not, when in India, stood in the presence of the cruel goddess Kali, with her long red tongue hanging from her mouth, painted so as to look as if it were dripping with blood, with her neck adorned with skulls, and with her twelve hands full of cruel weapons of torture? Have we not seen the look of fear on the faces of her worshippers as they made the ground around them wet with the blood of animals which they offered in order to appease her anger?

If the educated Hindus who come to this country to tell us about their grand philosophies, have anything in those philosophies to offer which may be called "a gospel of glad tidings," we can only say that they have kept their gospel very carefully from the common people. We have lived among the common people and know what we say when we affirm that they are in sorrow and darkness, and that they need the deliverance which only He can give who came "to undo heavy burdens, to let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke." We cannot believe that if Christians at home are made to understand the situation they will willingly allow a backward step to be taken at this time. The spiritual life of the church is not extinct. There are many noble men and women among its rich members, and thousands upon thousands of genuine followers of Christ among the poor. They have only to know the facts of the case, and the urgent need, and they will respond. Perhaps too little is asked of them. What authority is there for instance for asking two cents a week? A lady came to us a few days ago dressed in the finest silks and wearing diamonds, and said, "I do my share for the foreign mission cause, I give two cents a week—all my church asks." If that was all that her church asked of her it was not a faithful messenger of Jesus Christ. So far from taking a backward step, we cannot see why the members of Christian churches at home should not be asked to do at least four times as much as they have been doing. We do not say that Christians at home could do so easily, but Christ does not ask us to do what we can do easily. What He did for us was not a thing that He could do easily.

This question which is now before churches will be a test to them. As a test as when Christ is presented to a human soul and the soul decides for or against Him. The churches will take a leap forward in their own spiritual life, retrograde immeasurably, just as they decide to go forward in their foreign mission work or to turn back in it. If the decision which now threatens the work is averted, $50,000, the sum needed to re-estimate, must speedily be procured. The missionaries may venture to delay forcing the reductions for a few months, hoping that Christians at home will come to the rescue. But if they do not hear that help will be forthcoming they will, with aching hearts, be obliged to turn out thousands of children and youths from their schools, bright, intelligent, promising young lads like those shown in our illustration, and to dismiss many valuable workers. It is therefore necessary that whatever is done should be done speedily, if it is to be effective. One hundred dollars would support for a year four native school teachers. Each teacher would have on an average fifty pupils in his school. Thus $100 would prevent the giving up of four schools and would keep in keeping 200 children in a Christian school and under Christian instruction a whole year. $25 would in the same way keep fifty children in school who would keep twenty; $5 would keep ten; and $1 would keep two children in school for a year. We can be addressed in care of Dr. Creegan, Bible House, New York City. We have prepared leaflets regarding the "Forward Movement for Foreign Missions," for the information of those interested. These leaflets will be sent free to any address on application.

MARY AND MARGARET LEITCH.

BOY PUPILS IN TILLIPALLY TRAINING SCHOOL, CEYLON.

From a Photograph supplied by Misses Leitch.

A Christian's Joyful End.

The life of a very lovely Christian worker was lately brought to a close by the death of Mrs. Mary Fohl Nichols, of Chambersburg, Pa. Christians who have the least fear of death would have rejoiced to hear her triumphant utterances just as she crossed the river. In life changeably sweet, trustful, and loving, the wife of a minister and mother of little ones, she proved how Jesus is able to save fully, in the midst of petty troubles, as well as in active Christian work. In the midst of life and on the summons came. She met it with a triumphant victory. As a glad day goes home, so she exclaimed to her father, "Papa, you thought you would first; but here I am going! I have had a good fight—not that my fighting was good, but the cause was so glorious. Giving each of the little ones a parting blessing with joy instead of grief, and taking a last drink of water, she said: 'I want until I drink of the crystal fountains in the Kingdom. Sing when you are away, 'Jesus, the name that charms our fears.' I have no fear.' After giving instructions as to the last rites, she expired. "Angels are coming nearer, nearer, nearer!" It seemed to those around the room was filled with heavenly presence. Calmly saying "good-bye," she went home forever.

A Deserved Reward.

European journals report the giving of a reward to a Danish peasant for peculiar noble conduct. A fire broke out in the village in which he lived, and he went with the other villagers to the help of the family whose home was burning. He distinguished himself by his heroic conduct but they proved fruitless. The next day caught fire and the man was just beginning his work of rescue there, when a message was sent to him that his own house was in flames and if he would save his furniture and books he must come without loss of a moment. "Let it burn," was his noble reply, "the sick man in this house and I am no more to leave him to die while I save my furniture." He lost his all but he saved his friend. A society in Copenhagen is giving him a reward.

ARMENIANS BLESS THE FUND!

to escape the Famine's Grasp and has Saved Thousands of Lives—Great Suffering Still Prevails but the Worst is Probably Over—Miss Kimball's Industrial Work.

ALTHOUGH there is still much suffering in many sections of Armenia—and especially in and around Harpoot, Oorfa, Sivas, Malatia, and certain other places which, only a few months ago the scenes of massacre and plunder—conclusion announced in last week's TIAN HERALD that the crisis had passed, remains substantially true.

The present, at least, the great massacre ended, and the native Armenian population are free to return to their homes and their usual occupations.
Tainted with the gloomy horror of the massacre in November and December last, the to-day finds abundant reason for hope and courage.

Christian Europe and America have the enduring gratitude and love of simple Armenians for the prompt and unselfish aid extended to the sufferers in all larger cities. For months past, the charities of the American Board have occupied almost exclusively with re-work. At the most trying time, when resources seemed to fail, THE CHRISTIAN LIFED Fund came to the rescue, and as George Kimball of Van declares, it has been "the great famine breakwater" to the general distress. Her latest reprinting below, gives a general idea of the way in which the contributions, sent to the Fund by our friends everywhere, have been put to use. The same story, in degree, is told of the Fund's relief work at Harpoot, Sivas, Arabkir, Mardin, Erzeroom, Van, Akir, Oorfa, Malatia, Erzincan and Kars. Thousands of Armenian Christians bless the Fund and its generous contributors, feeling that it interposed providentially between them, their wives and children, and death from cold and starva-

Kimball writes from Van as follows: "We constantly thank God for the fact he has raised up for us and to this great people, to help us through these terrible days. Unless we are obliged suddenly and largely increase our gifts. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund together with the small (in proportion) gifts from other sources, ought to carry through this month; but we do most earnestly beg that efforts be not relaxed so that the people tire not of giving, so that we may be able to put some of these old and persecuted people on their feet on the way to be self-supporting, when the door opens, and they can return to their ordinary occupations.

I am very glad that our sister cities had been in your sympathetic help. They have been more tragically afflicted than has been Van; but the proportion of misery is the proportion of the Armenian population, as no individual of the race in the provinces has failed of his share of persecution and robbery. Hence, as Van is the chief centre of the Armenian population, we have a burden in no way lighter than the places where massacres, etc., have taken place. As Mr. Allen is away (having gone to convey the married ladies of the mission to safer asylum in Persia), and as Dr. Reynolds is very busy with Station School and Medical work, so that he is doing quite all he can in having a general oversight of the Bread Department, I am rather single-handed in this work. I shall use all my efforts to administer the trust to the best of my ability, looking for guidance and wisdom to the All-Wise. G. W. KIMBALL."

CHILD REFUGEES FROM THE DESTROYED VILLAGES OF VAN PROVINCE

(From a Photograph forwarded from Armenia to "The Christian Herald.")

Miss Kimball's report of Relief work for the month of January (which she encloses) is as follows:

INDUSTRIAL PERSONS, FOUR YEARS.
Overseers	6
Workers	4
Examiners (House Visitors)	20
Door-keepers, Porters, etc.	16
Sizers, Master-workmen	2
Assistants	1
Carders	52
Cotton Spinners	1,000
Wool Spinners	10

Knitters.....	20
Shoemakers.....	20
Weavers of Cotton.....	156
Weavers of Woollen.....	37
TAILORING DEPARTMENT.
Cutters.....	9
Sewers.....	179
Tailors, men, & Boys of Cloth.....	3
Accountants and Overseers.....	1
IRONING DEPARTMENT.
Persons employed.....	4
BAKERY DEPARTMENT.
Overseers.....	2
Workmen.....	47
GEN'L. MANAGEMENT—DISTRICT OFFICE.
Secretaries.....	3
Distributing Assistants.....	2
Total Employees.....	472

"Now, if we reckon the Armenian pop ration

pairs of socks. While in the Tailoring Department, 5500 garments were made up, and of bedding, seventy-five pieces (coverlets, mattresses and pillows). The weekly cost of this Department approximates $950.

"During the month of January, the Department of Free Distribution of clothing used:

Woolen goods, knit and woven	575
Sewed garments	5578
Shoes	575
Pieces of bedding and carpets	99

This distribution benefited about 10,000 persons and the value of the above goods at current prices here would reach $3645. The fact that nine-tenths of these goods is manufactured by our own workmen makes the otherwise tremendous expense of this free distribution very slight, especially when compared to the very large number benefited.

"The most imperative need — that of bread for the hundreds of hungry people — is being bravely met by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Bakeries, now six in number. These are supplying 7500 pounds of bread daily to over 5000 persons. If to the estimate we made above we add this number, it will appear that we are giving the means of living to fully one-half the regular Armenian inhabitants of the city. But the recipients of free bread are to a very large extent, village refugees, and so outside the regular population of the city. The approximate weekly cost of the bakeries is $725.

In addition to this large work we are constantly called upon to aid, where only money will fill the need, as for fuel, etc., and in this way some was used during the month—a large share of this being help to poor prisoners in the Van Prison. The need is great and growing and we beg for continued and renewed efforts on the part of our supporters at home.

G. W. KIMBALL."

The American Board missionaries at Sivas (another station of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund), write, expressing the thanks of the sufferers of that section for the help extended. In the Sivas massacre 2000 Christians were slaughtered, homes were looted, and chapels, dwellings, schools, and even school-books were burned. At Gurun, 2000 were killed, and 250 brides and young girls were abducted. Peace now prevails, and the question in the villages there, as elsewhere, is one of seed supply. Thousands may have to be fed until August. At Harpoot, 10,000 families have received aid from all sources. There is still great need there, and at twelve other centres. All intending contributors to the Relief Fund are urged to forward their gifts as early as possible, as no contributions will be received after April 15.

The contributions during the week are acknowledged below:

ack $24,774.10	J. H. Berlin	5.00
Y City	S. H. S. E. Berlin	5.00
Brooklyn	L. A. C. York Village	1.00
	R. O. R.	5.00
Mashanapp	S. & F. Biggs	2.00
Williamsport	E. M. Chicago	2.00
	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Lindsay	Cash, Cold Spring	1.00
S. Brant	Cash, Cold Spring	1.00
	Cash, Cold Spring	1.00
New Castle	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
M. Grandville	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Kife, Hutchinson	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
B. Eakin's Crs.	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
W. M. Crago	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Norway	Cash, Cold Spring	5.00
N. B. N. H.	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Norwich	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Essex	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
W. Springfield	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Pepperell	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Amherst	Cash, Cold Spring	2.00
Pa.	Cash, Cold Spring	1.00
Bridgeport	Cash, Cold Spring	1.00
D. Saxton	Cash, Cold Spring	1.00
St. Ben.	For Chicago	2.00
Man.	For Chicago	2.00
Fairbanks	For Chicago	2.00
Y City	For His Sake, Moor-	1.00
Id.	field	1.00
Milport	For Jesus Sake, Mil-	1.00
Bedford	terburg	1.00
Chenango	For Jesus Sake, Moor-	1.00
S. Lake Weir	field	1.00
D. Converse	E. Beardsley	5.00
Peekskill	D. K.	1.00
Hippawa Falls	Porterville	1.00
Con.	Jamaica	3.00
Con.	Stirling	1.00
Con.	Stirling	1.00
Honolonic	Wellington	2.00
Con.	Bradford	1.00
Con.	Hiderton	1.00
Con.	Trenton	2.00
Con.	Phila	1.00
Con.	Bklyn	1.00
Con.	St. Louis	1.00
Con.	Beverly	2.00
Con.	Leek Haven	1.00
Con.	New Wilmington	5.00
Con.	Lincoln	5.00
Con.	Lancaster Co.	1.00
Con.	Manfield	5.00
Con.	Manfield	5.00
Con.	E. Pepperell	2.00
Con.	N. Y. City	2.00

Friend, Pa.	150	—	Vermont	500
" Whitehall	100	—	Washington	300
Friends Enders	175	—	West Chester	100
" Fordham	150	—	West Branch	100
" Des Moines	1100	—	Mendenhall	25
" N Y City	500	—	Jay City	46
Derby Line	1000	—	Hamilton	33 53
Dodgecomb	200	—	Hartford	100
Inasmuch Middleboro	150	—	Keyser	100
" Latrobe	100	—	Ewing	100
" Bloislyn	500	Almira & the Com-
In Christ's Name, To-		munity, N.Y.	16 25
ION Brookton	100	Orange M E Ch.
" Munhall	100	Boston	500
" Anshun	100	Bethel Church, Point	700
" Brooklyn	100	Beverly	100
" Bismarck	100	Wichita Calvinistic Ch
" Heeter	100	Jackson	19 00
" Anderson	100	Mill Creek M E Wn Sch
" Edge Creek	100	Covered at Warren
" Oboe	100	Ure	5 71
" Springfield	200	Pres & Cong. Graham	500
" W Littleton	100	N S Harmony Presb
" New Hampton	500	Church	10 00
" Weston	50	Congl Ch, Kensal	30 60
" Clarksdale	150	Congl Ch, Westminster	8 25
Read, Conn	400	Pres Ch, Fair Haven	4 00
" E S. Lodi	250	Pres Ch, Highland	10 00
" Cortland	250	Pres Ch, Ontario Ctr	700
Subj. Garrett	50	Bapt Ch, Minto	2 25
" New Bedford	250	US SS, Lower Mer-
" Denison	300	Odesa Union SS	10 00
" Springfield	500	S. Caliente	50
" Milford Ctr	500	Union Forest Pk	14 00
" A Safe, S Jacinto	200	CPSS, Wind Ridge	12 00
" Greeley	100	Orsburn S S	1 65
Sympathy, Moodus	200	Sabbath School, Los
" Rome	100	Mexico	2 00
" Northfield	100	Primary Class, Pres
Sympathizers, Jeffer-	100	S. S. Lexington	2 25
sonton	100	Eden YP SCE	4 20
Glochester Sympa-		Union YP SCE
thizers	500	High Bluff	11 00
" Rinney	500	YP SCE, Congl Ch
" Lent	100	Haver Ctr	6 50
" Northworth	200	Lincolnville YP SCE	3 18
" Prospect	100	Y P S C, Madison
" LeRoy	25	Ares Pres Ch, N J	700
" Long Beach	200	Jane Lew YP SCE	10 00
" Lane rough	100	YP SCE, 1st Pres
" Charleston	100	Ch, Deckertown	18 50
" Oberlin	100	Y P S C, Pres Ch
" Otter Bay	20	Mowtown	500
" Vernon Frame	200	Gratiot Centre YP
" Princeton	700	SCE	1 00

Jane Lew, Jr, Y P S	1 25	In memory of a loved one, Sayville	5
C E Soc, Russellville	2 25	In memory of Darling	4
Ansville C E Soc	4 00	Jessie	1
Junior C E F. Menahga	1 00	A Widow, Lauderdale	1
C E of Gelart	6 00	Mother, Son & Daug	1
C E Soc, Sayville	2 00	Her Hall	15
C E Soc, Pres Ch.		Two Sisters, South-
Boston	15 00
Hin-Lake E Soc	4 95	Two Sisters, Md	3
S E Miss-Y Soc Brew-		A Canadian	2
ster	1 00	A Birthday Gift, York	1
deposed Coal poverty	13 00	2 child'n of G H Dyer	2
R P U Bear Lake	6 00	312
King, Dugout	11 00	Y P S C E, White Lake	3
McMasters Cors	5 00	C E Soc, Bradford	2
Chantauqua Missy Soc	9 00	Ryrie	2
Children's Missy Soc		Jr C E Soc, Pres Ch.
Presby Ch, Ala	60	Iowa
Pella Dorcas Soc	5 00	C E Soc, Forbestown	3
Y P U L, Bergen Pt		Shapel C E Soc, Evans
Bapt Ch	2 00
Y P Temp & C E Soc,		Chapel Pres C E Soc	5
Yellow Springs	5 00	Jr C E Soc, Dakotah	4
Greenwood E League	5 00	Folsom C E Soc	2
Epworth, L & A Soc		Y P C E, Pilgrim
Epworth, L & A Soc	1 25	Long	2
P O Story City	27 91	C E Soc, Lerpoo	3
Adult Bible Class St		Weman's Missy Soc	3
Peters Ev Luth Ch	3 56	Westminster Presb
Class No 8, M E S S		Church, Mo	100
Vermilion	1 50	Inasmuch Gr L, N J	5
Bible Class, Riley	7 50	Bethesda Epworth
Goodwill, Belmont	20	League, Md	2
Faculty & students of		Congregational, Ont	3
Franklin College	10 00	Young People's Assn
Linden H H, Muscat		Home Missions Soc
Concordia	5 00	Reward	1
Charity, Chester	5 00	B Y P U, Manawa	5
Kind Heart, Woodland	5 00	Ladies Aid, So, Con-
Trinity, Pa	5 00		100
Matt 25:40, Sharon Chr	3 00	Primary Class, M E
Disciple, Arapahoe	1 00	S S, Shelbyville	1
Port District, Richmond		Beverly, Ind	1
Port Gr L, Webster	25	Selfors
Christiana Union, Soc	23 90	Enders & Subr, Wor-
St. Paul			20
Love of the Lord,		King's Daughter, So
Gloversville	1 24	Gardner
Salvation Army Sis-		Widow's Mite, Greens-
ter's Ont	25 00	boro, N C	1
Lord's Money, Port		Wheat Valley	3
Myrtle	5 00	Homer, Miss, Pa	2
Temper One	50	Interested, Wadham's
An Afflicted One Ont	25	Mills

The Lord's Money	50	Morris, Miss T E	2 00
Isolated	25	Robinson, Florence	50
Isolated, Montrose	25	Telfer, R C	1 00
Thanks Offering	1 00	Ward, Pat G	1 00
Family being led by		Wendland, Rev W H	1 00
Jesus, Great Bond	1 00	John C F	1 00
Anonymous, Belleville	1 00	Edward, Earning	50
In Remembrance, Mass	2 00	Mrs C & Daughter	1 50
J Heman, Wayner	25 40	Prima	1 50
Unworthy person,		Mother & Daughter
Dunkirk	5 00	Butler	40
The Fairy Queen, N H	1 00	Mother & daughter
Isolated Family	4 00	Selden	50
He knows, Mich	2 00	Mother & daughter
Isolated, Christ Avilla	2 00	Mrs C G	1 00 00
Sister in Christ, Wi-		Mother & daughter,
lapa	10 00	Reisterstown	2 00
An Invalid, New	1 00	Mother, A W & daughter, Gordon	75
An Invalid, Essex	1 00	Ogle, Jos	1 00
Two little Girls, St		Hampstead Presby
James	22	Ch through Women
Two sisters, Ont	1 00	Miss S	6 71
4 little sisters, Merced	50	Wise, Mrs Leslie	1 00
Husband & wife, Sp		Wishart, Mrs S P	1 50
Spokane	1 00	Wishart, daughter
Brother & sister in		Wilkinson, Anna R	5 00
Christ, Rock Creek	1 00	Wilkinson, Mrs E	1 00
W G Hathaway	2 00	Williams, Mrs A	1 00
Cash, Banning	1 00	Williamson, G A	1 00
"	1 50	Williamson, Mrs J F	5 00
"	1 00	Williamson, Mr & Mrs	2 00
"	50	Wiley, Mrs A G	1 00
"	50	Wily, S K	1 00
"	50	Wily, Mrs S K	1 00
"	50	Wolcott, Mrs L A dan	5 00
A Sister in Christ,		Wood, Mrs D D	2 50
Banning	50	Wood, I W	25
Carpenter, Mrs R	50	Wood, John	25
Cass, E D	50	Wright, C B	2 00
Darwin, A	1 00	Wright, J P	2 00
Darwin, W K	1 00	Wray, Mrs Thos	2 00
Franklin, D A	1 00	Wright, Mary D	50
Gerington, W H	1 00	Yates, Mrs	2 00
Fontaine, J R	2 00	Yates, I A	50
Gorman, Fred	50	Young, J	1 00
Grand, P F	1 50	Young, Mrs L	1 00
Hyde, W F	1 50	Zook, Mrs J M	1 00
Hargraves, T	1 00	John & Emma, D	1 00
Inglis, A Mr & Mrs	2 00	Stoughton, I F A	1 00
King, J	50	Stoughton, Emma J	1 00
Lemon, Mrs	50
Lewis, Mrs	25
McKean, Mrs	50
Mackay, R	1 00

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage

EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and business money orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, one cent and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers.—We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by printer's errors.

Change of Date.—It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Published for the Proprietor by Louis Klopsch, New York City.

Now is the Time.

WHAT we do with reference to a blissful immortality, we had better be doing. You cannot trust these east winds. You cannot trust the north wind. Aye! you cannot trust even the south wind. On any one of them our last ailment may ride in. Not by morbid broodings over funeral and hearseful consideration, but by prompt and intelligent alliance with the Christ who has vanquished the last enemy, let us so live that sudden death will be a quick opening of the gates of rapture and re-union. Living right, we all die right. Blessed are they who pass out of the terrible wintry blasts, like those which these nights smite the earth, into the eternal summer of saintly and divine companionship. March night exchanged for June morning!

Away With Rum!

IF I could do it, I would shut every rum shop on earth with a belt that nothing short of the earthquake of the Last Judgment could unfasten. The rum traffic is the worst business that ever smoked up from hell. Yet the Republican and Democratic parties are down on their knees before the demijohn, worshipping, and practically saying, "Oh, thou almighty Rum Jug! We worship thee. Have mercy on us and tell us what to do, and we will do it. Give us office, or we die. Let some of thy drippings fall on us? and thine shall be the glory, forever and ever, amen." Things will go on and grow worse, until all good men of all parties will combine, and rising above base partnership, ring the death knell of rum. You cannot at the elections shirk the responsibility. A sailor who should roll over in his hammock to take another nap when the sharp whistle of the boatswain gave the call to the deck, or to the ratlines, arguing that as the other sailors will attend to their duties it therefore makes no difference to his attendance of duty, would deserve to be put in irons. On board the ship of state, such a man has a rope or crank which he must lay hold of. Failing to do that, he deserves to be set ashore or transferred to some fragment of a wrecked monarchy. He has no business here, where God and America expect every voter to do his duty. I have no patience with those people who sit and growl and grumble and growl and grumble and growl and grumble, and make no effort to make things better. Vote you must whenever the opportunity opens.

Let carriages go out and fetch in the invalid and the aged to the polls. There is no more patriotic scene than the octogenarian, on crutches or couch, at the ballot-box, helping to decide whether his children and grandchildren shall live in a country righteously governed or a land cursed with baleful influences. When either of the political parties comes to be immaculate, then I take the head of the ticket as indicative that the entire list of nominees are fit for election; but as things now are, the words, "Democrat" and "Republican" decide nothing for me. I have almost always voted a "split" ticket.

Some men pride themselves on voting the entire ticket of their party without reference to the qualifications of the nominees, as though a man should go to an apothecary store, and needing one medicine on a shelf, should order the druggist to give him some of all the medicines on that shelf. You tell him there are medicines on that shelf that will do him damage. "Oh," he says, "I pride myself on the fact that when I take one medicine on a shelf I take the whole shelf,—rhubarb, and calomel, and jalap, and belladonna, and jubbe paste, and lozenges, and strychnine." But do not take without discount what men of one party think of the nominees of the other party. There are legitimate ways of finding out what are the qualifications of all the candidates for the different offices. Never vote for a bad man, whether he thinks as you do or not. You cannot depend on a bad man to do right. At the first temptation he will fly the track and sell out to the enemy.

Daniel Webster was an able Secretary of State, but nobody would have proposed him for Secretary of the Treasury. Some men are born with senatorial manners, and are not at home until they reach a senatorial position, while others have post-mortem physiognomies and show they were intended for coroners, and really enjoy a funeral. The accident of politics often hurls into office men unfitted for their position. No cruel man should be a jailer. No merciless man should be a sheriff. No man of ungovernable temper should be a policeman. No bribeable man should be a legislator. No man unable to take in all the interests of a city should be a mayor, or all the interests of a state should be a governor, or all the interests of the North, South, East or West, should be a president. In such matters abstain from all personalities. Do not use epithets: you will be sorry for it after the struggle is over. Do not style the opposite candidates knaves, or blasphemers, or sots. You gain no votes by abusiveness. Slanders react. My father said it was political persecution that gave Andrew Johnson an overwhelming majority. It is human nature to sympathize with the under dog in the fight. Let all contests be open and fair and honorable, though they be persistent. If you put off your robe of Christian character until after an election you may never get it on again. A religion that will not help a man and preserve his equipoise during an election, is no religion at all.

Cheering Signs.

NEVER in the history of the world have there been so many Christian men prominent in military life and in governmental circles as to-day, and the time approaches when all the great affairs of the world will have in cabinet and in the field a leadership positively and gloriously Christian. It is easy to go ahead when the way seems clear and our course is applauded, but not so easy to face opposition and evil counsel of others, and march right on, impelled by the sense of duty, whether we rush upon victory or death. If this world is ever brought to God, it will be by men who have the spirit of self-abnegation, which means, "It makes but little difference what becomes of me, if only the cause triumph." Prudence in Christian work is the only grace that is overdone. We are so afraid of doing something out of the regular line and of arousing obnoxious criticism, that we do nothing. The spirit of God will be poured out with such power that there will be whole armies of brave men who will march out to take this world for God, and the last fortress of heathendom and oppression will fall before the advance of righteousness.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

All contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Armenian Relief Fund should be forwarded to 92 Bible House, New York, as soon as possible, as the need is urgent. No contributions will be received after April 15.

J. Anthony, Newark, N. J. A friend writes me that he has got your premium library and urges me to do likewise. What books does it contain and what must I pay?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Premium Library contains ten choice volumes, which are given with the paper for one year's subscription at $3. They are as follows:

1. Around the Tea Table.....T. DeWitt Talmage.
2. Book of Golden Deeds.....Charlotte M. Yonge.
3. Readings and Recitations.....T. DeWitt Talmage.
4. Golden Treasury.....T. DeWitt Talmage.
5. The Children's Portion.....Shoppell.
6. How to Get On in the World.....C. C. Johnson.
7. Capital Stories by Am. Authors.....Hawthorne.
8. American Citizens' Handbook.....M. M. M.
9. Budget of Christmas Tales.....Charles Dickens.
10. Parlor Amusements and Etiquette.....Sandison.

These books come in a handsome book case, and are sent, all charges prepaid, with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a year at $3. This Library aggregates over 3,000 pages.

Mrs. Matilda Rance, Waterford, N. Y. What do you consider the best helps in the study of the Bible?

The best helps of all are those bound in with the Teachers' Bibles, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gives as premiums to its $3 subscribers.

M. H. W., Letts' Corners, Ind. Are the Armenians real Christians or is that a term applied to them?

Their Christianity, though simple in many ways, is as real as that of any nation, and has been so dear to them that thousands have welcomed death rather than relinquish it.

T. Y. McClure, Eldora, Ia. How long was Noah in building the Ark? How do you find the time?

It cannot be stated conclusively. In Gen. 6: 3, however, we are told that the Lord afforded a respite of a hundred and twenty years, during which Noah sought to bring the people to repentance, and it is assumed in I. Peter 3: 20 that, during either the whole or a large part of that time, the ark was preparing.

"Reader," Yarmouth, Me. In your reference to Irving in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD do you refer to Washington Irving?

No, to Edward Irving, the eloquent Scotch preacher, who was tried for heresy and excommunicated in 1833. He was a friend of Chalmers and an early companion of Carlyle, one of the most gifted orators of his time, but was judged fanatical and heretical by his brother ministers.

Christian. 1. Is there anything in the Bible which commands or denounces astrology? 2. May not the planets' influence on a life be one of God's plans? 3. If so, would it be wrong to study it?

1. Yes; all occult and mysterious studies whereby the so-called seers sought to penetrate the veil of the future are denounced in Scripture, and astrology is included as one of them. (See Is. 47: 13, 14; Dan. 1: 20; and 2: 27, 28; Is. 8: 9.) 2. Such is the astrological contention but it has no foundation in reason, science or revelation. 3. If it were so, beyond a doubt, it would not be wrong to study it. Not being so, it is wasting time and credulity on a superstition that belongs to another age.

J. T. J., East Steuben, N. Y. Were the men mentioned in Mark 6: 7 actually Christ's brothers?

It is impossible to speak positively as to their parentage. The plain meaning of the passage and others similar to it is that they were the sons of Joseph and Mary. But if they were the sons of Joseph by a former wife, as many believe, they would probably have been spoken of in the same way. The fact of Christ committing his mother to the care of John, when he was upon the Cross, seems to imply that Mary had no other son to care for her, whereas we know that the James mentioned by Mark certainly survived Jesus, even if the others did not. In the absence of definite statements in the New Testament, the question cannot be settled with certainty.

I. H. R., Minden, Kans. Holding that the writings of Paul are inspired by the Holy Spirit, I am sure that the prohibition of women preaching can be limited to place or time.

Many people are of your opinion. Nevertheless, you must admit that Paul dealt with current subjects which were agitating the Church at the time, and his remarks were intended, in the first instance, for its guidance under its peculiar circumstances. He evidently had no idea of the long time during which his Epistles would guide the Church. He expected that Christ would soon come and probably during his own lifetime. You cannot imagine that if Paul were writing in this day, he would devote so much space and time to the discussion of the question about eating meat offered to idols as he did in his Epistles to the Romans and Corinthians. Nor we think would he, if he were writing to a young minister in the days of the apostle, as he urged Timothy, to drink wine instead of water. Nor is it likely that he would write about marriage as he did in the seventh chapter of first Corinthians. The circumstances have arisen demanding measures, which should be based on Bible principles, but not on slavish bondage to letter. It is certain that the chief reason why in Paul's day it was inexpedient for a woman to take a prominent part in the Church services, do not now exist, and we believe that if Paul were writing in our day he would not prohibit their doing so.

H. M. H., Melrose, N. Y. How is it possible for a man to be saved if his work is destroyed? mention in I. Cor. 3: 15?

A man is not saved by his works. He is saved through faith in Christ and because Christ redeemed him. He may be rewarded for his works and he may miss that reward if he has performed them in an unworthy motive, or in a wrong manner, as through a desire for his own glory, or his own enrichment. He will not lose his salvation when altogether a different matter from the reward.

W. Varney, Pittsfield, Me. 1. Is there any account of the manner of crucifixion? 2. Was the origin of the feast of the Passover Christ was crucified? 3. How many Christians perished in the massacre at the birth of Christ? 4. On what day of the week was Christ crucified?

1. Cicero, Horace, Plutarch and other historians refer to it. The manner varied in some instances the cross was erected and the criminal bound or nailed to it. In other cases he was laid on the ground and the cross was nailed to it and afterwards it was set right in the hole in the ground prepared for it. 2. You will find it fully described in the twelfth chapter of Exodus. 3. It is computed on the basis of the estimated population of Bethlehem at the time that the number did not exceed twenty, and was probably not more than ten. 4. A theory has been advanced that Christ was crucified on a Wednesday, but the facts in support of it are few and untrustworthy. There seems no valid reason for denying the traditional belief that it was on a Friday. (See Mark 15: 42.)

"Stranger," British Columbia. What assurance have I that certain sins committed in the past and repented of, are forgiven?

Is not the assurance of God's Word sufficient? Such texts as Isaiah 55: 7; Jer. 31: 12, 13, 21; John 3: 14-21, should satisfy you that God will fulfil his promises. These are not exceptional, but are in accord with the whole tenor of the Bible. It is dishonour to God to doubt. All that we know of God through the teachings of his servants, especially as Christ revealed him to us, leads us to believe that he longs to forgive his sinful creatures. He welcomes the penitent sinner. A loving father welcomes his repentant child. He would not be right to forgive the unrepentant, and we cannot expect him to do that. He would be treating sin as a light and trifling thing. But even here he helps us by his grace to those who know that they are feeling more sorrow than they do. He knows the hardness of the heart and gives the Holy Spirit to those who need his convicting power. By giving his Son to die for the sins of the world, he has shown his desire that all sinners be saved. If you believe that and go to him honestly grieving for your sins and pleading for forgiveness for Christ's sake, you may be sure it will be granted you.

J. F. W., Cape May. This has been repeatedly explained in THE MAIL-BAG.—H. C. D., N. Y. Va. We do not know the author.—Thomas S. Valley Head, Ala. The statement you have made of those absurd assertions which are capable of proof or disproof. It is doubtless true.—J. H. No, we think not.—A. H. K., Maysville, Ky. Generally speaking, yes. 2. Nothing would it if his conscience leads that way. 3. We tell.—J. A. Johnston, Papack, N. Y. Probable. Address her at Salem, Me. Marie, M. C. G., Talladega, Ala. You will find the answer in almost any secular cyclopaedia.—H. L. L., Lexington, Me. Usury is expressly denounced in Scripture and cannot be justified on Christian principles.—Mrs. O. L. M., Herington, Kan. It is nowhere so stated. See Mark 16: 16; John 14: 15 and many like passages.—F. E., Maysville, Ky. Write to the Christian Herald, New York City.—Berwick, Pa. They are only for residents of the city.—Mrs. E. B., Hettick, Ill. Every letter announced, the c. s. t.—Margaret H., Puckett, Ill. He was, of course.—Subscriber, Traer would occupy too much space. See any good encyclopedia.—Reader, Bensenville, Ill. offer is still open.—Mrs. C. L. Crossman, Bensenville, Ill. Can use good reading material in Christian work among the poor.—Subscriber, Lyons, N. Y. 1. It is these doubtful and untrustworthy things that are left alone by Christians. 2. Yes, unless it is a work of necessity or mercy.—A. S., Kansas. We cannot advise. Consult a physician.—John C. D., Pendleton, Ore. Yes, he is a real man, he can hear the faintest metallic sound.—Constant Reader, Lancaster, Pa. 1. Write to the Christian Herald, Northfield, Mass. 2. Not to our knowledge.—Alice Rodgers, Ozark, Ark. Do not discourage by misdeeds sinners. They will do better if you do not disturb and unsettle your own even to the point of lying.—H. Krupp, Rensselaer, N. Y. Thanks for suggestions. The figure is correct.—M. K. T., Greenfield, Mass. As to latest reports, Mr. Gladstone's eyes are certainly well.—Mrs. Ellen H. Pierce, LaCrosse, Wis. For a sermon and a devotion.—J. C. M., Maysville, Ill. The thing is untrustworthy.—Oswego, Mich. 1. We don't explain it, we see the obvious meaning of Scripture on the subject and find it enough. 2. There are very many people who give more than the tenth.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Partition of Siam.

SIAM'S two powerful neighbors have apparently made an amicable division of the large section of territory which lay between their boundaries. It was simultaneously announced in London that the joint Commission sent by the French and English governments to arrange the boundaries of a new state between their respective territories, had failed to agree. After the King of Siam had accepted the terms forced on him in 1893 by the French, he was politically a vassal in the hands of France and it seemed to be only a question of such magnanimity whether Siam should retain even a nominal independence. England, however, objected to France acquiring the whole of Siam. Having annexed Siam and the Shan States on the north and west of Siam, England foresaw that in short time the French advance from Siam on the east would bring the two powers face to face and probably involve disputes which might lead to war. It was decided to establish a neutral zone between them, and the joint Commission consisting of two Frenchmen and two Englishmen was sent out last year to survey the ground and define the boundaries of the new state. It remained in Asia three months without effecting the purpose for which it was sent. The diplomats then resumed their negotiations and have now decided to divide the territory between themselves. The river Mong is to form the new boundary, England taking the territory to the west of the river and France that to the east of it. Siam now, therefore, has England on the one side and France on the other, while on the north of the two nations are contiguous. Possibly, mutual jealousy may prevent further encroachments, but this arrangement has an ominous aspect, as it shows Siam how easily a difficulty between the great Powers may be settled to the detriment. In the space of less than ten years Siam has been reduced from an area of five hundred thousand square miles, to an area of little more than fifty thousand. Thus in Asia, as in Africa, the process of appropriating the lands of weak nations is being pursued by the European Powers, regardless of the rights of the peoples concerned. The only concern which there is any evidence on the part of the European Powers, is that no one should get more than its share of the plunder. Happily, this international rivalry and depredation is not to go on to the end of the world. The Christian looks hopefully forward to the time when the promise shall be fulfilled:

Kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve him. Daniel 7: 27.

Wedding Garments.

An officer in the Immigration Department in New York relates an incident of a broken marriage contract owing to a lack of suitable attire. A middle-aged man who earned his living as a cellar-digger and whose clothes were muddy, was seen loitering around Castle Garden, the old days before the immigrants were taken to Ellis Island. With him was an elderly woman, evidently his mother. They were waiting for the steamer Bolivia. The man said he expected his wife was on board. When the steamer arrived, a bright, clean, intelligent man girl was among the passengers and was at once picked out by the man and his mother. There was some disputing between them, and finally an appeal was made to the officers. The girl said that the man was not her husband, but she had come out to be married to him. But she did not want to marry a man so dirty as he and would not marry him. The photograph he had sent her represented a man in decent clothes. The officers advised the man to go and change his dress, but he said he had no other clothes. The photographer had lent him the suit in which he was photographed. He insisted that the marriage should take place. He had sent forty dollars to Italy, stating that he wanted a wife and the mother of the girl had accepted it, paying twenty-four dollars for her passage and keeping the sixteen herself. The girl admitted the truth of the statement, but finding that she was not compelled by American law to marry the man, she persisted in her refusal. She agreed, however, to refund the twenty-four dollars for her passage, as soon as she was able to earn it, and with this promise the man had to be content. If he had known how much importance the girl would attach to personal appearance in her husband, he would have contrived to get some better clothes for the occasion. In spiritual matters, the difficulty is the converse of his. It is difficult to get men to come to Christ as they are. Many delay coming to him in the hope of getting rid of their pollution first, forgetting that Christ said:

CHANTABOON IN SIAM.

I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. (Matt. 9: 13.)

A Prisoner's Fortune.

A strange discovery was made on March 12 by the police of the Central Police Office in New York. They were searching a prisoner who had been committed to the Tombs on the charge of defrauding a man of two dollars. Among the papers taken from his pocket was a letter with a black border. As it bore a different name and address from those the prisoner had given when arraigned, the police read the letter to see if it furnished a clue to his identity. The records of the Tombs combined with the recollections of the warden, proved that the prisoner's real name was the one on the letter, as he had previously been convicted under that name. His offences were petty thefts and drunkenness. The letter was from the prisoner's mother in England and notified him of the death of her brother, a wealthy mill-owner near Manchester. The deceased, the letter said, had left all his property, worth $469,000, to the writer and her two daughters and her son. The prisoner's share was smaller than his sisters', his uncle being aware of his dissipated habits. But fifty thousand dollars was left to him absolutely, and a much larger sum was put in trust for him, which he would receive if he abstained from liquor for a specified time. The prisoner did not seem elated over his good fortune. He said he had no use for money except to buy rum with it. He thought he should use it to open a saloon on the Bowery, but he added sadly, "Then I expect I shall drink myself to death." To most men the change from poverty to wealth would have brought joy, but this heir knew that his inheritance would only expedite his ruin. It is not so with those who become heirs of God. Their joy is based on the assurance that they will be made Meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. Col. 1: 12.

A Test for Diamonds.

In a recent lecture before the students of Columbia College, New York, Dr. M. I. Pupin showed some remarkable effects of the new Roentgen rays. A glass tube was used shaped like the letter T, from which the air was exhausted. At two places—the base and left arm of the tube, a platinum wire entered and terminated in a disk. When a current of electricity of high tension was applied there was a distinct luminescence in the tube between the two disks. If the luminosity was diminished the rays from the disk in the left arm of the tube instead of following the electricity to the disk in the base of the tube passed across to the right arm and showed the peculiar blue tint known as fluorescence. Dr.

A SIAMESE HOUSEHOLD.

Pupin showed the photograph of a hand perforated with shot. A light shadow indicated the flesh, a darker shadow was made by the bones of the hand and black marks showed where the shot lodged. Another result was shown in a photograph of a diamond ring. The setting came out black and clear, but the stone was so light a shadow as to be scarcely perceptible. A ring holding an imitation diamond was also photographed by the rays. Though the stone was so like a real diamond that only an expert would know it to be false, the difference in the photograph was very decided. It was distinct and black like the setting of the ring. This showed that the new rays may be used to test the genuineness of diamonds. It will be so with the light that will penetrate the soul before the judgment seat of God. Men may take the name of Christians and be able to impose on the Church and the world forgetting that at the last

All things that are reprove are made manifest by the light. Eph. 5: 13.

A Tomb Not a Dwelling.

A decision of the Court of Appeals of Albany, N. Y., was quoted in a suit a few days ago in New York. As there was some doubt as to the pertinency of the decision, the counsel had the record examined. The investigation showed that some eight years ago the Court had declared that a tomb was not a dwelling within the meaning of the law. The question arose out of the conviction of an embalmer for burglary. He was a witness in a suit as to the properties of some chemicals used in his business. It was essential for him to be able to state whether the preparation kept a corpse from decomposition for a specified length of time. Referring to his books, he found that he had used the preparation on a body that he prepared for burial same months before. He applied to the family for permission to open the vault and examine the body. The application was very repugnant to them, as the dead girl had been greatly beloved, and they regarded the proposal as little short of sacrilege. They therefore refused permission. The undertaker, thereupon broke into the vault and ascertained the facts. He was arrested, charged with burglary, and was convicted. An appeal was taken and the higher court reversed the sentence on the ground that a tomb was not a dwelling. The decision accords with the teaching of the Bible. Some men act as if the tomb would be their final dwelling-place, but true wisdom looks elsewhere for a dwelling and through Christ learns to say:

We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. II. Cor. 5: 1.

BRIEF NOTES.

In Response to Numerous Inquiries which we are daily receiving, we wish to have it distinctly understood that the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, 52 times, and the large type, International Teachers' Self-Pronouncing Bible, leather-lined, red under gold edges, silk sewed, is still open. These beautiful Bibles will be sent, together with a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for $3, as long as the supply lasts.

Mr. Heli Chatelain has published in pamphlet form a brief statement of the horrors of African slavery and of the proposed work of the Philanthropic Liberator's League. It can be obtained by addressing Mr. Chatelain, 511 United Charities Building, New York.

Mr. Leonard Weaver has been laboring at Bellefonte, Pa., under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. and the W. C. T. U. "Such a time of blessing," says a correspondent, "has never been experienced in the town before." The meetings were held in the Court-house, which was crowded. The converts came from all classes and are of all ages.

Mr. Edward Kimball, well known throughout the country by his work in church finances and in the raising of church debts, has met with a serious accident by falling on the ice. The physician, however, hopes that he will recover, though his recovery is likely to be tedious.

Rev. Dr. Pierson, has been having successful meetings in Dublin and other towns in Ireland, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance Committee.

A Chinese Christian Newspaper will appear in the course of this year in Canton under the name of Light. The editors of this new paper will be two Christian preachers—Wong Yuk Che, in Hong Kong, and Au Fung Chi, in Canton.

Bethany Church, Philadelphia, of which Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman D.D., has again become pastor, had a very joyful season on March 15. At the communion service on that day, one hundred and forty persons were received into fellowship and sat down at the Lord's Table.

The Young Women's Christian Association of New York has been celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary by a great meeting in Carnegie Hall. The Association has done a very useful work in helping girls in the city by its educational classes, as well as by its distinctive Christian work. It is badly in need of funds to extend its work.

At Dr. Barnardo's Homes in East London, over 8,000 children, gathered chiefly from the destitute, have been trained to a better life, and emigrated to Canada to a sphere of usefulness, since the commencement of his work thirty years ago. Over 4,000 children are now being maintained and trained at the homes.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has the happiness of announcing the complete extinction of its debt. It was feared that the heavy burden of $115,000 would involve a restriction of its work, but the churches and private friends have come to the rescue and the whole sum has been contributed. The Board is entitled to the congratulations of the whole Christian community.

A Great Convention of Young People's Societies was held recently at Los Angeles, Cal. The Christian Endeavor Societies, the Epworth Leagues and Baptist Unions of Southern California, all sent delegates. Simpson Tabernacle was crowded at all the meetings and overflow meetings were held in the First Congregational Church. Mr. J. D. Sawyer and Mr. Stebbins had charge of the musical part of the programme. Rev. J. A. B. Simpson preached the Convention sermon.

Ballington Booth's New Organization is called God's American Volunteers. Each branch of the Volunteers is to be called a Post, and the place of its meetings an Armory. The flag has a white ground emblematic of purity, having in the centre a five-pointed star containing a cross, emblematic of hope and sacrifice. The Union in the upper corner near the staff is a blue field with as many white stars as there are States. The motto is "The Lord our Banner." The uniform and conduct of the Volunteers will probably be patterned after those of the Salvation Army. Commander and Mrs. Booth are emphatic in declaring that they will not antagonize the Salvation Army.

A Dish of "Fou-fou."

One of the Dainties of the Native African Cuisine—Little Girls as Cooks.

HERE are many dishes prepared by the women of so-called savage or semi-savage countries that would not be distasteful were they introduced in civilized lands. Missionaries and travelers tell us of the wonderfully toothsome way of cooking fish and chicken, and still others dilate on the appetizing native fashion of preparing fruits and cereals. It is not to be supposed that tribes and nations that have enjoyed centuries of pastoral existence, even though they have not come in contact with what we regard as civilizing influences, are wholly ignorant of the culinary art.

In the photograph reproduced on this page, there is presented a group of young West African girls preparing "fou-fou." Unlike the young women of very many families in our own land who would not condescend to learn the menial art of the kitchen, preferring to leave it to some drudge, the girls of Africa regard good cooking as the highest accomplishment to which a woman can aspire. To be a clever cook is therefore the ambition of all the demoiselles of Angola, Liberia, and the Congo.

"Fou-fou" is a national dish composed of ingredients indigenous to Africa. It is made with the pisang (a species of banana), and the igname, a root with a taste not unlike that of the potato. It is mixed with boiling water, placed in a wooden mortar and pounded into a paste, which a young girl turns adroitly at every second stroke of a wooden pestle in the hands of another girl. When it has attained the proper consistency, it is formed into a ball and is then eaten with a very peppery soup. The best fou-fou soups are prepared with the nuts of the palm-tree.

There is a touch of romance about this tropical out-door kitchen—just the sort of romance one sees in connection with out-door life anywhere. But it is only possible in perfection in equatorial lands, where the open air can be made to serve as kitchen, dairy and dining-room the year round.

Winter Comfort in Japan.

Writing from Japan, an American missionary, Mary Deyo, gives this interesting description of a "cottage meeting" in winter: "On entering the house we get down on hands and knees and bow our heads to the floor two or three times in response to a similar salutation from the hostess, and then are ushered into a room where little flat cushions are arranged around on the floor, and after bowing again we are repeatedly urged to sit by the 'kotatsu.' This is a very important feature of the winter life in Japan. The kotatsu is a table in the floor from one to two feet square; in this an iron pot is sunk in which live charcoal is piled. Then a wooden frame or rack, big enough to cover the hole and about a foot high, is placed over it, and over all is thrown a large, thick quilt, the edges of which spread far out into the room. This is the heating apparatus of the house, and around it the family spend all their leisure time. The method of sitting is to put either one's feet or knees to the fire and draw the quilt up as far as possible over lap, hands, and arms. On top of the quilt, where it falls over the frame, is often put a large, square, polished board, which serves as a table, and at one prayer-meeting, where were only seven present, we all sat up to the 'kotatsu,' and with hands and knees well under the quilt, and Bibles and hymn-books lying before us on this table, we joined in prayer and praise."

The Sin of Luxury.

In a well-conducted Christian home, the tendency to luxury ought to be repressed and the sin of vain show and selfish indulgence impressed early upon the children. Luxury—that is the possession of or enjoyment of those things that we do not need and which detract from strength and purity of character. "Luxury, out of place everywhere, is especially inconsistent with a Christian profession," writes H. W. Gleason. "How can the followers of him who had not where to lay his head "family pew," expressed phases of the same life.

Very pleasant associations are connected with the family pew. The memory of home is there. The influence of the grave and reverent father and of the tender and equally reverent mother is with it. The wholesome restraint of that feature of the worship made an abiding impression on the mind. We regret, says a writer in The United Presbyterian, that the family pew is disappearing from the churches. In the city, the children attend the Sabbath School and only too often go home. The sons, as they get a little older, seek some other place of sitting. The father and the mother, and it may be the daughters, are there, but the pew is only partly filled. Separated from the family pew, the children find it easier to go to some other church, or, it may be, to remain at home; or, it is only one step farther to begin to wander on the streets. After awhile the parents ask, "Where are our children?" but they cannot get them back to the old family pew."

Mistaken Ambitions.

Ambition is of two kinds: one of which is laudable and deserving of encouragement, and the other is misdirected. It is a common observation among discontented people, that the average individual most admires what he does not possess, and most desires to fill a position for which he is to pensable. Therefore, the busiest person must pause to breathe, and so be able to live longer and work the harder.

Comfort One Another.

COMFORT one another;
For the way is growing dreary,
The feet are often weary,
And the heart is very sad.
There is heavy burden-bearing,
When it seems that none are caring,
And we half forget that ever we were glad.

Comfort one another

With the hand-clasp close and tender,
With the sweetness love can render,
And the look of friendly eyes.

Do not wait with grace unspoken;
While life's daily bread is broken,
Gentle speech is oft like manna from the sky.

Comfort one another;

There are words of music ringing
Down the ages, sweet as singing
Of the happy choirs above.

Ransomed saint and mighty angel
Lift the grand, deep-voiced evangel
Where forever they are praising the Eternel Love.
—MARGARET E. SANGS.

Household Servants.

IN these days one hears much of brotherhood of man, but very little of the sisterhood of woman. The most interesting article in the American Journal of Sociology, Jane Addams, a thoughtful writer, has this to say regarding the great social gap that exists between the mistress of a household and the "help" of the family. "The 'new girl' often seems 'queer' to her employer's family. She does not care to mingle socially with the people in whose household she is employed, as the girl in the country when she 'works for' a country neighbor often does, and she suffers horribly from loneliness. This is some instinctive dread of social isolation is so strong that, as every intelligence office can testify, the finding of situations is easier or more difficult just in proportion as the employer offers more or less companionship. Thus, the easy situation to fill in the city house with five or six employees, shading off into the difficult suburban home with one, and the utterly impossible in the country house. . . . The plan of buying cooked food from an outside kitchen and of having more and more of the household product relegated to the factory, will probably come to the comparatively poor people in the city, who feel most keenly the failure of the present system. They already consume a much larger proportion of canned goods and bottled wares and 'prepared meats' than the more prosperous people do, and cause they cannot command the skill of the time for the more tedious preparation of the raw material. It is comparatively easy for an employer to manage household industry with a cook, a maid, a dress, a waitress, etc. The difficulties begin when the family income is so small that but one person can be employed in the household for all these varied functions, and the difficulties increase and grow most insurmountable as they fall altogether upon the mother of the family, who is living in a flat, or worse still, in a tenement house, where one stove and one set of utensils must be put to all sorts of fit or unfit, making the living room of the family a horror in summer, and perfectly insupportable on rainy washing days in winter. Such a woman is living in a complicated age, totally without the differentiation of functions and utensils which age demands. All over the country serious experiments are being made to organize the conditions of farm life, that farmers may live in villages, where they may be sustained some of the higher forms of education and social civilization. All women again fall in this time of reorganization, as they utterly failed to reorganize their half of the world's work, upon the introduction of the factory system? Will they utterly disregard the girl within their household, and when she demands a better life, and leaves that household, will they weakly continue to complain, rather than make a vigorous effort for bringing household industry to the trend of the times? To fail to apprehend the tendency of this age, and to fail to adapt the condition of an industry to it, is to leave that industry ill adjusted and belated."

YOUNG NATIVE AFRICAN COOKS PREPARING A MEAL OF "FOU-FOU."

and who bade his disciples adopt his sacrifice as a standard of love, justify themselves in the possession of elegant mansions, costly furniture, expensive wardrobes, splendid equipages and sumptuous tables, while a single human being on the face of the earth is suffering for the necessities of life? The claim that these things belong to the natural order of social development, that they betoken a high state of civilization, and that they may properly be enjoyed as contributing to the general welfare, is utterly false. The grade of civilization we possess is not determined by the number of our marble palaces, but by the extent of the diffusion of our general intelligence and prosperity."

The Old Family Pew.

It isn't as common or as much thought of as it was in our father's or grandfather's time, the old family pew, yet the good old custom is still pretty generally retained in a great many country towns and villages. Indeed, in some churches, the same pew has been held by the same families through two or more generations. The pew and the family were associated, for the family all occupied it at every service; the father at the end, next the aisle, the mother at the other end, and the children between, the little one commonly nearer the mother. To have a pew meant to have a place of sitting for the family, and the children took their places in it as naturally as they went into the church. It was the home carried to the church. "Family religion," "family worship," the tally unfitted. This tendency should be explained to the young by way of salutary caution. They should be taught never to despise training, and to recognize the fact that no amount of mere liking for any business or profession, will take its place. Yet there are many smart but unskilled persons of education and training in that calling, who imagine they can accomplish results to be reached only after years of patient training. In all such efforts, the outcome is but a counterfeit presentment of what it would have been had the trained mind and hand directed it. It may have the form and figure, but it lacks the rare touch that makes the whole strong and effective.

Don't Yield to Worry.

Worry has probably more victims than work, and this is equally true, whether it be said of the home, the workshop, the office, or the farm. In our own country, more women yield to this form of prostration than men. They work while strength holds out and, if they hold a responsible position, they are apt to feel that they are indispensable there and so cling to it alone instead of asking others to share it with them, or training younger persons to be ready to step into their places when the time comes for rest. One of the best lessons, healthwise, for capable men and women to learn, is that there are "just as good fish in the sea as ever were caught." It may sound like an inappreciative sentiment; but it is magnifying the human race at large, though it may seem to belittle the individual. No man or woman is indis-

The Gift of Life.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor pic for the Week Beginning April 5.
att. 10 : 34-39.

CONTINUANCE of life, if that were all men had to hope for through Christ, would not be an unalloyed blessing. This life is so full of disappointments and sorrows and troubles of various kinds that there would be small ground for rejoicing if we learned only that it would be continued beyond the grave. To live on as we live here, to have no existence in present conditions indefinitely extended, would be a boon craved by few. In extreme old age there is generally a weariness that welcomes death. Nor is the weariness always the result of physical debility. It is often the weariness of a soul that has found bitterness in every cup, has learned that the best the earth affords, gives no abiding satisfaction. It is the gift of this life—of a continuous existence—that men desire. The gift of Christ is something more than this, otherwise it would only mock the aspirations of the soul. There is another life deeper than the physical life, which is the real life. We catch glimpses of it in our earthly relations. A young man passes through school and college, undergoing reparation, having his mental powers trained and developed, and his mind stored with facts. He graduates and enters a profession. "Now," he exclaims, "I shall begin to live." All else was preparatory; he enters on real life. Or a home life is monotonous and dull, and there comes into the heart an all-absorbing affection which transforms him. Joys and delights make a creature of him. All that came before was mere existence compared with this new region which he feels life. Or it is a man given over to appetite for physical gratification, a drunkard or a vicious man. By the great power he rises out of the slime and mire of sensuality, and sets his affection on other things. He casts off his slavery and enters on new pursuits with pure and elevated purposes. Looking back on his old days, he sees that he never really lived then; it was mere brutal existence, with no animal instincts. This is the life he now enters on. He sees that the mere breath-taking, toiling creature is not necessarily alive in the true sense. He needs an inner life in which the body has but a subordinate part. This life Christ imparts to man. The inner forces receive a stimulus, an invigoration which lifts the life to a higher plane, and makes it worthy of the name. Living for Christ with the gifts given to him he perceives his duties, has new hopes, new motives, leads an altogether new life. He thinks less of self, ceases to make his gratification the object of life, is continually trying to help others, becomes stronger, more useful, and more joyous. Every new attainment as a vista of greater achievement, and shows him fresh heights to scale. His onward progress develops new strength, so that as his physical powers decline, his spiritual forces increase, and he is capable of better conduct. This is life, the new that begins at the new birth and goes out and on into eternity. It is not a thing of inheritance on the other side of the grave, but a treasure in possession, which is not laid down at death, but survives death. For this we can afford to surrender all that men call life—to lose that for Christ's sake, that we may find the life that never dies.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

PILGRIMS OF NIGHT.

"ARE THEY NOT ALL MINISTERING SPIRITS?"—Heb. 1:14.

F. W. FABER.

GEO. C. STEBBINS.

1. Hark! hark, my soul! An-gel-ic songs are swell-ing O'er earth's green fields, and ocean's
2. On - ward we go, for still we hear them sing-ing, "Come, wea-ry souls, for Je - sus
3. Far, far a-way, like bells at ev'n-ing peal-ing, The voice of Je - sus sounds o'er
4. An - gels! sing on, your faith-ful watch-es keep-ing, Sing us sweet fragments of the wave-beat shore: How sweet the truth those blessed strains are tell-ing Of that new bids you come:" And thro' the dark, its ech-oes sweet-ly ring-ing, The mu-sic land and sea, And la - den souls, by thousands meekly steal-ing, Kind Sh-pherd, songs a - bove; Till morning's j-oy shall end the night of weep-ing, And life's long life when sin shall be no more.

REFRAIN.

of the Gospel leads us home.
turn their weary steps to Thee.
shadows break in cloudless love.

An-gels of Je - sus, An-gels of light, Sing-ing to wel-come the pilgrims of the night! Sing-ing to wel - come the pilgrims of the night!

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2.

By per. of the Publishers

"Perfect in Christ Jesus."

THY kingdom come. Oh, Christ:
Now wash me from my sin;
Thou knowest all my need;
Oh! make me pure within.
And may thy grace sufficient be,
And all my heart be ruled by thee.
How wondrous is the way
Thou didst contrive for me,
To break the chain of sin,
And set the captive free.
But rough the path thy feet didst tread,
And sharp the thorns that crowned thy head.
And when I fail, dear Lord,
Still, thou wilt surely bless;
For, in thy Word I find,
Thou art my righteousness.
Oh! may thy praise my lips employ:
To endless days be thou my joy. —K. A. M.

The Scoffers.

WHILE scoffers scorn to own thy name,
And seek to put thy Word to shame,
Whilst yet they laugh in fiendish glee,
Renewed in strength thy works they see.
Thy chosen people they surround,
Advancing, as by trumpets' sound,
Quite fearful—lest the Gospel band
Against them make determined stand.
Their father, Satan, leads them on—
They deem their fight already won,
And hate and malice are combined
To share the spoils of Christian mind.
But when thy children quake with fear,
Then, King of kings, thou comest near,
Ashamed, the scoffers dare not gaze
Upon thy royal, loving face. —W. A. NESTLER.

The Prophetic Interval.

Reasons for Believing that Christ will come Before the Millennium.

BY W. E. BLACKSTONE.*

NONE weighty reason for expecting our blessed Lord's coming before the Millennium is that we are commanded to watch for it. Again and again did Jesus tell his disciples to watch! He said: "Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." (Matt. 24:42.) "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour." (Matt. 25:13.) Adding, "And, what I say unto you, I say unto all,— Watch." (Mark 13:34-37.) He places especial emphasis on the word Watch, particularly in Rev. 16:15, "Blessed is he that Watcheth."

Now it is absolutely inconsistent with the constitution of the human mind, thus to watch for an event which we believe to be one thousand years or more in the future. And yet this is just the position which Post-millennialists are forced to take.

Matthew Henry, commenting on Luke 12:45, says: "Our looking at Christ's second coming as a thing at a distance, is the cause of all those irregularities which render the thought of it terrible to us." And on watching, he says: "To watch implies not only to believe that our Lord will come, but to desire that he would come, to be often thinking of his coming, and always looking for it as sure and near, and the time of it uncertain."

As followers of Christ we are compared to soldiers, fighting the fight of faith, and perhaps no better illustration could be given us of watching, than that of picket duty in the army.

Old soldiers know that out on the skirmish line it is full of life and excitement, because they are watching for something immediately possible. But in camp it is dull, soulless drudgery, because they are expecting nothing until the outer pickets, perhaps five or six miles away, are driven in. How intensely do we increase the difference in watching, if we separate the pickets by a thousand years. And this is what post-millennialism does.

We believe this argument appeals to the common sense of every person, and we pray God that it may be blessed to the perfecting of that which is lacking in your faith.

He is faithful that hath promised, an'
He'll surely come again.
He'll keep his tryst wi' me, at what hour I dinna ken.
But he bids me still to wait, an' ready aye to be,
To gang at any moment to my ain
countrie.
So I'm watching aye, and singing o'
my name as I wait,
For the soun'ing o' his footfa' this side
the gowden gate,
For his bluid hath made me white,
and his hand shall dry my e'e
When He brings me hame at last to my ain countrie.

But, perhaps, you say: "The Church has been watching for eighteen hundred years and he has not come, and he may not come for eighteen hundred years more." Well, possibly he may not; but do we know that he will not? and shall we set a date for his coming? and cease to watch?

Post millennialists say that he will not come for a thousand years or more, which is equivalent to setting a date, as it places his coming out of all possibility in our lifetime; and then how quickly do we lay down our watching.

The principal condemnation pronounced in the Scripture in regard to the Lord's return is to those who say "My Lord delayeth his coming." Matt. 24:48; Luke 12:45.

* From his work Jesus is Coming. Price 5 cents. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

Converting a Prince.
The Little Two-year-old Heir to the Bulgarian Throne Transferred from the Roman Catholic to the Greek Church.
ABLE dispatches do not usually report conversions, but an exception was made in the

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF BULGARIA AND THEIR SON, BORIS.

of Prince Boris, the son of Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria and the Princess Clementine, his wife. It was gravely announced a few days ago that Prince Boris was converted from the Roman Catholic faith, to that of the Orthodox Greek Church, so that he had been baptized with imposing ceremonies by Monsignor Joseph, Exarch of the Bulgarians, who traveled from Constantinople to Sofia to perform the rite. Roman Catholic journals take notice of the fact that the child cried lustily during the ceremony as if in protest against change of faith. Whatever technical reasons there may be for using the word "conversion" in connection with the event, it is obvious that as the Prince is but two years old, the word cannot be properly applied to it in the sense in which it is used among ourselves. The fact remains, however, that the little Prince, who was formerly a member of the Roman Catholic Church, is now a member of the Greek Church, as far as the ceremony can make him one. That the change is regarded as momentous by some people may be inferred from the fact that the child's mother has made it the ground for an attempt to secure a divorce from her husband and that the Pope was urged to communicate Prince Ferdinand. Both promises have, however, been averted by the Prince's diplomatic skill. The change in the child's religious status is a matter of international concern, as an indication that Russia has succeeded at last, in a struggle which has been going on for nearly twenty years. When Bulgaria achieved her independence in 1878, Russia hoped that her influence would be paramount in the new state. But Bulgarians, led by the brave and indomitable Stambuloff, refused to become vassals of Russia. It would have been a pitiful end of their fight if they had merely changed one despotism for another. They intimated very clearly that they had been fighting to live under the Czar instead of under the Sultan; they had been fighting to be free. The Russian Government, realizing that it was thwarted, strove to accomplish its object by the longer process of intrigue. It kept the country in a continual state of unrest. Alexander of Battenberg, whom the Bulgarians had chosen for their prince, found it impossible to govern. Russian agents with abundant funds to buy over venal Bulgarian statesmen, foiled all his efforts for the development of the country. He abandoned the attempt after a nine years' struggle, and Prince Ferdinand, an obscure German princeling, was elected to his place. Ferdinand had the friendship and support of Austria, and it was hoped that, so aided, he might be able to maintain himself on the throne. Eastern Roumelia, longing for freedom, cast its lot with its sister land, and Stambuloff labored to make of the two countries one strong, independent nation. It was a difficult task, but Stambuloff succeeded, by dexterously opposing Austrian to Russian influence. He was defeated, at last, by the ignominious character of Ferdinand. In him Russia found a tool fit for her use. He was concerned about his own position, more than about the greatness and the freedom of the country. He was evidently determined to yield entirely to Russia. The patriotic Stambuloff was dismissed and assassinated and the rest has been easy. Under Russian influence, the Bulgarian legislature passed a law enacting that although Prince Ferdinand might remain a Roman Catholic, any heir born to him must be brought up in the Orthodox Greek Church. Prince Boris, Ferdinand's first born, has accordingly been baptized according to the rites of that church. The divergence between the two churches does not seem to Protestants so important as it does to members of those churches. The Greek Church, which is the national Church of Russia, holds most of the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, but rejects the authority of the Pope, offers prayers in the language of the worshippers, instead of in Latin, and does not accept as authoritative the rulings of the later Catholic Councils. How the Prince will believe, when he grows up, does not seem to be a matter of serious consideration. That he has been baptized in the Greek Church, according to its rites, appears to satisfy all requirements. Men are more easily satisfied in such matters than God is. If a particular form of baptism would make a man or a child a member of his kingdom, the matter of conversion would be very much simplified, and it would be easy to make the best of both worlds. But God looks on the heart and life, and as Christ told Nicodemus they can be changed only through the operation of the Holy Spirit. No rite, no outward ceremony, however imposing, can avail to change them. The conversion of the young prince is an event to be desired but it will be a fatal error to regard it as accomplished by his baptism.

Egyptian Chronology.
A constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD writes from Smithtown Branch, N. Y., on the subject of the most ancient date in Egyptian history. He says: Miss Amelia B. Edwards who, I believe, is considered an authority, as an Egyptologist, speaks of the founding of the first dynasty, by Mena, the first king, to have been 5000 B. C. Abraham was born 2000 B. C. He was seventy-five years old when he went into Egypt. His sojourn there is believed to have been in the reign of one of the Pharaohs of the great 12th dynasty. Will your chronology take in the previous

Scrofula

Manifests itself in many different ways, like goitre, swellings, running sores, boils, salt rheum and pimples and other eruptions. Scarcely a man is wholly free from it, in some form. It clings tenaciously until the last vestige of scrofulous poison is eradicated from the blood by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands of voluntary testimonials tell of suffering from scrofula, often inherited and most tenacious, positively, perfectly and permanently cured by dynasties, including interval between the 7th and 9th dynasties that has been, until recently, an unrecorded period in Egyptian history? Professor Petrie's discovery of a new race in Egypt has cleared up the mystery of that interval; and the missing link is found, that has hitherto been searched for in vain, by every Egyptologist. The conclusion now is inevitable, that Egypt was invaded by a foreign people who overthrew the old kingdom civilization and so produced the "dark ages" from the 7th to the 9th of the native dynasties. Thus the year 3000 B. C. would be within that period. The "Prisse Papyrus," styled the oldest book "in the world, dating from the 12 dynasty, is copied from a yet more ancient document of the remote 5th dynasty, written some three thousand eight hundred years before Christ. There is a 'Second Dynasty Tablet' in the Ashmolean Museum, in Oxford, that bears inscriptions dating from 4000 to 4200, B. C. See Miss Edwards' "Pharaohs, Fellahs and Explorers," p. 195.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The one True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills act harmoniously with Hood's Sarsaparilla 25c.

The Bible in Kansas Prisons.
There is a law in Kansas that seems to have been forgotten, but which has again been brought to public attention in the interest of morality and good government. It is a statute requiring that every prisoner in a Kansas jail shall be provided with a Bible at public expense. County Attorney Miller, of Kansas City, Kans., who has his hands full in sending law-breakers to prison, feeling the need these men have of moral help, has re-discovered this excellent but long-forgotten law, requiring each county in the State to furnish each prisoner with a Bible, and has had all the prisoners in Wyandotte county supplied. It is to be hoped that each County Attorney in the State will do likewise.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO. 106 Wall St., N. Y.

FREE TRIAL in your home. Cut this out and send for catalogue. Prices to suit you. Oxford Sewing Machines awarded World's Fair Medal. SHE WILL ANY WILL DO. FULL SET OF ATTACHMENTS. FIFTEEN YEAR GUARANTEE. FREIGHT PAID. ADDRESS: OXFORD MFG. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

CLOTHES WASHED

with the "BUSY BEE" are CLEAN. Here's the record: 100 pieces in 1 hour and no ironing. Exclusive sale given to GOOD AGENTS. Write now LAKE ERIE MFG CO. 111 E. 13 St. Erie, Pa.

FREE TRIAL in your home. Cut this out and send for catalogue. Prices to suit you. Oxford Sewing Machines awarded World's Fair Medal. SHE WILL ANY WILL DO. FULL SET OF ATTACHMENTS. FIFTEEN YEAR GUARANTEE. FREIGHT PAID. ADDRESS: OXFORD MFG. CO., 340 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

The Jackson Sanatorium

At DANVILLE, NEW YORK.

For thirty-seven years the leading Health Institution in America, is under the personal care of regularly educated and experienced physicians, and is distinctive in its methods and character. A delightful home for health and rest seekers in which every provision is made for recreation, comfort, and good cheer, as well as for skilled medical care and treatment.

For illustrated pamphlet address J. ARTHUR JACKSON, M. D., Sec'y. P. O. Box 1865.

Main Building Absolutely Fire-proof.

"Forbid a fool a thing and that he will do." Don't use

SAPOLIO

Scott's Emulsion

is, above all other things, the remedy for sickly, wasted children. It nourishes and builds them up when ordinary foods absolutely fail.

50c. and $1.00 at all druggists.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, a cup shape, with self-adjusting Bulb in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held secure day and night and a radical cure is certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

DERBURY CITY, Pa., June 3, 1895. I received my truss the 27th and since I have had it I have taken more comfort with it than any I ever had before. The first day I got it I put it on and moved grass all day and I never noticed that I had it on me.

TRUSS, N. C., July 21, 1895. About 3 years ago I bought one of your trusses. I wore it about 6 months and it has made a final cure. Was badly ruptured. I would have written you about this before but wanted to see if my cure was permanent.

$1.00 forfeited to you if every testimonial used by us is not genuine. Address E. H. EDGESTON & CO., 1201 CLASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

All Skin Disorders

from simple Pimples to obstinate Eczema and Tetter can be quickly and permanently cured by the simple application of

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

It makes the skin soft, smooth and healthy, producing a clear and brilliant complexion. 50c. per box at Druggists or by mail. JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce St., Philadelphia.

MY HUSBAND

160 Kenwood Machine for - $20.00
250 Arlington Machine for - $19.50
Standard Singer - $8.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All at a sacrifice. FREE. We pay freight ship anywhere on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 in use. Catalogue and testimonials free. Write at once. Address (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., B18 Chicago, Ill.

THE IMPROVED Elastic Truss

See Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss that exists that is worn with absolute comfort night and day. It retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lady attendants. Examination free. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

The Jackson Sanatorium

At DANVILLE, NEW YORK.

For thirty-seven years the leading Health Institution in America, is under the personal care of regularly educated and experienced physicians, and is distinctive in its methods and character. A delightful home for health and rest seekers in which every provision is made for recreation, comfort, and good cheer, as well as for skilled medical care and treatment.

For illustrated pamphlet address J. ARTHUR JACKSON, M. D., Sec'y. P. O. Box 1865.

Main Building Absolutely Fire-proof.

"Forbid a fool a thing and that he will do." Don't use

SAPOLIO

A Veteran at Rest.

Dr. W. P. Paxson, the Distinguished Sunday School Organizer, Suddenly Called from his Labors to his Eternal Reward.

POIGNANT sorrow has been caused in many a church and many a Sunday School and home by the news of the sudden death of Dr. William P. Paxson, the veteran Sunday School worker of the South-west. Dr. Paxson came to the North recently on business of the American Sunday School Union, of which he has been an officer for nearly forty years. His business was nearly completed and he was preparing to return home, when he was invited to preach and hold a Sunday School service in the Presbyterian Church of Orange, N. J. He preached there on the morning of March 8th and went to the church in the afternoon to hold the service. Just before rising to give the address, he was stricken with paralysis as he sat in the pew. He was carried to the parsonage and medical aid was summoned. Mrs. Paxson, who was visiting her daughter at Mt. Vernon, N. Y., was sent for and lost no time in going to her husband, taking with her an old friend and medical adviser. The physicians did all in their power to save the life of the distinguished Christian worker, but in spite of their efforts he sank into unconsciousness and on Tuesday, March 10, he breathed his last.

During the previous two or three weeks of his stay in the North, Dr. Paxson had been a frequent and welcome visitor to the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He called shortly before leaving for Orange and spent some time talking about his work and the spiritual needs of the great district of which he was Superintendent. He was much gratified by the assurance given him that the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would undertake the support of his valued helper, Rev. George W. Sharp, for another year and said how heartily he appreciated the help their liberality had been the means of affording him. As he rose to leave, a mood, very unusual in a man so cheerful as he, came over him. In the light of the subsequent sad event, it seems now as if he had a presentiment of the approaching parting. After referring tenderly to the warm friendship that had so long been maintained and to the pleasure he always had in paying these visits during his sojourns in the North, he said, "I hope to look in when I come back from Orange to bid you good-bye before going back to my field, but we do not know. However, we are sure of one thing, if we do not see each other again here, we shall meet in the presence of the Lord where there will be fullness of joy for evermore." With these words on his lips, the kindly, genial, warm-hearted man went away and we shall see his face no more till the time of which he spoke.

Dr. Paxson was not so old a man as he looked. He had not reached his fifty-ninth birthday, when he died. He was born in Connecticut, September 26, 1837. His father, Stephen Paxson, was a pioneer in Sunday School work. It was through a Sunday School that he was led to Christ and he believed in Sunday Schools. In the course of his life of service he established no less than 1114 Sunday Schools in places where none had existed before, and into these schools 87,405 scholars and teachers were gathered. His son William, who has just been called to his reward, became his father's helper when he was only fifteen years of age, and gave his whole life to the work. "It is not my business," he was wont to say, "to go to the mountains and find out where there are children growing up without any religious teaching, and gather them together where they will be led to love the Lord Jesus." As a missionary, and afterward as Superintendent of a district in which many missionaries were employed, he labored unceasingly in planting and organizing Sunday Schools. He was never tired of insisting that the hope of the country is in the children, and that the way of winning the children is in getting them into the Sunday School and telling them about Jesus. He would organize a Sunday School in the kitchen of a farmhouse, in a blacksmith shop or in a barn. Any building would do, and once in Texas, when he could get no building, he organized a school under the branches of a great oak tree. Several times he organized schools in arbors, at which he toiled with

The northern part of the district is where I have made my home, after spending over a year viewing the land and preaching over a wide area. Here are found, among the hills and jungles, scores of miles away from railway stations and towns, numbers of people of the aboriginal tribe of Gonds, with several of the lower Hindu castes. I have little difficulty in getting into intimate relationship with the people, and during the past twelve months the foundation of the Church of Christ in Balaghat has been laid. We have now a little Christian community of some twenty souls, with numerous inquirers seeking admission to our ranks, while my heart rejoices in the evident sincerity of all the dear people, and the true piety of several.

So far, however, little seems to have resulted among the Gonds, whose conversion I had chiefly in view in selecting this field. While they are heartily despised by the higher Hindu castes, the Gonds are among themselves as tenacious of caste as the Brahmin. Although not a few have professed repentance and faith in Christ, none have yet found courage enough to confess him openly or take any step involving breaking of caste. I have no doubt, however, that a break among the Gonds will come ere long, and when it comes I think it will be a considerable one. The Church Missionary Society have a number of Gond converts in Mandla, but there is so little communication between the two districts, that the Gonds here seem rather sceptical when I assure them that there are Gond Christians in existence.

I am rejoicing, however, over the beginning of a good work among another aboriginal tribe, the Baigas, who are a yet more jungle people than the Gonds, subsisting largely on the raw produce of the jungle. Three adults of this tribe have been baptized—with one solitary exception the first of their people to turn to Christ—and two of these three are developing into zealous preachers of the Gospel.

So far I am alone here, having no helper, European or native. The field seems to me to be a most promising one, and I feel sure that the work that has been thus begun here might be repeated in half-a-dozen other centres of population in the district were the men forthcoming. The country is poor, and some measure of self-denial is called for in matters of eating and drinking, and so on; but to see these people emerging one by one from the darkness of idolatry into the light of God's love is an abundant recompense, and would cause any true-hearted servants of Christ to rejoice in rather than regret any inconveniences and sacrifice involved.

THE LATE REV. W. P. PAXTON, D.D.

Superintendent of the Northwestern District of the American S. S. Union.

his own hands. The place settled, he would go through the neighborhood looking up the children, telling the parents about the new school and getting their promise to send the little ones. He would arrange for teachers and see to the election of officers, and would not leave till the school was in running order. Then he would pay it frequent visits, encouraging, advising, and removing difficulties, and with his kindly genial tact solving personal problems that sometimes retard the work. It was with him a labor of love and it continued to the last. Death found him, as he would have wished it to do, engaged in the advocacy of the Union he loved so well and had served so faithfully.

An Isolated Preacher.

FROM a remote district in the heart of India, comes a report of a quiet unostentatious effort to carry the Gospel to a region not reached by the Missionary Societies. About three years ago, Mr. J. Lampard went out there, settled down quietly and taught all with whom he could make acquaintance. He now writes:

Having had my attention and sympathies attracted to the hill country of the Central Provinces, after much inquiry and prayerful consideration I decided to set to work independently in the unoccupied Balaghat District of the Central Provinces. One of the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society from the neighboring district of Mandla had several times crossed the border and preached in the northern part of Balaghat, but the district had never had a resident worker, nor, so far as I have learned, did it contain among the hundred thousand population a single Christian convert, native to the place.

Ill-Tempered Babies

and the mothers who are the cause of them. It is a common complaint, and one that is often overlooked. It is caused by the use of the wrong kind of food, and the use of the wrong kind of medicine. The only way to cure it is to use the right kind of food and the right kind of medicine. The only way to get the right kind of food and the right kind of medicine is to use the only reliable source of information, the Christian Herald.

2269 Pages for 65 Cents.

Remarkable but True.—We will, for 65 cents, send the Leather Stocking Tales, by Cooper, comprising five separate books, The Deerslayer, The Pathfinder, The Pioneer, The Prairie, The Last of the Mohicans, set in large long primer type, and each bound in heavy lithograph paper covers. Sent, post-paid, for 65 cents and money refunded if you are not satisfied. Address: J. S. OGILVIE PUBLISHING COMPANY, 55 ROSE STREET, New York.

WANTED.—SALESMEN to introduce REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE'S latest, greatest, most famous book,

"THE EARTH GIRDLED."

Samoa, Hawaii, the South Seas, Australia, Ind., Egypt, Palestine, Europe, and all their wonder. Thrilling experiences among savages, cannibals, and wild races. Amazing heathen superstitions, startling revelations. 400 original photographs of curious races and strange places. $12 a copy to salesmen. No capital or experience required, exclusive territory. Extraordinary inducements and illustrated circular free. Be quick. Address: Historical Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

WHERE?

Write Gaze where and when you wish to Travel, and they will inform you. How and the Cost. Escorted Parties for Winter, Spring or Summer. Tickets issued for Independent Travel Everywhere. Choice Berths on all Steamships—no extra cost. See Tourist Gazette (by mail 10 cts.), and Save Money. State your wishes carefully; full information free. Address: HENRY GAZE & SONS, Ltd., Universal Tourist Agents, 113 Broadway, N. Y.; 231 Washington St., Boston; 230 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.; 135 S. Fifth St., Philadelphia.

WHEN?

GIVEN TO EVERY LADY A New Book on Fancy Work containing 50 hands-on illustrations. Among them are designs for Sofa Pillows, Table Covers, Scarfs, Tray Cloths, Doilies, Celluloid Work, Tapestry Painting and Embroidery; also other book giving directions how to make all kinds of Rugs and Mats, 45 in all. These two books we'll mail you free if you will send 10c for a 3 months trial subscription to The Home & 21 page paper containing stories, fashions and fancy work illustr'd. Send to: The Home, 141 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME

Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School. $30 per 100 copies. Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People $30 per 100 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of low price. The best are cheapest!! THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. 76 East 9th St., New York. 215 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO.

Stamped Steel Ceilings

Decorative, Durable and Best For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

MUSIC SALE

To close out our stock we send by mail 70 pieces, full sheet music size, vocal and instrumental, all parts complete all for 20c., or 4 lots, 50c. Money back if not suited. "Only One Gt. in the World for Me" and 10 Songs with music, 5c. C. H. Hobbins, 339 West 40th St., Boston, Mass.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps) THE HUMAN HAIR.

Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By FRANK HARLEY PARKER, F.R.S., London. D. G. LONG & CO., 103 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. Every one should read this little book. — Athenaeum

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT

PROF. RICE'S Self-Teaching SYSTEM. All can Learn Music without a teacher. RICHARD C. RICE, 101 N. 4th St., Philadelphia, Pa. G. S. Rice Music Co., 243 State St., Chicago, Ill.

Europe. THIRTY EXCURSIONS.

lines. Send for "Tourist Gazette." E. C. CLAR, Tourist Agent, 111 Broadway, N. Y.

A pure cream of tartar powder.

CLEVELAND'S

BAKING POWDER

No Ammonia. No Alum.

"Pure" and "Sure."

It is pure and wholesome.

It is always sure. No spoiled dough to be thrown away.

It is not a secret nostrum. Its composition is stated on every tin.

Only a rounded spoonful is required, not a heaping spoonful.

Cleveland Baking Powder Co., New York, Successor to Cleveland Brothers.

3000 AGENTS WANTED TO SELL IT.

ARMENIA AND HER PEOPLE.

By REV. GEORGE H. LILLIAN, banished native pastor of the Evangelical Church at Marsovan. Endorsed by DR. R. S. STODOLSKY, HENRY VAN DYKE, and the clergy generally. Historical and Physical Armenia—Causes and vivid portrayal of present massacres and atrocities. Fully Illustrated.—Price $1.50, by mail postpaid. A GRANTSELLER Agents, men and women, wanted. Send 50 cents for circular and mention first and second choice of territory and save time. Write for circulars and most liberal terms. Mention this paper. Address: THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING CO., Hartford, Conn., Cincinnati or Boston.

Requests for Prayer.

The Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Mar. 15, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Sons and Daughters.—"Broken Hearted Mother," Hurley, S. D. For a son who once professed to be a Christian, but has taken to drinking.—J. H. H., Portsmouth, N. H. For the conversion of a son and his evil companions.—"Anxious Mother," Vermont. For the conversion of an son.—"Sister in Christ," Troy, N. Y. For the conversion of two sons and a daughter.—W. G. H., Elkton, N. C. That an only might give his heart to God.—"Anxious Mother," Dunbarton, N. H. On behalf of the children and a son-in-law, and that the who has fallen under the power of liquor be reclaimed.—"Believer," Pa. For the conversion of a dear son and his wife, now in far West.—"Anxious Mother," Buckley, N. Y. For her ungodly family, especially of a wayward son who has taken to drink.—"Anxious Mother," Pasco, R. I. That her son might turn to the Lord and become dutiful and obedient.—"Distressed Wife," Phila., the salvation of two sons and their wives.—L. M. K., Pittsburg, Kans. That three who are unsaved might be brought to Christ.—"Subscriber," Pa. That the young daughter of the family might become a Christian.—"Mother in Agony." On behalf of a dear daughter away at school, that she might give her heart to God.

Other. Z. E. C., DeKalb, Mo. For relatives. the conversion of a beloved nephew who has become in-temperate.—C. E. P., Oak Grove, Mich. For aged father, two brothers, and an uncle, are all out of Christ.—"Reader," Green T. Pa. That a niece who is critically ill might accept salvation before the end comes.—"Subscriber," Dayton, Mich. For the conversion of a husband who has deserted his wife, who is sick and in poverty.—"Believer in Prayer," New York City. That husband, formerly a member of the church, who has become indifferent, may be quickened by the Holy Spirit; also for a dear brother who is growing reckless.—H. M., Linden, N. H. For the salvation of husband, three brothers, and a sister.—J. T. Hammon, N. H. For the conversion of husband.—"Anxious One," Girty, Pa. That three brothers might be led to Christ.—E. H., New York City. For the salvation of nephews and sons.—"Believer." For the conversion of a wife.—E. J. H., Salem. On behalf of a sister who is in darkness.—"Subscriber," Lancaster Co., Pa. That an aged father and mother might declare themselves for Christ before they die.—C. F., Elgin, Mich. For the conversion of a dear sister who has become a spiritualist.—J. F., Plymouth, Ill. For the salvation of husband and two children.—"Distressed Wife," Philadelphia. For the conversion of an unbelieving husband.—"Believer." Crainy Hill, N. H. For the conversion of a father.

For the Conversion of Friends.—"Believer," Slater, Mo., that an invalid lady now in extreme danger might be saved even at the eleventh hour.—"Anon," Denver, Colo., for the conversion of a beloved friend who is living a lifeless life.—"Subscriber," Harrisburg, Pa., for a dear friend whose faith and love have grown cold might be renewed in heart and be restored to those who love him.—Mrs. S., Brook, N. S., for the salvation of loved ones.—V. A. S., Fulkerson, Mo., for the conversion of two young men who are charged with an awful crime.—"Subscriber," Columbus, O., for a young man addicted to drink who is now on the high seas.—"Believer in Prayer," N. L., Ohio, for the salvation of a family of seven persons, the head of the family being a backslider.

For the Restoration of Health. M. E. B. That a dear mother might recover her hearing.—"Follower of Christ," Evanston, Ill. For the recovery of dear sister who has been afflicted over 10 years.—"One who Believes," Mich. For the recovery of a dear son; also that the use of hearing might be restored.—M. E. C., Hernando, Fla. That a sufferer who is in Virginia might recover health and strength.—"Believer," Oakland, Me. That God would give up a companion who is very sick, and whose usefulness is stopped by the affliction.—N., Rochester, Minn., who is suffering from the effects of a serious operation, that God would grant healing.—J. W., Marshall, Mich. For the recovery of a sister now heavily afflicted.—C. L. R., Lone Tree, Iowa. That a dear brother might recover his hearing.—"Sorrowing One," New Haven, Conn. That an afflicted Christian might recover sight.—C. F., Elgin, Mich. That a dear mother might recover her hearing.—A. G. C., Bluffton, O. That a minister of the Gospel who has undergone a severe operation, might recover health and strength.—"Reader," Genewich, Ill. That a sick grandchild might be restored to health.—L. W., Hudson, O. That a physician who is losing his sight might be healed; also that a dear mother might recover her hearing; also for the recovery of the wives of two ministers, both of whom sadly miss the help they used to render in their work.—The following sufferers also beg that prayers might be offered for their recovery from various maladies: A. C., Presque Isle, Me.; C. F., Elgin, Mich.; E. A. D. C., Deland, Fla.; H. B., Leesburg, Fla.; W. B. D., Minn.; F. F., San Diego, Cal.; "Reader," Louisville, Ky.; C. M. W. and sister, Mt. Gilead, O.; A. E. R., Auburn, N. Y.; E. W., Fall River, Mass.; S. L. C., Topeka, Kans.

For Special Blessings. F. C. S., Harrison Valley, Pa., for grace to be a faithful Christian.—M. S. B., Albion, N. Y., that an institution which threatens to be a source of evil to a large number of persons might not be erected in the place where it will do so much harm.—"Heart broken Girl," Kansas City, Mo., who has been lured away and has repented, that God would forgive her and keep her evermore pure and faithful in Christ.—"One in Despair," for deliverance from a terrible trouble, and that in his good time God would convince false accusers of the wrong they are doing and that the right and the truth may be done in a case where appearances are misleading, also for faith to trust implicitly in God.—"One in sorrow," Lola, Wis., that God would provide an invalid with necessities and incline the heart of those who should be tender and considerate, to do their duty.—F. G., Le Roy, Minn., that a family trouble may be happily adjusted, and that the members, who are Christians, may do nothing to discredit the cause of Christ.—E. F. S., Homestead, Pa., that W. P., who left his home and his loving wife last month, may be found and restored, and that the deserted wife may have grace given her to bear in patience the cross laid upon her.—"Widow," Loreley, Md., for grace to bear the bereavement that has taken all the joy out of her life.—Reader, Fedrow, O., that God would restore the joy of his salvation and give a new heart and a right spirit.—Believer, New Haven, Conn., that the people who are coming to settle in the neighborhood may be Christian people whose lives and influence will be beneficial to the neighbors.—M. E. M., Motters, Md., for strength to overcome temptation, and grace to be kept faithful to God under trial.—The following ask prayer that financial help may be granted in their time of difficulty: "Believer," Missouri; "Believer," Florida; "Subscriber," Sunderland, Mass.; "Burdened One," East Brady, Pa.; L. M. F., Croydon, N. H.; —C. J., Brevasy, W. Va.

Answers to Prayer. "Anon," Denver, Colo., asks that thanks be offered for the answer granted to the prayers for which a request recently appeared in this column.

A. J. C., Bluffton, O., acknowledges a direct answer to the prayers requested at the opening of the winter.

"Anxious S. S. Teacher," that thanks be given for the conversion of a sick girl for whom prayers were offered sometime since. She gave her heart to God, as was asked, before she died.

Constant Reader, Rahway, N. J., desires that grateful thanks be given for the answer to the prayers for which request was made in a time of great distress.

Chosen by the Government

The War Department proposes to test the bicycle thoroughly for army use, and recently advertised for proposals for furnishing five bicycles for the purpose. Result: Bids from $50 to $85 each for other machines; our bid of $100 each for Columbias, their invariable price. And the Government selected

Columbia Bicycles

STANDARD OF THE WORLD

The experts who made the choice decided that Columbias were worth every dollar of the $100 asked for them.

If you are willing to pay $100 for a bicycle, why be content with anything but a Columbia?

POPE MANUFACTURING CO., Hartford, Conn.

No other lamp-chimneys a quarter so good as Macbeth's; or cheap in the long run.

You want the right shape besides. We'll send you the Index; free.

Geo A Macbeth Co
Pittsburgh Pa.

King Louis Suit, $19.95

Made to order and lined throughout with Silk.

This beautiful costume (our latest production) made of various stylish fabrics, carefully finished and Silk-lined throughout, is made to order and guaranteed for $19.95.

Our New Spring Catalogue from which this suit is selected, sent FREE on request; it contains illustrations of the newest styles in

JACKETS from $4.00 up
SKIRTS " $3.00 "
SUITS " $7.00 "
CAPE " $3.00 "
WAISTS " .75 "

A well-selected assortment of Samples of latest fabrics, tape measure and measurement diagram (which ensures a perfect fit) sent on receipt of 4 cents in stamps.

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO FIT.
Silks, Dress Goods, and Cloths by the yard at wholesale prices. Express charges paid by us.

Richard
58 West 23d Street, and 47 West 22d Street,
NEW YORK
Mention Christian Herald.

B&H LAMPS

Most desirable and satisfactory ever made. Ask your dealer for them and send for

Our Little Book, 5 giving more information about them and our Gas and Electric Fixtures, Art Metal Goods, &c.

BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO.
MERIDEN, CONN.
New York. Boston. Chicago. Phila.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.
It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
Cleaning. Crumbling.
Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.

Mallory Steamship Lines.
DELICIOUS TRIPS BY SEA TO TEXAS — GEORGIA — FLORIDA. Tickets to all Winter Resorts in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida. Our 64-page Prospectus mailed free. C. H. MALLORY & CO., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

A NEW IDEA. Paper Patterns mailed TEN Cts. Monthly fashion sheet free. Catalogue 500 designs 5c in stamps. NEW IDEA PATTERN CO., West Broadway and Leonard St., New York.

Waverley Bicycles

DO YOU RIDE ONE?

If not, why not? No other wheels in the world stand so high in the estimation of cyclists, because Waverleys are built on honest value lines, and the purchaser receives full value for the investment.

SEND TEN CENTS IN STAMPS FOR A PAIR OF OUR NEW CARD COUNTERS.

STRENGTH

is needed nowhere more than in a suspender back. The strongest suspender back ever made is Harris Grip Buck. This and the Harris Wire Buckle are two of the special features of the

HARRIS WIRE BUCKLE SUSPENDERS.
Stouter, neater, handier and more durable than any other suspenders ever invented. Sold by furnisners or sent by mail for 25, 50 or 75c, a pair. Send 10 cts in stamps or silver for a fine silk watch fob with warranted gold-plated buckle, together with an illustrated book that will tell you all about the

WIRE BUCKLE SUSPENDER CO., WILLIAMSPORT, P.

THE ONLY PERFECT Cycle Seat

Patented. Demand this Seat. Insist upon it! Any dealer will set it for you. Can be widened to fit any rider and adjusted to any pitch.

SENSITIVE PARTS. YOUR DOCTOR WILL ENDORSE IT.
Dr. M. A. WALKER, Denver, Colo. — Received your saddle and put it on at once. Am very much pleased with it as it certainly does away with the harmful pressure exerted by other saddles. IT IS AN ESPECIALLY GOOD LADIES SADDLE. Every dealer should send for our circulars and price list. This is the coming seat. We make Cane, Wood, Leather or Padded Seat, with or without springs. Illustrated circulars explain why and how this is the only safe and perfect saddle on the market. Write us.

AUTOMATIC CYCLE SEAT CO.,
431 Rood Block, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Paper of Pins Free

Ask your store-keeper for Puritan Pins—the only pins that don't bend—if he doesn't sell them, send us his name and your address on a postal, and we'll send you sample paper free.

American Pin Company, Waterbury, Conn.

No Boiling

WHITMAN'S Instantaneous CHOCOLATE
is prepared in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Of surpassing quality, purity and flavor. Your dealer has it in 1 pound and 1/2 pound tins. Stephen F. Whitman & Sons, Philadelphia.

JUNE FIRST we will GIVE some one FIFTY DOLLARS YOU MAY GET IT.

Mothers only write for particulars to The Babette Co., 493 Phila. Bourse, Phila. Pa.

HOMESTUDY. A thorough and practical Book-keeping, Short-hand, etc., given by MAIL at student's home. Low rates. Cat. free. Trial lesson free. Write to BRYANT & STRATTON, 76 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

REX BRAND Extract of BEEF FLAVOR
Sample 4 cents. Book free. OUDAHY - SO. OMAHA

Helping the Ex-Prisoners.

A Worthy Philadelphia Charity — The Home of Industry and its Work.

HE world at large, owes to John Howard an enduring debt of gratitude, for his work of reform in the prisons throughout Europe. By his efforts, he persistently exposed to the shuddering gaze of mankind, the cruelties and loathsome secrets of those dens of infamy, until an awakened people remedied these wrongs. Perhaps no other man who has ever lived has done quite as much for the unfortunate prisoner, as he, and when he died,—now over one hundred years ago—the friendless prisoner lost a father and a friend. The tortures of the Newgates of the past century, are now wiped out, and are a thing of the past. The Bible has been introduced into the prison cells, and is expounded by able teachers; noble societies have been formed, whose object is the care and welfare of those confined, and every known effort is being made to teach the poor unfortunates that the keystone of a successful life is based upon the three great principles of honesty, sobriety and frugality. But whilst this good work has been going on for a century or more for the benefit of the prisoner in his cell, it has only been of very recent date, that any thought has been taken for his care after his release, at this the most critical period of his existence.

F. H. STARR.

There is no creature who is more to be pitied than the man who, having paid the penalty of the law, is set free; he is given his freedom, it is true; he is free to breathe the pure air, he is free to walk the streets, but with every door closed against him and an object of public scorn, and the torments that are inflicted by such means are far more terrible to true manhood, than the torments that are inflicted by a prison cell. There is no safety against the criminal, save in his reformation. Prison discipline has failed to correct the many moral delinquencies, for there is no law, however stringent, that will make the idle man industrious, the drunkard sober, or the dishonest man honest; this much desired end will never be brought about by brilliant oratory, nor by vast wealth, nor by any theory that has thus far been advanced. The Gospel alone possesses the power to do this.

Realizing that what the discharged prisoner needs most in his release, is the means whereby he can help himself, a few philanthropic gentlemen in Philadelphia established a home where food, shelter and the most important factor of all, employment, are furnished him until he has been able to get on his feet. This is the Home of Industry and its Work.

Too Tired to Sleep.

Take Horstford's Acid Phosphate.

It is a powerful tonic and restorative, and is the best remedy for all cases of nervous debility, indigestion, and general weakness.

Discharged Prisoners and is situated at 732 St., and Paschall Ave. Were it not for such a refuge many would be obliged to return to crime no matter how good their intentions were, in order to live. Four-fifths of the men who are released from prison come out with a full determination of leading a new life, but none save God alone knows what such a man has to contend with. To get employment is almost an impossibility, for who wants to employ a man who is just from a prison cell, when there are so many to be had, who have naught against their character. So the man being friendless and homeless, becomes discouraged. How different with the man who is met upon his release and taken to a home where the finger of scorn is not pointed at him, and where if he be willing, with the help of Almighty God, his lost manhood asserts itself and he feels strong and able to begin life anew and forget the dark past.

In securing the services of Mr. F. H. Starr, as Superintendent of the work in Philadelphia, the managers have secured a man who seems specially fitted for the work, having himself lived the life of a criminal for over twenty years. It seemed as if God in his wise providence, singled Mr. Starr out from among the criminal classes to work in his vineyard among men who had been criminals like himself, and his labors have been greatly blessed of God. Under his direction, the home has gone far beyond the experimental point. It has been shown that these men support themselves and a large percentage of them become good and useful citizens, many who were given up as irreclaimable, are professed Christians and are living witnesses of the truth that Christ can save to the uttermost.

The Home is non-sectarian and carried on under strictly business and Christian principles, and is supported by the manufacture of brooms.

Every inmate receives adequate payment for the labor performed and with the money thus honestly earned and saved, men who have been separated from their families are enabled to rejoin them; others are enabled to get to their distant homes and still others enabled to start in some small business for themselves.

Along quiet paths this Home has pursued its way. It has given the prisoner counsel and material aid when needed most. It has given him shelter and employment just as the prison gates opened at the end of his term, and what is far better than all this, it has taught the prisoner that the divine clemency is far greater than the penalty that was attached to his transgressions. It is Mr. Starr's life object now and he prays that there may be a similar place of refuge established in every State and that home will have cause to say: "No man cares for my soul!"

Not a Patent Medicine.

Old Age

is usually another name for debility. Too much food, and improper food is eaten, overtaxing the impaired digestive organs; the kidneys do not properly carry off the effete products; the brain is sluggish. All these troubles are overcome by the use of

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

Digestion is improved; kidneys stimulated; brain brightened; new energy given. Absolutely harmless.

Prescribed by over forty thousand physicians for ten years past. Regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. All druggists, or by mail. Sample by mail, 25 cents. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,

Manufacturing Chemists, 106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure Restores Health

In nearly every case. It is guaranteed by druggists; if first bottle fails to benefit, money is refunded.

Ask your druggist, or send to the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., for Dr. Miles' free book, entitled,

"New and Startling Facts."

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.

Set any name in one minute; prints 500 cards an hour. You can make money with it. A font of pretty type, also Indelible Ink, Type, Holder, Pads and Trowers. Best-Looking Markers, worth $1.00 sample mailed FREE for 10 stamps for postage on outfit and large catalogue of 1000 Bargains. Same outfit as Chicago Expo. Large outfit for printing 1000 cards, $1.00. Ingersoll & Bro., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

CLEAR AS CRYSTAL

Your drinking water should be—may be, if you use a "Crystal Fountain" Germ-proof Filter. A porous rock tube filter with a perfect automatic cleaner. Send for a book, free by mail, and learn all about it. Also Gravity Filters, in which we use the Crystal Fountain Rock Tube.

THE GEO. L. SQUIER MFG. CO., Sectional view Filter Dept. "G," Buffalo, N. Y., U.S.A.

BEST BUSINESS ON EARTH For Agt.

$1.00 every hour you work selling NEW COMBINATION FUNNEL. out. Six articles in one. Anybody who has a little up and go "can sell 50 a day. Also our new T Puller and Hammer. Makes housecleaning pleasure, any child can use it. Sells at sight. L are just as successful as men. Big profits. Ethical tie postpaid 25c. We make 50 other new fast sellers. PHOENIX MFG. CO., Dept. 4, Newark, N. J.

Money Saver $5. Printing Press. Print your own cards, etc. $18. Press for circulars or small newspapers. Catalogue free, presses, type paper, cards, etc. from maker KELSEY & CO. Meriden, Conn.

Cake Easily removed without greasing. Round square, 2 round layer in mail 35 cents. Catalogue Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 68 St. Bath.

WALL-PAPER Samples mailed free. Prices from $3.50 a roll, 3 yds. K & A V-E-R & A-L-I-E 932-34 Market St., 415 Arch St., PHILADELPHIA

WANTED to take orders for our fine Teas, Ex. Soaps, Toilet articles, etc. Largest assortment, finest premiums given. No initial required. We pay the freight. Samples free. Address at once CONSUMERS TEA & SPICE CINCINNATI TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS 45 Liberty St., New York, sells all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for sale. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest in the world. Dealers supplied. 52-page illus. cat.

FREE TO BALD HEAD! We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair up bald head, stop falling hair and move scalp disease. Address, Allenheim Medical Dispensary 127 East Third Street, Cincinnati.

NERVE LIVER TABLETS & Lactate. For Brain and Nerve Exhaustion, with NERVE, the best in the world. 3 months' supply. 10 cents. ACROSS ALBANY, Box 162, New York

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED by my "Whispering" System. Cures one more to good hearing than all other remedies combined. Whispers HEARD. Help ears as do eyes. F. Hincor, 5433 Edway, N. Y. Book of proofs.

SAMPLES FREE FREIGHT PREPAID

ALFRED PEATS
Prize
WALL-PAPER

We will mail you samples free of our Prize Patterns, 1896 Series, together with our guide, "How to Paper and Economy in Home Decoration." If you will send us a description of the different rooms you have to paper, and what they are used for, we will carefully select the patterns and colorings most suitable.

Our new $1,000 Prize Designs are the most artistic and delicately colored papers in the market, and are better made than those of any other manufacturer. Prices

10 cents and up per roll.

The New York World says: "None so beautiful, so perfect, or offered so cheap."
The Chicago Tribune says: "They will be in great demand by people of artistic taste."
Over 2,000,000 rolls of other papers carried in stock.
Prices marked in plain figures on each sample.

3 cents and up per roll.

WE PREPAY THE FREIGHT.

Send to us for samples and you will positively get the latest colorings and designs to select from.

AGENTS WANTED. One agent wanted in each town, who can furnish good references, to sell from our large sample book on commission, and to whom we can refer all requests for samples in their vicinity. Experienced men only. Agent's outfit complete $1.00.

Prices and 1 Sample are Our Best Argument.

Write to nearest address.

41-43 W. 14th ST. NEW YORK. ALFRED PEATS 143-145 WABASH AVE, CHICAGO.

The Punishment of Caiaphas.

MALCHUS sped swiftly away from Golgotha. When he reached the palace he went straight to the private apartment of his master. Caiaphas was alone. He was sitting motionless in his great chair, eyes fixed and staring. "Master!" said Malchus, trembling beneath that terrible, stony face, "I must tell something—something which hath to do with thy son." And he cast vainly about in his mind for a merciful way of telling his frightful tidings. But Caiaphas did not answer; he seemed to have heard. "I have found thy son!" cried Malchus, growing nearer and stooping over the throne. "I have found thy son; and he is dead, or even now dead." Caiaphas stirred, and turned his eyes slowly till that terrible, unblinking gaze rested on the face of his servant. "Thou hast found my son? My son is dead! What is it that thou art saying?" When did Malchus, in his desperation, utter forth the whole awful story. Caiaphas did not move. "He is crucified," he said, "still in the same dull tone—with the Nazarene. My son and the Son of God! Crucified together!" Then a frightful change came over his face. He sprang up, his eyes flaming, his mouth open. "Thou art lying! Thou art lying!" he shrieked. "Thou art trying to make me afraid for what I have heard! But I am not afraid. I am glad—glad! Dost thou hear? Get thee away from my presence, and never dare to enter again! Get thee away or I will kill thee!" And with the howl of a demoniac, he rushed forward. But Malchus was gone. When he had reached the street, he sank down for a moment on the stones, and pressing his trembling hands together, groaned out: "My God! My master! Help him, I beseech thee. And forgive, if it be possible!" Then he arose, and went swiftly away towards Calvary, stopping only to purchase supplies of fine linen and spices. As he turned the corner of a narrow street he met two men; one of them called out by name. He paused for an instant, and saw that it was John, the follower of the Nazarene. "I have with me a lad," said John, turning to his breath, "who hath a woeful errand to thy master. He knoweth the whereabouts of his son, lost so long ago. I was bringing him to the palace; he cannot gain admittance alone." "Hath he tried before?" asked Malchus eagerly. "Yes," said the lad, speaking for himself, "many times yesterday." Malchus groaned aloud. "I know all that thou wouldst tell my master," he said. "But it will avail nothing to see him now. And as for his mother—let her remain in ignorance of the thing for a while. She hath enough to bear." And he told him briefly of what had passed between himself and Caiaphas. "I am going to see to the burial of my young master," said, in conclusion. "Tis all that I can do for him now, for whom I would have given my heart's best blood."

"I love him, too," said Stephen, simply. "But I am glad for him; for he hath gone to a better place than this—to be with Him." Then all three went sadly on, till they came to the place where the crosses were.

The body of Jesus was being taken reverently down from the Cross, as they approached, a number of persons assisting, among whom Malchus recognized two members of the Sanhedrim, Joseph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus.

"They believe on him at last," said John sadly.

"They have long believed on him, but have not dared to confess it openly," replied Malchus; "even as I, myself," he added humbly.

"The soldier to whom he had given the coin, now approached him. 'The lad is dead,' he said in a low voice, 'and the other also. Wilt thou that we help thee?' 'Yes, help me. Here is gold,' said Malchus huskily.

And so it was when the sun sank behind the horizon, all three rested in the peace of death—Jesus in the new tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, in a fair garden near to the place where he died, and the others not far away. For Stephen had besought Malchus with tears that the body of his father might not be left to the brutal hands of the soldiers.

As they went away in the twilight, Malchus said to Stephen, "Where now wilt thou go?"

"I know not," answered the boy forlornly. "There is no one to whom I can go; and no place!" and he sobbed aloud.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cure is really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. C. Greedy, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down night or day from asthma. The Kola cured him at once. To make the matter sure, he and hundreds of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1764 Broadway, New York, is sending out large trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a large trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing if you should surely try it.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS

and a "Chautauqua" Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .

100 Bars Sweet Home Soap.	10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine.	18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . . . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISSATISFIED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE.—The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. make our readers a wonderful offer. Not only do they give you a box of excellent laundry soap and toilet articles of great value, but they also give each purchaser a valuable premium, and we personally know they carry out what they promise.—The Independent, New York.

NOTE.—We are glad to endorse the Larkin Co. of Buffalo. Personal trial of their goods has been made by members of the Observer staff. Our readers may take advantage of their offers without hesitation.—New York Observer.

2 Minutes for Refreshments

THE Handy Tablet

requires neither sugar nor spoon to make healthful and refreshing drinks the moment it touches water.

By mail, 30 cents.

The HANDY TABLET CO., 1021 N. Front St., Philadelphia, Pa.

LAUGHING CAMERA. 10c.

The latest invention in cameras. You look through the lens and your stout friends will look like living skeletons, your thin friends like thin mice, fat men, horses like giraffes, and in fact everything appears as though you were living in another world. Each camera contains two strong lenses and a nearly finished leather case. The latest in camera making on the market. Create a bustle of sport. Catalogue of 1,000 novelties and cameras by mail, 3 for 25c, mailed postpaid. Agents wanted. Robert H. Ingersoll & Bro., Dept. No. 10, 65 Cortlandt St., New York.

The "Pass-It-On-Society."

Probably many of our readers have already heard of this society and its work. It was started on a suggestion made by the Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D., of Brooklyn, who writes, on February 8, 1895: "My Dear Sir: Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity, and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the 'Pass-It-On-Society.'" On December 5, 1895 (ten months later), Dr. Farrar writes: "I believe it is a real blessing to the afflicted." If you are suffering with Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever, Rose Cold, or any similar disease of the respiratory organs, send for HYOMEI, the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment comprised in Booth's "Hyomei" Pocket Inhaler Outfit, by mail, $1.00.

Your friend would not "pass-it-on" to you unless convinced of its merit. In ASTHMA Hyomei gives instant relief, stops the cough, the wheezing and gasping, and makes breathing easy in a few moments time. In CATARRH it removes the offensive accumulations, clears the head, removes catarrhal deafness and purifies the breath. It cures BRONCHITIS permanently and robs CROUP of its terrors.

HOW THE "PASS-IT-ON-SOCIETY" GROWS.

Griffin, Ga., July 8, 1895.

Like Dr. Farrar, I want to join the "Pass-It-On-Society." I am so grateful for the good results that I have received from the use of Hyomei, and I have already spoken of it to a number of my friends.

C. I. STACY, Sec'y Y. M. C. A.,
Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1895.

In thirty years' experience in the practice of medicine I have never given my name in support of a proprietary remedy, until I met with Hyomei, which I adore with all my heart (professional ethics to the contrary notwithstanding). Since testing Hyomei in Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, I believe in it for itself, for what it has done, and I gladly add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

S. H. MORRIS, M.D., 150 Franklin St.,
P. S.—You are at liberty to use this as you may deem best.

Pass Christian, Miss.

I have been a sufferer from Catarrh and Bronchitis ever since last August; my pastor, Rev. O. W. Flowers, advised me to try your remedy. He has been using one of your Pocket Inhalers ever since last Spring, and has derived much benefit from it.

MISS BERTHA B. STEWARD, Harrison County.

New York, Feb. 1, 1895.

I have been troubled with Bronchitis for about four years. No medicine helped me. About two weeks ago I tried one of your Pocket Inhalers, which gave me immediate relief. Sunday evening my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Farrar, spoke with great difficulty, apparently from a heavy cold settled in his chest. I sent him one of your Pocket Inhalers. I inclose his reply.

HALSEY FITCH, 170-172 Chambers Street,
(Dr. Farrar's reply is given above).

Greensboro, Ala., Sept. 15, 1895.

Your Hyomei cured me of Catarrh after other remedies failed; will add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

W. M. SEAY.

New York, Sept. 20, 1895.

I take pleasure in adding my name to the long list of those whose lives have been made happier by the use of Hyomei. It is not only an instant relief to Catarrh sufferers, but will cure this disease entirely. I have been the instrument of inducing many friends and acquaintances to seek relief through its use. I have yet to learn of one who has not been benefited I want to "pass-it-on."

A. G. THOMPSON, 33 Wall Street.

AMERICAN UNION LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, 44, 46, 48, Cedar St., New York, February 19, 1896.

Please find enclosed one dollar for which send one Pocket Inhaler Outfit to my friend, D. S. Walton, 134 Franklin St., City. It has done me so much good that I never cease recommending it to my friends and as you know have bought as many as 12 or 15 which I have given to personal friends, and have influenced more than twice this number to buy them, and I have yet to meet one who has not thanked me for recommending it. It has completely cured my little daughter of Catarrh, from which she has been suffering for years.

Very truly yours,
J. S. NUGENT (Treasurer).
Albany, N. Y., July 3, 1895.

I will tell you candidly your remedy has given me more relief from my Asthma than anything I have used, and really I have been so enthusiastic over it that I have made a great many converts, not only in Albany, but West Troy. The effect Hyomei has on me is very pleasant; when I am oppressed for breath, I inhale a short time, and the great desire to cough is gone. The little Inhaler is my constant companion.

MRS. SARAH E. BANTHAM, 359 Clinton Avenue.

Cures by Inhalation

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, consisting of pocket inhaler (made of deodorized hard rubber, beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send me your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei does cure. Consultation and trial treatment free at my office.

Hyomei Balm.—An antiseptic skin food for weak chests, burns, scalds, chapped lips, rough hands, frost bites, eczema, etc. Nothing has been discovered so effective for the purposes named. Price by mail, 50 cents.

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th St., New York.

A Christian Centenarian.

Aunt Katy Snodgrass of Ohio and Her Instructive Life—A Career full of Kind Deeds.

On January 6, last, the little town of Milford Centre, O., was agitated by an event of unusual importance. It was the hundredth birthday of dear old Aunt Katy Snodgrass, and under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps of the place, the event was made one worthy to be remembered. The Presbyterian church was crowded by a big audience all glad, by their presence, to show their love and esteem for the good old lady. After the formal exercises, Aunt Katy arose and in a few words, heartily spoken, thanked her friends for their kindness.

AUNT KATY SNODGRASS.

Aunt Katy was born near Staunton, Va., in 1796. Her parents, Balser and Elizabeth King, moved to Kentucky when she was four years old, and in 1807 they went to Green County, O., afterwards settling in Union County. During the war of 1812, the King family was repeatedly in peril. Speaking of those exciting days, Aunt Katy, who has an excellent memory, said:

"There were nine families gathered at our house, to protect themselves from the Indians. They made port holes through the plastering between the logs. We were all in great fear. The Indians were gone, and we could not find out what they were doing. My father and Andrew Gill went to Sandusky as spies. They were captured by the Indians and their guns and horses taken from them. They were treated kindly with a supper, lodging and breakfast, and in the morning they let them go away. Our men took another direction and soon rode out of sight and turned their horses homeward."

Katy had a meagre education, but made the most of it. She and her sisters raised and spun their own flax, made their own clothing, and were expert with needle and loom. She was married in 1816 to Ralph R. Phelps, the local schoolmaster, and they began life together in a humble way, a loom, an iron pot, a bake-oven, and a few pieces of furniture being the sum of their possessions. After a time the young couple settled in Milford, where Aunt Katy's life has since been passed up to the present time. After the death of Mr. Phelps, she married Mr. James Snodgrass, who died in 1867 at the age of seventy-two. She had four children; but only one—a son—is now living. She has, besides, twelve grandchildren, forty great grandchildren, and nine great great grandchildren, all living.

Aunt Katy has all her life been a consistent Christian, and was the daughter of Christian parents, who early taught their children the story of the Saviour and his love. Her whole life has been a ministry of kind deeds and the love of God. For over fifty years she has been a member of the Presbyterian Church at Milford, and she has lived in the vicinity of her present home for eighty-nine years. Now, at her one hundredth mile stone, she can recall the administration of every President of the United States, and her memory and other faculties have been wonderfully preserved, when her great age is considered. She is the oldest living member of the Woman's Relief Corps, Department of Ohio, and is a member of the Union County Pioneer Association. Socially, she is a universal favorite, being loved no less for her kindly nature than for the memory of the multitude of little kindnesses it has been in her power to render to others. A small pension comforts her declining years, but even if this centenarian saint had no means of her own, the good neighbors would not let her want. Soon she will cross the river and enter upon the rest that awaiteth the people of God, but the good people of Milford would fain keep her with them as long as possible, to be brightened by her example, cheered by her faith, and encouraged by her patience.

IMPERIAL TEMPERANCE WORKER.

The young Empress of Russia is showing an earnest interest in the line of temperance reform. Recently she has had interviews with several provincial governors regarding the best means of checking the fearful increase of intemperance among the peasantry.

LOVELY PHOTO FREE!

With the sole object of introducing into thousands of new homes our mammoth fifty-six column weekly family story paper we will send to each person who sends us 25¢ stamps or silver for 3 mos. trial subscription to our great paper, a free gift of a handsome cabinet photo (5x8 inches) of marvelous Rocky mountain scenery true to life. Our paper illustrates this famous scenery each week and contains pure western stories of love and adventure. 5th year. Club of five and 5 photos $1. Send today. Mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and address, Illustrated Weekly, Denver, Colorado.

INCUBATORS, BROODERS, VEGETABLE and CLOVER CUTTERS, BONE and GRAIN MILLS.
A complete line of poultry supplies at lowest prices. Green cut bone will MAKE HENS LAY in winter and produce fertile eggs for hatching. Send for catalog and valuable information on poultry raising. PERKINS INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., 613 E. Ohio St., CHICAGO, ILL. Absolutely Self-Regulating.

SOLD!
UNDER A POSITIVE GUARANTEE
To wash as clean as can be done on the washboard and with much more ease. This applies to Torrell's Perfect Washing Machine which will be sent on trial at wholesale price. If not satisfactory money refunded. Agents Wanted. For exclusive territory, terms and prices write PORTLAND WFG. CO., Box 99, Portland, Me.

NEW CATALOGUE FOR 1896:
Printed in colors that are correct. Best and finest illustrated Poultry Catalogue ever printed. Get it and be convinced. It tells how to make poultry pay, how to build poultry houses, gives remedies for diseases, also lowest prices of fowls and eggs. If interested in poultry, this book is what you need. Sent post paid for 15 cents. The J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

OUR POULTRY ANNUAL
and Book of Valuable Recipes, 61 large pages, contains beautiful colored plates of fowls, gives description and prices of 5 varieties with important hints on care of poultry, and pages of recipes of great value to everyone. Finest Poultry Book published for 1896. Postpaid only 10 cts. C. N. Bowers, Box 15, Dakota, Ill.

WHY PAY RETAIL PRICE
When you can buy a custom hand made oak leather harness direct from the maker at wholesale prices. Send for our illustrated Catalogue giving full description. KING & CO., Mfrs., 12 Church St., Owego, N. Y.

SHOEMAKER'S POULTRY BOOK
66 pages, printed in 6 colors. Bird's-eye view of almost Poultry Farm. Tells all about Chickens. Prices of same, their Diseases, Remedies, poultry building, etc. Fully illustrated. Price 10 cts. C. C. SHOEMAKER, Freeport, Me., U.S.A.

NEW MAMMOTH POULTRY GUIDE
showing colored photo of chickens in natural colors. 112 pages, 1000 pictures. Tells all about Poultry for Profit or Pleasure. Price only 10 cts. JOHN BAUCHER, JR., Box 69, Freeport, Me.

Incubators and Brooders
Send for our new book, "Incubators and Brooders," which gives full description of the latest models. Shoemaker Incubator Co., Freeport, Me., U.S.A.

LADY AGENTS to sell our "Eureka" Book and "Eureka" Paper, many other special offers. Send for our "Eureka" Book and "Eureka" Paper. 190 VanBuren Street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Mammoth New 1896 Flower Seed Offer.

A Magnificent Collection of FLOWER SEEDS Over 300 Varieties FREE!

A WHOLE FLOWER GARDEN WITHOUT COST!

An Unparalleled Offer by an Old-Established and Reliable Publisher: The LADIES' WORLD is a large, 24-page, 4-column illustrated Magazine, and the family circle, with elegant cover printed in colors. It is devoted to: Poems, Ladies' Fancy Work, Home Decoration, Housekeeping, Fashions, Hygiene, Juvenile Reading, Etiquette, Out-of-Door Recreations, etc. To introduce this charming magazine into 100,000 homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following loved offer of only Thirty Cents on your subscription. For the remainder of this year (April to December inclusive), and a subscriber we will also send, free and post-paid, a large and magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, over 300 Varieties, as follows:

- 1 Packet Blood Red Castor Bean (Phaseolus Stagninus). Very large rapid-growing ornamental source plant of tropical appearance. Stems and leaves a deep blood red. Height 6 feet.
- 1 Packet New Fireball Dianthus. This beautiful new dwarf Pink is a distinct novelty. The plants are covered with brilliant, rose-red double flowers during the summer and through the fall.
- 1 Packet Venus Looking Glass (Spirea Spierdum). The name of this plant signifies "mirror" and during the unusual shining brightness of the leaves the flowers. Grow about 9 inches high.
- 1 Packet Phlox Drummondii. Lovely, brilliant flowers. Nothing can surpass them for color and duration of bloom.
- 1 Packet Poppy, mixed. A grand collection of this popular favorite, including the Mikado, Cardinal, American Flag, Mephisto, Play of Fate and many other rare and beautiful sorts.
- And Three Hundred Other Varieties, including California Poppy, Forget-Me-Not, Love Lies Bleeding, Blue Love, Groove, Mourning Bride, Vicarian Stock, Nugget of Gold, Marzetta, Choice Pansies, Verbenas, Chrysanthemums, Finest Aster, Cypress Vine, Double Dahlia, Monarda, Crimson Flax, Marzetta, Camellia, Godiva, The Bride, Striped Petunia, Rose of Heaven, Youth and Old Age, etc., etc.
- 1 Packet Comet Aster, mixed. A superb new variety—double flowers, having increased petals, resembling the Japanese Chrysanthemums. The mixture includes Shades of Blue, Sky Blue and many other beautiful colors.
- 1 Packet Blanket Flower (Gallardia picta). Very flowers, two to three inches across, in beautiful shades of Show, free-blossoming plants, one to two feet high.
- 1 Packet Rose Queen Convolvulus (Convolvulus rosea). Beautiful dwarf variety of bright rose color, with center, fringed purple, and shading toward golden yellow.
- 1 Packet Lobb's Nasturtium (Nasturtium lobbianum). Markable for brilliancy of color and profusion of blossoms. Lasting from early summer until frost exhibit every shade from creamy white to fiery scarlet, striped, spotted, etc.
- 1 Packet Eckford Sweet Peas. Fifty named varieties, this famous collection including the most recent introductions, producing every shade and color of this beautiful flower.

Remember, thirty cents pays for the Magazine for the remainder of this year (April to December inclusive), and this entire magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds (310 varieties), put up by a first-class Seed House and warranted fresh and reliable. No matter how many flower seeds you have purchased for this season, you cannot afford to miss this wonderful offer. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of the seeds if you are not entirely satisfied. This offer is reliable. Do not find it with the catchpenny schemes of unscrupulous persons. We have been established over 20 years, and refer to the Commercial Agents to our entire responsibility. Write us! Six subscriptions and six Seed Collections sent for the Address: S. H. MOORE & CO. (Premium Seed Dept.), 27 Park Place, New York

CATALOGUE
FREE
Now is the time to buy a PIANO or ORGAN from the largest manufacturers in the world, who sell their instruments direct to the public at wholesale factory prices. Don't pay a profit to agents and middlemen. TERMS—Advance. Privilege of testing organ or piano in your own home 30 days. No expense to you if not satisfactory. Warranted 25 years.

REFERENCE Bank references furnished on application; the editor of this paper; any business man in this town, and to the thousands using our instrument in their homes. A book of testimony (sent with every catalogue). As an advertisement we will sell the first Piano in a place for only $160. The first Organ on $25.

If you want to buy for cash, Write Us. If you want to buy on instalments, BUT DON'T BUY UNTIL YOU

BEETH-VEEN PIANO & ORGAN CO., P. O. Box 741, WASHINGTON, N. Y.

TO ASTHMA SUFFERERS
WE OFFER A CURE THAT STAYS.
Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief, but cures the cause of the disease and cures to stay cured. Particulars and blank for free examination on application. DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

12 Years Cured: MRS. J. E. SINCLAIR, 3 Boynton St., Worcester, Mass.

11 Years Cured: MRS. J. L. MONROE, Rutland, Mass.

10 Years Cured: REV. GEO. W. FITCH, Fruitvale, Cal.

10 Years Cured: W. H. WHITCOMB, Poynette, Wis.

10 Years Cured: GEO. BALMAIN, 40 Chili Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

WE HAVE NO AGENTS
but have sold direct to the consumer for 23 years, at wholesale prices, saving the dealer's profits. Ship anywhere for examination before sale. Everything warranted.

100 styles of Carriages, 10 styles of Harnesses, 4 styles of Riding Saddles, Top Buggies as low as $25. Phaetons as low as $65. Spring Wagons $31 to $65. Send for large Catalogue.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. Pratt, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.
For printing cards, marking linen, books, etc. Contains everything shown in cut. Type, Tweezers, Holder, Indelible Ink, Ink Pad, etc. Thoroughly practical for business or household use and a most instructive amusement. Sent with catalogue illustrating over 100 Trucks and Novelties for 10c. In stamps to pay postage and packing on outfit and catalogue. Same outfit with figures 15c. Large outfit for printing two lines 25c.

Brownie Rubber Stamps—A set of 6 grotesque illustrations with ink pad, price, postpaid, 10c.

G. A. R. series Rubber Stamp, 12 characters. Makes all kinds of Buttons, Emblems and other military pictures. 25c. postpaid. Address: ROBERT U. INGERSOLL & BRO., Box 41, 65 Cortlandt St., New York, Brownie Co.

HEADQUARTERS FOR DUMPING Horse Carts
Wide and narrow tires. Steel axles. Low rates of freight from our works. TANANUS, Pa. HORSON & CO., No. 1 Stone St., New York

SPRAY PUMPS
21 STYLES. BEST and CHEAPEST. Catalogue and full treatise on spraying fruit and vegetable crops mailed free. Address: WM. STAHL, QUINCY, ILL.

ANCIENT BABYLONIAN ART
Every passing year brings to light some wondrous revelation of antiquity, many of them confirmatory of Scripture. Prof. Hilch, the famous archaeologist, writes: "Many Babylonian-Assyrian antiquities have come to the knowledge of Assyriologists during the last few years, are now housed in a Museum. Of fundamental value for our knowledge of the early history of art in Mesopotamia, and of the extent of the earliest Semitic dominions, the fragment of a bas-relief in basalt with the remains of four columns in Old Babylonian cuneiform characters. In the first column are still preserved portions of the name of King Naram-Sin ('Beloved of the Moon God'), the son and successor of Sargon I. He caused the monument to be erected about 3750 B.C., upon a terrace probably near Diarbekir, on the Upper Tigris. It was from this town there came the first news of the inscription and, according to the information obtained by me, the monument was really found in the neighborhood of that city in 1892. Pater Schell published text and relief for the first time in a French journal. Unfortunately this publication is deficient in various respects, as various characters were not recognized at all, or were incorrectly read. I had a photograph of the relief prepared. The place where the monument was found confirms the correctness of my attempted reconstruction of the oldest Semitic domain, of which I maintained, on the basis of other facts, that it extended in the north to the natural boundary formed by the Armenian mountains. Although the monument is broken, and the preservation defaced, yet it shows us that the artisans of that very ancient time were skillful in using hammer and chisel on the hardest materials. We are faced with the strange but undeniable fact, which we also find in studying the oldest stone vases and cylinders, that Babylonian art, 4000 years ago, shows a knowledge of human forms, a preservation of the laws of art, and a readiness and fineness of execution, far beyond the products of later times. The beginning of Babylonian art, indeed, is found in the beginning of Babylonian history."

A Difficult Language.
Missionaries agree that one of the most difficult of modern languages to acquire is the Chinese. Rev. J. F. Masters, a missionary of long experience, writes on this subject: "The great difficulty in acquiring the Chinese language is in the tones, the inflections, and the utter lawlessness of its idiom. There are only about 20 distinct sounds in the language, and a few months' practice will easily master the pronunciation, but it must be remembered that to each of these sounds there is attached a sort of metrical scale ranging from an octave to an octave and a half, giving a variety of tones which only a musical ear can detect. In Cantonese these are from eight to twelve of these tones, and some microphonic ears have even detected as many as sixteen. In Chinese the tone is all important. Take the word tsung. This may mean grasshopper, elephant, mechanic, or pickles, according to the tone. Put an aspirate into the middle of the word and it may mean exile, good luck, wall, spear, or gun, and a variety of other meanings, depending on the one given. A man is a man only when the correct tone is given. Change the tone and a man becomes a nightingale, a carrot, or many other ridiculous things. No written signs ever invented can enable the student to acquire by himself these peculiar jerks and twists so essential to correct speech. They can only be acquired by ear from a good teacher. After learning Cantonese a few months, I tried to preach a sermon. Alas! I was the only person in the congregation who understood a word of what I was saying. It was disheartening to hear that some of the Chinese who had listened to me remarked how much the English language resembled Chinese. They supposed I had been preaching in English. Wrong tones, confusion of long and short vowels, and blunders in aspirates had done all the mischief. It was very humiliating. My heart sank. I wished myself back home. Oh, for the apostolic gift of tongues! But I tried again, next time with better success. Little by little the difficulties vanished, the tones and terrible idioms were mastered.

15 LARGE PKTS. NEW FLOWER SEEDS FOR ONLY 15 CENTS

To pay postage and packing.
1 pkt. New Japanese Imperial Morning Glory (as shown in cut). This grand new variety is truly wonderful! flowers very large, all colors, red, green, marbled fringed, while spotted with blue, and all of them of beautiful beauty.
1 pkt. Mammoth Pansy, 1 pkt. Cosmos, 1 pkt. Crimson Eye Hibiscus, 1 pkt. Chinese Pink, 1 pkt. Aster, 1 pkt. Gaillardia, 1 pkt. Godetia, 1 pkt. Larkspur, 1 pkt. Giant Cockscomb, 1 pkt. Sweet Alyssum, 1 pkt. Candytuft, 1 pkt. Mignonette, 1 pkt. Phlox, 1 pkt. Sweet Pea. 15 large packets choice vegetable seeds, all different kinds 15 cts. 15 bulbs New Gardenias 15 cts. We will send the three collections for Only 35 Cents. Remember we refund your money if not as represented.
J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

PLANTING
well begun is half done. Begin well by getting Ferry's Seeds. Don't let chance determine your crop, but plant Ferry's Seeds. Known and sold everywhere.
Before you plant, get Ferry's Seed Annual for 1896. Contains more practical information for farmers and gardeners than many high-priced text books. Mailed free.
D. M. FERRY & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

$250.00 FOR 4 FLOWER BEDS.

The following is the greatest collection ever offered for variety of colors, and I will pay $100 to person who will grow the largest number of colors from it: $75 to second; $50 to third; and $25 to fourth. It will surprise you, and make a very interesting flower bed.
1 pkt. Alice Pansy—all colors mixed, single grand.
1 pkt. Phlox—many mixed all wonderful showy colors.
1 pkt. Sweet Pea—Baskford Mixed, over 40 kinds, splendid.
1 pkt. Chinese Pink—mixed colors, hardy and very showy.
1 pkt. Petunia—all colors, makes a gorgeous show.
1 pkt. Poppies—mixed, a wonderful selection of colors.
1 pkt. Mignonette—mixed, all kinds to be found; fragrant.
1 pkt. Chrysanthemum—all choicest kinds—very choice.
1 pkt. Everlasting Flower—all colors, flowers kept for years.
1 pkt. Mixed Flowers—over 100 kinds that grow and bloom.
2 bulbs Excelsior Pearl Tuberoses—sure to bloom, rarely.
4 bulbs Gladioli, fancy mixed, lovely spikes, all colors.
1 bulb Gladiolus, Lemoine, earliest of all, butterfly colors.
8 bulbs Oxalis—sure to bloom—lovely color for borders.
These 10 pkts. of seed and 13 choice bulbs (worth $1.50) will all flower this season, and make a wonderful flower bed of many colors. I will send them with my 1896 catalogue, Pansy Calendar, full instructions for prizes and how to get the most colors, for 50 cents (silver or M. O.). Order at once, and you will be more than pleased. My catalogue shows a photo of such a bed.
"Cupid" Sweet Peas, the Floral Wonder. Free with each order.
F. B. MILLS, Box 147, ROSE HILL, N. Y.

A BARGAIN COLLECTION OF FLOWER SEEDS

10 Choice Annuals, everybody's favorites, all new, fresh seeds, sure to grow and bloom this season.
Pansy, 40 colors and markings; Phlox, 20 colors; Verbena, 18 colors; Pink, 10 colors; Petunia, 10 colors; Aster, 12 colors; Balsam, 8 colors; Sweet Peas, 12 colors; Mignonette and Sweet Alyssum.

FOR 12 CENTS and the name and address of two of your friends who grow flowers, I will send, postpaid, the complete collection, one packet each of the ten varieties, enough for any ordinary garden. This is a BONAFIDE offer, made to introduce my home grown flower seeds to new customers and which I guarantee please you or the amount paid refunded and the seeds given as a present.

Miss C. H. LIPPINCOTT,
319 and 323 Sixth St. So., MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

SEEDS Always Fresh and SURE TO GROW.

Send 5 cents to cover postage and receive by return mail package of my New Hybrid Everblooming Pansy Seed, all colors, finest varieties known; and my beautiful Seed and Plant Book of Garden Novelties all sold at lowest prices ever known.

H. W. BUCKBEE, Rockford Seed Farms,
P. O. Box 587, ROCKFORD, ILL.

Cure for Kidneys and Bladder.
We are glad to announce to sufferers from kidney and bladder diseases, pain in back, and rheumatism, the new botanic discovery Alkavis, is pronounced a positive cure for these maladies. Many of our cures are certainly wonderful, and we advise our readers to send name and address to the Church Key Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, who will send you treatment free by mail or aid. It costs you nothing.

If you want a sure relief for pains in the back, side, chest, or limbs, use an
Ailcock's Porous Plaster
BEAR IN MIND—Not one of the host of counterfeits and imitations is as good as the genuine.

$250.00 FOR TOMATOES. This is the most wonderful Tomato we ever saw. It will ripen in the coldest North where every one. The Seed need not be planted until April or May, and will give an abundance of ripe fruit. Be sure to try it.
ALL HEAD CABBAGE. Very early. Sure to be all head.
REDHEAD CABBAGE. Early. Sure to be all head. Excellent quality and a good keeper. Single heads, have weighed 10 lbs.
JAPANESE CLIMBING CUCUMBER. A wonderful variety from Japan, and will climb a trellis, wire netting, or any support 5 or 6 feet. Fruits early and continually, long, tender, excellent for pickling. Places all over a wonderful curiosity.
GOLDEN TOM THUMB POP-CORN. A perfect little wonder, produces several golden ears to every stalk, excellent for popping.
EARLY FORTUNE POTATO. A wonderful variety, earliest in the world. Planted 5 weeks after the Early Rose, matured at same time and yielded over 3 times as many. We want it tested in every garden in U. S. this year and offer a Handsome Prize for largest yield in each State from one potato. Instructions with potato which is worth $1.00 to any one.
SPECIAL OFFER. We will send a packet each of Early Tomato, All Head Early and Redhead Cabbage, Japanese Climbing Cucumber, 1 ear Tom Thumb Pop Corn and 1 whole Early Fortune Potato (packed from frost) with a Garden Annual nothing published like it for only 25 cts.
Every person sending M. O. or silver for above Collection, and names of three friends who will send seeds, we will send "Success With the Garden" a new and valuable magazine one year free and 200 certificates for seeds. Order at once. Address FAIRVIEW SEED FARM, Box 42, ROSE HILL, N. Y.

Six Lovely Roses For 25 Cents.
For only 25 cents (silver or stamps) we will send one each of following Exquisite Roses, strong, one year old plants, on their own roots. All will bloom freely this summer—Snowflake, pure white; Maurice Rouvier, pink shaded crimson; Star of Gold, the queen of yellows; Mad. Sadi Carnot, bright cherry red, very fragrant; Miss F. Kruger, copper yellow; Mad. Schwallier, best pink known.
For 50 cents we will send 13 ROSES including the above six and seven more of our selection all extra choice varieties, no two alike.
15 Prize Chrysanthemums 50c
12 Geraniums, single & double 50c
10 Flowering Begonias, choice kinds 50c
10 Fragrant Carnation Pinks 50c
12 Bright Colored Coteus 50c
25 pkts. Choice Flower Seeds 50c
ANY 3 OF ABOVE SETS FOR $1.25, ANY 5 SETS FOR $2.00.
These are samples of our stock and you may be sure we will send no inferior plants. We pay all postage and guarantee the plants safely delivered into your hands, all plainly and correctly labeled. Ask for Catalogue.
INNISFALLEN GREENHOUSES ESTABLISHED 1877.
THE GEO. H. MELLE CO.,
Box J. Springfield, Ohio.

3 NOVELTIES HIGH QUALITY LOW PRICE.
ASTER, GIANT COMET WHITE. Immense. The 3 (PIED) SWEET PEA seeds, White.
Japanese Imperial Morning Glory. (See cut.) NOVELTIES
Alyssum Little Gem. White. Pansy Parisian Fancy.
Dahlia Double. Very large. 40 colors. New strain.
Dianthus or Japanese Pink.
Fairy Zinnias. Gems.
Giant Phlox Drummondii.
Lemon Verbena. Fragrant.
Mignonette Giant Tree.
Verbenas—Mammoth.
16 FULL-SIZE PACKETS OF ALL THE ABOVE FLOWERS FOR 25c.
To anyone sending for 4 of these collections from 4 people, with names and addresses enclosed I will send FREE 5 BEGONIA BULBS IN 5 COLORS OR 5 BULBS 50 CENTS.
Flowers are 4 inches across. Bloated. Bloom in pots in the house summer and winter; outside are smothered with bloom all summer. Try to secure 4 orders and get these free.
AGENTS WANTED. Little work, good pay. Catalogue—free for growing, Premium, and Prize Blanks with every order. You can make money selling my seeds.
Japanese Imperial Morning Glory.
Regular price, 15 cts. a pkt.
MISS MARY E. MARTIN, FLORAL PARK, NEW YORK.

50c TRIAL SETS Of Choice Plants, Bulbs, Seeds & Fruits.
Our Sunrise Set of 12 Chrysanthemums valued at $1.40 prepaid by mail for only 50c
The Rose is the Queen of Summer, the Chrysanthemum of Autumn. Just think, 12 distinct large flowered Mums, for 50c. Planted out or grown in pots or boxes they will make a grand show. The Sunrise set and the following are offered to induce you to try our goods, confident that if you do so once their superiority will make you a constant customer. Every plant labeled and all strong and well rooted mailed postpaid, safe arrival and satisfaction guaranteed. Order by the letters and the numbers from this advertisement now, as these are introductory sets, not in catalogue, an Elegant Annual of 168 pages, which will be sent free with first order. If none of these sets suit you and you want anything in our line send for Catalogue, free. About 60 pages devoted to Vegetable and Flower Seeds, 20 to Plants and the balance to the Cream of the Fruit.

Set J—10 elegant profuse blooming Roses, including one of the new famous Crimson Rambler, 50c
" B—15 pkts. choice Vegetable Seeds, 10 sorts and 1 pkt. of our new Golden Hubbard Squash, 50c
" E—20 pkts. choice Flower Seeds, 20 sorts, 50c
" F—10 fragrant Carnation Pinks, 10 sorts, 50c
" H—4 superb French Cannas, 4 sorts, 50c
" K—10 large flowered Geraniums, 10 sorts, 50c
" L—30 fine Gladioli, all flowering bulbs, 50c
" N—10 Tuberoses, double sorts, all flowering, 50c
" O—10 flowering Plants, all different, 50c
" P—6 hardy ornamental Shrubs, 6 sorts, 50c
" Q—6 hardy Climbing Vines, 6 sorts, 10c
" U—2 elegant Palms, strong plants, 2 sorts, 50c
One-half each of any 2 sets 50c, any 3 sets, $1.25, 5 sets $2.00.

EVERYTHING OF THE BEST FOR LAWN, CONSERVATORY, PARK, ORCHARD, VINEYARD AND GARDEN.
42nd YEAR. 1000 ACRES. 29 GREENHOUSES.
THE STORRS & HARRISON CO., Box 285 Painesville, Ohio.

100.00 for a 5-acre farm, covered with wood, in Southern New Jersey, close to railroad; finest markets in the world; especially adapted for small fruits, poultry, vegetables, &c.; high and dry; healthy neighborhood; sold on instalments of $1 down and $1 per week, title insured. Immediate possession. Send for full particulars. D. L. RISLEY, 211 S. 10th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
SALESMEN WANTED to sell our celebrated $4 Pants to measure. Expressage paid to any part of the U. S. Send stamp for terms and sample illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c, to cover postage, etc. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.
STARK TREES BEARFRUIT TESTED 70 YEARS
As a sample of our 1000 hybrids we will send FREE this elegant, fruited tree, warranted a bearer of fine, delicious, aspen-like, Bargain Catalogue, for 10c, to cover postage, etc. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y. CITY.

Buy Seeds of BURPEE

Get the BEST and Save Money!

NEW SEED OF BEAUTIFUL
RARE FLOWERS AT LESS THAN
1/4 REAL VALUE
$1.20 worth for 25 cents!

THE GREATEST OFFER EVER MADE BY A WELL-KNOWN FIRM OF SEED GROWERS.

growing large areas of all these. We guarantee all full-size packets of same finest quality as if purchased at regular retail prices. Use This is a long time offer. We do the largest mail seed business in the world, and this offer is made to still further extend our trade.

FOR 25 CENTS we will mail to any address one packet (full size) each of all the following:—

AMARANTHUS, Coleus-leaved.

Entirely new, large, brilliantly-colored leaves.

ASTERS,—Fordhook Favorites.

Plants of unusual perfection, improved Victoria, and all the best of the magnificent New Comet Asters.

BALSAM,—Burpee's Defiance.

Of unequalled perfection unequaled in the world. Beautiful colors—double as a Camellia.

HELIANTHUS,—Double Multiflora.

A very distinct, peculiar new double Sunflower from France of most unusual beauty.

MIGNONETTE,—Giant Gabrielle.

Large bushy plants of most delicious fragrance.

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS buys the entire ten varieties as above, with directions for culture printed on each packet. Five Complete Collections mailed for $1.00, or 10 Collections for $2.00.

HOW CAN WE AFFORD IT?

will be the first question asked by thousands who read this advertisement. We answer that we cannot afford it, in the ordinary sense—the collection advertised below is sold at a positive loss,—but we charge these expenses to advertising, and many years' experience have shown that a fair trial of the famous FORDHOOK FLOWER SEEDS is the very best advertisement we can have. We have prepared 50,000 of these collections, and from the sale of these are sure to make thousands of new customers for BURPEE'S SEEDS. Use Do not hesitate to order—we guarantee entire satisfaction—and thus we can afford to wait another year for our profit from future sales at regular prices.

BURPEE'S GEM COLLECTION FOR 1896

Price 25 cents, contains TEN packets best seed of ten most beautiful and rare new flowers, which, purchased at regular retail prices, are worth $1.20. We prepared for this special offer last season by NASTURTIUMS,—Fordhook Finest.

A superb mixture of brilliant colors, including the beautiful new hybrids of Madame Gunter.

THREE NEW PANSIES.

The bright Meteor, showy Kaiser Frederick, and dainty, iridescent Peacock.

LARGEST-FLOWERING PETUNIAS.

The Giants of California, Burpee's Defiance, and Giant Emperor in unequalled mixture.

PHLOX HORTENSIAEFLORA.

Immense flower-clusters, like the Hydrangea.

RICINUS ZANZIBARENSIS.

The new gigantic variety from Africa. Really a noble plant. Leaves measure four feet across.

SWEET PEAS.

Every American garden should have the best NEW SWEET PEAS in 1896. By keeping Purity and High Quality, rather than low prices, our first aim, we are now HEADQUARTERS for SWEET PEAS.

25 Cts. buys these Seven Superb Sweet Peas:

BLANCHE BURPEE. Eckford's "finest of all Sweet Peas." Pure white flowers of perfect form and immense size; three and four on a stem. See illustration herewith.

DOROTHY TENNANT. Flowers of large, expanded form; a deep rose-mauve with wings of bluish-mauve.

LADY PENZANCE. Superb flowers of large size and exquisite color; beautiful laced pink, touching orange.

NEW LOTTIE ECKFORD. Remarkably beautiful, large flowers; white, edged and suffused with lavender-blue.

ROYAL ROBE. The largest and best soft pink; a lovely flower of exquisite beauty.

STANLEY. The flowers are produced abundantly in fours on long stems and are of a rich, dark maroon. Exceptionally fine for bouquets,—the best dark Sweet Pea.

SPECIAL SUPERFINE MIXED. This mixture contains only the very best Eckford Sweet Peas. It is a choice blending of seventeen large-flowered new named varieties.

The Seven Superb Sweet Peas named above, in same sized packets, would have cost $1.00 in 1895, but are sold now for 25 cents.

"Just How to Grow Sweet Peas: Full Directions by an Expert" is enclosed with each collection.

Get four friends to order and you will have a collection FREE, as we give five collections for $1.00. OR, for $1.00 you can have four collections and a 25-cent packet of

Dwarf Sweet Pea,—Burpee's "CUPID"

Large deep emerald green; flowers snow white, of delicious fragrance, and full size. The plants grow only five inches high, and spread twelve to fifteen inches in diameter. CUPID is a mass of white from May until November. It is The Floral Wonder of the Age!

In regular-size packets (each containing twenty seeds), per pkt. 25 cts.; five pkts. for $1.00, or twelve pkts. for $2.00, postpaid. Use We offer $1.50.00 in Cash Prizes for the most prolific plants.

In half-size packets (ten seeds each), per pkt. 15 cts.; two pkts. for 25 cts.; ten pkts. for $1.00.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL for 1896

The Leading American Seed Catalogue. A bright New BOOK of 184 pages.

More complete than ever before. Written from knowledge gained at our famous farm.—Illustrations. It contains hundreds of true illustrations and beautiful colored plates printed from nature. It describes RARE NOVELTIES for 1896 not to be had elsewhere, and tells about THE BEST SEEDS THAT GROW. Use The price is ten cents (less than actual cost in quarter million editions), but a copy will be MAILED FREE to every one who intends to purchase BURPEE'S SEEDS or SCOTT ROSES.

4 PREMIUMS FREE!

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD when ordering we will give you the following Four PREMIUMS, as explained below, absolutely FREE! One full-size packet each of the lovely novelty from California, "JUANITA," and the curious new Sweet Pea, "ODDITY," one copy each of our brilliant "All About Sweet Peas" (by the Rev. W. T. Hutchins) and "Flowers for Every Home." Use ALL four premiums FREE with a two dollar order, any two with a one dollar order, or any one with an order for fifty cents,—always provided you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., Seed Growers, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE GRAND NEW WHITE HYBRID TEA,—AUGUSTA VICTORIA.

Purchased separately at regular catalogue prices, these Eight Ever-blooming Roses would cost $1.75, from us or from any Rose Growers.

This unusual offer is made for advertising—to introduce the famous SCOTT ROSES to thousands of new customers. We would invite special attention to the fact that we include in this collection the grandest of all new Roses,—the English Gold Medal Rose,—Mrs. Sharman Crawford, which alone costs 35 cents, and is the nearest approach to perfection Roses,—combining large flowers, constant blooming, and perfect hardiness.

AUGUSTA VICTORIA. A royal new Hybrid Tea, well adapted for garden culture. Its magnificent long buds, and its large, perfectly double, pure white flowers are unequalled in the culture. Every shoot of the strong, fine plant bears a handsome, long-stemmed, beautiful flower.

BEAUTÉ INCONSTANTE. The long, handsome buds vary in color from rich, metallic red-orange or apricot-rose, a dozen varieties seeming to be represented on one bush. A grand best BRIDESMAID. This is the most valuable of all the Tea Roses for cutting, flowers keeping in form and color quite fresh for days. The buds are superb, a bright, deep pink.

GENERAL LEE. A novelty of last year, with lovely buds of a color entirely new,—a soft, tone of nasturtium-yellow, tinged with warm pink; double and fragrant.

LA NEIGE. The blossoms are pure white, of medium size, very double and daintily shaped MAMAN COCHET. This most beautiful of all pink Tea Roses is also the very best for garden culture. The plant is a strong, free grower, and simply perfect in habit. Deep, fragrant, double half-globes of rich, silvery rose-pink shaded with mauve and yellow.

METEOR. Produces its fragrant, perfect, vivid crimson flowers abundantly all through summer. The half-blown, long-stemmed buds are exquisite for cutting; hardy.

MRS. J. SHARMAN CRAWFORD. This great prize-winner bears beautiful flowers of finest size all through the summer; color bright pink, tinted softly with silvery flesh.

For 60 Cts. we will send, postpaid, all EIGHT Elegant ROSES named above. Use Never before has there been offered such an opportunity to get the best ever-blooming Roses at so trifling a cost, and we guarantee that you will be thoroughly satisfied when you receive the strong, healthy plants,—all warranted true to name. Use We will send two complete collections—in all Sixteen of these Elegant Roses—for $1.00.

FOUR Grand New Climbing ROSES for 60 Cts.

For 60 Cts.

we will send you strong plant each of Four Grand Climbing

ROSES described below, or For $1.00, set of Four Climbers, together with the Eight New and Rare Roses described above.

New Hardy Trailing Japanese Rose,—WICHURIANA (illustration). The free, trailing growth and entire hardiness this beautiful little Rose have made it very popular for cemetery banks, rockeries, etc., and the discovery that it can also be trained upward with fine effect will double its sales. The shoots grow fifteen to twenty feet in a season, forming a dense mat of small, glossy, of evergreen leaves.

The flowers are single, fragrant, and pure white, clustering thickly upon tip of every shoot, they are succeeded by scarlet fruits that are bright until late in winter. Good, strong plants 15 cts. each; 4 for 50 cts., or 10 for $1.00, postpaid.

New Hardy Ever-Blooming Climber,—THE GREAT UNKNOWN. This beautiful is the hardest of all the ever-blooming climbers, standing our severest winters. Its growth is strong and rapid, with rich, massive foliage. It blooms at intervals all through the summer, profusely in spring and autumn, so that there is hardly any time in the season when its leaves do not offset loose, brilliant flowers. These are of the same elegant shape as Andromeda, very near their size and color, but a little darker,—bright rose-red, verging to a rich crimson; they are very full and slightly cupped. 40 cts. each, or 3 for $1.00.

New Hardy Ever-Blooming Rose,—EMPERESS OF CHINA. "It has stood our severest winters, and is so vigorous that it grows from six to eight feet in a season. The flowers have Tea-Rose tints and fragrance, are of medium size, with long stems and pointed buds. The color is clear, soft, dark red, changing to lighter red and pink." 20 cts. each.

CRIMSON RAMBLER. This is the wonderful new hardy Climbing Rose described and illustrated on page 129 of BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL. Price 15 cts. each; 4 for 50 cts.

FOR ONE DOLLAR we will send all the Eight Elegant ROSES at top of page, and ALSO the FOUR

Grand Climbing Roses, including one good, strong plant each,—making all TWELVE GRAND ROSES, worth $2.65, mailed for One Dollar.

Order TO-DAY! This advertisement will NOT appear again.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

ED. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
Places:—Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, APRIL 1, 1896.

NUMBER 14.

Price Five Cents.

DEAF-MUTE GIRLS RECEIVING INSTRUCTION IN THE MANUAL SIGN LANGUAGE. (See Page 266.)

I rejoice in the popularization of out sports. I hail the croquet ground and fisherman's rod and the sportsman's In our cities, life is so unhealthy and natural that when the census-taker presents a city as having four hundred thousand inhabitants, there are only hundred thousand, since it takes at two men to amount to one man, so doing and unnerving and exhausting is metropolitan life. We want more air, more sunlight, more of the abundant sports. I cry out for it in behalf of the Church of God as well as in behalf of secular interests. I wish that our parks and our rivers and our Capitoline Gro-

"MOTHER OF A THOUSAND DAUGHTERS."

The Consecrated Life and Splendid Missionary Work of Miss Eliza Agnew, among the Women of far Ceylon.

"THE Mother of a Thousand Daughters" is the affectionate name by which Miss Eliza Agnew has been called by the people of Ceylon. She was born in New York City, Feb. 2, 1807 and sailed for Ceylon July 30, 1839. She decided to become a missionary when a child eight years of age. In the day school which she attended her teacher one day, while giving a lesson in geography, pointed out to her pupils the heathen and Christian lands, and she must have said some earnest words about the darkness of the people in heathen lands, for this little girl then and there resolved that when she grew up she would go out and help to tell the heathen about Jesus. She never forgot this resolve. On account of family ties (there being near relatives who needed her care) so that these temples largely exist and flourish on vice. It is not commonly known but it is nevertheless a fact that the sacred books of the Hindus have in them passages so immoral in character that if anyone were to translate and publish these passages in any of the spoken languages in India, it would under English rule, be a crime punishable by law.

MISS ELIZA AGNEW.

As soon as the missionaries had themselves acquired a working knowledge of the Tamil language they began to translate the Gospels into that language and to preach in the villages. They opened schools for children. The people were willing to allow boys to attend these schools, but when the missionaries asked them to send the girls also they ridiculed the idea. There was not at that time a woman or girl in the whole Province who could read. The people said, "What would be the use of teaching girls? A girl could never learn to read any more than a sheep!" However, after two years of effort, one missionary lady, Mrs. Scudder, succeeded in inducing one little girl to attend school. This little girl soon committed to memory the 248 letters of the Tamil alphabet, and was soon able to read. Other girls began to attend the schools and the work has so grown and prospered that at the present time there are fifteen thousand children in mission schools in that one taken the entire course, and all who thus graduated went out as professing Christians. The majority of these girls came from heathen homes and heathen villages. In this school they learned of Christ and gave their hearts to him and went out to shine for him in their homes and villages. Being educated, many of them became the wives of the Christian young men who had been educated in the mission schools, many of whom afterward attained influential positions, becoming pastors, catechists, teachers, government officials, the leading men in the Province.

Not a few of the graduates of Miss Agnew's school engaged in direct Christian work, some becoming teachers in mission schools and others being employed as Bible women to work among their heathen sisters in the villages. Miss Agnew herself employed the first Bible-woman in Jaffna, and now nearly forty of her former students are working in that capacity, each of whom is teaching in perhaps thirty or forty homes, and some thousand of women and girls are hearing from their lips the story of Jesus and his love.

We enjoyed the great privilege of having Miss Agnew as an inmate in our home during the last two years of her life. During that time she never said one word that we could wish unsaid, or did one act that we could wish undone. By her singleness of purpose, by her blameless life, by the success which she has achieved, she has made the position of an unmarried lady missionary honorable in Ceylon for all future time. The highest praise which a native seems able to bestow upon an unmarried lady worker in Ceylon is to say, "She is like Miss Agnew."

Miss Agnew realized that of all preparation for missionary work, the most important was to know God, and that to know God one must know his Word. She made the devotional study of God's Word the first thing in her daily life, the first thing absolutely. It was her unflinching habit through all her long missionary life to rise with the first streak of dawn and to spend the first hour alone with God in prayer and in the study of his Word. This habit came to be known by all her pupils and all associated with her, and no one ever thought of interrupting her during that hallowed hour. The low murmur of her voice in prayer often long-continued and earnest, was heard at times by servants and pupils, and those who were associated with her knew that among the many names that she would present before the Throne of Grace, their names would not likely be forgotten. Miss Agnew came out from her room with a spirit calmed, strengthened and joyous, and ready for the duties of the day. She had a holy influence on those who knew her most intimately. The best thing which her pupils learned from her was this habit of Bible study and prayer. They became, not a few of them, women of one book. And some one has said, "A knowledge of the Bible is a liberal education."

The people remember her with undying affection. Many have named their children after her. Her last days were peaceful. Early in June, 1883, she had a paralytic shock which deprived her of the use of her limbs. A few days before her death, the Rev. W. W. Howland who had called to visit her, on seeing that the end was near asked her if he should pray with her. She eagerly assented. He asked, "Is there anything for which you would like me especially to pray?" And she replied, "Pray for the women of Jaffna, that they may come to Christ." She had no thought about herself. All through her missionary life she had thought very little about herself. Her thought was for the women of Jaffna, that they might know Christ; that they might know that in him they had an Almighty Saviour, a great burden-bearer, a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. At the very time when she was asking prayers for the women of Jaffna, every room in our house was filled with native Christian women who, when girls, had been her pupils and they were praying for her that if it were God's will to take her to himself, he would save her from suffering and pain. God heard their prayers and she passed away like one going into a sweet sleep June 14, 1883.

In hundreds of villages in Ceylon and India there is just such a work waiting to be done by Christian young women as that which, with God's blessing, Miss Agnew accomplished in the Jaffna Peninsula. MARY AND MARGARET LEITCH.

GIRLS' MISSION SCHOOL AT OODOOVILLE, CEYLON.

Where Miss Agnew was Principal for forty-one years.

she was detained at home until she was thirty-two years of age. But as soon as she was free to go she offered herself for foreign service. It was not usual at that time for Mission Boards to send out unmarried ladies as missionaries. The Board to which she first offered herself refused to send her out because she was unmarried, but thinking her a desirable candidate, went so far as to offer to find for her a suitable life companion. But Miss Agnew thought that a woman engaged in such work as she desired to undertake for heathen women and girls ought not to be hampered by family cares.

She was accepted by the American Board and appointed to work in Jaffna, the Northern Province of Ceylon. Her journey occupied nearly six months in a sailing vessel around the Cape of Good Hope to the Island of Ceylon.

When missionaries first landed in Northern Ceylon they found the common people idolatrous and sunk in ignorance and superstition. The prevailing religion of the people was Hinduism. The Hindus say that they worship 330,000,000 of gods and goddesses, but among them all there is not one whom they love or who loves them.

The Hindus have no knowledge of a holy God, they have no knowledge of a God who desires his worshippers to be holy, and they have no knowledge of a God who is able to make his worshippers holy. In many of the large temples of Ceylon and India large numbers of young women (dancing girls) are kept for immoral purposes and the revenues from this source are paid right into the temple cof-

Province, about 5,000 of whom are girls. This educational work is effecting a revolution in the ideas of the people regarding the proper status of woman. It is said that the numerous sects and divisions of Hindus, while differing in their beliefs upon various subjects, all agree on one point, namely, "The sanctity of the cow and the total depravity of woman." But now in this Province, as in other places where mission work is being vigorously carried on, the men no longer regard women as belonging to the depraved order of being, but admits that they are fit to be the friends and companions of their husbands.

When Miss Agnew went to Ceylon, she was received into the home of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Spaulding at Oodooville, and was put in charge of a boarding school for girls which had just recently been opened. This girls' boarding school, though small in its beginnings, soon became a large and flourishing institution.

Miss Agnew lived in Ceylon forty-three unbroken years, never having returned to America on home furlough, and during forty-one of these years she was the lady principal in charge of this school. During that time more than a thousand girls altogether, were pupils in her care. Miss Agnew was very devoted to these girls, and they, as was natural, loved her in return. They were accustomed to call her mother and because she had taught so many girls in the school, she came to be called by the people, in their poetic way, "the Mother of a Thousand Daughters."

During the time that she had charge of the school, 600 girls graduated, having might be all aquake with the heel and the out of the swift skater. I wish that when the warm weather comes, the grace of our might dip the stream, and the evening-tide be resonant with boatman's song, the bright prow splitting the crystal-bellows.

We shall have the smooth and grassy lawn, and we will call out people of all occupations and professions and ask them to join in the ball-player's sport. You will come back from these outdoor exercises and recreations, with strength in your arm and color in your cheek and a flash in your eye and courage in your heart. In this great battle that is opening against the kingdom of darkness, we want not only a consecrated soul, but a strong arm and stout lungs and mighty muscle. I bless God that there are so many recreations that have not on them any taint of idleness; recreations in which we may engage the strengthening of the body, for the quickening of the intellect, for the illumination of the soul.

There is still another form of recreation which I commend to you, and that is the pleasure of doing good. I have seen young men, weak and cross and sour and repelling in their disposition, who by one heavy touch have wakened up and become rested and buoyant, the ground under their feet and the sky over their heads breaking forth into music. "Oh," says the young man in the house to-day, "I should like that recreation above all others, but I have not the means." My dear brother, let us take an account of stock. You have a large estate, if you only realize it.

Two hands. Two feet. You will have, perhaps, during the next year at least $600 dollars for charitable contribution. You will have twenty-five hundred cheerful looks, if you want to employ them. You will have five thousand pleasant words if you want to speak them. Now what an amount that is to start with!

But, before closing, I want to impress on you that mere secular entertainments are not a fit foundation for your soul to build on. I was reading of a woman who had gone all the rounds of sinful amusement, and she came to die. She said, "I will die to-night at six o'clock." "Oh," they said, "I guess not; you don't seem to be sick." "I shall die at six o'clock, for my soul will be lost. I know it will be lost. I have sinned away my day of grace." The noon came. They desired her to seek religious counsel. "Oh," she said, "it is of no use. My day is gone. I have been all the rounds of worldly pleasure, and it is too late. I shall die to-night at six o'clock." The day wore away, and it came to four o'clock, and to five o'clock, and she cried out at five o'clock, "Desisting spirits, ye shall not have me yet; it is not six, it is not six!" The moments went by, and the shadows began to gather and the clock struck six; and while it was striking her soul went. What hour did I call for us I do not know—whether six o'clock to-night or three o'clock this afternoon, or at one o'clock, or at this moment. Sitting where you are, going forward, or dropping down, where will you go to?

The last hour of our life will soon be here, and from that hour we will review this day's proceedings. It will be a solemn hour. If from our death-pillow we have to look back and see a life spent in sinful amusement, there will be a dart that will strike through our soul, sharper than the dagger with which Virginius slew his child. The memory of the past will make us quake like Macbeth. The iniquities and rioting through which we have passed will come upon us, weird as skeleton as Meg Merrilies. Death, the old Shylock, will demand and take the remaining pound of flesh and the remaining drop of blood; and upon our last opportunity for repentance, and our last chance for heaven the curtain will forever close.

Parable of the Great Supper.

Sunday School Lesson for April 12. Luke 14: 15-24. Golden Text, Luke 14: 17.
By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE Lord Jesus had been bidden to the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the Sabbath day. Always on his Father's business he perceived the man suffering from dropsy and no etiquette, consideration of caste, fear of the prejudices of host or guests, or other earthly consideration hindered him from healing the man, and deducing from his case the lesson that to do good on the Sabbath day is not to break the Sabbath. Jesus was not present for the sake of personal enjoyment in the society of friends nor yet of the delicacies which might be provided at the feast. In the midst of that company he was as much listening to his Father as though he had been on the mountain-side alone in prayer. One who, by yielding to the Holy Ghost, cultivates the habit of listening to God in secret, will hear his voice above all things and above all people when in the presence of others. The guests filled with the self-conceit which runs in the blood of the natural man, chose the places of distinction for themselves, and Jesus rebuked them, and showed them how much more becoming it is to take the lowest place.

He next had a message for his host. Was it not a want of courtesy to expostulate with the man who had offered him hospitality thus publicly before his guest? Was there not a want of tact or consideration in this? To human eyes it might have seemed so, but God the Father and his incarnate Son were agreed in all that took place. Jesus was there, as elsewhere, both the express Image and the Word of his Father. It was an unexpected blow to the Pharisee, who probably had considered that he was conferring a great honor on the Carpenter of Nazareth by inviting him to his table, when the Lord turned round on him and said, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee." What? Would this obscure Teacher attempt to subvert all the prevailing customs of society with his new teaching? Who ever heard of such a thing as a man making a feast, and fearing to invite such as would bid him again? Is not the very object of the invitation to cultivate the society of the invited guests so as to be on the visiting list of those whom they invite? Can there be any harm in this? But this man had in his invitations. When Jesus comes he comes to rule, to reign, to overthrow, to transform. Either you must have Jesus and his newness of life, or else you can't have Jesus at the feast. If your idea in the feast is to cultivate the society of such as may marry your daughters, help you in business, give your sons a start in life, afford you personally the enjoyment you

Included Jesus

One of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, and ventured the pious remark: Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God. Upon which the Lord Jesus, addressing this individual, said, "A certain man made a great supper, and bade many; and sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, 'Come; for all things are now ready.'" The parable was spoken as a personal appeal to one who was saying general things about matters in which he was personally concerned, and which invoked eternal issues of which he seemed to be totally unaware. A great supper, many bidden, and all by one servant. What is this but God's wondrous, plentiful provision for a sinful race in his Son Jesus Christ? "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) A provision, not for pardon only, but for new birth, newness of life, transformation into Christ-likeness; all is offered "without money and without price" (Isa. 55: 1), and all is ready—ready now. Such is the message of the

One Servant,

the only One who with divine authority bids to the great supper. The Holy Spirit is in the world for this purpose. He may use the written Word, the preaching of the cross, a tract, a bereavement, or many other things, but he it is who always bids to the supper of God's grace, and as in times of old, "the Holy Ghost saith, To-day" (Heb. 3: 7), so in this age of the church he says, "Come, for all things are now ready." The first bidden guests "all with one consent began to make excuse." Each of them had something of his own which he esteemed to be of more importance, or of more value, than the invitation to the supper. The excuses of each party began with the personal pronoun "I." "I have bought a piece of ground;" "I have bought five yoke of oxen;" "I have married a wife;" the only consideration of these bidden ones was whether it would suit their purpose to accept the invitation. The piece of land was of far greater interest to its purchaser than the society of him who had bidden him; his heart was in the land, he had invested money in it, he had plans concerning it; it was his life; and he did not want to be put out of his way. The supper might be all very well, but he would do very well without it; he was a business man, business must be attended to, and on this ground he begged to be excused. The man with his oxen was on the same lines, and the man who had married the wife too. All were not one of them appreciated the generous invitation of him who had spent so much to entertain them. Discourtesy, ingratitude, insult would be the terms used to designate such conduct between man and man. But when it is he against whom we have sinned, to whom we owe life and breath and all things, he who by his creation has a claim upon us, and moreover has redeemed us with the blood of his own Son; when it is he who invites us to respond to a heavenly calling to be pardoned, redeemed from sin the world and self, and united to him as the father and the Son are One—what language can convey the depth of human guilt in the rejection of such an invitation? God created man for himself, and man says, I don't want to know God. He provided a redemption for his sin, and offers him a free pardon and deliverance from sin. Man prefers to remain under the condemnation and in the power of sin, and insolently refuses the offered pardon. God has provided the Holy Ghost to come and dwell in man to guide him into and empower him to life, a holy divine life in the midst of impossible circumstances, and man resists the Holy Ghost!

Preoccupied,

"So that servant came and shewed the Lord these things." Solemn moment when the Holy Ghost gives in his report! Then the master of the house, being angry, said to his servant, "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt and the blind; these will be glad to come;" they will appreciate what the others refuse. Yes; it is ever so. All who set a value upon what they are now or what they have in the world, are not yet in a position to appreciate and to value God's great invitation. How many there are who have had to lose property, position, honor, and sometimes even usefulness before they were poor enough, and lame enough, and blind enough in themselves to value the grace of God.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

"BRING IN HITHER THE MAIMED."

OME persons are fond of using pious platitudes and one such seems to have been among the guests at the house of the chief Pharisee when Jesus was there. Jesus had been speaking of a practical duty—that of feeding the poor, rather than the rich, who did not need such entertainment. Probably not one present had ever done such a thing or was disposed to do it. But what Jesus said could not be denied; it was a better thing to do with more reason in it and more prospect of God's favor. We can imagine an awkward silence falling on the company when this courteous reproof of a prevailing custom was gently given. Then the guest tried to relieve the embarrassment with his devout ejaculation, in which all could agree. It adroitly changed the subject, as he would suppose, from the personal and practical to the emotional. Had the man listened to Christ's conversation with Nicodemus, or with the woman of Samaria, he would not have ventured on those tactics with such a Conversationalist. As it was with those who tried to escape from Socrates, so it was with the man who tried to parry the shafts from the lips of the Great Teacher; he only laid himself open to a more personal attack. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God," was the remark of the guest. Jesus takes up this empty platitude and will tell them a story about this privilege which they rightly call blessed. It is the story of a feast. Invitations sent out long before and accepted. The feast prepared, the viands cooked, everything ready and the servant sent around according to Oriental custom to remind the guests of their engagement. But there is a strange unanimity of withdrawal. Three typical excuses are given. The farm, a matter of business, and a new domestic tie. Obviously excuses which would have had no basis had the guests remembered their engagements as they should have done. The host incensed by this evidently concerted slight, determines to have guests of a different kind, whose hunger will be an assurance of their coming. His servants are sent out, and such a crowd gathered as the house had never sheltered before—men unaccustomed to such dainties as were spread for them. Jesus does not seem to have explained his story in the house. There would be no need there in the company of men whose conversation was usually garnished with stories having an ethical meaning. But Luke follows the story with some words spoken afterward with the obvious intention that they should be read as explanatory. They refer to people who brought into a dilemma, when immediate action necessary, prefer something else to the kingdom—people who are willing enough to make a promise to be fulfilled at some distant time, who begin to build without counting the cost of finishing, but who shrink from the sacrifice when they are brought face to face with it. The man had spoken of the blessedness of the kingdom. That was all very well at the distance, but when it came to giving up his visit to the farm, of neglecting his business, of leaving his home just as it had become more attractive—then the cost was too great. The lesson has not lost its application. Every one hopes to go to heaven when he dies, but how many are willing to make the present sacrifice which will show that they are fit for heaven?

All things are now ready. "I must study," said the boy urged to give his heart to God; "when I am through school I can think of these things. Certainly I mean to be a Christian soon." Later another appeal is made. "Yes, I did promise, but I have to learn my business, it requires all my attention." Still later he again reminded that all things are ready "I am in business for myself. I have wife and children depending on my exertions. I mean to give myself to God, but I must make enough money to put my family beyond the danger of want. What I have done that, I will think of the things." In his old age he is again urged "I am an old man now," he says, "my habits are formed. It is difficult to take up new things. I must go on as I am. Then we know that the Master is angry and has decreed that the man who has been bidden as a child and as a man, shall enter."

Must needs go. Dr. Thain Davidson visited an old friend of his boyhood, who he had not seen for many years. He had gone into business and had built up a very extensive and profitable connection. I Davidson was astonished at the immediate extent of detail his friend directed and the interests of which he had contrived. After seeing all the evidences of his energy, Dr. Davidson referred to his youthful interest in religion, and asked him when would begin to think again of his eternal interests. "I do not know," was the reply. "I am aware I ought to do so now but it is of no use. My mind is so full of business that I have no power to think anything else."

I pray thee have me excused. A Moravian missionary related an incident of the early work in Greenland, which shows how true to human nature was this parable. He says that when the hunting and fishing season began, there were several promising inquirers at the mission who had been studying for some time. They left. One said that he had a quantity of ammunition on his hands and must hunt. Another that there was a great feast of bear's flesh at his home and wanted to get his share. A third had been trying to get a new boat, and now there was an opportunity that he could not afford to miss. Every one had some reason for leaving. There was not one who would declare for Christ before leaving.

Therefore I cannot come. This man was more decided than the others. It is so frequently in the present day. A marriage between a Christian and an unbeliever nearly always involves the Christian yielding to the other's influence. If there was no validity in this excuse a more than in the others. Indeed, such excuses are generally only pretexts. A minister who called on a couple to try to induce them to come to church was told that they had to work so hard all the week that they were too tired to go out on Sunday. But he noticed that on the wall was a list of base-ball matches for the Saturday afternoons of the quarter, and learned that the man who was too tired to come to church on Sunday was a member of one of the teams, and was never absent from the field on Saturday. In another instance a woman who was so busy she had no time to read the Bible, had on a shelf in her room a collection of dime novels, all of which she had read, and some of them more than once.

The Blessing Easter Brought.

"Who lives in that house?" The speaker pointed to a square white cottage standing by itself in the midst of green fields, a little trimly planted garden plot before its door, and a lilac bush growing hardily beside the front window to the left of the porch. On the left, a row of burnished and glittering, and a few lines of linen drying on the clothes line, and that there was the kitchen. An old woman came to the kitchen-window and peered wistfully out as the ladies then, as if moved by a sudden impulse, she called to the one she knew. "Mrs. Allen, have you seen my daughter? If you meet her, please tell her that I want her to come home directly." "Mrs. Lundie, I will," said Mrs. Allen. Then, as they walked out, she said to her companion, "I asked me who lived there. Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Lundie exist there. They should be said to live, for they are so good."

"What makes them unhappy? They live in a beautiful home in a lovely spot. I could think they had the conditions of perfect contentment. And they have a daughter, too!"

"They have had a daughter," said Mrs. Allen, "but they do not know where she is. She may be living or she may be dead. Twenty years ago (I never it, because it was the spring of the year) was married, and the Easter lilies were set, and I was afraid we wouldn't be enough of them to decorate the house,—twenty years ago Estelle Lundie was the prettiest girl in Haverstraw. She went to the district school, and the boys were in love with her. No other girl had many suitors, nor half so much attention, but Estelle looked coldly on every one of them, except the only one her father would hear nothing of. Things go by in this world. One would have thought that a sensible girl like Estelle would have looked higher than a mere suitor, even if he did happen to be handsome and well-educated; but no, Rufus Lundie was the only man on the whole who won her, and when Mr. Lundie would not consent, the two slipped away to the next county, got a license, and were married. They came back, and Estelle, being an only child, thought her father would forgive her."

"Did he?" "H. You don't know Jonathan Lundie. He is set as a stone wall. 'This rock will stay from its firm base as soon as I,' said the old man. No; my dear, Mr. Lundie derided his daughter and her husband off as if they had been tramps. Everything and the things in the house that belonged to her were set out in the street, that night her mother crept through the garden and stole down to the hotel, and sold good-by to Estelle, and gave her the little money she had in the house, and sent her home to meet an angry husband. Nobody knows what passed between them, but whatever it was, it took her spirit quite out of the poor mother. She never held up her head since Estelle's marriage, and latterly, her mind is fast, and she is always watching for Estelle to come back."

"Al hasn't the old father ever relented? What a Spartan he must be, and how very unchristian is his behavior. Is that Mr. Lundie, pray?" said the lady, as a tall, gentleman, erect as a pine tree, with a white beard, a white shock of hair, and a flashing eye, removed his hat, and gave Mrs. Allen a courtly salutation. "It is Mr. Lundie," said Mrs. Allen, "and he has been to the post-office, as usual. You saw he had letters in his hand. The old heart of stone that he is, if ever a letter comes to his wife from Estelle, he burns it unopened, or at least, that's what folks say."

"Well," said the visitor, "it's my opinion that people say more in most cases than they have any right to. If Estelle Lundie would only come home, boldly, who knows, but after all these years, the dear Lord would touch her father's heart and bring about a recon-he turned, Mrs. Allen was clutching the counter as if she had seen a ghost.

"Estelle, as I live and move," she whispered in an awe-struck tone. "Estelle Lundie, or her spectre?"

Her friend stepped to the door. She saw a beautiful young lady, with firm steps, walking swiftly toward the end of the main street, and out toward the Lundie cottage. The girl's figure was slim and tall, she carried her head proudly, she had the air of a woman accustomed to have her own way. The lady laughed as she returned Mrs. Allen's questioning look. This was evidently no ghost.

"It is probably Estelle's daughter," she said. "God bless her if she has come to straighten out the old tangle, and reunite a household in the bonds of love."

"Well," said Mrs. Allen, recovering herself, "I'll choose my Easter lilies."

When Estelle Morrison reached the little house in which her mother's childhood had passed, she paused one moment before she lifted the latch, making one silent prayer for help, then she walked bravely and steadily up the little ciliation between the long separated and divided ones, and restore that poor lady's reason."

ESTELLE GREETS HER GRAND-PARENTS

"You must not think of Mrs. Lundie as deranged," said Mrs. Allen. "She is all right, except on that one point, and brooding, and pining, and living alone, she has got to a state where her life is one long waiting for her daughter. Poor lady, I wish we could do something for her. I mean to send her the most beautiful Easter lily I can find. Here is the greenhouse, and Mr. Storer has excelled himself this year."

The two friends went into the florist's. As they entered the door, the six o'clock train came puffing and whistling into the little station, not a block off, and the passengers, most of them men who had been at work in town all day, some of them women who had gone to the city to shop, and a few strangers, stepped out and started for home in their various directions.

"Please," said a clear young voice in the doorway of the shop, "can you tell me the way to Jonathan Lundie's?"

The florist gave the information. When paved path to the front door. Lifting the knocker, she boldly rapped. Presently she heard deliberate steps approaching, the door was unlocked, and there was her grandfather holding it open, a lamp in his hand.

The old gentleman stood for an instant as if petrified. Behind him there was a dim, wavering figure, with welcoming arms spread wide, and a smile of ecstasy transfiguring a withered face.

"Estelle, my darling, my sunbeam, home at last," cried the old mother, and passing the astonished old gentleman the young lady flew to the poor, waiting, joyful woman, and kissed her over and over.

Mr. Jonathan Lundie set down the lamp, and found his voice. But before he could say two words, the girl turned and looked him steadily in the eyes, with a glance very like his own.

"Don't say anything you'll be sorry for, grandfather. I'm here, and I've come to stay. You've made trouble enough by your outrageous behavior, and you can't excuse yourself, for you've been cruel and unjust. But I've come to set things right, and now that I see you, I'm glad I came on first. Mother and father'll be here with the rest of the children to-morrow. There are five of us. Grandmother, darling, don't you see, don't you understand, that I'm your own Estelle's Estelle, and I've had a long journey, and want my supper? Come, grandfather," she said, going up to him, "we may as well kiss and be friends. I'll forgive you."

And would you believe it, the old man struck his flag at once, thankful to make terms with this fearless foe, who looked at him with a bravery no one of his line had ever dared to use before.

"Child," he said at last, "You shall have your wish. I have been a stubborn and a hard man, but I will receive my daughter and her family back, and the last days shall be better than the first."

"Precisely so, grandfather; that's what I told mamma. The trouble was I never knew the whole of this unfortunate story, till a little while ago, and then I resolved to put an end to the fuss, and bring my poor mother to see her mother. They'll be together to spend Easter Sunday."

Neither of the old people noticed that their granddaughter had not the air of poverty. But any one aware of such things must have seen that the gown and coat were jaunty and fine, the little hat in the latest style, the gloves and shoes a dream. And when on the morrow her people came, they were not paupers at all, nor bore themselves as prodigals, but on the contrary looked, as they were, quite comfortable and well-to-do. Mr. Morrison had prospered, and even Mr. Lundie went to church on Easter morning with a look of pride, in the group who filled the old Lundie pew. One would have fancied that he had sent for them, that he had never been hard or relentless, or bitter, so suave was his speech and so beautiful were the expressions that flitted over his countenance. When the ice breaks in the spring, freshets follow, and Mr. Lundie could not do enough to show kindness to the Morrisons, particularly to his oldest granddaughter. To her clung the grandmother, for she recalled the Estelle who had gone away, and the old lady's brain could not at once accept the matronly woman of forty, as the daughter she had missed and mourned so many years.

Early on Easter Sunday morning, Mrs. Allen had left a silvery lily, in rare bloom and sweetness at the Lundies' door. Freddie Morrison carried it to church, and it helped to symbolize to the whole family the blessing of peace, of purity, of living love. For as Christ rises from the dead, he brings with him to us all the power to rise from our dead selves, to leave old sins, to crucify wicked resolves and evil desires, and to awake to a higher and better life. The lilies shone, the choir sang, the organ pealed, and the angels in heaven joined with the saved on earth in singing Christ the Lord is risen to-day.

Our triumphant holy day.
Loud the song of victory raise
Shout the great Redeemer's praise.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Pride a Spiritual Hindrance.

A wealthy and aristocratic lady became anxious about her soul, and when the pastor of the church to which she belonged called upon her, she took the opportunity to speak to him about spiritual things. He put the Gospel before her, telling her that she must believe in the Lord Jesus with her heart, and confess him with her lips, if she would be saved for time and eternity. The lady, while acknowledging that she was a sinner, could not get over the idea of her own superiority to the common people, and she said to the minister:

"Now, there is my maid, a good Christian girl; if we were to die and go to heaven, surely she would not be placed on an equality with me. It would be very awkward if I were to meet her in heaven as an equal, after her having been my maid here."

The pastor hastened to assure her that unless she could get rid of these false notions of superiority, and realize that in the sight of God all are equal, that all have sinned, there was very little likelihood of her being in heaven to meet anyone. There are some people who want a private entrance into heaven for themselves and what they consider their set. God is no respecter of persons: we are all the creatures of his creation, all have rebelled against him and are consequently deserving of death; but of his own good pleasure he hath prepared a way of salvation. If we neglect it, if we despise it, we are lost. At last the doubter began to see the Gospel message in the proper light and she left, promising to trust the Lord for pardon and guidance and to pray to him for grace, that the remainder of her life might be devoted to his service.

TRAINING THE DEAF-MUTES.

One of the Noblest of New York's many Benevolent Institutions — The Educational Progress of Three-quarters of a Century.

In none of the many humanitarian institutions adorning our great cities is a better work being done for a peculiarly afflicted portion of the human race, than in the Homes for the training and education of the deaf and dumb. Less than a century ago, such an affliction was regarded as practically irremediable and incapable of substantial mitigation; but now, owing to the many advantages that have resulted from scientific and philanthropic investigation, and improved methods of instruction, the lot of the sufferer has been wonderfully brightened. He is no longer isolated from the rest of mankind by his affliction, but he can enter with zest and intelligence into almost all the affairs of life, its joys and responsibilities.

DR. THOMAS GALLAUDET.

Seventy-six years ago, the New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb was opened, and every year has witnessed a gradual extension of the work. Several years earlier, Rev. Thos. H. Gallaudet had introduced in the American Asylum at Hartford, Conn., the French system of education for the Deaf and Dumb. Hon. D. Witt Clinton, afterward Governor of the Empire State, was the first President of the New York Institution. In 1818, the incorporators met and appointed as teacher, the Rev. Abraham O. Stansbury, installing him in a room in the old almshouse in City Hall Park, where he began his labors with four bright little deaf-mute children as pupils. One of these — then a girl of eight and now an aged woman of eighty-five — was present on the occasion of the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Institution on May 16, 1893 — the only surviving link connecting the past and the present. She has been a teacher in the Institution and for many years was the matron of the Illinois State Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

The Hartford Institution has always been looked upon as the leader in the cause of deaf-mute education, and from the beginning has set a splendid example, selecting for teachers thoroughly able and educated men, and establishing a high educational standard. Among the famous in Hartford have been Lewis Weld, William W. Turner, Harvey O. Peet, F. A. F. Barnard, David E. Bartlett, Collins Stone, and Samuel Porter. Hartford, being widely followed, has become a center of raising the deaf-mute schools of this country to the highest rank. The New York Institution owes its origin to the efforts of Dr. Thomas Gallaudet, Dr. H. H. Stansbury and Peet to New York City. It was the metropolitan institution the most advanced of the most famous in the world.

Dr. E. M. Gallaudet, President of the Institution, is a native of Washington, D. C., and was educated in Hartford, Conn. He is now in his eightieth year, and is a member of the American Association of the Deaf. He is a native of Ohio, where, Rev. Dr. Gallaudet, his father, was a minister of the Methodist Church.

first to conceive the idea of holding religious services in the deaf-mute sign language, and it may thus be claimed that in Hartford the Gospel was first taught clearly and intelligently to the deaf-mutes of America. It is now taught to them in that language all over the country, and it is claimed by experts that the emotions and sentiments can be more delicately and eloquently conveyed by the sign language than if spoken with the lips. This sign language, which has been one of the most effective instrumentalities in humane and Christian work among these afflicted ones, is known as the Gallaudet system, and by its use the deaf-mute can give absolutely full expression to his ideas intelligently to others. It is now used among deaf-mutes here and in Europe, and was the invention of Abbe l'Epee, founder of the first institution for their education. It is said to have been suggested to him by observing the pantomimic gestures of the Parisian street gamins. The system has been popularized both here and abroad by the Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet, whose father did much to bring it to perfection. Dr. Gallaudet was the founder and executive officer of the Gallaudet Home for Deaf-mutes near Poughkeepsie, a charity which shelters about thirty aged deaf-mutes, all more or less educated in the sign-language. There is an affinity between this natural sign-language and the dumb pantomime employed by the Indians, and by savage races generally as a substitute for speech when the latter cannot be used as a means of communication. Comprising hundreds of different gestures of hands, head, body, eyes, and lips, this sign language is capable of expressing almost every emotion, fact or idea. "Man" is indicated by touch-truths are conveyed to their minds by a series of simple lessons, which tell of God, of his attributes, of heaven, of the soul, and of the Saviour and his life on earth. The mind of the deaf-mute thinks in pictures, and when he tries to express himself, he makes pictures in the air and acts what he sees. These originally crude signs have now grown into a language so complete that it is claimed that even abstract ideas can be expressed by gestures.

There is no more beautiful sight than to look upon a group of these silent ones in process of being instructed. Our first page colored illustration presents a scene in one of the girls' class rooms of the Institution, where the pupils are receiving instruction in the secular branches. Their proficiency is astonishing, and in many studies their affliction does not seem to operate as a barrier to progress to any material extent. Their aptitude in grasping either secular or religious ideas is surprising. One young lad recently wrote this on a typewriter: "Before I came here I knew nothing about God. Now I know he is my Father in heaven, and good and kind. I love my Saviour, Jesus Christ the Son of God. He died on the Cross for us all. I repented of my sins and trust he has forgiven them."

In 1893, Dr. Isaac Lewis Peet, after nearly forty-seven years of devoted service, retired from the active supervision of the educational department and became Principal Emeritus. On his retirement, in that year, the educational and administrative departments were united under the control of the new Principal, Mr. Enoch Henry Currier, who had already been connected with the Institution for twenty-one years, and was thoroughly familiar with every branch of its work. Under Mr. Currier's able and progressive management, the Institution has made excellent progress. There are twenty teachers and the combined or eclectic method of ing the head, as though lifting the cap; "will see" by waving the open right hand from the right ear to the eyes, to which the extended fingers point; "imagine" by touching the forehead with the forefinger and bring the hand forward in a curve; "remember" by raising the face and resting the closed hand on the forehead; "think" by leaning the head to one side and resting it upon the knuckles; "forget" by clapping the forehead and suddenly removing the hand backward, with the thumb pointing over the shoulder. And so on, through the range of expressions.

MAIN BUILDING OF THE NEW YORK INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB

One of the most important considerations in connection with the conduct of the Deaf-Mute Institution, is the religious training of the large numbers of young pupils. It is absolutely unsectarian. As a rule, the pupils come to the Institution not only totally ignorant of any spoken language, but with their minds a blank as far as any conception of a Deity or of their own moral obligations is concerned. They are really in greater spiritual darkness than the heathen, but in the present advanced system of deaf-mute education and by attending daily worship in chapel and in the religious instruction in the class-rooms, their minds are gradually opened and they begin to realize that they have a Father in heaven, and that they are accountable to him. They are also learning the truth of the Atonement and its significance. These instruction is used, in which the most careful attention is given to articulation as well as other well-tried forms of instruction. Manual training or industrial education has been a feature of the Institution for over sixty years, and in recent years has been greatly expanded. In this department printing, shoemaking, carpentering, cabinetmaking, tailoring, gardening, typewriting, baking, dressmaking, plain sewing, and various other callings are taught to the pupils, the financial result of their labor being added to the resources of the Institution. As a part of the educational system of the state, the Institution is allowed for each pupil's board, lodging and tuition $250. In the course of training at the Institution, every known instrument or aid which is of acknowledged value is employed, and lip-reading and articulation are taught to all. Whenever there is even a remnant of hearing left, the ear is carefully educated. The course of study is equivalent to that followed in the common schools and academies of the state. Illustrations on this page show the main building of the Institution, (now the chief structure in the group), and a portrait of the present Principal, Enoch H. Currier, M. A. The grounds occupied by the institution comprise about twenty-three acres, and are beautifully located upon the banks of the Hudson river at Washington Heights, between 102d and 106th streets, in the upper part of New York City.

A BRILLIANT EMPRESS

How a Brave and Able Woman Saved her Country from Italian Conquest.

LATER dispatches from those referred to in this article in this journal March 18 on the disaster in Abyssinia showed that the reports had by no means exaggerated the nature of the defeat. Italy's loss in the enemy. He probably based his calculation on what was learned of the campaign in 1868, when a small English force, Lord Napier was able to penetrate Abyssinia, destroy the stronghold of Menelik and inflict punishment so severe on Theodore, that, unable to bear his situation, he committed suicide. But the Abyssinia of to-day is a very different thing from the Abyssinia of 1868. It has made vast strides in civilization since then, and it has as its ruler a strong king, and guided by a clever, shrewd, and woman. It is probably due more to the Empress Taoti than to any one else to the Italian effort to subjugate the country has so disastrously failed.

TAOTI, EMPRESS OF ABYSSINIA.

Taoti, or Taytou, as she is sometimes called, has had a strange and romantic career. She was born in 1850, and, like her husband, who is also her cousin, was of descent in a direct line from that Queen Sheba, whose visit to King Solomon is described in the ninth chapter of the 1st book of Chronicles. In common with the members of the ancient royal line, she was driven into exile by the Emperor Theodore, who suspected all who were of royal blood of plotting against him. In 1868 she and her parents fled to Gondar, where Taoti met her cousin, Menelik, and like herself. The two young people were in love and were about to be married when Theodore interfered. He insisted on Menelik marrying one of his own sisters, and on Taoti becoming his own. As disobedience meant certain death, she yielded. Theodore treated his young wife with such savage brutality that his death a few months later came to her as a relief. After his downfall, Abyssinia became a scene of anarchy and civil war. The various petty kings struggled for the supreme command, but no one of them could reach the rank of Emperor. Five times the Empress Taoti was married and five times became a widow through the continued fighting that went on. At last, after the repeated misfortunes, she entered a convent and became a nun. But her life to a woman of her active, ambitious temperament was intolerable, and she obtained from the Archbishop of Abyssinia release from her vows. While she was quietly with her brother at Ephraim, she met her first lover, Menelik, who, on the changes of the national kaleidoscope, had emerged as king of Shoa. Their old passion was rekindled, and in spite of the difficulties Menelik made her his wife.

The marriage was celebrated in style with imposing ceremonies. Since that time Taoti has made herself famous through her tact and diplomacy. Her husband has been chosen Emperor, and she has established his rule in Abyssinia. In doing so, Taoti's skill as a diplomat was the mainstay of Menelik and his advisers. She guided the negotiations when war became inevitable, it was she who initiated the measures for drilling and equipping the army, and her unflinching spirit that gave courage to the Abyssinian leaders. It is believed that Menelik has yielded without fighting to the demands but for Taoti's firmness.

OUR COMMISSIONER'S SAFE RETURN.

Mr. W. W. Howard Back from his Perilous Experiences among Turks and Kurds—Dr. Kimball Feeding 19,000 at Van—Progress of the Relief Work.

AFTER nearly six months of incessant travel and many perilous adventures on the Turkish border, Mr. William Willard Howard, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Commissioner to Armenia, has returned to New York. Although excluded from Turkey by the special order of the government at Constantinople, which had offence at his truthful portrayal of the horrors of the Armenian persecutions, he was nevertheless able to do much in aiding the relief movement intended by this journal with the cooperation and approval of its readers, which, beginning at Van, has rapidly Writing from Van on Feb. 19 last, Dr. Kimball says:

"Your name and the name of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have become names to conjure with among us. I wish I could make you feel the full beneficence of the work your Fund is doing. You and those who have aided the Fund will never realize it until you hear the words: 'Inasmuch as ye did it unto me.' There is no other help or hope for these people aside from yours, or that of other less munificent benefactors. I wonder at all this beneficence—each seems to be giving according to his ability to give and to cause others to give. And we need it all and more."

During the week, letters have been received from a number of the American Board missionary distributors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund. A letter from Aintab, acknowledging the remittance of $1000 from the Fund, says:

God bless you dear Christian friends in America. If ever our Master called his people to do for him, it is now. We are doing our best to relieve the distress in our field—Aintab, Omta, Gernerek, Adiaman, Atrash and Aleppo. The first four have been recently smitten. . . . The cry of our souls is for some strong hand to stop the rage of these demons. In the name of God, is there no sword in Christendom to wake to the call of humanity? * * * We have felt almost overwhelmed by the greatness of the calamities and distress we have seen about us. It is such prompt and princely liberality as you and others are showing that give us courage and hope to grapple with this appalling condition of things. The Relief work in Aintab is admirably organized and managed with prudence and efficiency. Soon after the massacres a Union Committee, chosen by the Gregorian and Protestant communities took this work in hand, and in consultation with us have canvassed the whole field, measured the full extent of the disaster, and are now providing for all sufferers without question as to creed or connection. A summary of their detailed report recently given is as follows:

	Protest. Gregorians.	Liras.
No. of persons killed.....	91	269
" " wounded.....	75	137
" " houses and stores burned.....	22	4
" " houses and shops looted.....	545	755
" " persons now receiving aid.....	1,355	2,324
	Piastres.	Lira.

Total loss of property stolen and destroyed..... 8,325,216 7,301,272 making about 125,000 Liras; Turkish Lira $4.40 or about $550,000, and this where $1,000 makes a rich man.

Our committee have a bakery and a public kitchen and soup house; fortunately food is cheap and most families had a considerable supply for winter on hand, so that houses that were not plundered have been able to live off these supplies; but these are getting exhausted and if this state of things continues, starvation of large numbers is almost inevitable. Indeed, we have reason to fear that many in outlying districts may be now perishing of cold and hunger. Our field covers Aintab, Omta, Gernerek, Adiaman, Birdjik and vicinity, and we shall use your gift for all the field as seems most necessary.

From Cesarea, Rev. W. S. Dodd writes relating the result of a relief visit to the adjacent village of Gigi:

It had only thirty-five houses and two hundred and fifty souls. When the plunderers approached, the people fled and so saved the clothes they wore. When they returned it was hardly more than roofs that they found. Everything portable had been carried away, even to the weaving machines. I visited every house, opening flour-bins, uncovering jars, and taking a light into dark corners. Two hours sufficed for the inspection. Most of the houses consisted of two rooms, some of only one. The first room presented only four mud walls and a mud floor, with a hole in the centre for a floor. Around this would be gathered five or ten children or adults spending their time in keeping warm. In many houses the flour-bins were smashed to pieces and there was nothing to examine. When I asked them what they were going to eat to-morrow, "God knows," they replied, "we borrowed this to-day; perhaps we can borrow some more to-morrow." In the whole village, there was not a single bed, hardly a thing that could be called a quilt, nothing but little things which they treasured up carefully as the only thing to spread out for the night. We expected to send them relief at once to keep them alive for a time, but it will have to be repeated more than once or twice.

From the Gernerek region, which you have especially mentioned, we have messengers telling of starvation beginning, and we must proceed at once to the distribution of the grain that we have purchased there.

Another missionary at Cesarea writes that nearly all the clothing that has been received has been sent on to Sivas and Harpoot.

In a letter from a missionary in the field, written to the Secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, London, the following significant passages occur:

As to the whole circle of Christian nations that are standing as idle spectators of these infernal orgies, I wonder if they looked upon the Gorgon's head, or do they not comprehend what is being done before their eyes. Do they not know that, horrible and revolting as was the savagery of the recent massacres, they have been narrow in effect and tame in cruel barbarity, compared with the deliberate, malicious and unrelenting crushing and grinding process to which the remnant of the Armenian people are being subjected. Do these Christian Powers comprehend that it is the settled purpose of this government to prevent these poor people being properly clothed and fed, and so to make famine and pestilence their executors in place of the assassins heretofore employed. In Aintab, 12,000 Christians after having more than 800 of their shops and 450 of their houses looted, and more than $500,000 worth of property stolen or destroyed, have been kept for over three months in daily and agonizing terror for their lives, and utterly unable to do anything to earn a livelihood; 4000 of their number are wholly dependent on charity for their daily bread. Do the Christian Powers understand the purpose of the plan everywhere being carried out of removing first the principal men from each Christian community? In Aintab, 64 of the most influential and wealthy Christians are now languishing in Turkish prisons, arrested on purely fictitious charges; the Protestant preacher of Birdjik has been condemned for ten years in a Turkish fortress simply for having in his possession a copy of Lord Salisbury's speech at the opening of Parliament. Are the Christian Powers aware that in these prison deeds rivaling the worst barbarities of the dark ages are being enacted including nameless indignities and unspeakable offences. Personally I feel almost like a potroon to be securely sheltered under the dear old flag, while these brothers and sisters are exposed to such horrors. William Watson's "The Purple East," is the only thing except the imprecatory Psalms that at all express my feelings these days.

These facts show the condition of Harpoot City and its seventy three villages.

Needy persons.....	26,900
Houses plundered.....	6,029
" " burned.....	1,861
Churches badly injured and defiled.....	20
" " burned.....	15
Protestant chapels (mostly destroyed).....	3
" " badly damaged.....	18
Forced marriages to Turks.....	166
Rape.....	2,500
Forced conversions, priests.....	12
" " men and women.....	7,664
Wounded.....	1,315
Miscellaneous.....	850
Killed in fields and highways.....	288
Persons burned.....	50
Died from hunger and cold.....	1,614
Suicides.....	23
Martyrs, bishops.....	1
" " Gregorian priests.....	11
" " Protestant ministers.....	3
" " Teachers.....	7
" " men, women and children.....	1,903
Total deaths.....	4,127
Loss of property.....	$7,268,000

From Harpoot, Feb. 18, comes this letter, the writer being one of the missionaries engaged in the relief work:

The letter announcing your gift of $500 for relief work came by the last post. In a previous letter I referred to the needs of Arabkir. It is impossible to secure exact statistics, but all reports agree that there are only from three hundred to four hundred Christian houses, and most of the poorest left. The 8,500 survivors are crowded into these houses. The dead are variously estimated as from three thousand to four thousand. Of the five hundred shops only thirty remain. The plunder extended not only to the houses and shops, but men, women and children were stripped of nearly all the clothing on their persons. The destitution has been extreme. Many of the people are in danger of starvation. Very few of them have clothing sufficient to keep them warm, or bedding of any sort. There is a good deal of sickness and mortality, presumably typhoid fever. The only Christian physician in the place, a most excellent, spiritual man, is in prison, along with ninety other Christians. The fifteen Arabkir villages are in some respects in a worse condition for they have been compelled to accept the faith of Islam.

One of the missionaries at Mardin writes:

It looks as though worse events were before us than any we have yet witnessed. I have tried to close my ears to the way things have been done, but what I have heard is enough to show that there are heard to show that there are savages still. . . . Julia saw them pouring kerosene over a man, getting ready to set fire to him, the man crying "Ah! Ah! Ah!" Julia's two little ones were left naked on the ground and both died. . . . M. Tonia and two little ones were left in the rain, without any rag to cover them. Abosh's wife has a beautiful sister still in captivity. . . . As far as the missionaries have been killed, and only those in Harpoot have had their houses plundered, and that by direct order of the ones in power.

One of the most touching stories of martyrdom that has yet come to light, is that contained in a letter from an Armenian formerly living at Shefik, a village near Harpoot. After telling of the ravaging and burning of the place by Kurds and Turks successively, he writes:

After this they rushed upon the women and children, and took off their shoes and clothing. On the eighth day, as they had finished their work, they came to us who were on the banks of the stream. They killed Brother Baghdo's son and Pastor Melcon, because they would not change their religion. It became night, darkness was upon us, but they came with lanterns and selected forty-five of the young men, saying that the government wished them. Knowing what would befall them, they asked for an hour's grace. They prayed and sang, they asked forgiveness of each other, they kissed the hands of their parents, and parted with tears, with the expectation of never again seeing each other. Taking them to a desolate place half an hour distant, they were taken apart two by two, and threatened with death if they would not change their religion. They all with one voice agreed upon saying boldly, "We will not deny our religion. We are ready to die for our Saviour's love." Only five succeeded in making their escape, but the remaining forty became martyrs for the love of Jesus. My son Samuel was among the forty-five, but he escaped with four others and hid in a cave for ten or twelve days. My youngest son, twenty-two years old, was killed. How heartrending was the sight! A week before we were in our homes, comfortable, having made every preparation for the winter, having our friends about us, but like you were deprived of everything, dwelling-house, furniture, beds, food, clothing. With heads uncovered, feet bare, little clothing upon us, we passed from rock to rock, from mountain to mountain with great wailing and lamentation, to find our children. "Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they were not."

As already announced in these columns, the Relief Fund will close on April 15, after which no contributions will be received. It is therefore specially desirable that all intending contributors should forward their gifts at the earliest moment, in order that they may be of service. During the week the following additional remittances have been cabled from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund through the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Malatia.....	$1,000	Sivas.....	$1,000
Harpoot.....	1,000	Van.....	2,000

During the past week the following contributions have been received for the relief of the Armenian sufferers:

Prev. acc. $316,056.16	Holmes Anna.....	200
Allen, Jonas.....	Holmes, Mrs F M.....	100
Allen, W J.....	Hosmer Family.....	10
Anderson, Mrs J R.....	Hoskins, Mrs L G.....	10
Armstrong, Elias.....	Hoskins, L L.....	10
Ashcraft, Ehiram.....	Howen, C.....	10
Ashdown, Harry.....	Howard, Mrs L.....	50
Atwood, Mrs H L.....	Hurd, Mrs M L.....	100
Baker, G M.....	Hutson, Rebecca.....	50
Barbour, D D S, F W.....	Inless, Mrs E E.....	100
Bartekman, Ida.....	Jacobs, Mrs Geo.....	100
Barkdull, Chas R.....	Jones, Miss A.....	100
Barnes, Mrs Lyman.....	Jones, Mrs Wm.....	200
Barney, Mrs Ella, and	Jenkins, H A.....	100
Mrs Clara Dana.....	Jenkins, Rosser.....	100
Barratt, Rufus.....	Jones, Miss M O.....	300
Bartlett, I T.....	Johnston, H.....	100
Bass, Mrs A.....	Johnston, W L.....	100
Bates, Mrs G A.....	Kerr, Annie.....	100
Barnes, Peter.....	Kerr, Mrs B B.....	100
Barnett, Miss A Miss.....	Kerr, Miss H M.....	100
Berecovitz, M & M.....	Kerr, Mrs Hatie.....	200
Berry, Mr & Mrs O H.....	Kerr, Miss M H.....	100
Berch, Elizabeth.....	Kobbe, W H.....	25
Bliss, Mrs T.....	Kind's, Ella L S S.....	200
Bortfield, Hattie.....	Kipster, P A.....	100
Bosch, W.....	Kristof, F A.....	100
Brandt, Mr.....	Kroese, F & dau.....	100
Brandt, L.....	Kullenberg, Abner.....	200
Bronson, Mrs H F.....	Kullenberg, P F.....	500
Bronson, W G.....	Landphere, P F.....	500
Brooks, Matilda.....	Lawrence, Mrs M B.....	200
Brown, N J.....	Leader, E J.....	500
Brown, Mrs R E.....	Leamon, Ellen.....	100
Bray, Mr & Mrs M F.....	Locey, J.....	200
Bunnell, Mrs S E.....	Loomis, Mrs C.....	200
Burford, John.....	Lowen, Herman.....	100
Burns, Chas S.....	Lottimer, H M.....	300
Burpee, Laura L.....	McLannahan, J & M.....	200
Carr, L C.....	McLennan, J H.....	500
Cathen, H H.....	McDonald, C A.....	500
Clark, A S.....	McDonald, Patrick.....	200
Clark, Mrs J.....	McIntosh, Mrs W J.....	100
Cline, Mamie E.....	McLarty, P S & wife.....	100
Coburn, Mary M.....	McLean, Agnes K.....	100
Collins, Alfred.....	collected by.....	100
Cool, Mrs A E.....	McMillen, Wm.....	100
Cowies, T & family.....	Mains, Mrs C W.....	100
Crawford, Mrs G W.....	Mather, Miss Benal.....	100
Crawford, J.....	Maul, Anna.....	200
Crawford, Mrs P H.....	Miller, Chas.....	500
Crockett, J. D & family.....	Moore, G I.....	10
Cummings, H H.....	Murales, Mrs M M.....	500
Cytle, J H.....	Murphy, Mrs.....	100
Daguerre, J.....	Morris, Mrs.....	100
Darbee, Mrs F J.....	Morse, Mrs R I.....	200
Datton, John.....	Munenberg, T W.....	200
Davis, Geo A.....	Nattager, D family.....	200
Deering, Mary.....	Nelson, John I.....	200
Detweiler, A Y & fam.....	Nelson, Mrs L E.....	100
Dick, Margaret.....	Nelson, Mrs L E.....	100
Dierman, J.....	Nice, M I.....	100
Dixon, Mrs E A.....	Nunn, Walter.....	200
Dorr, B F.....	Owens, W F.....	10
Dottridge, B W.....	Paige, O R.....	200
Douglas, M.....	Pangburn, Mrs C.....	100
Downing, R.....	Parker, Mrs A A.....	100
Dron, Ann.....	Parsons, Mrs.....	100
Dunbar, R C.....	Payne, W O.....	300
Elliott, Mrs T J.....	Pence, Mrs.....	100
Ellis, Egbert L.....	Pence, Mrs Roderic.....	100
Emmert, J F.....	Pettigrew, Mrs E.....	200
England, Mrs Walter.....	Pieps, M H.....	500
Evans, Frank.....	Pickard, Mrs Thos.....	100
Evans, H D.....	Pinkney, Mrs.....	100
Evans, M F.....	Polle, Mrs L.....	100
Falan, Mrs.....	Pollock, Robt.....	700
Farr, Mrs R & M.....	Porter, A C.....	100
Farr, Mrs F E.....	Porter, Mrs C V.....	50
Farrer, Washington.....	Porter, Mrs W R.....	100
Fitch, Mrs H C.....	Porter, Wayland.....	500
Ford, S L.....	Pratt, Mrs W R.....	50
Ford, David.....	Pratt, Mrs Sarah L.....	50
Fordham, Henry.....	Price, J T.....	200
Fowler, Mrs Chas A.....	Rea, Mrs N A.....	200
Fox, Mrs Geo.....	Reber, B F.....	1000
Frank, Mr & Mrs J S.....	Reed, Julia A.....	100
Freece, Miss Annie.....	Reid, Mrs J M.....	200
Freeman, J D.....	Reid, Mrs Isaac.....	50
French, Mrs Isaac.....	Reynolds, A W.....	500
Fuller, T D.....	Reynolds, Rev L F.....	100
Fullerton, Mrs H S.....	Richards, Olivia.....	25
Galloway, F M.....	Millie Williams.....	25
Greig, D.....	Riley, W L.....	25
Gillepie, Jas.....	Rinker, H.....	250
Gibson, Mrs O E.....	Robbins, I L.....	300
Giles, H L.....	Robe, M M.....	1000
Goldthorpe, Mrs Art.....	Robertson, Henry.....	100
Goulding, Ella.....	Rose, Gerie's School.....	325
Goulding, John.....	Roundy, M H & G A.....	300
Goulding, Lemmie.....	Rose, Mrs E.....	100
Green, Mrs.....	Rushon, Hattie D.....	500
Griner, Mrs John.....	Salmond, Thos.....	100
Hagman, C A.....	Seaton, J L.....	5
Haines, Chas S.....	Scarcliff, Fred.....	25
Hamilton, H.....	Seaton, Geo.....	25
Hanson, H.....	Seaton, H L.....	100
Hartley, Miss Carrie.....	Seaton, Mrs J.....	200
Harrington, S J.....	Shepherd, Bessie.....	100
Harris, Mrs A.....	She & Lucie V.....	100
Haves, E.....	Sherritt, Mrs M E.....	200
Hay, Mrs J.....	Sholtz, Mrs.....	50
Hayden, John D.....	Siebert, Mrs F C.....	200
Hendel, Mrs P M.....	Simmons, Rev & Mrs.....	100
Hensberger, Mrs D.....	Sir, Annie.....	100
Hettinger, Mr & Mrs.....	Siingerland, N J.....	500
Hewitt, Mr & Mrs.....	Sly, Mrs M Y.....	100
Hickok, Mrs Sarah A.....	Smith, G T.....	50
Hicks, R H.....	Smith, Jas.....	400
Hill, Mrs Adell.....	Smith, Miss Ida.....	100
Hill, Mrs M.....	Snyder, Mrs.....	300
Hogland, R.....	Sonnenberger, A D.....	100
Hoenig, Henry.....	Sonson, J T.....	100
Hoge, Ella.....	Sonder, Maggie.....	10
Holcombe, Mrs C.....	Spaulding, Mary B.....	150
	Spaulding, Albion K.....	500

(Continued on page 276.)

ated to sixteen other centres of suffering in Armenia, doing incalculable good. In letters, published in these columns from time to time, Mr. Howard has already related some of his remarkable experiences on the Turko-Persian border. He was more than once ambushed, shot at, but escaped almost miraculously; his death was plotted by Turkish spies, and traps were laid to lure him to a note mountain passes, where he could be easily disposed of, and he fell like a strange land; but amid all the surrounding dangers, he was providentially aided and friends were raised up on every hand. He rescued and aided the armed fugitive Armenians who had fled from the snowy mountains to Salmas and the border cities in Persia, from the mosques in Van province; and he, in conjunction with the good Christian missionaries of Urumia, organized a relief movement to care for these perishing exiles. Through his efforts, the Persian border villages were transformed into havens of shelter and refuge for those who sought to escape the cruel Kurdish lances, and to less savage Turkish swords.

Ref work progresses steadily at the different stations in Armenia. Dr. Grace Kimball cables from Van as follows:

VAN, March 23.
"I am quiet. 19,000 are now receiving assistance here, but our funds are nearly exhausted and we have cut bread into one-half and stopped the clothing distribution. We have sent home 2,000 pillers. Seven from one party died from exposure en route and others will die.

Safety is secured here but there is no employment, outside of our Industrial Bureau to relieve the city's destitution. Assistance has been promised to the outlying districts for seed, cattle and rebuilding; these are most imperative, but are withheld through lack of funds.

Every dollar given now is worth ten later. The people must plough and sow immediately, or a famine will ensue in the fall. Everything depends on this and on the security of the villages against the Kurds. The government proposes to take measures for their safety.

KIMBALL."

WILLIAM WILLARD HOWARD.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON, Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, a postage stamp at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed to:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, May 1, 1891, at New York, N. Y., under Post-Office No. 100,000.

Woman Improved.

IT may be ungallant to suppose that there is, or has been, any room for improvement; but we venture the opinion that in the last ten years there has been a marked bettering of the physical condition of American women. Whether it is a result of gymnastics or the traveling of many of our girls in foreign lands, where they have had an opportunity of admiring the superior physical qualities of English and German women, or the general discussion of the subject, we do not know. Perhaps the fact that so many of those females who prided themselves on their bewitching languors and fashionable invalidism have been passed by when our young men came to make selection of lifetime partners, may have helped to cure the folly. It has been found that doll-babies are of but little worth in the struggle of life, and capacity on the part of a woman to sweep out a drawing-room without fainting, and to make a loaf of bread not sour nor soggy, is of more importance than the satin in a cheek which the fingers of diphtheria may unravel, or the color of the hair which one strong grip of fever may pull out. We find cause for congratulation in the fact that woman's physical condition is rising, but there is room yet for higher stages of advancement. Turn the girls out-of-doors every chance you have. Let them, properly accompanied, botanize in the fields, and geologize among the rocks. Deny them not oar or skate or saddle. A race of weak women will make a race of puny men. We are not ambitious for Amazons, nor for women going through the land bawling about their rights, but out-and-out Christian women who enjoy what rights they have and support great souls in bodies fit to contain them.

Bless the Doctors!

WHAT a tendency to depreciate the skill of physicians, especially when they lose a case. As far as I know them, physicians profess to be neither omnipotent nor all-wise. Like those of us in other professions and occupations, I suppose they sometimes make mistakes; but the time we spend in sarcastic flings at their Christlike and magnificent calling we had better spend in thanking God for what they accomplish. Better not be too hard on the doctors. Sooner than you expect, you will be sending for them, and between you and the King of Terrors there will be nothing but one of their prescriptions. They stand to-day, as a profession, fighting back whole armies of cancers, pneumonias, diphtherias, and congestions of brain and liver and lung. They do more missionary work than any class of men in the country, and upon them will come the blessing of the Great Physician, as he says, "I was sick, and ye visited me." When the last ailment of body is cured, and the last attack on the children's cradle has been discomfited, and the last broken bone of workman fallen from the house scaffolding shall be set, and the last swollen gum of teething child shall have been lanced, and the last pale patient with tumor successfully removed shall, with a grateful "Thank you, doctor," be released from the operating table in the clinical department of the city hospital, then it will be time enough to deride the medical profession. Christ took along with him in his journeying a physician, one Doctor Luke, and while some in that calling are sceptical and atheistic, many of them know how at the same time to medicate body and soul.

Worse than Pugilism.

WHILE I write this all good people are hoping that no more prize fights will ever take place in America. But war is pugilism on a large scale. It is a bad thing to have one jaw broken, and a few drops of blood shed, but is not that less distressing than to break a thousand jaws, and cover miles of territory with the signs of carnage. If nations must fight why not choose two champions to do the fighting? That would be a great economy of bones, and a great economy of blood, and a great economy of tears, and a great economy of heartaches, and a great economy of sepulchres. Besides that, a pugilistic encounter develops more courage than a conflict in which the usual weaponry of international strife is employed. A man may be a successful general without much personal courage, for he can stand in a tower two miles from the fight and give orders, or may sit in a stone house incognito, smoking a cigar and receiving messages from a battlefield three miles away, where hundreds of private soldiers are being sacrificed. There is not so much exposure in a contest in which Dahlgren guns and howitzers and swamp-angels and all weapons of long range are engaged, as when two men with nothing but their own fists come close up and pound each other's faces into a jelly, obliterating the image in which God made them. Besides that, in the last style of combat there are no reavements: at any rate, there can be only two deaths, and what is that to an Austertitz, or a Sedan, or a Gettysburg, leaving twenty or forty thousand homes in widowhood and orphanage? Mind you, I do not advocate pugilism; but I abhor it far less than war, whose epics never cease to sing and whose drums never cease to roll, by as much as two mutilated men are less horrifying than thirty thousand stacked-up corpses. The time will come—may the good Lord hasten it!—when all individual quarrels will be settled by arbitration, and all international differences will be settled by treaty; but until then I am in favor of compelling those who get up wars to do their own fighting. If in this country some great Northern man and some great Southern man shall, by angry agitation, bring on a war between the two sections, let those two men be compelled to be the champions, and meet on the banks of the Potomac and have it out in eight or ten rounds of patriotic pugilism; and if they should both expire under the bruising, the loss would not be much. How many lives and how much suffering would have been saved if Napoleon and Wellington in Franco-English War, and Moltke and MacMahon in Franco-German War, had fought out the battle alone? You say that in some cases the physical disparity might be too great. Then let the nations of the earth choose two champions sufficiently athletic. But it would not depend upon physical stature. A small man in the right is stronger than a larger man in the wrong. You remember David and Goliath.

While the world has made advance in arts of peace, I doubt whether it has made any advance beyond the old style of championship in war. The trouble is, that those who get up the wars usually stay at home and make money out of government contracts, while the farmers and the mechanics, who had nothing to do in creating the trouble, have to leave their plows and their work-benches and go forth to suffer. In pugilism two men are the sufferers. In the strife between nations, two governments are the desperadoes. The music written in staffs and clefs of light above Bethlehem on the first Christmas Night needs more rehearsal by all nations. The only difference between a war with fists and a war with cannon and sabre and explosion of powder-mine, is that the last is the more destructive and the more wicked. The only war to be cherished is the war of argument, the war of facts, the war of mind against mind—that uplifts, that irradiates, that is the friend of civilization and Christianity; that kind of conflict meets the approval of the God who says in the Bible, "Come, let us reason together."

OUR MAIL-BAG.

All contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Armenian Relief Fund should be forwarded to 92 Bible House, New York, as soon as possible, as the need is urgent. No contributions will be received after April 15.

S. M. M., Columbus Grove, O. What was the value of a penny of Christ's time, in the money of our day?

It was the Roman denarius, and was worth about fifteen cents. It was the usual price for a day's wages of a farm laborer.

Inquirer, Dublin, Tex. Has the Gospel been preached in all the world in fulfillment of Matt. 24: 14?

No; there are still portions of Central Africa, Western China, Tibet, Tartary and Arabia where it has not yet been preached. Tibet is practically a virgin field.

Jesse M. Yonan, 542 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill., writes:

At noon every Saturday, the students of Rush Medical College, have a prayer meeting, conducted by the College Y. M. C. A. Once a month we have a missionary meeting. This noon our subject was "Armenia" and at the end of the meeting a collection was taken for the relief of the hungry people in that country, so they requested me to send the amount collected $2.20 to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund which we believe is doing the most Christlike work ever done.

Mrs. D. E. B., Newark, N. J. 1. What is the distance between Nazareth and Bethlehem? 2. What mode of travel do you suppose Joseph and Mary had on their way thither? 3. Were the roads all hilly and disagreeable, or otherwise?

1. About eighty miles. 2. Camels or asses. 3. Diversified, part hilly and part valley road. The land was doubtless much more fertile and cultivated then than now. Countries that come under Turkish rule gradually degenerate into a condition little better than a desert.

H. E. K., Sioux Rapids. According to the laws of Iowa can a wife retain entire control of bank deposits and interest drawing mortgages that were hers before her marriage? Can she will her property in opposition to her husband's wishes in regard to the matter?

Unless the laws of the State of Iowa have been changed within the last twelve years, she can legally do all that you state. There may have been changes, however, and for prudence sake, you should consult an Iowa attorney.

Annie B., Calvary, Pa. Would it be right for a lady to break an engagement if the parents are opposed to her intended? Would it be doing a sin?

It depends wholly on the circumstances of the case. Usually the judgment of parents in such matters is well-founded and wise and should be heeded. If one's own conscience approves the parental prohibition, despite all other influences and inclinations, it is safe to follow it. And this rule would apply in all except extraordinary cases.

M. C., Columbus, O. What is the law of New York State regarding woman controlling property obtained after marriage?

In New York a married woman has the same rights and is subject to the same liability as a single woman in all matters relating to her separate estate. She can take, hold, and convey in her own name, both real and personal property, and she can act as executrix, administratrix and guardian, owning bonds as though not married. With respect to property obtained by her after marriage, by inheritance, bequest, or purchase, the same general rule applies.

C. W. R., Winnebago City, Minn. Do you think that prayer is a necessary condition of another person's prosperity? Will not God dwell in his power, consistent with his laws, for that person anyway?

The same line of reasoning might be applied to all prayers. God encourages us to pray to him, and we have abundant ground for expecting answers to our prayers. We do not know how God answers, nor what course would pursue if the prayers were not of God. That is not our side of the relation. The fact of our being invited to go to God with our requests, that God has said that for all things he would be inquired of (Ezek. 36: 37), and that assurances are given that prayer will be heard, should be sufficient for our indication of our duty. We know that Christ prayed for Peter (Luke 22: 32), an example should remove any doubt we have as to the need or efficacy of our prayers.

Mrs. O. E. Stombaugh, Evangelist, Daik Island, Mobile, Ala., writes:

Permit me to extend to your dear paper a patrons our heartfelt thanks for THE CHRISTIAN ALMS sent me by Mrs. James Holiday and the tian literature, clothing and money sent us in its influence. Our Sunday School has been blessed and the Mission has been kept moving through the help derived through the influence of your paper. C. Cook, of Chicago, and a few others. Our Mission and Sunday School is still struggling church needs furnishing and pastoring, for climate point is needed to preserve a healthy state. Many thanks for two boxes of Bibles sent us by H. Phillips, Ypsilanti, Mich.

Subscriber, Oakland, Miss. When one truly believes and loves God, and tries to live every day to him, is he a Christian? Or does God require us to become Christians when we have a change in heart all at once?

Such a one is a Christian, unquestionably. But more is required of the Christian than mere personal belief; he must live and have a Christian life, and this is only to be done following the example of the Saviour, whose whole earthly career was spent in doing good to others.

M. A. H., Cedar Bluff, Ala. Do the Mohammedans believe in the old Bible? My impression is that they did not believe in any of our Bible, but they have always thought they believed in a book about the "Koran" written by Mohammed about six hundred years after Christ was born.

They do not believe in the Old Testament. Much of the Koran is a travesty of Biblical history, and in it the names of many of the Old Testament prophets are introduced. There are many Jewish and Christian elements and fragments of doctrine in the Koran, and some of Mohammed's own relatives were Christian converts. Mohammedans declare that the Jewish and Christian Scriptures are untrustworthy, having been interpolated and erroneously corrupted.

J. B. Renner, Chicago. What is the numerical strength of the Moslem world at the present time?

Estimates vary, some claiming 175,000,000, others 400,000,000. There are 25,500,000 in China. In India there is a Mohammedan population exceeding 40,000,000, more than in Turkey, where the total is 32,000,000. There are 30,000,000 in the Malay Peninsula, 10,000,000 in Central Asia, 18,000,000 in North Africa, 11,000,000 in Central Africa, 5,000,000 in Egypt, 11,000,000 in Arabia, and 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 in Afghanistan. In Southern Russia, in the Balkan Peninsula, and in Bulgaria, the believers in this faith are very numerous, and there are large colonies in the eastern Australia. At least 60,000,000 Mohammedans are found in British colonies and India, and probably the true total would reach 200,000,000.

E. E. F., Warts River, Vt. Address them all.—Georgia S. B. The address of the Mission is 105 Bowery, New York. Mrs. M. Kagan, Neb. None whatever.—Miriam G. I had spring of such marriages is generally regarded as liable to mental or physical weakness.—W. C. Wheeling, W. Va. The author is Sterne.—T. Hamilton, O. As we have already frequently pointed out, such dissipations and diversions are utterly contrary to the Christian who wishes to advance in the spiritual life.—Constant Reader, edo Park. Yes, and they are sent regularly week to the Converts' Meeting at the Bowery Mission.—Mrs. L. A. K., Earlin, Nev. What a sad and altogether true the existence of such things should be regretted.—O. W. Lynch, Pa. We believe.—Nellie U., Berwick, Pa. No, we regard such topics as unsuitable for public school oratory.—F. S., Applington, Ia. Not necessarily so, although it is quite unusual.—Inquirer. The African would hardly be congenial to the Armenian who lives in a temperate latitude.—Mrs. L. I. side, Cal. Thanks; you are no doubt right in the picture.—Mrs. Julia F., Hartford, Mich. We are orthodox Eastern Church.—Subscriber, Chester, Ky. We cannot inform you.—W. C. McDonald, Ont. Your suggestions are good, but it is difficult to find means and methods to carry them out.—Hattie E. B., Whitman, Kas. Y. H. J. R., Lake Crystal. This has already been explained.—M. A. V., Bradford. Its address is Chicago, Ill.—Lula B., Bridgeport, W. Va. We have no means of tracing it.—Geo. W. Atty, Mo. P. B. F. Goodrich, Mich. Write to city at Washington, D. C. for the information want.—Mrs. A. H. Y., Chicago, Ill. Many good men have used it, but it is a vice and should be avoided.—Reader, McDonald's Corner, Kan. Her address is 492 Second Avenue, New York.—Mrs. Betsy S., Ulysses, Pa. We believe published by a Canadian book firm.—F. Los Angeles, Cal. No. A distinction should be made between reasonable interest and excessive interest.—Theo. Asmus, Dubuque, Ia. Just as one out of place in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.—Reader, Foxboro, Tex. We cannot advise.—J. M. Wheaton, Aylmer, Ont., Can., asks the reader send her the words of "Do Not Pull the Church Down."—Subscriber, Dover, Me. But he should abandon all his sinful practices uniting with the society.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Ancient Egypt's Queen.

MUMMY IN ITS CASE.

In a recent dispatch from Cairo, one of the most interesting discoveries yet made by the explorers of Egypt is reported. It is the mummy of Queen Khnemut who is believed to have belonged to the 12th dynasty of Egyptian monarchs. When they reigned is a matter of dispute, but it is probably about four thousand years ago. If this identification is as correct as it appears to be, the remains now brought to light are those of a woman who was contemporary with Abraham, and may actually have seen the patriarch. They were found by M. de Morgan who is in charge of the exploration work at Dahsuir on the west bank of the Nile a few hours' journey to the south-west of Cairo. At the southern end of the plateau stands the pyramid of Amenemhat III., which has been partially destroyed by the peasants for building material. When M. de Morgan had cleared away the rubbish surrounding it, he found the remains of a wall, between which and the pyramid, he suspected the near relatives of the monarch were likely to be buried. A careful search revealed the concealed entrance to a shaft which, when uncovered, was found to lead to a subterranean gallery. A number of chambers opened into the gallery, each containing a sarcophagus, or stone coffin. These were brought up and opened. The first was of a royal prince named Aup-Ra, who is unknown to history, but was evidently a man of some importance. The second was of the Princess Ha, who had been buried with a great wealth of beautiful ornaments upon her. But the greatest find of all was the third sarcophagus brought up. It contained the mummy of Queen Khnemut as the inscription upon the stone sarcophagus explained. A magnificent golden crown was upon her head and jewelry of exquisite workmanship adorned her person. Gold ornaments studded with cornelian, turquoise and lapis-lazuli shone in the light that had not touched them for four thousand years. They had been well preserved in that dry chamber and had lost none of their lustre. The fastenings of the collar and some of the smaller ornaments had become loose, and had fallen beside the mummy to the coffin, but the others were still in place, as they were left when the Queen was laid to rest. In an adjoining chamber were the funeral offerings and the vases of fragrances, with which the Ka, or spiritual double of the deceased Queen, was supposed to delight itself. Every article was beautiful, as well as valuable, and showed how advanced was the art and civilization of Egypt in that early age of the world. But art and civilization did not avail to save Egypt from falling, and now representative of a modern nation, unknown when the Queen was laid crowned in her coffin, takes off her crown and holds it up to the admiration of his countrymen. So God's warning to Pharaoh, uttered centuries ago by the prophet, when Egypt was powerful, has been fulfilled: "I will bring thy destruction among the nations to the countries which thou hast not known. Ezek. 29: 9.

witnessed in the public square near his home. He noticed a commotion among the sparrows in the open space. They were flying to and fro between the fountain and a boarding that some builders had put up during alterations in a corner building. Curious to ascertain what the birds were doing he went to the corner. There he saw a sparrow on the pavement unable to fly. A man had been putting some posters on the bare boards and had left a liberal supply of paste on the pavement. The sparrow had made a raid on the sticky stuff which had clogged its feet and feathers and held it fast. In some way he had communicated his trouble to his mates and they were doing their best to set him free. They would fly to the fountain and get themselves thoroughly wet and returning to their mate, would shower the moisture over him from their wings. In a short time he was able to hop out of the paste and was escorted to the fountain, where he took a bath. His feathers were rapidly cleansed, the whole party assisting in the operation. When it was completed, they flew away, evidently gratified at the success of their efforts. It is much to be wished that men who are prevented soaring by the sins which clog their feet and hold them in the mire, always received similar kindly help from their fellows. Those who do aid in such work not only have the satisfaction of helping another, but have the infallible promise of reward.

M DE MORGAN EXHIBITING QUEEN KHNEMUT'S CROWN TO HIS PARTY.

Let him know that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins. (James 5: 20.)

Fifty Dollars for a City's Site.

An interesting illustration of the changes time may make in values occurs in a historical sketch of Portland, Ore., recently published in the Oregonian of that city. It records that in 1843, when not a single house was built on the land, where now the fine city stands in wealth and influence, the whole section was owned by a single settler. He had been for some time anxious to sell it, as he believed it would never be productive. After vainly offering it for sale in several quarters, he at last found a purchaser in a merchant at Oregon City, to whom he disposed of his holding for fifty dollars. The merchant did not go to see his purchase for some time, but when he did, he was so pleased with it that he removed there, opened a store, and had a road cut to the nearest town. He sold several lots at nominal prices to some enterprising men, and in a year or two there was a thriving little village, which grew into an important town, and has now become a great commercial centre. What the land which was sold in 1843 for fifty dollars would bring now, if it were offered in one lot, it would be difficult to estimate. Looking at the city now, with its magnificent buildings and its fine properties, it is almost inconceivable that but little more than half a century ago its site might have been purchased for so small a sum. If any are now alive to whom it was offered, how they must blame themselves for their lack of business foresight and sagacity! Infinitely more bitter will be the self-er had once been wealthy, and indeed, her husband who died in the war, once owned the very plantation where she worked. Rather than her boy should miss the education she coveted for him, she had humiliated herself and worn herself out in the unaccustomed labor. One wonders what that boy will become. If he neglected his studies and idled away his time, wasting the opportunity purchased for him at such a cost, no words would be too severe to describe his ingratitude and folly. Yet there are only too many examples of infinitely greater ingratitude. The opportunity of obtaining eternal life is often slighted, though to provide it, Christ made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant. (Phil. 2: 6.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Many of our Readers will be Pleased to know that the offer of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, 52 times, and the large type, International Teachers' Self-Pronouncing Bible, leather-lined, red under gold edges, silk-sewed, is still open. These elegant Bibles will be sent, together with a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for $3, as long as the supply lasts.

Out of Eighty-Nine Additions Last Year to the Congregational ministry in England and Wales, no less than seventy-four are abstainers, and many of them life-long abstainers.

Professor Henry Drummond, the Author of The Natural Law in the Spiritual World and other popular works, is seriously ill. He is now at Tunbridge Wells in a very weak condition; he is suffering also from depression of spirits.

Union Meetings of all the Churches in Marion, Iowa, has been held under the leadership of Evangelist Williams. Several weeks of preparatory work was done, and a large tabernacle, capable of seating 2,000 people, was filled daily.

One Result of the Recent Revival in Dubuque, Ia., was the admission, on profession of faith, to the First Congregational Church, on a recent Sunday, of seventy-one persons, including a large number of leading business of the city.

A Large Legacy has been Left to the English Wesleyan Methodist Church. Under the will of the late Sir Francis Lytett, it is entitled to a sum equivalent to half a million dollars. It is to be applied chiefly to the building of new churches.

One of the Leading Baptist Churches of Richmond, Va., recently lost its church edifice by fire. "The most gratifying surprise" it received, as it prepared for rebuilding, was the gift of $100 from the First Colored Baptist Church of the city.

Rev. W. H. Aitken has been Holding Daily services in Old Trinity Church, New York. The services were held at noon, and the large church was crowded to the doors with business men from Wall Street and Lower Broadway. The famous English preacher has lost none of his old-time pulpit power, since his former visit to America.

Dr. Pierson's Meetings in Ireland, have been largely attended. In Cork there were three days' services. Dr. Pierson afterwards returned to Dublin, addressing meetings in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin. One outcome of the latter meeting was the determination to form a Woman's Missionary Prayer Union in Dublin.

Union Evangelistic Meetings have been held recently at Albion, Mich., by Evangelists Potter and Miller of Chicago. Upward of four hundred persons made profession of faith, of whom one hundred and eighty have been received on probation in the Methodist Church, eighty-eight into the Presbyterian and the remainder into churches of other denominations.

The Brooklyn City Mission Expects to resume its wagon services in the early spring. It is estimated that during last summer the Gospel was preached from the wagon to audiences aggregating twenty thousand persons. The Mission is endeavoring to induce the Sunday Schools of the city to undertake the cost of the wagon service for the ensuing season. This will be $350.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has made appropriations so far this year of $917,168, so that with the deficit from last year of $147,170, a total of $1,064,338 was required to meet expenditures. Of this sum there had come to hand from all sources to March 1, $601,837, including $61,166 for the Reunion Fund. The amount needed by April 30 next to balance all claims is therefore $462,502.

Readers of this Journal, who are Specially interested in Armenia, can inform themselves fully and accurately on the subject of the recent massacres, etc., by reading Rev. Frederick D. Greene's new book, The Rule of the Turk. A startling expose, replete with harrowing details of the most infamous crime of the nineteenth century, copiously illustrated, maps, etc., compiled by Mr. Gladstone in autograph letter, pp. 192, paper cover, price 50c, postage prepaid. May be obtained from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York.

In a Recent Letter from Persia Mr. Whipple, the eminent missionary writes: "There are, to us who are on picket duty, a number of significant and encouraging indications of a general collapse of Islam. To a close observer they have been noticed some time, and as the dim outlines become more distinct they are attracting a deep interest. Christ's kingdom is making decided progress in these strongholds of error and superstition." The fact may account in some measure for the recent outbreaks of fanaticism. We read in prophecy of one who had great wrath, knowing he had but a short time. (Rev. 12: 12.)

Bishop Tucker, of Uganda, Reports Rapid progress in that land. He says that a new church has been built in the capital to hold four thousand people, and in the surrounding neighborhood there are twenty-three smaller churches, which attract large and attentive congregations. Scattered throughout the country there are now some two hundred churches, where service is reverently and orderly conducted, and a church has been lately erected within the King's compound. Mwanga himself is not a Christian, but is no longer a persecutor. He is the murderer of Bishop Hannington.

reproach of those who miss the eternal reward which will be given to the despised servants of Christ who may have been poor, but have been faithful to their Lord:

Because thou hast been faithful in a very little have thou authority over ten cities. (Luke 19: 17.)

A Mother's Heroism.

The president of a college in Louisiana tells a remarkable story in the New Orleans Picayune of a mother's heroism. A bright youth from the country was entered as a student in the college. He was evidently of good birth and breeding but was very poor. A little kindness done to him, brought a letter from his mother which explained the situation. She wrote: "It has been my ambition for several years to give my boy the blessed privilege of a college education. I had set my heart upon it; but the object has not been easy to attain. Every dollar that was required I have had to earn myself, in what was to me the hardest toil—that of picking cotton in the fields." It seemed an extraordinary thing that a woman who toiled in that way should have had so intense a desire for her son to have a college education, but later, the reason was disclosed. The moth-

A Bird in Difficulties.

A lover of birds at Shreveport, La., reports in a local journal an incident he Indians and the Gospel.

What an Indian Mission in Texas is Accomplishing—Once Heathen, Now Christian.

THROUGH the courtesy of Rev. S. F. Tenny, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Crockett, Tex., we are enabled to present the accompanying illustration, which shows part of a small tribe of Indians in southeast Texas. They migrated many years ago from Alabama (and are called Alabama Indians), through Louisiana, to Texas. They have lived peaceably with the whites, but remained in a heathen state until a few years ago. Rev. W. A. Jones, a Presbyterian minister (who is seen in the front of the picture, with a book in his hand), has been preaching monthly to them for the past five or six years. Mrs. Currie, who is seen in the midst of a group of white young ladies on the left, has been serving the Indians as a missionary teacher, conducting both a day-school, and a Sabbath School, and advising and prescribing for them in their sickness.

About fifteen years ago, these Indians were in a savage state, wearing the wild Indian style of dress, playing ball and fishing and hunting on the Sabbath, as on other days, often being drunken, spending much of their time in idleness, having no Sabbath, no prayer or praise service, no Christian marriage, no Christian burial, no school, no house of worship, unable to read, and knowing no Saviour. Now they are industrious, but have only a small tract of land, and much of it is poor. The picture shows their improvement in their neat and intelligent appearance. Other improvements are contemplated. Some of the men must be sent off where they can have better educational advantages, and where they will be trained to be Christian teachers. The girls and women must have some special instruction in sewing and housekeeping. Some clothing is needed for the oldest and poorest, and some medicines for the sick. The preacher is provided by Home Mission Funds, but help is needed for other improvements.

Any of our readers who are interested in this excellent missionary work, can learn all about it and its needs by writing to Rev. F. S. Tenny, Crockett, Texas.

Mother-Love.

She may be bent with the weight of four-score years and ten, and her living son be three-score years, writes Rev. David Gregg, but yet that first natural mother-love, instead of ceasing, is seemingly growing stronger, and is just as heartily reciprocated. Why is this? Because these loves are as immortal as the soul. I saw something of maternal love a month ago, when I spent a week with my own mother on the other side of the Alleghenies. She is seventy and seven now. When I was coming away she came to me and said: "I have nothing else but cry ever since you have been here. But son, do not think I am not glad to see you. The tears are not tears of sorrow, but of joy. I have never been so happy as I am now, and I know it. She did not need to tell me that; I knew it by the look in her eyes, and the way she called me 'son,' and by the number of times she called me 'son.' Now that she can no longer use the endearing term 'husband,' the term 'son' is made to carry in it all the love tones she can command. 'Son! Son!' that name will run through my soul as long as I have life, and it will keep on saying to me: 'The love that hovered over the cradle outlived the cradle; it continues loyal to you through your mature manhood, as through your mature manhood it marches into eternity.' This love for our friends who have gone, and our faith in a future life match each other, fit each other, and are two halves of a corresponding whole.

A Child's Pointed Question.

A bright little lad, on his father's knee, out of pity for their low estate. A lady of long experience writes that only cultured women, if possible University graduates, can hope to reach the Parsee women in Bombay.

Avoid Slang.

Bishop Potter of New York has lately given some good advice to the young ladies of Vassar regarding the use of slang. He greatly deprecated the use of many of the absurd adjectives and extravagant phrases that are so frequently used by young people, who are thoughtless and do not place a proper estimate on the value of their expressions. The good bishop said: 'Slang is one of the greatest dangers to which our tongue is subjected. Just as coin is debased, so is a language. The dialect story, with all its tenderness and pathos, is of doubtful value. There isn't a woman who is not conscious of the danger of giving vigor to expression by the aid of slang. I sometimes talk with young men, students at the most venerable colleges in this country, and blush to say that their language is often such that I cannot understand their conversation. And another trouble is that women often find that such words on their own lips create a laugh among men. On the testimony of young men themselves, you can wear no charm greater than that of reserved, cultivated choice speech. Use your eye, your careful study of the children in the neighborhood that noise at home is a good deal better than sly wickedness abroad.

The Girls that are Wanted.

THE girls that are wanted are good girls. Good from the heart to the lips; Pure, as the lily is white and pure. From its heart to its sweet leaf-tips. The girls that are wanted are home-girls. Girls that are mother's right hand; That fathers and brothers can trust to, And the little ones understand. Girls that are fair on the hearthstone, And pleasant when nobody sees; Kind and sweet to their own folks, Ready and anxious to please. The girls that are wanted are wise girls, That know what to do and say; That drive with a smile and soft word The wrath of the household away.

FARMERS' WIVES.

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, there was published a letter on "The Possibilities of Farm Life," and it has been the means directing the attention of many of our readers to the subject. One lady who signs "Elizabeth," writes from Thetford, Mich., as follows: "I have just read the letter on 'The Possibilities of Farm Life,' and I confess I have a great feeling that is very one-sided. So possibilities may be for a young woman who has herself, husband, and possibly a hired man or two to care for, but they are not for the mother of three small children, who does all the cooking, scrubbing, cleaning, sewing, and is subject to constant interruptions from the little ones, who may be waited upon for. While I would not say the farmer's wife as a whole she must toil early and late to keep 'things cent.' If she have pride and ambition, and many farmers' wives do have she has to make even reading of her Bible, the weekly newspaper, a matter of conscience, it is neglected. Very few wives of the average farmer can afford to keep even one hired girl, and of course the husband has no time to sweep or do chores, and so the mother bears a burden too heavy for her, and often because the children are able to help themselves, the mother is called to a better home, and children are left motherless.

"They tell me, 'let some work go to-day but it can no more be 'let go,' in the home than in an office, where each day's counts must be 'posted.' If 'let go,' there is such an accumulation that two women must be done upon the morrow. There are very few ways in which a mother can save herself. These few greedily improve; for, though I love home, husband, and little ones better than life, I feel I must live for them. I realize that children from ten to twenty need mother's restraining love and influence more than the little ones need mother. When so many mothers leave their children to the school, the church, and Sunday School, and the street, then would I know most about them and hold them closest.

"I write this not to discourage farm wives, but to beg your sympathy for the class more overworked and perplexed than the poor washerwomen or the poor sewing women, who toil in a shop all the weary days. Housekeeping on a farm even with modern conveniences, means all-day labor; while even a busy mother in town can get the general housework done at nine or ten, with at least an hour to sew or mend before dinner, except 'wash' or 'bake' days.

"Over many a hot kitchen stove rise prayers to the Throne of Grace, and patience and strength are given to the Christian mother while from her weary so comes the cry:

"Thou dost care, Why should I the burden bear?"

ELIZABETH."

AN INDIAN MISSION FAMILY AT CROCKETT, TEX.

inquired: "Papa, is your soul insured?" "Why do you ask, my son?" "Because I heard Uncle Frank say that you had your house insured and your life insured, but he did not think you thought of your soul, and he was afraid you would lose it. Can't you get it insured right away?" It was true, and the father was led to seek the divine guarantee of his soul's well-being.

Clever Parsee Women.

There is much that is noble and worthy in the Parsees of India. The women specially strike us, with their broad, thoughtful brows and firm mouths. You see them going about quite freely in their graceful dress, and after a month spent among unduly subordinated women it is refreshing to see husbands and wives walking together, side by side, or driving along the sea front with their children. There is a quiet, strong bearing, and entire absence of what strikes an observer so painfully in even casual contact with non-Christian Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan men. Of the 90,000 Parsees in India about 80,000 are in Bombay. They are glad to welcome Europeans to their houses; they are eager to send their girls to a Christian High School; and though they are strongly set against becoming Christians, they are glad to hear if there is any one to tell them of Christ. So far noParsee missionary work has been done among them. One feels a call to evangelize poor Hindu women, who wearily throng the streets mind, your lip to lift up the great tongue which we all inherit." This we regard as excellent advice from a quarter that deserves to be heeded.

The Children's Play-room.

There are very few investments that parents can make which pay so well in health, joy and general satisfaction as wholesome, innocent amusement that will keep their sons and daughters at home evenings. At almost any sacrifice of comfort it is worth while to set apart a room in the house that the children may call their own. In this each one may have a cupboard or closet where his or her belongings in the way of books, toys and trinkets may be kept undisturbed by other hands. Of course, if each child can have his or her room, so much the better. It costs little in building to provide an extra room; if this cannot be afforded, there is almost always an attic that could be made tolerable as a playroom at a small expense. In one family, where there are many children, the dining room, which is the largest apartment in the house, has been, by a sort of general consent, turned over to the little ones every evening after the last meal of the day.

They may spread out their toys and books on the table, turn somersaults over the floor, play antics of all sorts with the furniture, and nobody objects so long as they do not indulge in breakage and quarreling. The line is drawn at that point. The aim is sometimes great, but there are two wise parents who have learned by a Invalid Excuses.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning April 12. Texts: 26: 19-28.

BUNYAN'S picture of the man raking twigs and straws together, and so intent on his occupation, that the angel holding the gold crown above him, cannot attract his attention to it, is an appropriate type of multitudes of lives. Men so pride themselves on their ability to estimate values and are sufficiently far-sighted to practice self-denial to secure future gain, often limit their horizon to this life and to material things. Possession rather than character—what a man has, rather than what he regulates the common estimate of him. If our friends who have passed into the unseen can see our occupations and the eagerness we display to win the world's prizes, how they must wish they could speak to us and tell us what things are really valuable! But they could, they would probably be disappointed by our lack of faith. We have the highest authority for believing that men would not be convinced "though one rose from the dead." Yet in dealing with children, we are quick enough to perceive the absurdity of the principle on which we act. A boy who neglected his studies that he might give more time to his games, and who justified his negligence by the fact that his comrades admired him in base-ball more than in mathematics, or the classics, would be sharply told that their estimate was false. He would be warned that school would soon be over and that he was wrecking his prospects for his whole life by giving more attention to play than to study. Yet the man who receives the warning may be neglecting prayer and his equipment for eternity, while he gives all his thought and energy to the world's pursuits, which must terminate with his mortal life. His doing so indicates grave dereliction of duty as well as a defective prospective. It is as if a servant were sent with a definite commission to a certain place and on his return reported having done many things, but none of those he was sent to do. Nothing can be more certain to any intelligent Christian than the fact that he is placed here primarily for the development of his own character and for that help he can give to others. His first duty lies there. There are many other matters, domestic, social and public, that may legitimately attend to but he must leave his chief duty unperformed. In the Parable of the Supper (Luke 14: 7-24), which our Lord dealt with the subject, does not represent the guests as doing wrong things. The wrong consisted in their permitting them to take the time which should have been given to a man's duty. In the passage connected with this topic, Felix and Agrippa are described as merely postponing the consideration of the subject while they attended to matters that appeared to them more important. To seek ye first the kingdom of God," is an explicit and emphatic direction of the Lord. No excuse can avail for disobeying. Yet there is a very real danger of doing so. Life is so hard, business so engrossing, the necessity for providing for the ones so imperative, that the morning prayer may become a mere formality and the evening prayer the dull routine of a tired, sleepy man. God has a right to expect different treatment from us. It is our duty to see that he has the first and best place in our lives and to take care that our own consciences do not accept excuses that we could not make to him. However important from a worldly standpoint a certain course may be, however desirable the end to be achieved, it should be shunned if it is detrimental to spiritual life. That a Christian is unworthy of his name and life, who is not prepared to suffer loss or forego gain rather than be false to Christ.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

RING ON, GLAD EASTER BELLS.

GRACE J. FRANCES.

JURBERT P. MAIN.

1. Ring on, ring on, glad East-er bells, Your sweet and tune-ful lay; While lov-ing hearts take
2. Ring on, ring on, glad East-er bells, And thou, O morning bright, Un-veil thy beams till
3. Ring on, ring on, glad East-er bells, Your wel-come tones so clear, The winds and waves shall
4. Ring on, ring on, glad East-er bells, Yoursweet and tune-ful chime, Till "Glo-ry be to up the strain Your mu-sic brings to-day, Be-hold the powers of death o'er-thrown, Beall the world Shall see their glo-rious light.

bear the sound, And ev-ery soul shall hear.
God on high" Is heard from clime to clime.

hold our Sav-iour slain: To-day the mighty Con-queror lives, And King of kings shall reign.

Copyright, 1886, by G. F. Schirmer.

By permission of the Publishers.

Easter Day.

HOW shall we keep this holy day of gladness,
This queen of days, that bitter, hopeless sadness
Forever drives away?
The night is past, its sleep and its forgetting:
Our risen Sun, no more forever setting,
Pours everlasting day.

Let us not bring upon this joyful morning
Dead myrrh and spices for our Lord's adorning,
Nor any lifeless thing:
Our gifts shall be the fragrance and the splendor
Of living flowers, in breathing beauty tender,
The glory of our spring.

And, with the myrrh, oh, put away the leaven
Of malice, hatred, injuries unforgiven,
And cold and lifeless form:
Still, with the lilies, deeds of mercy bringing,
And fervent prayers, and praises upward springing,
And hopes pure, bright, and warm.

So shall this Easter shed a fragrant beauty
O'er many a day of dull and cheerless duty,
And light thy wintry way:
Till rest is won, and patience, smiling faintly,
Upon thy breast shall lay her lilies saintly,
To hail heaven's Easter-day.

—EMILY SEEVER.

God's Care for All.

THERE'S not a bird, with lonely nest
In pathless wood or mountain crest,
Nor meaner thing, which does not share,
O God, in thy paternal care!

And every moment still doth bring
Thy blessings on its loaded wing;
Widely they spread through earth and sky,
And last to all eternity!

Through all creation let thy name
Be echoed with a glad acclaim!
That let the grateful churches sing;
With that let heaven forever ring!

And we, where'er our lot is cast,
While life and thought and feeling last,
Through all our years, in every place,
Will bless thee for thy boundless grace!

Security.

THE everlasting arms are now around me,
God's presence seemeth very near.
I will securely rest 'tho' foes surround me,
With ne'er a thought of doubt or fear.

While in this fiery furnace of affliction,
The way seems neither dark nor drear;
Although the billows, mountains high, break o'er me.

My Saviour comes to help and cheer.
Since thou has heard my prayer, and me delivered,
From persecution's awful power,
My vow I'll keep! I promise most sincerely,
To live for Jesus every hour.

—MRS. R. M. OSGOOD.

Sowing and Reaping.

HE that goeth forth with weeping,
Bearing precious seed in love,
Never tiring, never sleeping,
Findeth mercy from above:
Soft descend the dews of heaven,
Bright the rays celestial shine;
Precious fruits will thus be given,
Through an influence all divine.

Sow thy seed, be never weary,
Let no fears thy soul annoy;
Be the prospect ne'er so dreary,
Thou shalt reap the fruits of joy.
Lo, the scene of verdure brightening,
See the rising grain appear;
Look again: the fields are whitening,
For the harvest time is near.

—THOMAS HASTINGS.

If.

IF suddenly upon the street
My gracious Saviour I should meet,
And he should say, "As I love thee,
What love hast thou to offer me?"
Then what could this poor heart of mine
Dare offer to that heart divine?

His eye would pierce my outward show,
His thought my inmost thought would know;
And if I said, "I love thee, Lord,"
He would not heed my spoken word,
Because my daily life would tell
If verily I loved him well.

If on the day or in the place
Wherein he met me face to face,
My life could show some kindness done,
Some purpose formed, some work begun
For his dear sake, then it were meet
Love's gift to lay at Jesus' feet.

—CHARLES FRANCIS RICHARDSON.

The Prophetic Interval.

Reasons for Believing that Christ will come Before the Millennium.

BY W. E. BLACKSTONE.*

Continued from page 251.

FROM the explanation given in the preceding articles, it will be seen that there is a radical difference between the views of Christians as to the events which are to intervene between the present time and the end of the world. Some expect that the world will grow better and become more Christianized until we reach the Millennium, when the process will go on still more rapidly until at the end of the Millennium Christ will come. The other view is that the world will grow worse until ungodliness culminates in the production of Antichrist, the man of sin, that Christ may come at any time to call the Church to himself and after it is taken away Antichrist will rule and persecute for a time, until Christ comes to the earth in glory and takes the power and reigns; in short, that Christ will come before not after the Millennium. The latter is the view we believe to be true.

Pre-millennialists believe that Christ may come now at any moment, and that we should ever be found watching and waiting, with our loins girded about, and our lights burning, and ourselves like men that wait for their Lord.

The eighteen hundred years which have passed only make "our salvation" much "nearer than when we believed," and it is "high time to awake out of sleep."

There is no prophesied event which has to be fulfilled before his coming in the air to receive the Church. Therefore we have need of patience that we may receive the promise: "For yet a little while" "and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Heb. 10: 37.

"But," you say, "is it a little while?" Ah! beloved does it seem long to you from creation to the flood, or from the flood to Christ? The "little while" of Hag. 3: 6-7, we believe, has not ended yet. See Joel 3: 16-17; Heb. 12: 16-27, and it certainly covered the five hundred years up to Christ's first coming. Remember that God speaks to you as to an immortal soul.

Wait until you have realized a few of the mighty cycles of eternity, and then these eighteen centuries will indeed appear to be "a very little while."

Oh! let us fix our eyes upon Jesus. Let us watch and wait for the King Eternal.

It is admitted on all sides that the pre-millennial coming of Christ, and his reign with the saints upon the earth a thousand years, was the faith of the early Church. Indeed, this is substantiated by such an abundance of evidence, that it cannot be denied.

We cannot believe (as some assert), that the Apostles were mistaken, and consequently not inspired upon this theme, nor that they and all the early Christians, mocked themselves with false hopes in regard to the pre-millennial coming of Christ. They watched and waited for the return of our Lord, as a sure event, the hour of which none but the Father knew, but which had been enjoined upon them as uncertain (Matt. 25: 42-44) and imminent (Luke 12: 35-40; Heb. 10: 37). And as they passed away to the unseen domain of Paradise, they have left us the written Word, their reiterated traditions (teachings handed down), and their great hope. So we take up their vigil, hopefully watching, not daring to say that he will come to-morrow, nor a thousand years hence, but only this are we sure of, he may come now.

God has held this glorious hope constantly before the Church, to keep her in her proper attitude of expectancy and longing, until the Bridegroom comes.

* From his work Jesus is Coming. Price 50 cents. Published by the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and Chicago.

IN HIS HANDS

A NEW SERIAL STORY,

WRITTEN EXPRESSLY
BY THE
REV. EDWARD AUGUSTUS RAND

CHAPTER XIII.

JANET did not forget the peculiar crab-like appearance of the combined gait of Skipper Dan and little Ethel, the day she met them on the beach off Castaway Ledge. And the next day did she not see a like manifestation in the road that she walked and which ran down to the Skipper's home?

"There certainly is Ethel, dragging one way, and the skipper hauling another. And how crooked he walks," thought Janet.

This time it was Ethel who was tugged. It was Skipper Dan who was being tugged. When Janet neared them, she saw plainly the reason for this new crab-movement.

"Oh dear," exclaimed Janet, "Skipper is drunk and Ethel is getting him home. How shameful!"

"Yes, Ethel seemed to think so, for she would not look at Janet. She felt disgraced, child though she was. Her black eyes swam in tears. Turning her head away, she pitifully cried to the skipper, 'come, come!'"

"G—G—Gampsie—hic—come!" replied the maudlin.

"Oh, Ethel! This is too bad," said Janet, in a tone of deep, sincere sympathy. It was not what Ethel wanted. She wanted to get drunken old Gampsie home as soon as possible. She paid no attention to Janet, but this offer of sympathy only seemed to emphasize Gampsie's shame, and tugging with new energy, the tears brimming her eyes, Ethel appealed anew to the Skipper, "come, come!"

"She wants to be left alone. She does not want me to see her," concluded Janet. "I'll let her go on and watch them until they get home." She watched this crab continuing its awkward, crooked movements, until the shameful Gampsie disappeared behind his own low door.

"Poor Paulina!" ejaculated Janet. Yes, it was poor Paulina all that day, and the next and next, for Skipper Dan's drinking-fits, though occasional, lasted several days when once they set in. She came up to Janet's, and sitting down before the open wood-fire, unburdened her soul to Janet and Mrs. Blakey.

"And it's a-growin' on him," said Paulina with gasping breath and red eyes. "This is the second time in a month. Ned is down on it—and Sandy and Ethel. Why thy child takes it to heart as if it were a night mare—"

"What?" asked Janet.

"Why, she wakes up and screams, 'Gampsie can't walk straight!' Oh, dear."

"I thought," said Janet, who was at work on her wardrobe in preparation for her departure for the war, "I thought we had a law forbidding the sale of liquor, and yet it is easy enough to get it."

Mrs. Blakey here fetched a deep sigh. She had not in her own married home seen the evil of drink, for Blakey, the calm, phlegmatic Blakey, was a radical and a fighter in temperance matters, strange as it might seem for one of his temperament.

Mrs. Blakey had a sister though, whose happiness had been swept away by too freeboard, Drink. This sister's husband had died of delirium tremens, and then the sister died somewhere in New York, her life crushed out of her by that misdeed of a husband's shame and of the miseries of a drunkard's home. Mrs. Blakey kept in her den a picture of this sister's daughter. Whether this daughter were living or not, she could not say. The family had drifted beyond all recent knowledge of Mrs. Blakey, who assumed that gets away from its moorings in the night and drifts off somewhere into the darkness covering the sea. Once, a rumor, a voice out of this dark, came to Mrs. Blakey saying that the niece whose face was packed away in a little drawer upstairs, had married one who turned out to be a drunkard like her father. That was all.

"The poor dear," murmured Mrs. Blakey. "That's the last of her happiness."

The last of everything that concerned the niece, it seemed to the aunt, for she heard nothing further from this afflicted vessel upon the dark sea.

All these things made Mrs. Blakey a zealous temperance advocate. That is the only compensation in such cases. They make a whetstone on which we sharpen our interest that is too apt to grow dull. Mrs. Blakey's interest was sharpened by Skipper Dan's shame, and she spoke decidedly at this fire-side conference of three women: "I think something ought to be done. We have law enough to stop the sellin'—Blakey says that—and he is a-comin' now and I'll ask him."

Blakey entered in his slow, deliberate way, said "How d'y do," slowly to each woman, and then proceeded to hang his hat on one nail and his overcoat on another.

"Come, Blakey," said his impatient spouse, "I want to ask you suthin'—"

"Wall!" he said calmly.

"Why ain't the rum shops shet up, Blakey?"

He laughed. You wimmin int'rested in that? about time."

The moment he said this, he looked at Paulina. He seemed to have forgotten that she was there, the daughter of the disgraced skipper.

"Scuse me, P'leen," he said promptly. "I might have known better than that."

His manner changed at once. He was not the same Blakey. He brought his foot down heavily upon the floor. His voice swelled. "I'll tell ye," he said indignantly. "It's because our selectmen are not ready to enforce the law. What's law good for, if it ain't carried out? There's our selectman, Lawyer Mannin', he is true blue. He wants to puts the law through, and Lawyer Skeele, he don't. Then, there's Trafton, he is fully in Skeele's hands. Why, we can't have the police we want. They won't appoint 'em. And I say it's a tarnal shame, P'leen."

"He's wakin' up," Mrs. Blakey had whispered complacently to Janet. "He's orful if you git him waked up."

There were signs though that Blakey was relapsing. He had folded his large hands in his lap. His face was growing calm. His eyes were shutting. Mrs. Blakey was not going to permit any lapse.

"Blakey," she called aloud, "what can we do?" He was awake again.

"What can you do, you wimmin? Jest go round with a petition to the selectmen, git everybody to sign it and hand it in—"

Blakey was not accustomed to turn off so much business in so short a time, and it startled Mrs. Blakey.

"Us wimmin?" she said in astonishment. She was not prepared for this. She had aroused that lapsing Blakey to an extent she had not anticipated.

"Us wimmin?" also asked Paulina. It had seemed to Pauline as if woman's only relation to temperance was that of suffering. The idea that women could do anything to sweep the curse out of the way, anything beyond remonstrance in private, was a new one to Paulina. To see some selfish male brute wallow in his vice, unavailingly to protest, deeply to suffer—was not that woman's part in the awful tragedy of drink?

Blakey began again, and this time Mrs. Blakey looked at him timorously, as if wondering what this waked up man would do next.

"Now if you wimmin should go to work it would have a great effect—"

"What about you men?" suggested Janet, who like Mrs. Blakey was astonished to see this energy and reluctant also to be dragged into the contest. She did not know what was coming.

"Oh, we will help, help all we can, but," replied Blakey, "I believe to finish up this job with the devil—"

"Why, Blakey!" said Mrs. Blakey in surprise. "How you talk?" He did not mind her but went on.

"I believe we must have the help of woman, have it as we never have had it—"

"You mean votin', too?" asked Paulina. "Yes, I mean votin'."

"Why, Blakey!" said his surprised spouse again. She looked at him as if she failed to recognize in this radical, enthusiastic champion, her quiet husband.

He did not notice her interruption, but continued, "We must have the wimmin help in a lot of ways. What I was thinkin' of now was this. Janet spoke to me—"

She began to wish she hadn't spoken—"now Janet would make a stir, I tell you, among the enemy, if she should take that petition from the wimmin and us men folks, too, and jes' go to the selectmen and lay it afore 'em. That would make a stir—"

"I should think it would," remarked Janet in a rather ironical tone, bending over her work.

"But why not?" asked Blakey. Janet was silent.

"Here is a great work to be done. It takes one that has an influence, a position in society, or any way, I mean that them things will help amazin'ly. There, Janet, I jes' put that on your conscience."

Mrs. Blakey afterwards told him she thought he was "sassy." This criticism was made in private, when the fireside conference was broken up.

"Oh, I jes' laid it on her conscience, this hull subject, wife. You tell me to wake up and see these evils."

"Yes, but —"

"You didn't think I'd wake up so much, did you? Wall, you see if I ain't like a lamb at dinner-time."

Blakey at dinner was passive and tame enough to suit the most ardent admirer of the lamb-character. He said no more about temperance than if it had been a subject known only to interest the Hot-tentots. He said hardly a word and only occasionally did he raise his sleepy eyes in response to some such request from Mrs. Blakey as, "Parse the bread to Jennet."

All the while he was thinking. He knew that he had laid the subject discussed on Janet's conscience.

"It is a first rate place to leave anything in," was his constantly recurring thought.

He had not made a mistake when he made Janet's conscience a depository for his recommendation to womankind. Once Janet would not have given the subject any special thought, if indeed a second thought. Her temperament was not one that welcomes for its own sake the stir of any public movement. She preferred a quiet nook in life. Her education had not made public activity congenial. Then her father in his positive way laid down and emphasized those restrictions which he thought appropriate to woman's sphere. Little enough did he enjoy or permit a woman to tell him what was proper, but with a firm, strong hand he built and carried high various fences for woman-kind. He kept Janet inside those fences all that he possibly could. While Janet felt all these influences, there was also that Morton pride which she had begun to confront. Its mastery she had undertaken. Rather, had she not placed herself where it could be undertaken for her?

"My all in His hands," had she not said? Yes, and she was not willing to withdraw it. But this was a hard matter. Janet had shrunk from all public notice, had even shrunk from anything so undemonstrative and private as Sunday School work, Janet Morton known as a young woman of quiet, scholarly tastes, Janet Morton living in simple but real and dignified seclusion behind that trim, green lawn, was this Janet Morton to step out and engage in an attempt to organize public opinion and make it into a battering-ram and drive it against a Board of select men whose majority had gone to sleep over the sin of rum-selling? What a mark for public criticism would be Janet Morton!

Lavina Skeele would turn up her nose at this new, unladylike crusader. Then Janet imagined herself marching into the Selectmen's room, all eyes upon her, a reporter of the neighboring newspaper ready to say how she looked and what she said! But she saw something worse, the sleeping majority on that miss board refusing to hear her or see her. That would be indeed mortifying to old Morton pride. What was one of Judson Morton's mottoes? Was it not "Plan well, and then stop short of nothing but success." An excellent motto success be the thing that is right. Judson Morton's pride hated to be unsuccessful in anything. To carry his point whether good, bad, or indifferent, was sweet morsel to this omnivorous pride. To lose his point was like bitter herbs his diet. This pride had come down Janet Morton with the Morton name, with this little piece of Morton property, with its antique furniture, with its trim, green lawn. However, the venturesome Blakey Chase—"rash man," his wife labeled him in private—had laid the whole subject checking the traffic in intoxicating beverages on Janet's conscience. She thought she would have a talk with Lawyer Manning about this matter. She briefly stated the point to him. He looked at her tently. "Miss Morton, I am delighted. Just to have it mentioned is an encouragement. I have fought the battle alone, the Board, and am powerless. Outsides I can't seem to find allies who have sufficient power. I mean allies among men. If the women should press the matter, if Miss Morton, say, should bring the influence of her position socially to bear upon this evil, I believe it would be a heavier gun than has been fired off yet."

"But, what if I should fail?"

"What if you should succeed?"

Janet laughed, and it made very agreeable music in the lawyer's office, so serious and business-like with its desks and rows of leather-covered law books. Lawyer Manning could only give a brief opinion, as he was abruptly summoned out of his office, but like Blakey Chase's opinion went to Janet's conscience. "Bring the influence of her opinion socially to bear upon this evil," did he say? "Noble, oblige," the Frenchman says, or, "it imposes obligation." If God wanted influence, what right had she to withhold it? Was it not all in His hands already? Would she take it away?

Then there was her pride. The self-spect of how many women, the pride of Paulina, the shame of so many mothers and wives, Drink had trampled upon. How much Paulina had suffered because her father had disgraced himself in the streets of the town, urged home by that crying little girl. When she thought of all these wounds, could not Janet consent to a crucifixion of her pride? Was the not One whom she followed as her Master who had hung his pride on a Roman cross and let the soldiers of Gentiles pierce their nails through it, and pierce its heart?

"I have nothing more to say," so quizzed Janet to whom these thoughts came one afternoon, as she sat alone in her chamber. "I have given all into his hands."

She knelt by her chair, she did not sit, but as she told God she was willing to do any work that he might ask of her, she reached her head and crowned it in gold blessing. Janet did not feel this cross. Who does feel it? She was conscious of a cross resting upon her, and contented and in the strength of him to whom she had given herself, went out to bear it cross.

The cross was not of her choosing. What cross is? If we could choose our difficulties and trials they would not be the best that we need. There was, however, no way of escape consistent with her resolve to leave all in the Lord's hands. She was Paulina suffering, and there were other women in similar circumstances. Here was the Skipper, and there were other weak men who could not see the smell liquor without wanting it. It was the law forbidding the sale of liquor and the men who ought to enforce it, it did not. Here was Blakey telling that she could lend powerful aid to remedy the evil. Should she refuse, and so prove that she was not sincere in leaving her life to the control of her Lord? No, she would not do that. She had offered her shoulders to bear the cross, and she would accept whatever cross the Lord chose to lay upon them. The very fact of her work being repugnant to her was encouraging. It showed that God had accepted her offer of herself.

(To be Continued.)

A Polar Balloon Trip.

Explorer's Andree's Bold Plan for Surmounting the Dangers of Arctic Travel.

HERN S. A. Andree is the author of the latest scheme to reach the North Pole. He proposes to make the attempt in a manner never before tried—namely, in a balloon. He has had a balloon specially constructed. The start is to be made at the Norsk Islands, Spitzbergen, and he calculates that if the wind be favorable, he ought to cross the Pole about ten hours after leaving Spitzbergen, and even if the wind were only moderate the journey should be accomplished in forty-eight hours. The distance from Spitzbergen to the Behring Straits, it is thought, ought not to take more than five days, but his calculations allow for thirty days in case of accident.

The top of the balloon will be covered with a cloth soaked in oil, the idea being that the air reservoir which is placed between the top and the balloon will act as a guard against sudden changes in temperature, and although no snow shall fall on the top of the balloon. There is no life in the top, but the balloon is provided with two at slightly different heights near the top. The diameter of the balloon is about sixty-seven feet, and it holds 135,000 cubic feet of gas. The covering is of cloth, treble thickness. A car for passengers is made of oak, with a roof, and also contains sleeping places for two. The balloon is furnished with a sail about 888 square feet, the object of which is not only to form a steering apparatus, but also to accelerate speed. Above the passenger car is another car for carrying provisions. The balloon is built to carry 4620 pounds of ballast, food for four and a half months, various articles of clothing, guns, sufficient ammunition for two charges, scientific and photographic instruments, and a cooking stove. The illustration of Prof. Andree's aerial vehicle on this page is reproduced from the London Illustrated News.

Longitude and Latitude.

An old pastor, now dead, used to relate the following incident: "There came to me here one day a grand-looking fellow. I did not ask whether he did business on water, for the sea breeze had kissed my brow so often that it had left its mark there. I said, 'Where did you find the bird?' In a moment he answered, 'Latitude 25, longitude 54.' I confess that I was puzzled. I had heard of people finding Jesus Christ in these galleries and on these aisles, but here was something quite different. 'Latitude 25, longitude 54! What do you mean?' He said, 'I was sitting on deck, and out of a bundle of papers before me I pulled one of Spurgeon's sermons. I began to read it. As I read it I saw the truth, and I received Jesus in my heart. I jumped off the coils of ropes, saying, 'I thought if I were on shore I would know where I was saved, and why should I not on the sea?' And so I took my latitude and longitude.'"

Feeling and Believing.

Speaking to persons who declare that feelings are necessary to salvation, a recent writer says: Martin Luther, in one of his conflicts with the devil, was asked by his arch-enemy if he felt his sins forgiven. "No," said the great reformer, "I don't know that my sins are forgiven, but I know they are, because God says so in his Word. I did not say, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt feel saved, but Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Ask that man whose debt was paid by his brother, Do you feel that your debt is paid? "No," is his reply, "I don't feel that it is paid; I know from this receipt that it is paid, and I feel happy because I know it is paid." You must believe in God's love to you as revealed at the cross of Calvary, and then you will feel happy, because you may know you are saved. A dear old Christian, on hearing persons speak of their feelings, used to say: "Feelings! feelings! Don't bother yourself about your feelings.

A BALLOON FOR THE NORTH POLE

Prof. Andree's Proposed Aerial Expedition.

I just stick to the old truth that Christ died for me, and he is my Surety right on to eternity; and I'll stick to that like a limpet to a rock."

A Consecrated Life.

One of the humblest yet most effective Christian workers in America was the late Mrs. Elizabeth L. Comstock, a member of the Society of Friends. She traveled largely in this country and Canada, as well as in her native land, England. During the Civil war, she visited 195,000 sick and wounded soldiers in the hospitals, going from bed to bed, and giving the Gospel message to those who were not able to meet together. She also visited 122,000 prisoners. In later years 85,000 inmates of almshouses have received her ministrations, besides many other benevolent and reformatory institutions. For many years she was a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Purify

Your blood now, because this is the time when your blood most needs cleansing. The impurities accumulated in winter must certainly be driven out if you would have good health this Spring and Summer. The blood must be given new vitality if you would have good appetite, perfect digestion and escape that tired feeling. The best Spring Medicine, nerve tonic, appetizer and strength builder, is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The one True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

ALD, and continued to be so while she lived. Mrs. Comstock's Memoirs are now published by her daughter, Mrs. Caroline O'Harrow, of Union Springs, N. Y. That lady writes of her mother's work: "During her life she was constantly urging the importance of all Christians uniting to fight against evil, and not wasting time and strength disputing one with another. My mother received no salary for her work, and the poor people were very glad to hear her."

BOWERY MISSION PATRONS.

THE following persons have recently sent in their names for enrollment as Patrons of the Bowery Mission:

Mrs. Lydia M. Wheeler; Mrs. Verda Gillogly; Mattie Warner; F. R. Gray; Mrs. Gretha Gray; Eunice Gray; F. H. Beckwith; Charles Woodard; Lizzie Pyle; Mrs. E. S. Hopkins.

Patrons of the Bowery Mission, whose names are already enrolled, may send in their annual contributions in aid of the work during the present week, each giving according to ability and as personal interest in the spiritual progress of the work suggests. All contributions will be promptly acknowledged by mail.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO. 106 Wall St., N.Y.

The Mission of the.....

STEUBEN SANITARIUM

At Hornellsville, N. Y.,

is to place at the disposal of the sufferer from disease—

The Best Surgical and Medical Skill,
The Best Remedial Appliances, including

ELECTRICITY, BATHS,
MASSAGE, ETC.

The best care: the best diet: the best atmosphere: the best conditions generally for his or her complete recovery. Illustrated brochure on application to Superintendent.

Dr. J. E. WALKER, Hornellsville, N. Y.

Where is the woman who does not like to have her baby fat and chubby and cunning? And where is the woman who does not like to have rosy cheeks and plumpness herself? Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil is for both, but its merit is "peculiar to itself" and its effect cannot be had by using any substitute for it.

The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium,

An Institution for the Scientific Treatment of Cancer

Tumors, and all forms of Malignant Growths, WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity. Book and circulars giving description of Sanatorium, Treatment, Terms, and References, free.

DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.
LADIES' SPRING CAPE.

Latest Styles and Patterns. SHIPPED ANYWHERE, ALLOWING TRIAL: direct from FACTORY TO WEARER at wholesale prices. We ask no money in advance, as our goods speak for themselves.

This Elegant Cape made from Black Velvet, trimmed with straps of JET GIMP, Ruche of FLUTED SILK TAF-FETA, down front and around bottom; Collar of Fluted Silk Taffeta finished with lace; lined with changeable imitation Dresden Silk; length, 18 inches; sweep, 15 inches.

Is the very Latest and very Stylish.

Makes as serviceable and certainly as fine garment as any lady would desire for SPRING, EARLY SUMMER or FALL WEAR, and worth $10 up, at any retail store or ladies' tailor. Our special price for 30 days, to introduce, $5.38. If you want an elegant Cape, we will send it by express at once, allow examination, and if not satisfactory it does not cost you a cent. Finely Illustrated Sample Book of latest style Ladies' Spring Wraps, Capes and Suits, mailed FREE. Write us at once; we save you 50 per cent, and guarantee to please you. GRAYDON, PALMER CO., Cloak Dept. 4 Market and Madison Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DYSPEPSIA FLOUR.

Also Special Diabetic Food, Barley Crystals, and Patent Biscuit, Cakes and Pastry Flour. Prepared at the European Baking Co., New York, N.Y. Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free. Write Farwell & Rhine, Watertown, N.Y., U.S.A.

PIANOS! ORGANS! FREE!

TEST TRIAL FOR 30 DAYS IN YOUR OWN HOME. NO MONEY REQUIRED. PIANOS-ORGANS FROM $25.00 UP CASH or EASY PAYMENTS.

Illustrated a Complete Musical Outfit. NEW SOUVENIR CATALOGUE A work of art illustrated in 10 colors. Worth its weight in Gold. We pay charges on it and send it FREE, all you have to do is to ask for it to-day please. Remember this is the old established house of CORNISH & CO., the only firm in the world selling exclusively from Factory to Family direct. A single instrument at wholesale price. We save you from $25.00 to $250.00. Write at once to CORNISH & CO., 30 years, Washington, N. J.

Mention Paper.

The Patriarchal Marriage.*

IT would be manifestly unjust to judge of this marriage [that of Isaac and Rebekah] and the way it was brought about by our modern standards. There is much in it that would be distasteful to us. Probably the French would find less to object to than we do. But this much may be said, that Isaac, so far as we can judge from the story, was of a shrinking, nervous disposition; and if his father had not set on foot plans for his marriage, he might never have been married at all. In such cases some action on the part of relatives may be permitted, but as a general rule it is best for a man to choose for himself, and if he has not courage to ask a woman to be his wife, to remain unmarried. But a plan that may be best for us may not be the best for all the world.

After her marriage, the whole interest of Rebekah for us centres in her relationship to her sons, and especially to Jacob.

I need not go over the familiar story of her fond but foolish love for Jacob, and the course it led her to take. Her deception of her husband to forward what she supposed to be the interests of her younger boy is one of the saddest of the many sad stories of the Old Testament.

In it we see a mother starting her son on the wrong road for his life. We are sometimes so disgusted with the son's deceit as to overlook the fact that not only the first suggestion but also the whole plan of it came from his mother. She put it into his head. She met the difficulties which presented themselves to his mind. She arranged and carried out the whole scheme.

I know full well that before this Jacob had taken advantage of his brother Esau's faintness to buy from him the birthright. That was far from being a noble or a brotherly act. But still there was no element of deceit in it. It was a piece of clever trafficking.

It was not chivalrous, I admit, but it was not deceitful. On the road of deceit he was started by Rebekah his mother, to whom he was the favorite son. How did this come about?

First of all, there must have been a lack of confidence between Rebekah and her husband. For the deception is directed against him. Its purpose was to get from him by fraud what could not be got openly and fairly. That would not have been possible if they had been rightly related to one another—if there had been, as there should have been, entire frankness. The relation between husband and wife should, of all relationships, be that in which there are no reserves, no cross purposes. For it is not only the closest, but the most vital, the most far-reaching in its influence. It is, too, the only relationship we choose for ourselves. Most, if not all others, are determined for us without choice of our own. And unless there can be real unity of thought and purpose, it had far better not be formed at all.

But now, as in this early age of the world's history, infinite mischief is done by want of confidence and candor between husband and wife. How often is it the case that the mother has schemes of her own, quite unknown to the father, for the children or for one of them. How often does she screen a son's ill deeds from his father, or secretly find him money to get him out of scrapes, or become aware of things which his father should know, but which she never communicates to him. And all this goes on till the mischief has grown too great to be further hid, and then the father learns of it when it is too late to mend it. Often all this is done to the father, or to stave off his anger. It is true, "charity covereth a multitude of sins"—and it should do, but not from the father by the mother. Such covering usually means increase of the sin.

I am far from saying that the relationship of father and mother to the children is exactly the same. It is not, nor was it intended to be. The mother may be and ought to be to the child what the father cannot be, and the father what the mother cannot be. The mother should bring into the home circle the element of tenderness, and the father that of strength. The mother should be the nurturer of the heart, and the father of the judgment. I do not mean by this to justify anything approaching to weakness on the part of the mother, or of hardness on the part of the father. Let mothers learn that love can and ought to be firm. Let fathers learn that strength can be and ought to be touched with tenderness. But none the less the father and the mother have separate functions to discharge in relation to their children. It is perhaps natural, too, for boys to cling to the mother and the girls to the father, finding thus the elements most lacking in themselves. All this is well; but I venture to maintain that there should be no reserve between the parents on important matters concerning their children—no crossing of purposes concerning them. If a house be divided against itself, how can it stand? If the father be planning one thing for a child and the mother another, what can follow but confusion and trouble?

Such confusion often arises because of the way marriages are entered upon. Sometimes only on a passing acquaintance with each other—sometimes only because of a pretty face or winning voice, or a graceful deportment or taste for music. Was this the root out of which all this mischief sprang in the case of Isaac and Rebekah? She was chosen for him by a messenger who may have mistaken his own impression for a divine direction—who chose her for his young master because she was the first to appear on the scene, or because of her politeness or the beauty of her face. We are told that Isaac loved Rebekah, never that Rebekah loved Isaac. Was this, after all, an ill-assorted union? Rebekah's conduct to her husband looks as if it was.

In every true marriage there must be stronger points of union than good looks or engaging manners—union of moral and spiritual ideas—union of purpose in life. Without these there is sure to be sooner or later a breakdown of confidence—reserves, cross purposes, and all that tends to the ruin of families and the family life.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Don't Worry Yourself, with an estimate and tribute by the venerable Archbishop Farrar, D.D., F.R.S.; being a study in the history of the Christian Church, pp. 75c. R. H. Woodward & Co., pub's, Baltimore.

Domestic Theology, by John Milton Williams, D.D.; a series of Ethical and Theological Essays. With portrait of author; pp. 325, price $1.25. Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago, publishers.

CLEVELAND'S
BAKING POWDER
PURE & SURE

Embroidery Collars

New,
Chic,
Stylish.

Can be worn with any style dress.
Made of the most exquisite embroideries, at three prices—

$1.00,

$1.25 and $1.50—the same qualities are selling generally for $2.00, $2.25 and $2.50. Postage prepaid. Money refunded, if desired.

Strawbridge & Clothier.

Dry Goods. Philadelphia.

THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS
IN THE WORLD
OF CHURCH FURNISHINGS.
OPERA AND ASSEMBLY CHAIRS.
SCHOOL FURNITURE COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

ONLY 10 CENTS.

Stamping Card, 91 patterns, outline designs 5x7, conventional designs 5x6, patterns for painting & embroidery 5x10 in. high 2 alphabets, 14 large forget-me-not pattern, and many others very desirable. All this and a 3 months' subscription to The Home, a 6 page story paper, with fashions and fancy work illustrated, sent for only 10c. The Home, 141 Milk St. Boston, Mass.

YOUR WIFE

can make the most possible cup of chocolate, as easily and as quickly as she can pour a cup of tea or coffee—almost, if she uses

Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE.

1 pound and 1/2 pound tins, at all dealers.
STEPHEN F. WHITMAN & SON, Philadelphia.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME.

Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School.
$30 per 100 copies.

Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People.
$30 per 100 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of lower price. The best are cheapest.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

76 East 9th St., New York. 216 Washington Ave., Chicago.

WHY PAY RETAIL PRICE

When you can buy a custom hand-made book leather binding direct from the makers at wholesale prices. Send a stamp for illustrated catalogue giving full description.

KING & CO., Mfrs., 12 Church St., Owego, N. Y.

Every purpose that a pencil serves is best served by—

DIXON'S
American Graphite
PENCILS.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BLYMYER
BELL CHURCH
BELLS.

As a sample of these BELLINGS you will send FREE this catalogue from a prominent publisher, and in exchange for 10c. for a new picture, etc. J. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY.

3000 AGENTS WANTED TO SELL IT.

ARMENIA AND HER PEOPLE.

By Rev. GEORGE L. FILLAN, banished native pastor of the Evangelical Church in Marsovan. Endorsed by DR. R. S. STOKES, HENRY VAN DYKE, and the clergy generally. The Oriental and Physical Armenia—Costs and civil portrayal of present miseries and atrocities. Fully Illustrated—Price $1.50, by mail postpaid. A GRANDSELLER. Agents, men and women, wanted. Send 50 cents for outline and mention first and second editions free of charge and save time. Write for circulars and most liberal terms. Mention this paper. Address, THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING CO., Hartford, Conn., Cincinnati or Boston.

Absorbs Like a Sponge.

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

(A new coal tar product.)

The Only

A New Remedy

odorless, healthful, harmless, and positive deodorant to Dress Shields, etc.

soothing, healing, antiseptic for scaling, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants & Adults.

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all drug counters. A druggist keeps the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

CRITERION
STEREOPTICONS,
MAGIC LANTERNS &
ACCESSORIES.
PERFECT APPARATUS FOR VISUAL TEACHING
SCIENTIFIC PROJECTIONS
A PRIVATE USE.
ELECTRIC FOCUSING LAMPS
for Magic Lanterns, Slide Projectors, etc.
J.B. COIT & Co.
145-147
NASSAU ST.
NEW YORK.

In making
Always use
Cudahy's
Rex Brand
Extract of Beef
add a rich, delicious
FLAVOR
The Cudahy Pharmaceutical Co.
South Omaha, Neb.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Decorative, Durable and Best
For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new
Send for Catalogue B.

H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

MUSIC SALE
To close out our stock we send hymn 70 pieces full sheet music size, one and instrumental size, 10c. complete all for 20c. 4 and 10c. 50c. More back if not satisfied. "Only One Cent in the World for Me," and 10 Songs with music 5c. C. H. H. Co., 320 N. Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Don't Worry Yourself

and don't worry about the future. The future is in the hands of God. Don't worry about the future. The future is in the hands of God. Don't worry about the future. The future is in the hands of God.

Crowning an African King.

EV. MR. WILDER, missionary at Chikore, East Central Africa, writes an interesting account of the coronation of a new chief. He says: "I went to see the ceremony. This was an affair simple but impressive. When, after days of delay, the morning for the final ceremony came, I betook myself to the hill six miles away, and sat for four hours talking to the man soon to be made chief, the successor of a long line of noted doctors. In the central hut were several men said to be possessed of evil spirits. Sands most unearthly came from within. Occasionally out rushed an old man looking as if scared. He rushed hither and thither, then paced jerkily around the hall. They said these men were the mediums through whom the spirits of the dead chiefs were communicating.

At the coronation the principal plumed came out, and addressed the crowd, said: 'What wait ye for? Do what ye do, seize the chief, and make him your king. Allow him not to escape. Strip him, and clothe him in regal robes.'

And now out of the hut came a black guide, four rifles, blankets, mats, wild-horse tails, umbrellas, and a cup (enamel ware), and trinkets various, also a wooden bowl three by two feet, and six inches deep, filled with an evil-looking green liquid. These goods belonged to the chief. The successor then left my side, and he was taken by the hand and led to the skin upon which he was forced to sit, his garments taken off, and a blanket thrown about him, he making some show of resistance the while. At his side was placed a girl of about fourteen years, weak, thin, and sickly looking. Next, a half-brother of the new chief was placed beside him, and a young wife of the late chief placed beside him. Next, the man whose family abides the right to anoint the chief, came forward with a pot of native beer, and an immense cup cut out of a gourd, and with the word, 'You, Neni, are no longer Niseni, but Mjakanja the successor of your father. May you rule well the people of Mjakanja from this day forth!' He emptied the cup of beer over the successor's head, and over the heads of the sickly girl, and the brother, and the other woman. It seems that the brother is to share the burden of office with him, but has no right of succession. The weakly girl, I learned to my astonishment, is the new queen, or head wife, of the new chief! But why such a creature chosen for this high position? Imagine my surprise when they replied: 'Because she is so pious!' The word pious is used according to their ideas of piety. It was said she was most zealous in her belief in the miraculous powers of the late chief, and that she went about the daily duties dictated by the spirit of the late chief.

Is Your Brain Tired?

U. Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

T. D. CROTHERS, Supt. Walnut Lodge Asylum, Hartford, Conn., says: "It is a remedy of great value in building up functional energy and brain power."

The benefits to be derived from a good medicine in early spring is undoubted. To purify the blood, overcome that tired feeling and gain strength take Horsford's Sarsaparilla.

relieving THROAT DISEASES AND COUGHS, use Brown's Bronchial Troches."

WANTED.—SALESMEN to introduce REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE'S latest, greatest, most famous book.

"HE EARTH GIRDLED."

So, Hawaii, the South Seas, Australia, India, Palestine, Europe, and all their wonders. The experiences among savages, cannibals and races. 400 original photographs of curious races in remote places. 212 pages. 12 cents. No experience required. Exclusive territory. Extra inducements and illustrated circulars for quick address.

Historical Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

FULTON SIGN AND PRICE MARKERS

are the best, most complete and cheapest outfit for Business men to make their own Show and Price Cards, to print their own Labels, mark Boxes, Barrels, etc. There is in fact no business where they cannot be used to advantage. Dealers are using them for their Bulletin Boards, for store window notices, Theatre for announcements, for bill of fares, etc. Their price in comparison with the cost of Sun Painters and Ticket Writers. A joy to the eye, they last a life-time. We have 50 different styles of lettering required in the next department to suit from in sizes from 1/2 to 4 inch. Send 2c for Catalogue. Agents handling our Markers everywhere. The Fulton Stamp Works, 22 Beekman St., New York

Your chimney has as much to do with your light as your lamp has.

The Index tells what Number to get; sent free.

"Pearl top" or "pearl glass."

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa

Ladies Waist to be worn with or without Peplum. Sizes 32-34-36-38-40. Quantity of material required for medium size 3 3/4 yards of 44 inch goods.

A PAPER PATTERN.

Like this cut mailed for 10 cts. Fit guaranteed. Catalogue 500 designs 5c. Fashion Sheets FREE.

THE NEW IDEA PATTERN CO., West Broadway and Leonard St., N. Y. City.

Little Bo Peep (she fixed her sheep So fate could not abuse them—) Stuck Cupid Hair Pins in their tails, And then they couldn't lose them.

It's in the TWIST.

RICHARDSON & DeLONG BROS., Philadelphia, Pa. Makers of the famous DeLong Hook and Eye.

'1847' Rogers Bros. Silver Plate that Wears the '1847' if you wish the genuine original Rogers Silverware.

Meriden Britannia Company MERIDEN, CONN. 208 Fifth Ave., NEW YORK.

Book of Illustrations Free. Please mention this publication.

SPEX BIG MONEY IN SPECTACLES. Send for our Optical Catalogue—just out. New goods. Cut prices. F. E. BAILEY, Chicago, Ill.

O'NEILL'S Sixth Avenue, 20th to 21st St. NEW YORK.

Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Millinery, Cloaks, Costumes, Children's Clothing, House Furnishings, Furniture, China, Glassware, Etc.

Go where You may—

you will find no such variety of Spring Colors and Styles in Children's Garments as that displayed at "The Big Store." Every novelty that adds grace and comfort to the juvenile apparel is found in these departments. Our Prices are different from those of any other house—they are lower. These, for instance:

For Girls

Flannel Dresses.

Girls All-Wool Flannel Dresses, Handsomely trimmed with braid and Bretelles, variety of colorings, 6 to 14 year sizes:

$1.98

For Boys

Middy Suits

Of fine serge or Cheviot, same design as above cut, in 3 to 8 year sizes; actually worth $6.00, on sale at $3.98

Send for our Grocery Catalogue. Every Housekeeper within 100 miles of New York City who desires to save from 25 to 40 per cent. on Grocery purchases should have one.

REMEMBER that no Stocking will wear well or look well that does not fit well.

THE Shaw-Knit IS THE Best-Fitting IT IS THE ONLY STOCKING THAT IS

—KNITTED TO THE SHAPE OF THE HUMAN FOOT—

THE TRADE-MARK Shaw-Knit IS STAMPED ON THE TOE.

Descriptive Price-List, free, to any applicant. Beautiful Castle Calendar, free, to any applicant mentioning this publication.

Shaw Stocking Co. LOWELL, MASS.

This Ladies' Laundered SHIRT WAIST of colored Lawn, with white detachable Linen Collar, pink, blue or white ground with black stripes and dots, sizes 32 to 40 inches bust measure, excellent value for $1.25,

69c

Postage, 10 cents additional. EQUALLY AS GREAT BARGAINS CAN BE OBTAINED THROUGH OUR ILLUSTRATED FASHION CATALOGUE

(Spring and Summer number ready March 15.)

MAILED FREE UPON REQUEST

Contains over 2,000 illustrations of articles for the adornment of the person and the beautifying of your home. Your money refunded for any goods not proving satisfactory, and express paid to all parts of the U. S. (when orders amount to stated sum). Send postal to book your order for Catalogue C (ready March 15), consisting of 112 illustrated pages, with Special Bargain Sheet.

H. C. F. KOCH & CO.

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS, West 125th St. bet. Lenox and 7th Avenues New York

All Refined Ladies

USE Brown's French Dressing

which is now, and has been for more than forty years, the most reliable dressing for Ladies' and Children's Boots and Shoes. An indispensable article that every lady should have in the house. Ask your dealer for BROWN'S and take no other.

CATARRH. Send name for FREE package, sure cure, sent post paid to you. G. N. STODDARD, 1223 Niagara street, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Thoughtless folks have the hardest work, but quick witted people use

SAPOLIO

The Armenian Relief Fund.

(Continued from page 275.)

Spaulding, Lora M. 5.00	Friends, Sherborn 15.00
Springfield, W.C. 3.00	" Groton 4.00
Stearns, Ruth 1.00	" Baldwin 4.20
Stewart, Phoebe M. 1.00	" Lawrenceville 1.75
Stockford, Oliver B. 1.00	" W Springfield 2.00
St. Louis, Emma B. 10.00	" Henderson 5.00
Stanton, Mrs. 1.00	" 2 " Black Rock 4.00
Tammany, E. 5.00	" 2 " Hudson City 2.00
Taylor, Geo. 5.00	" M M R R, Bechtelsville 3.00
Taylor, Jas. 25.00	" For Christ's Sake, P. 1.50
Taylor, Mrs. Mary 5.00	" Isle 2.00
Thomas, I.W. 1.00	" For Christ's Sake 1.50
Thomas, Mrs. John 1.00	" For Christ's Sake 1.50
Thomas, Mrs. L.J. 1.00	" For Jesus Sake, Mid- 1.00
Thompson, D.P. 1.00	" For our Saviour's 1.00
Tilton, Sara A. 1.00	" dear Sake, Texas 1.00
Titus, Mrs. S.A. 2.00	" In Christ's Name 2.00
Toms, Mrs. E. 1.00	" Clarion 2.00
Toms, Mrs. S. 2.00	" I H N, Dade City 1.00
Townsend, Thomas 5.00	" Chester 3.00
Troutman, Mrs. J. 1.00	" " Minneapolis 5.00
Tubb, Mrs. H. J. 1.00	" " " " 1.00
Tuttle, Mrs. L.H. 1.00	" " " " 1.00
Tuttle, Olive M. 1.00	" " " " 1.00
Umble, M. & Olive 65.00	" " " " 1.00
Van der Miss Lizzie 1.00	" In Jesus Name 1.00
Van Velsburg, I.B. 25.00	" Mound Valley 1.00
Vanwart, Wesley 10.00	" Reader, Oswego 5.00
Wadsworth, Frank 1.00	" Elmdale 5.00
Wadsworth, Jennie M. 1.00	" Hamilton 5.00
Waltman, Arthur 5.00	" Subr. M. 5.00
Wardwell, Mrs. M.J. 2.00	" Bertrand 1.00
Wark, Mrs. 5.00	" " " 1.00
Wark, Hon. David 10.00	" " " 1.00
Wark, Helena A. 2.00	" Northville 1.00
Webb, Edith A. 7.00	" Symizer, Petersburg 5.00
Whitcomb, Mrs. M. 25.00	" Afton 2.50
Whitney, Mrs. A. E. 1.00	" Great Bend, Pa. 1.00
Wicks, Mrs. L. D. 30.00	" Bland 3.50
Wiley, G. L. & wife 5.00	" Gales Creek 2.50
Winters, H. 2.00	" Watertown 1.00
Winters, Rev. Mrs. L. 1.00	" Tupelo 5.00
Wilson, Mrs. H. M. 1.00	" Dillon 1.00
Winfree, Mrs. T. V. 1.00	" Coram 1.00
Wise, Anna 5.00	" Middleton 1.50
Wise, Anne 5.00	" Garden City 2.00
Wise, Mrs. 10.00	" Kirksville 5.00
Wing, Rudolph 1.00	" Eaton Rapids 15.00
Wing, Susan 5.00	" Louisville 1.00
Winkler, F.G. 1.50	" Vergennes 5.00
Wise, W.F. & wife 2.00	" Brooklyn 1.00
Wiseman, M. 25.00	" Waterville 1.00
Wood, D.H. 1.00	" Me 50.00
Wood, E.H. 25.00	" Stratton 11.00
Wright, Mrs. A.R. 2.00	" Ga 1.00
Wright, Mrs. W.M. 1.00	" Potsdam 10.00
Young, C.C. 1.00	" Grove City 1.00
Young, E.T. 10.00	" Montpelier 1.00
Young, Mrs. G.S. 1.00	" Oriskany 10.00
Jennie & Carrie, NY 100.00	" Buxey 2.00
Yates, N. & London 2.00	" Des Moines I.H.N. 5.00
Yates, Wadsworth 5.00	" Van Dusen Cake 5.00
Bessie K. Phila 26.00	" Molds, N.J. 5.00
Milford, Oscar & 50.00	" Mission Band, Avon- 1.00
United Presb. Cong. 52.00	" dale, Nuncie 1.00
Salem Cong. of U.B. 21.38	" Friend's Ch. Clinton- 23.57
Christ Ch. Pa. 21.38	" Pres. Ch. Baldwin 25.65
Orthodox Church 33.00	" Church of the Atonement 95.00
Angus Church 2.00	" ment Ref. Ep. Pa. 3.63
Friend's Ch. Clinton- 23.57	" Coll. Bap. Ch. Baldwin 3.63
Pres. Ch. Baldwin 25.65	" Reformed Ch. Middle 6.50
Church of the Atonement 95.00	" Lancaster 7.75
ment Ref. Ep. Pa. 3.63	" Champton M.E. Ch. 6.31
Coll. Bap. Ch. Baldwin 3.63	" Pres. Ch. Tioga 4.15
Reformed Ch. Middle 6.50	" Meth. Cong. & Bapt 1.00
Lancaster 7.75	" Woman's Missy 1.00
Champton M.E. Ch. 6.31	" Soc's, Algona 13.00
Pres. Ch. Tioga 4.15	" Bapt. Ch. Milford Ctr 2.50
Meth. Cong. & Bapt 1.00	" German M. S. S. N.Y. 2.00
Woman's Missy 1.00	" S. S. of Central Pres 12.68
Soc's, Algona 13.00	" Ch. N.J. 12.68
Bapt. Ch. Milford Ctr 2.50	" S. S. Hinkle's Ferry 10.00
German M. S. S. N.Y. 2.00	" Lyons S.S. 10.00
S. S. of Central Pres 12.68	" Times Union S.S. 5.00
Ch. N.J. 12.68	" Point Du Chene S.S. 2.00
S. S. Hinkle's Ferry 10.00	" Union S.S. Garden 25.00
Lyons S.S. 10.00	" S.S. of Pres Ch. Row- 4.36
Times Union S.S. 5.00	" land, 8.15
Point Du Chene S.S. 2.00	" Pres S.S. Bell 6.80
Union S.S. Garden 25.00	" W Auburn S.S. 6.80
S.S. of Pres Ch. Row- 4.36	" Union Meeting, Big 1.50
land, 8.15	" Union Y.P.S.C.E. 2.00
Pres S.S. Bell 6.80	" Knoxville 5.00
W Auburn S.S. 6.80	" Orono Y.P.S.C.E. 5.00
Union Meeting, Big 1.50	" Y.P.S.C.E. N. Kensington 5.00
Union Y.P.S.C.E. 2.00	" Cong. Ch. Walton 6.00
Knoxville 5.00	" Newport Cong. Ch. 6.25
Orono Y.P.S.C.E. 5.00	" " Pres. Ch. Union 20.00
Y.P.S.C.E. N. Kensington 5.00	" C.M.S. Pascoag 1.00
Cong. Ch. Walton 6.00	" P.P. London 5.00
Newport Cong. Ch. 6.25	" Mead S. Christian 5.00
" Pres. Ch. Union 20.00	" E.F.J. Ashway 5.00
C.M.S. Pascoag 1.00	" Mrs. A.A.B. Sumfield 1.00
P.P. London 5.00	" F.C.E. Waltham 1.00
Mead S. Christian 5.00	" A.J.G. Lacombe 1.00
E.F.J. Ashway 5.00	" H.E.K. Westfield 2.00
Mrs. A.A.B. Sumfield 1.00	" S.H.L. Park Road 1.00
F.C.E. Waltham 1.00	" C.D. Rantoul 2.00
A.J.G. Lacombe 1.00	" J.E.H. W.D. A. Tip 1.00
H.E.K. Westfield 2.00	" I.K. Jacksonville 5.00
S.H.L. Park Road 1.00	" E.S.W. 1.00
C.D. Rantoul 2.00	" J.A.G. White Oak 1.00
J.E.H. W.D. A. Tip 1.00	" A. 1.00
I.K. Jacksonville 5.00	" H.E.K. 1.00
E.S.W. 1.00	" Mrs. I.R.H. Peabody 5.00
J.A.G. White Oak 1.00	" M.J.M. Waterman 15.00
A. 1.00	" S.F.E. 1.00
H.E.K. 1.00	" R. Gladwin 25.00
Mrs. I.R.H. Peabody 5.00	" I.M.T. 1.00
M.J.M. Waterman 15.00	" F.B.H. Budaville 1.00
S.F.E. 1.00	" J.S.R. Conn 3.00
R. Gladwin 25.00	" S. 1.00
I.M.T. 1.00	" C.C.S. Parkville 1.00
F.B.H. Budaville 1.00	" S.A.H.K. 1.00
J.S.R. Conn 3.00	" S. 1.00
S. 1.00	" Mrs. H.A.H. Shelton 5.00
C.C.S. Parkville 1.00	" P.W. Brownfield 1.00
S.A.H.K. 1.00
S. 1.00
Mrs. H.A.H. Shelton 5.00
P.W. Brownfield 1.00

Mr & Mrs J.C. Lafay- 2.00	For His Sake, Rose 1.00
etteville 2.00	Hill 1.00
G.S.M. Loomis Dale 1.00	For Jesus Sake, Rock- 25
E.M.S. Geneva 1.00	ford 25
Mrs P.M. Fend du L. 1.00	For Jesus Sake, N.J. 1.00
F.D. Monmouth 3.00	Inasmuch, Haverhill 3.00
S.E.A. & J.U. Bonny 1.00	In Christian Love, 5.00
" Eagle 2.00	Anshel 5.00
E.L.F. So Dayton 1.00	In Christ's Name, 1.00
H.F. Co E. Bloomsb 2.75	Newtown 1.00
S.S. Sinnickson 1.00	In Jesus Name, Ma- 1.00
Friend, Bath 1.00	hes Mill 1.00
" Subur 1.00	H.N. Welcome 2.00
" Watertown 1.00	" Hudson 4.60
" Floral Park 1.00	" Mr Ary 1.00
" Beulah 1.00	" Ashland 5.00
" No Lansing 5.00	" Webster 2.00
" Oray 1.00	" Savannah 6.00
" Charleston 5.00	" Shaw 1.00
" Saugertiesville 5.00	" Lammington 5.00
" Sharon 1.00	" Tribes Hill 1.00
" Vienna 10.00	" No Greenfield 5.00
" Hopkinton 5.00	Reader, Bristol 1.00
" Lansdale 2.00	Two Readers, Waits 1.00
" Stoneboro 1.00	River 1.00
Young Friend, Grant 3.00	Anxious Reader, Mass 1.00
Friends, Souris 3.00	" Point Judith 2.00
" Poland 2.00	" Poland 2.00
" Berlin 6.00	" Harvard 2.00
" Colman 1.00	" Adams C.H. 5.00
" W. Harpeth 1.50	" Chester 2.00
" E. Lynn 5.00	" Hopewell 1.00
" Gap 1.00	" Auburn 1.00
" Clarence 3.00	" Forksville 20.41
" Unknown 47	" Baldwinville 1.00
Anonymous, York 2.50	" Alexandria 1.00
For Christ's Sake 12.00	" Anshel 1.00
Franklin 12.00	Total $28,074.15
For Christ's Sake, 2.00	and over 500 others to be
Dragonville 2.00	acknowledged next week.

ARMSTRONG & McELVY Pittsburgh.	BEYMER-BAUMANN Pittsburgh.	DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.	FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.	ANCHOR Cincinnati.	ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.	ATLANTIC New York.	BRADLEY New York.	BROOKLYN New York.	JEWETT New York.	ULSTER New York.	SOUTHERN Chicago.	SHIPMAN Chicago.	COLLIER St. Louis.	MISSOURI St. Louis.	RED SEAL St. Louis.	SOUTHERN St. Louis.	JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.	MORLEY Cleveland.	SALEM Salem, Mass.	CORNELL Buffalo.	KENTUCKY Louisville.
--------------------------------	----------------------------	----------------------------	------------------------	--------------------	----------------------	--------------------	-------------------	--------------------	------------------	------------------	-------------------	------------------	--------------------	---------------------	---------------------	---------------------	--	-------------------	--------------------	------------------	----------------------

NO MISREPRESENTATION on the part of our agents tolerated or of dealers or painters necessary. You know just what you are getting when you have painting done with

Pure White Lead

(see list of brands, which are genuine) and Pure Linseed Oil. Don't be misled by trying something else said to be "just as good." Any desired shade or color may be easily produced by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

SCIENTIFIC BICYCLE MAKING

The ball bearings of a bicycle must be very hard. But they must not be brittle, or they will break easily. The COLUMBIA method is right. Soft, tough steel is forged to the shape required, machined down to exact size, case hardened to diamond density on its surface, and then polished. Such bearings rarely break, while they give the matchless ease of running that makes

Columbia Bicycles

$100 Standard of the World
to all alike

Columbias in construction and quality are in a class by themselves.

POPE MANUFACTURING CO., Hartford, Conn.

Columbia Art Catalogue gives full information of Columbias; also of Hartford bicycles, next best, $80, $60, $50. Free from the Columbia agent or mailed for two 2-cent stamps.

MONUMENTS.

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate

WHITE BRONZE.
It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
Cleaning. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
79-81 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

Going To... EUROPE?

H. Gaze & Sons (Ltd.)
The Universal Tourist Agent. (Est. 1844) will send out 67 Escorted Parties of the highest class. Write for the details. Individual and family travellers and chamberlains in all steamship lines. Tourist Gazette Post Free. 113 Broadway, N.Y. 3rd Washington St. Boston. 250 So. Clark St. Chicago. 165 So. Fifth St. Philadelphia.

KNICKERBOCKER.

Secure round shoulders. Shoulder Braces and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Suits for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, apothecaries, etc. Retail 15c. Wholesale by mail $1.00 per dozen. Send for circular and price list. KNICKERBOCKER CO., EASTON, ILL., U.S.A.

Waverley Bicycles. $85

AMERICA'S FAVORITES.

Are Built in the Largest and Best Equipped Factory on Earth.

Our unequalled facilities enable us to supply better bicycles for less money than other makers can afford to market an inferior production, hence in purchasing a Waverley there is a clear saving of $15.00 or more. A higher grade bicycle, it is impossible to produce. Our catalogue explains all. Send for it.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

CATALOGUE FREE

Now is the time to buy a PIANO or ORGAN from the largest manufacturers in the world, who sell their instruments direct to the public at wholesale factory prices. Don't pay a profit to agents and middlemen. Don't wait to suit all. No money saved in advance. Privilege of testing organ or piano in your own home 30 days. No expense to you if not satisfactory. Warranted 30 years.

REFERENCE Bank references furnished upon application; the editor of this paper; any business man of this town; and to the thousands using our instruments in their homes. A book of testimonials with every catalogue. As an advertisement we will sell the first Piano in a place for only $160. The first Organ on $25. If you want to buy for cash, if you want to buy on instalments, Write Us. BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO. P. O. Box 741 WASHINGTON, N. J.

REFERENCE Bank references furnished upon application; the editor of this paper; any business man of this town; and to the thousands using our instruments in their homes. A book of testimonials with every catalogue. As an advertisement we will sell the first Piano in a place for only $160. The first Organ on $25. If you want to buy for cash, if you want to buy on instalments, Write Us. BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO. P. O. Box 741 WASHINGTON, N. J.

"Do not Stammer."

Edwin S. Johnston, one of Philadelphia's Specialists, succeeded in curing himself of this dreadful affliction, and has probably made more wonderful cures than any living practitioner. His system is endorsed by Hon. John Wanamaker, Ex-Postmaster Gen. U.S., who in reply to a recent letter to an inquirer wrote: "Mr. Edwin S. Johnston, has been very successful in curing stammering, and to any one who is suffering with that affliction, I would recommend a trial of his system."

Prof. Horatio C. Wood, M.D., LL.D., University of Pa., says: "I believe Mr. E. S. Johnston to be honest and capable, and have seen some striking results of his work."

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, Phila. Pa., in a testimonial letter says: "It gives me pleasure to certify to my high confidence of Mr. E. S. Johnston's method of treatment of stammering."

Send for 54-page pamphlet to the PHILADELPHIA INSTITUTE, 1033 Spring Garden St., Phila., Pa.

EDWIN S. JOHNSTON.
Established 1881. Principal & Founder.

THAT DISH WASHER

IS THE FAULTLESS QUAKER

Will make your wife smile, your daughters rejoice, your home happy & bright. You don't have to wait. It washes, rinses, dries and polishes dishes at once. No chipping or breaking, no scalding hands, you don't touch them—so simple a child can use it. Lasts a lifetime. Honest Agents wanted to introduce this humane device. A good paying business offered if you write to-day.

The Quaker Novelty Co., Salem, O.

WALL-PAPER

Samples mailed free from the largest concern in U.S. Prices 30% lower than other PAPERS from 25c to $3.50 a Roll—5 Yards—DEALERS HAVE LARGE BOOKS BY EXPRESS WITH TRADE DISCOUNTS. A MILLION ROLLS—An Unlimited Variety. 982-984 Market St. 418 Arch St. PHILADELPHIA

KAYSER & ALLMAN

Your Dinner

can be cooked all at one time on one burner of any kind of stove, if you use the Peerless Steam Cooker Prevents steam and odors. White. Boils when cooker needs more water. Catalogue free. The agents be known. Agents wanted.

PEERLESS COOKER CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

CRIPPLES

Men, Ladies and Childrens Hand- and Foot Power-TRICYCLES

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

FAY MFG. CO., 80 Pine St. Elyria, O.

FREE STAMPING OUTFIT. 105 PATTERNS

New and beautiful, for ever kind of embroidery, conventional, floral, Grecian and motto designs for table, doilies, napkins, trays, etc. Choose alphabet for ornamental marking, and full instructions for stamping without trouble. Everything new and desirable, over 27 in size. As sold separately at 10c, and 25c each. FREE to every one who sends 10c. for trial subscription to our 64-col. illustrated magazine, from now until January, 1907, containing cross-stitch, needlepoint, and other designs. Enclose 2c. stamp for postage, etc. 10c, in all. Address, POPULAR MONTHLY, Federal St., BOSTON, MASS.

Requests for Prayer.

The Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Mar. 22, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Sons and Daughters. I. C., Sayce, Pa., that a whole family of three sons and four daughters, all unsaved, might be saved to Christ.—J. R. Zimmerman, Minn., for the conversion of fatherless children for whom my prayers have been offered.—B. A. S., Usses, Pa., that a beloved daughter and her husband might give their hearts to God.—"Believer," Flagg Spring, Ky., that God would give her four sons and two grandsons who are exposed to strong temptation.—"Anxious Mother," Buffalo, N. Y., for the salvation of her children.—P. W., West Mentor, O., that God would change the hearts of her three sons and five daughters, none of whom are real Christians.—"Anxious Mother," Arto, Ill., for the conversion of three sons.—M. S., Ridgeville, for the conversion of a family.—W. N., Fox Lake, Ill., that God in his mercy would convert her family.—"Widowed Mother," Emlenton, Pa., that her child might be saved.—Mother, Peniel, O., for her son's conversion.—"Anxious Wife and Mother," Dakota, for the conversion of her children.—Distressed Father, Brooklyn, N. J., that his son who seemed to be renouncing his evil ways, but is relapsing again into evil might be truly converted to God.—"Growing Father," Philadelphia, that two beautiful and charming daughters who have been led into sin, might seek pardon of the Lord and quit their evil ways.—Reader, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the conversion of his daughter, who is undutiful and has been led in misfortune by her fondness for dancing.

For the Conversion of Mother Relatives and Friends. Subscriber, St. Louis, Mo., that her husband might become a consistent Christian altogether redeemed from sin.—Reader, Barre, Ms., that a whole family might become Christians, especially that the father, whose evil and extravagant ways exert a baneful influence, might be born again.—"Two who Tst" etc., Brooklyn, N. Y., for the speedy conversion of two men, one of whom is falling more and more under the influence of drink, at the other, owing to domestic trouble, is becoming reckless.—"One in anguish," L. sonham, Pa., that one who is very dear, might quit sin and begin a new life, trusting Christ's power to keep him from falling under temptation.—D. C. R., Burgh Hill, O., for the conversion of a neighbor who is a scoffer, and is now very ill; also for two sisters in need of God's grace.—"Brother in Christ," Pnyra, Me., for the salvation of a dear friend.—"Distressed Husband," New York City, that a wife who has sinned and been forgiven, but who now shows little contrition, might have her heart changed and learn to be the sin into which she fell; also that her daughter, a dear girl twelve years old, may be kept pure and virtuous, and be preserved by the Holy Spirit from contamination.—Canada, for one who is in sore trouble, that the action may be blessed to conversion.—"Believer," Philadelphia, for several persons in need of strength and firmness to cleave to Christ under trial, and that one of them who sinks from a religious duty may have grace given her to do it.—Anxious Wife, Dak., that her husband might become a follower of Christ.—S. A. C., Turtle Creek, Pa., that a brother and a dear friend might be saved. S. F. N. Galesburg, Kans., that a beloved nephew might decide to seek the kingdom of God.—Ather, Peniel, O., for the restoration of her husband who has become a backslider.—G. S., Bloomburg, N. J., for the conversion of wicked men through whose unprincipled actions a family has grievously suffered.—Disconsolate, Williamsburg, N. Y., for the conversion of his wife whose love of dancing is causing her to neglect her family, and who is risking the acquaintance of vile men, whom she admires more than men of clean life. "God save her yet, if he will. Ask him, for she is very tenderly loved and does not see the danger surrounding her."—Reader, Philadelphia, for the conversion of her husband.—S. V., Dinwiddie, Va., for the salvation of a man now in his nineteenth year who has no hope of heaven; also for two brothers still out of Christ.—"One in great Distress," Allegheny, Pa., that her husband, who is falling under the power of drink, might be delivered and become a child of God.—"Believer in Prayer," Cortland, N. Y., that her husband might give his heart to God, and that he may love that rightfully belongs to him.—"Reader," N. J., for the conversion of two others.—"Believer," Mt. Jewett, Pa., that the young men who are repelled from Christianity by intellectual difficulties might be freed from scepticism, and believe on Christ the salvation of their souls.—A. B. D., Olvay, Va., for the conversion of father, mother, and very dear friend, the last under the bondage of evil habits.—C. H. C., Wina, Miss., for the conversion of her husband, who is the victim of strong drink.—Reader, Virginia, that a wicked and ungrateful brother may turn to the Lord and seek salvation.—C. D. S., Ann Arbor, Mich., that a man who is a father and a husband might gain control of his ungovernable temper and become a new creature in Christ.—Subscriber, Binghamton, N. Y., that husband and father might be delivered from the drink habit and look to Christ for salvation.—Edmonda, Pa., for the conversion of a brother and a nephew, the latter a slave to drink; also for a man eighty-two years old, who is indifferent to religion, that God would save his soul before it is too late.—N. A. B., Franklin, Ind., for the salvation of her husband, who is an unbeliever.—I. C., Sayce, Pa., for the conversion of her husband.

For the Restoration of Health. "Anxious," Williamsport, Vt., that God would mercifully restore the sense of hearing.—Anxious sister, Hillsdale, Mich., that an afflicted brother may recover.—"Widow," Columbia, that a brother-in-law and niece who are mentally afflicted might recover their reason.—"Believer," Shelbyville, Tenn., for the recovery of a dear sister now very ill.—"Subscriber," West Branch, Pa., that a married daughter might be restored to health and be able to perform her duties.—"Believer," Carroll, that a brother and sister now very sick may be raised up, if consistent with God's will.—C. C. M., Knox, O., that a husband who is sick may recover.—J. A. G., Corsicana, Tex., that a sister in Ireland, who has suffered long might recover her health.—"Distressed Widow," Harris, Ga., that God would heal her of nervousness and heart trouble.—"Sincere Friend," Weedsport, N. Y., for restoration of hearing and full recovery from a severe illness; also for the recovery of a friend who has been afflicted for years.—"Constant Reader," Steubenville, O., that health may be given to a mother, sister and daughter who have been great sufferers.—N. E. M., Cassopolis, Mich., that strength may be given to survive a severe operation, and that it may answer its purpose.—E. H., Herminie, Pa., that she may regain her health, the loss of which entails suffering on her children.—"Widowed Mother," New Cumberland, O., for the recovery of a son partially deranged, who left home some time ago and cannot be found. That God would give him back his reason and restore him to his mother.

For Special Blessings. Constant Reader, Philadelphia, Pa., that God would give strength to overcome a besetting sin which has attained so much power as to defy all human effort to eradicate it.—"Anxious One," for more faith.—J. H. S., Osborne, Kans., that in some way the means of earning a livelihood may be obtained.—"Believer in Prayer," Butler, Pa., who sends ten requests for various worthy objects.—A. S., Cleveland, O., that the means may be provided for a journey long desired which it is a duty to make.—"Anxious Mother," Philadelphia, Pa., that a son just commencing business may have the wisdom he needs to conduct it as it becomes one who fears the Lord and desires to serve him.—Distressed Father, Newburgh, N. Y., that the sore trouble now pressing on a family and so agitating one member of it as to threaten the overthrow of reason may be removed and strength given to bear patiently whatever may be the will of God.—"Constant Reader," Montclair, N. J., that success may attend the effort to obtain employment.—L. F., New York, that means may be obtained for the purpose of relieving the distress of some poor people.—W. W. S., Williston, S. C., who is eighty-three years of age, that he may have the assurance of acceptance with God.—E. B. E., Bethel, Conn., that he may succeed in obtaining funds wherewith to pay just debts.—"Husband and Wife," Baldinsville, N. Y., for money urgently needed for the discharge of obligations arising out of misfortune.—B., Washington, D. C., that an aged couple may be directed in the choice of a home and that their needs may be supplied.—F. J., Colbert, Miss., for more faith under difficult circumstances.—"One who Believes," Franklin, N. Y., for help in a financial crisis and that it may not be necessary to leave a home that represents the hard earnings of twenty-four years.—N. J., Ramah, Colo., that God would help one who is sorely distressed and burdened.—T. E. G., Anoka, Minn., who desires to serve the Lord, that in some way the necessary funds for a course of study may be furnished, and that wisdom may be given to see what it is right to do.—Sister in Christ, Pisgah, Ky., that a young couple may have grace to see and do the Lord's will, to understand their duty and that their way may be open to discharge their financial obligations.—F. T. B., Germantown, N. Y., that a business man who has had a long sickness, and has suffered heavy losses through his absence from business, but has now recovered, may obtain the funds he needs to meet the crisis in his affairs and continue his business.—C. C. M., Knox, O., that if it is made clear to a young man that he is called to the ministry the means may be provided for him to study.

Answered Prayers. R. E. S., Hagerstown, Md. That thanks be offered for God's goodness in wonderfully answering prayers for which request was made in these columns last year.

Reader, Burlington, N. J., desires thanking for the convalescence of one whose recovery from typhoid fever earnest prayer was recently asked in these columns.

Dr. Miles' Remedies Restore Health.

They Cure Nervous Troubles and Heart Disease.

REV. WM. M. BELL, D. D., Dayton, Ohio.

MEDICAL SCIENCE has made its greatest progress during the last quarter of the nineteenth century. Since the wonderful discoveries of Dr. Franklin Miles, demonstrating the fact, that the derangement of the nerve centers of the brain, was the most potent factor in the production of the disease, scientists and students have given the greatest attention and closest study to the nervous system; fully verifying his theories and giving their approval and highest commendation to Dr. Miles' System of Restorative Remedies. Educated physicians have constantly prescribed them, experienced nurses have regularly administered them, and grateful people in all walks of life, who have been restored to health by them, have testified in the strongest terms as to the wonderful restorative powers possessed by these scientific remedies.

Rev. Geo. W. Kiracope, of Hagerstown, pastor of the First Baptist church, Frostburg, Md., wrote last November: "I deem it a duty to add my testimony regarding your Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure. For several years I had been a severe sufferer from heart trouble. Breathing had become at times short and difficult with frequent pains about the heart. Sometimes a fluttering with a feeling of languor and faintness while the least excitement or mental worry would almost prostrate me. After trying many remedies prescribed for me and finding the trouble constantly growing worse, I was induced to try Dr. Miles' New Cure for the Heart, together with Dr. Miles' Restorative Tonic, and in a short time I completely recovered, all symptoms were removed and I have since enjoyed perfect health."

The Rev. Wm. M. Bell, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio, Secretary Home and Foreign Missionary society of the United Brethren church, writes as follows: "It has been my good pleasure for years, to be personally acquainted with Dr. Franklin Miles and the other members of the Dr. Miles Medical Co., and I know them to be thoroughly educated, reliable and trustworthy gentlemen. In recent years I have used Dr. Miles' remedies in my home and always with good results. I cheerfully recommend the company to the confidence of the general public, and their remedies as possessing real restorative merit."

Rev. J. R. Meredith, of Denver, Col., has this to say: "For four or five years I had severe pain in back of head at base of brain and before I was fully aware of it I was suffering from nervous prostration. My heart became affected and a constant soreness with sharp pains in the small of my back, indicating kidney trouble, came upon me. Some 18 months ago I began using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve, Nerve and Liver Pills and New Heart Cure and soon felt great improvement. I take pleasure in recommending Dr. Miles' remedies for restoring me to health."

Rev. W. J. Houck, Grace U. B. church, Carlisle, Pa., says: "Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve has done me untold good. My nervous system, greatly impaired by over work, is completely restored. Indeed I was in such a condition that the mere sight of a large congregation would so tire me that it would require a day or more to recover from the exhaustion. Yesterday I preached three times and I feel as vigorous this Monday morning as I ever felt in my life."

Rev. D. Alex. Holman, pastor Congregational church, Crystal, Mich., writes: "I had a sunstroke in Chicago in '91, health poor ever since. Have suffered terribly with pain in my head, top of head would be very hot, could not study, was very nervous, irritable, could not bear noise, physicians did not help me and I felt I must give up the ministry. I commenced using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve and now am like my old self again, doing hard work and preaching two or three times every Sunday."

Alderman George Fry of Allentown, Penn., writes: "For over three years I suffered from the effects of LaGrippe which attacked me while on a visit to Nebraska in 1891. My worst trouble was rheumatism in my shoulder. My physician said my spine was affected and my nervous system much weakened. In November of 1894, a friend advised me to try Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve. I took five bottles of the Nerve and two boxes of the Nerve and Liver Pills which resulted in a perfect cure. I am 64 years of age and enjoying excellent health. I cannot praise Dr. Miles' remedies too highly."

Dr. Miles' Remedies are sold by druggists on positive guarantee, that the first bottle benefits or money refunded. Dr. Miles' book on the Nerves and Heart free. Address the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

A High Caste Convert.
S. C. K. Rutnam's Labors for Christ in India and Elsewhere.

READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are already, to some extent, acquainted with the missionary career of S. C. K. Rutnam, a native of Ceylon, and a graduate of the University of Madras, the largest and oldest educational institution in India. It was during his college course that he was converted to Christianity. He is a high caste convert, of a keen, thoroughly educated mind, and is therefore able to take a clear, comprehensive view of Indian society. Mr. Rutnam spent several years in educational mission work in his native land, chiefly at Belgaum, Bombay Presidency, where he also founded a Young Men's Christian Association, of which he was secretary until coming to this country lately. The Association which he founded three years ago is now grown to a prosperous organization. The membership was never large, but the meetings were always hopeful, the average attendance being two or three times that of the total membership entered. Many of the non-members in attendance were really Christians at heart, although fear of relatives and friends, and not identifying themselves with any Christian organization. Several young men have told him that they would gladly become Christians if they could keep their people from finding it out. But they could not sacrifice and hesitate, lest they should be expelled from their homes and their social connections severed.

Mr. Rutnam, who is now residing at Princeton, N. J., was first brought into national prominence by his testimony before the Royal Opium Commission. He was delegated by the Christian people of India to go to England in 1894 and speak against the opium trade, the liquor traffic, and other legalized abominations that are bringing such a curse to India. He spent nine months lecturing in the principal cities of Great Britain, and his success in arousing the English conscience and spurring to a sense of duty, bears abundant evidence to the effectiveness of his work. He has been in the United States several months, and has addressed audiences in New York City, Boston, and Washington. As far as is known, he is the only Indian Christian in America. In reply to the question: "Has the work of missions been successful in India?" he says: "There is no answer—yes. I do not know of any greater work than that wrought in India during the present century. Under Christianity's benign influence many of India's most disgraceful customs have disappeared. The suttee is a thing of the past; the thuggeri has been abolished. Infanticide has been greatly reduced, the minimum age of marriage increased, and even the iron barriers of caste are gradually giving way. Men are losing faith in the old religion. This is especially true of the younger generation. Already there are more than two million Christians in India, and the number is rapidly increasing."

An Asthma Cure at Last.
Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. It is really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Greely, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down at night or sleep from Asthma. The Kola Cure cures it at once. To make the matter sure, the cure is not of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importers, 176 Broadway, New York, is sending out free trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing, and you should surely try it.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Constipation

is an actual disease with thousands. Cathartics give only temporary relief. The cause of the disease, some obscure nerve trouble, must be reached by a nerve tonic, one containing phosphorus, in order to obtain action upon the brain and spinal cord.

Freligh's Tonic

• A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

is the only tonic containing phosphorus, chemically pure, perfectly harmless. Prompt, concentrated, powerful. IT WILL CURE CONSTIPATION permanently.

Regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. All druggists, or by mail. Sample by mail, 25 cents. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.
Formula on Every Bottle.

NEW CHRYSANTHEMUM SEED.

These charming new Chrysanthemums from Japan bloom the first year from seed. They embrace all styles, varieties and colors, including the exquisite new Scotch Plume types, Rosettes, Globes, Fimbriated, Miniature and Mammoth. Sow the seed this spring; the plants will bloom profusely. This fall, $1.25 per packet.

For only 30c. we will mail all the following:

- 1 pkt. NEW JAPANESE CHRYSANTHEMUM SEED.
- 1 pkt. SCARLET PANSIES, fine red colors.
- 1 pkt. MARGARET CARNATION, all colors, blooming 3 mos.
- 1 pkt. VERBENA GIANT WHITE SCENTED, new fragrant.
- 1 pkt. FILIPERA or WEEPING PALM, a grand plant.
- 1 pkt. DWARF GIANT FLOWERED CANNA, mixed, ex. fine.
- 1 pkt. CUPID DWARF SWEET PEA (3 Seeds).
- 12 Bulbs FANT GLADIOLUS, all different colors.
- 2 " NEW ORCHID GLADIOLUS, exquisite colors.
- 3 " MAMMOTH CECILIS, different colors.

and our GREAT CATALOGUE, 136 pages, with magnificent colored plates and covers. These 4 packets of seed Novelties and 15 choice Bulbs, worth $1.35, will all flower this season, and we send them for 30 CENTS only to introduce our superior stock. Order at once.

OUR CATALOGUE of Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants, and Rare new Fruits is the finest ever issued; profusely illustrated with elegant cuts and colored plates. We offer the choicest standard sorts and finest Novelties. We are headquarters for all that is New, Rare and Beautiful. This elegant Catalogue will be sent free to any who order or expect to order after getting it.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

You Dye in 30 minutes

If you use Tonk's French Dyes. No other dyes like them. Dye cotton as permanently as wool. Our turkey red for cotton won't wash, boil or freeze out—all others will. Carpets, dresses, capes and clothing of all kinds made to look like new. No failures with Tonk's dyes; any one can use them. Send 10c. for 6 pages of color—any color. Big list to agents. Apply now and mention this paper.

FRENCH DYE CO., Vassar, Mich.

SPRAY YOUR FRUIT
Larvae, Windows, &c., with the Improved "DAISY" SPRAYER. Very durable, popular, and sure to please. 150,000 sold in 9 years. Has a rubber hose, brass valve, throws constant stream of fine No. 1 & 2 heavy brass. $2.50—iron (non-rust). No. 3, $3.50—all heavy brass. Express prepaid. Latest recipes for insect poisons. AGENTS WANTED. Catalogue free.

W. W. JOHNSTON & CO., 11 Eagle St., Canton, O.

STARK TREES BEARFRUIT

TESTED 70 YEARS. Salesmen and club agents wanted for GOLD plum etc. Stark, Louisiana, Mo. Rockport, Ills.

PERSONS DESIROUS OF increasing their income who are able to organize small clubs for fruit culture, please address W. E. Pedrick, Maxwell Land Grant Co., Denver.

Incubators and Brooders
Best in the world, hot water, pressure system. Will hatch chickens, turkeys, geese, ducks, etc. in 21 days. Sheenmaker Incubator Co., Freeport, Ill. U.S.A.

CHOICE ROSES AT 5 CENTS

OUR RAINBOW COLLECTION OF 20 ROSES FOR $1. PREPAID BY MAIL

The Roses we send are on their own roots, from 10 to 15 inches high, and will bloom freely this Summer, either in pots or planted in yard. They are hardy ever-bloomers. Please examine the below list of 20 choice fragrant monthly roses, and select the one you like best. We guarantee them to reach you in good condition. We also GUARANTEE THEM TO BE THE BEST DOLLAR'S WORTH OF ROSES YOU EVER PURCHASED.

Augusta Victoria, pure white, always in bloom. Champion of the World, (New) rich bright pink, finest rose-grown. Star of Gold, the queen of all yellow roses. Marlon Dinger, richest velvety crimson in clusters. Coltilde Souper, everybody's favorite, always in bloom. Bridesmaid, rich pink, none better. Pearl of the Gardens, deep golden yellow. Scarlet Bedder, the richest of all red roses. Senator McNaughton, lovely canary yellow. Sunset, yellow, highly colored. Franciska roses, copper yellow and peach. Marie Guillot, the greatest of all pure-white roses. Duchesse de Brabant, amber rose, tinged apricot yellow. Madame Camille, beautiful salmon and rosy flesh. Grace Darling, clear maroon red passing to lake, elegant. Catherine Mermet, everybody's favorite, Md. de Watterville, rosy bluish, bordered deep crimson. Rheingold, beautiful shades of saffron and tan. Md. Welche, amber yellow, tinged with copper and orange. Md. Hoste, immense large double pure white, very fragrant.

We will also send our Iron Clad Collection of 14 Hardy Roses, all different colors, $1. Try a set. 20 Chrysanthemums, all price a bunch, $1. 16 4-petaled roses, double and single flowered, and scented, $1. 15 choice Begonias, different kinds, $1. 40 packets choice Flower Seeds, all different kinds, $1. Our handsome, illustrated Catalogue, describing above Roses, Plants and all Seeds, mailed for 10 cts. stamps. Don't place your order before seeing our prices. WE CAN SAVE YOU MONEY. We have large two year old roses for immediate effect. Liberal premiums to club raisers, or how to get your seeds and plants free. We are the LARGEST ROSE GROWERS IN THE WORLD. Our sales of Rose Plants alone last season exceeded a million and a half. When you order Roses, Plants and Seeds, you want the very best. GOOD & REESE CO., Box 41, Champion City Greenhouses, Springfield, Ohio. Try us. Address,

DON'T BUY

A Carriage, Buggy, Phaeton or vehicle of any description without first getting our illustrated catalogue and price list (sent free). We sell only work manufactured in our factory.

GUARANTEED THOROUGHLY RELIABLE
at prices within reach of all. Capacity, 10,000 jobs per year.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE MFG. CO. Box 377 L Columbus, O.

FENCING

For HOGS, POULTRY, and all fence purposes.

McMULLENS

Thousands of Miles of Fencing Sold by Dealers. Freight paid. Take no other. Catalogue free.

McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

INCUBATORS

Our 160 page, finely illustrated Combined Poultry Guide and Catalogue will tell you what you wish to know about

PROFITS IN POULTRY
We manufacture a complete line of Incubators, Brooders and Poultry Appliances. Guide and Catalogue 10c. (stamps or silver) Worth one Dollar.

Reliable Incubator & Brooder Co., Quincy, Ills.

THE IMPROVED VICTOR INCUBATOR

Hatches Chickens by Steam. Absolutely self-regulating. The simplest, most reliable, and cheapest first-class Hatcher in the market. Circulars free.

GEO. ERTEL & CO., Quincy, Ill.

NEW CATALOGUE FOR 1896

Printed in colors that are correct. Best and finest illustrated Poultry Catalogue ever printed. Get it, and be convinced. It tells how to make poultry pay, how to build poultry houses, gives remedies for diseases, also lowest prices of fowls and eggs. If interested in poultry, this book is what you want. Sent post paid for 15 cents.

The J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freeport, Ills.

Money Found

By buying from us. If you want choice Fruit Trees, Ros. Shrubs, Ornamental Trees, etc., write for our 1896 Catalogue. Do it now, and we will send it to you free. Its full of the choicest kinds.

CLOBE NURSERY COMPANY, Rochester, N. Y.

WHICH CATALOGUE SHALL I SEND YOU?

Mandolins, Violins, Violin Music Violin Cases Violin Bows Banjos, Banjo Music Guitars, Guitar Music Flutes, Flute Music Cornets, Cornet Music, Harmonicas.

C. C. STORY, 26 Central Street, Boston, Mass.

$3 A DAY SURE

Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day, absolutely sure, by furnishing the work and teaching you free; you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee a clear profit of $31 every day weekly, deducting only the cost of the SOLE MANUFACTURING CO., BOX E, DETROIT, MICH.

Berkshire, Chester White, Jersey Red & Poland China Pigs, Jersey, Guernsey & Holstein Cattle, Thoroughbred Sheep, Fancy Poultry, Hunting and House Dogs. Catalogue, S. W. SMITH, Cochranville, Chester Co., Pa.

61 ANY INITIAL 10c 62 VERSEY PIN 15c 63 12c 64 10c 60 INITIAL RING 25c

ENTIRE SAMPLE OUTFIT

(Five articles with any gold plated initials, hand engraved, we present you a single article at prices marked above. Agents coin money with this outfit. 1896 Catalogue Free. Money refunded if not satisfactory. Order quick.

CURTIS JEWELRY CO., Attleboro, Mass.

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention, different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachments. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Office: 233 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
Branch: 1122 Broadway, New York.

THE IMPROVED Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day. It contains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lasts as long as India. Examination free. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

1896 High Grade Bicycles

Shipped anywhere C. O. D. at lowest wholesale prices.

$1000 "Oakwood" for $57.50
$85 "Arlington" for $45.00
$65 " " for $37.50
$50 Bicycle for $30.75

Latest models, fully guaranteed; pneumatic tires, weight 17 1/2 to 20 lbs.; all styles and prices. Large illustrated catalogue free. Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. - Chicago

BEST BUSINESS ON EARTH For Agents.

$1.00 every hour you work selling our NEW COMBINATION FUNNEL. Just out. Six articles in one. Anybody who has a little "get up and go" can sell 50 a day. Also our new Tack Puller and Hammer. Makes housecleaning a pleasure. Any child can use it. Sells at sight. Ladies are just as successful as men. Big profits. Either article postpaid 25c. We make 50 other new fast sellers.

PHENIX MFG. CO., Dept. 4, Newark, N.J.

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.

Send no money in advance. We will send you a complete outfit for printing. You can make money with it at a profit. Also include in the outfit a set of type cases, and a set of type cases. Best quality. Sent by mail. Mailed for 10c. Catalogue for 10c. Send no money in advance. Write for particulars.

Ingersoll & Bros., Dept. No. 111, 65 North 4th St., New York.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, the information how to grow hair upon a bald head. Send for it. Sells at sight. Ladies are just as successful as men. Big profits. Either article postpaid 25c. We make 50 other new fast sellers.

Attenberg Medical Dispensary, 327 East Third St., St. Louis, Mo.

A STARTLING OFFER!

All Our Previous Offers Eclipsed!

bargain ever offered by a reliable house. Six of the handsomest full size heavy triple-plate silver souvenir spoons ever made and only Ninety-nine cents, prepaid by mail.

The stock of famous coffee spoons is NEARLY EXHAUSTED. We are now offering the balance, OUR COMBINED TEA-AND-ORANGE-SPOONS, much larger and finer than the coffee spoons and we say without reserve or hesitation that no such opportunity as this ever before existed. They must be sold! We cannot afford to carry them longer. After you see these spoons you will readily understand why we held them back until the coffee spoons were disposed of.

THINK OF IT!

You will pay three times the price for ordinary teaspoons with plain bowls—here you get the prettiest patterns and GOLD-PLATED BOWLS—the entire bowl inside and outside plated with gold, and each bowl representing a different World's Fair Building. Money cannot buy the like elsewhere. They are the identical spoons sold on the World's Fair Grounds for $9.00 a set, but you can now have the set of six for only—99c., about one-tenth their original price.

This is the finest souvenir collection ever produced of the World's Fair. Every family and every individual ought to have a set as a SOUVENIR, or as a beautiful collection of spoons for extraordinary occasions, or for BIRTHDAY or WEDDING gift, as a set for EVERY-DAY-USE. You may never have another chance to get such exquisite silverware at such a remarkably low price. The thousands and thousands of subscribers to religious papers who bought our After-Dinner Coffee Spoons will read this offer with delight. THEY KNOW THAT ANY OFFER WE MAKE IS A GENUINE BARGAIN and cannot be duplicated anywhere.

ONLY 99c FOR ALL SIX FORMERLY SOLD FOR 9.00
Full Size Teaspoons

There are twelve different building

SET No. 2—Comprises the Manufacturers, Horticultural, Woman's, Fisheries, Machinery Hall and Transportation buildings.
 SET No. 3—Includes the Administration, Art, Agricultural, Electrical, Mining and Government buildings.

In your order please be explicit and say whether you want set Number 2 or Number 3. The set is put up in a very nice box, handsomely lined with plush, and is sent by mail securely packed and PREPAID.

Send us 99c by Post Office or Express Money Order or registered letter only, as we do not accept personal checks.

Our references are the First National Bank, Chicago; the Mercantile Agencies, and all the Express Companies. If the spoons are not exactly as represented you can have your money back. You know our advertisement would not be in this paper if the offer were not genuine.

We still have some of the After-Dinner Coffee spoons on hand.

Address in full LEONARD MFG. CO., Dep't B, 152 and 153 Michigan Ave., Chicago

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

W. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
 Offices: — Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, APRIL 8, 1896.

NUMBER 15.

Price Five Cents.

ON THE BANKS OF THE NILE.

The New Expedition to the Soudan, the Causes Which Have Led to it, and the Jihad or Holy War Proclaimed by the Mohammedan Leader, El Senoussi.

EGYPT to the Bible student is a name fraught with strange associations; to the student of current events it brings up interminable international complications. With a history stretching back to the dim vistas of antiquity, it occupies a prominent place in the cable dispatches of this year of grace, and is still a problem to statesmen, and the centre of diplomatic strategy. Within the past few weeks Egypt has again become a prominent topic of interest through the announcement that it is to be the theatre of another war. But how has it come to this? The glory of the ancient empire has faded when modern policy is needed, not its own. It is a capital, but the capital of nations which are barbarians when Egypt was the foremost of the nations of the world! Its heavy gates, the jewels not enough to have its rivals in the days of its power, have often held its affairs and regulated its case, as if with senile decrepitude. There it came to its end, when this new war, which Egypt is violently interested in, and which is undertaken for her safety, was decided upon in London, and international authorization for it, had been secured not in Cairo, but in Berlin and Vienna. That it is well for Egypt that it should be so controlled and directed, no impartial observer can doubt. The English evacuated the country, the French and the Germans would be needed to take their place. Egypt is now incapable of self-government. Ismail, the late Khedive, did more for the development and financial ruin of the land than any of his predecessors, was a conspicuous illustration of the incapacity of the Egyptian ruler. Since his time the course of events has proved that Egypt has no alternative but foreign occupation or anarchy. Even Arabi Pasha, whose patriotic movement for the emancipation of his country was the occasion of England's intervention, was sagacious and magnanimous enough to admit that England had done more for the welfare of Egypt than he could have accomplished if he had succeeded in his schemes, or than he ever hoped to have accomplished. It has been a task of almost superhuman difficulty, and the success has not been ideal, but it has proceeded on broad principles, and it has been productive of substantial benefit to the people. Out of the slough of national bankruptcy, the absence of justice between

The new advance which is now undertaken, is a movement to prevent a relapse into the barbarism, out of which Egypt has been conducted. To the south of Egypt, between its frontiers and those of Abyssinia, is the Soudan, which formerly was governed more or less completely by the Khedive in Cairo. In 1885 the region was practically abandoned by Egypt. The Mahdi, the representative of Mohammedan power had succeeded in establishing his rule over it, and after the abortive attempt on the part of the lamented Gen. Gordon to hold it for Egypt, self-preservation demanded its being given up. Egypt alone furnished sufficient problems to tax the powers of Egyptian rulers, without the attempt to impose Egyptian rule on the wild tribes of the Soudanese desert. How the Mahdi has ruled and how much the people have suffered under his ruthless sway, has recently been told by Slatin, who, after eleven years captivity in his camp succeeded in making his escape. But the Soudan would they have begun a movement which has a distinctly hostile aspect.

Some months ago the news reached Cairo that the Mahdi's forces at New Dongola were multiplying. That point is only about two hundred and fifty miles from Wady Halfa, the southern outpost of Egypt, and it has in the Nile an easy means of direct advance in a campaign against Egypt. This news was followed by the report that the green flag of Mohammed had been unfurled and a Jihad or Holy War had been proclaimed, with the object of delivering Egypt from the hands of the Christians. England has an unconquerable aversion to any war being waged within her own boundaries or within the boundaries of any land under her protection. She therefore resolved to wage a defensive war by offensive operations. An Egyptian force officered by the English and supported by two British regiments is to proceed to Akassheh and thence, if it is deemed advisable, to Dongola. That it will be attacked by the Mahdi's forces appears to be a foregone conclusion. The English Government does not conceal the gravity of the undertaking, but insists that it is demanded for the safety of Egypt, as well as the assistance of Italy. The situation at Kassala where the Italians are believed to be besieged, is declared to be critical and it is believed that the Mahdi is preparing to add his forces to their assailants. Should Kassala fall, the Mahdi's triumphs, flashed with victory, might be expected to march up the Nile Valley and pour into Egypt. By creating a man and man, the insecurity of life and property, the shameless corruption and tyrannical oppression of the official class, the country has been steered into economic prosperity, and the fellah or peasant, has learned that he has rights which his oppressors are bound to respect. So much has already been achieved by a few English officials, supported by an insignificant force of some three or four thousand men, probably have been left to its fate, but for the recent Italian disaster in Abyssinia. The tribes of the desert have seen a European army ignominiously defeated by the Abyssinians. They have not been slow to reach the conclusion that with all the advantages of modern equipment Europeans are not invincible, and remembering how Lord Wolseley with his forces was unable in 1885 to rescue Gordon from Khartoum, diversion at Akassheh, or Dongola, the English Government hopes to prevent the concentration of the Mahdists and precipitate the struggle that appears to be inevitable. Recent cable dispatches distinctly intimate that the movement which has led to the expedition has the approval if not the assistance of the Sultan of Turkey. The proclamation of the "Holy War" is a step which would be little likely to be taken without his consent. It is made by Sidi

THE OLD CITADEL OF CAIRO, EGYPT. (From a Photograph.)

(Continued on page 23)

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

STARTING FOR HOME.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Luke 15: 18, "I will arise and go to my father."

HERE is nothing like hunger to take the energy out of a man. A hungry man can toil neither with pen nor hand nor foot. There has been many an army defeated, not so much for lack of ammunition as for lack of bread. It was that fact that took the fire out of this young man of the text. Storm and exposure will wear out any man's life in time, but hunger makes quick work. The most awful cry ever heard on earth is the cry for bread. A traveler tells us that in Asia Minor there are trees which bear fruit looking very much like the long bean of our time. It is called the carob. Once in a while the people, reduced to destitution, would eat these carobs, but generally the carobs, the beans spoken of here in the text, were thrown only to the swine, and they crunched them with great avidity. But this young man of my text could not even get them without stealing them. So one day, amid the swine troughs, he begins to soliloquize. He says: "These are no clothes for a rich man's son to wear; this is no kind of business for a Jew to be engaged in, feeding swine; I'll go home; I'll go home; I will arise and go to my father." I know there are a great many people who try to throw a fascination, a romance, a halo about sin; but notwithstanding all that Lord Byron and George Sand have said in regard to it, it is a mean, low, contemptible business, and putting food and fodder into the troughs of a herd of iniquities that root and wallow in the soul of man is a very poor business for men and women intended to be sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, and when this young man resolved to go home it was a very wise thing for him to do, and the only question is, whether we will follow him. Satan promises large wages if we will serve him; but he clothes his victims with rags, and he pinches them with hunger, and when they start out to do better he sets after them all the bloodhounds of hell. Satan comes to us to-day and he promises all luxuries and emoluments if we will only serve him. Liar, down with thee to the pit! "The wages of sin is death." Oh! the young man of the text was wise when he uttered the resolution, "I will arise and go to my father." In the time of Mary, the persecutor, a persecutor came to a Christian woman who had hidden in her house for the Lord's sake one of Christ's servants, and the persecutor said: "Where is that heretic?" The Christian woman said: "You open that trunk and you will see the heretic." The persecutor opened the trunk, and on the top of the linen of the trunk he saw a glass. He said: "There is no heretic here." As I take up the mirror of God's Word to-day, I would that, instead of seeing the prodigal of the text, we might see ourselves—our want, our wandering, our sin, our condition, and that we might be as wise as this young man was and say, "I will arise and go to my father." The resolution of this text was formed in a distressed condition of mind. If this young man had been by his employer set to culturing flowers, or training vines over an arbor, or keeping an account of the pork market, or overseeing other laborers, he would not have thought of going home. If he had had his pockets full of money, if he had been able to say, "I have a thousand dollars now of my own, what's the use of my going back to my father's house? Do you think I'm going back to apologize to the old man? why, he would put me on the limits; he would not have going on around the old place such conduct as I have been engaged in; I won't go home; there is no reason why I should go home; I have plenty of money, plenty of pleasant surroundings; why should I go home?" Ah! it was his pauperism, it was his beggary. He had to go home. Some man comes and says to me: "Why do you talk about the ruined state of the human soul? why don't you speak about the progress of the nineteenth century, and talk of something more exhilarating?" It is for this reason: A man never wants the Gospel until he realizes he is in a famine-struck state. Suppose I should come to you in your home, and you are in good, sound, robust health, and I should begin to talk about medicines, and about how much better this medicine is than that, and some other medicine than some other medicine, and talk about this physician and that physician. After awhile you would get tired, and you would say: "I don't want to hear about medicines. Why do you talk to me of physicians? I never have a doctor." But suppose I come into your house and I find you severely sick, and I know the medicines that will cure you, and I know the physician who is skilful enough to meet your case. You say: "Bring on all that medicine, bring on that physician. I am terribly sick, and I want help." If I come to you and you feel you are all right in body, and all right in mind, and all right in soul, you have need of nothing, but suppose I have persuaded you that the leprosy of sin is upon you, the worst of all sickness. Oh! then you say, "Bring me that balm of the Gospel, bring me that divine medicament, bring me Jesus Christ." "But," says some one in the audience, "how do you know that we are in a ruined condition by sin?" Well, I can prove it in two ways, and you may have your choice. I can prove it either by the statements of men or by the statement of God. Which shall it be? You say, "Let us have the statement of God." Well, he says in one place, "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." He says in another place, "What is man that he should be clean? and he which is born of woman, that he should be righteous?" He says in another place, "There is none that doeth good—no, not one." He says in another place, "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all had sinned." "Well," you say, "I am willing to believe that, but why should I take the particular rescue that you propose?" This is the reason: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." This is the reason: "There is one name given under heaven among men whereby they may be saved." Then there are a thousand voices here ready to say: "Well, I am ready to accept this help of the Gospel; I would like to have this divine cure; how shall I go to work?" Let me say that a mere whim, an undefined longing amounts to nothing. You must have a stout, a tremendous resolution like this young man of the text when he said, "I will arise and go to my father." "Oh," says some man, "how do I know my father wants me? how do I know, if I go back, I would be received?" "Oh," says some man, "you don't know where I have been; you don't know how far I have wandered; you wouldn't talk that way to me if you knew all the iniquities I have committed." What is that flutter among the angels of God? What is that horseman running with quick dispatch? It is news, it is news! Christ has found the lost.

Not angels can their joy contain,
But kindle with new fire,
The sinner lost is found, they sing,
And strike the sounding lyre.

When Napoleon talked of going into Italy, they said, "You can't get there. If you knew what the Alps were you wouldn't talk about it or think about it. You can't get your ammunition wagons over the Alps." Then Napoleon rose in his stirrups, and, waving his hand toward the mountains, he said, "There shall be no Alps!" That wonderful pass was laid out which has been the wonderment of all the years since—the wonderment of all engineers. And you tell me there are such mountains of sin between your soul and God, there is no mercy. Then I see Christ waving his hand toward the mountains. I hear him say, "I will come over the mountains of thy sin and the hills of thine iniquity." There shall be no Pyrenees; there shall be no Alps.

Again: I notice that this resolution of the young man of my text was founded in sorrow at his misbehavior. It was not mere physical plight. It was grief that he had so maltreated his father. It is a sad thing after a father has done everything for a child to have that child ungrateful.

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
To have a thankless child.

That is Shakespeare. "A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother." That is the Bible. Well, my friends, have not some of us been cruel prodigals? Have we not maltreated our Father? And such a Father! Three times a day has he fed thee. He has poured sunlight into thy day and at night kindled up all the street-lamps of heaven. With what varieties of apparel he hath clothed thee for the seasons. Whose eye watches thee? Whose hand defends thee? Whose heart sympathizes with thee? Who gave you your children? Who is guarding your loved ones departed? Such a Father! So loving, so kind. If he had been a stranger; if he had forsaken us; if he had flagellated us; if he had pounded us and turned us out of doors on the commons, it would not have been so wonderful—our treatment of him; but he is a Father, so loving, so kind, and yet how many of us for our wanderings have never apologized! If we say anything that hurts our friend's feelings, if we do anything that hurts the feelings of those in whom we are interested, how quickly we apologize! We can scarcely wait until we get pen and paper to write a letter of apology. How easy it is for any one who is intelligent, right-hearted, to write an apology, or make an apology! We apologize for wrongs done to our fellows, but some of us perhaps have committed ten thousand times ten thousand wrongs against God and never apologized.

I remark still further, that this resolution of the text was founded in a feeling of home-sickness. I do not know how long this young man, how many months, how many years he had been away from his father's house, but there is something about the reading of my text that makes me think he was homesick. Some of you know what that feeling is. Far away from home sometimes, surrounded by everything bright and pleasant—plenty friends—you have said: "I would give the world to be home to-night." Well, the young man was homesick for his father's house. I have no doubt when he thought of his father's house he said: "Now, perhaps father may not be living." We read nothing in this story—the parable—founded on every-day life—we read nothing about the mother. It says nothing about going home to her. I think she was dead. I think she had died of a broken heart his wanderings, or, perhaps he had got into dissipation from the fact that he could not remember a loving and sympathetic mother. A man never gets over having lost his mother. Nothing said about him but he is homesick for his father's house. He thought he would just like to go on a walk around the old place. He thought he would just like to go and see if things were as they used to be. Many a man after having been off a long while has gone home and knocked at the door, and a stranger has come. It is the old homesteader, but a stranger comes to the door. He finds out father is gone, and mother is gone, and brothers and sisters all gone. I think the young man of the text said to himself, "Perhaps father may be dead." Still, he starts to find out. He is homesick. Is there any here to-day homesick for God? homesick for heaven? A sailor, after having been long on the sea, returned to his father's house, and his mother tried to persuade him not to go away again. She said, "Now, you had better stay at home. Don't go away. We don't want you to go. You will have it a great deal better here." But it made him angry. The night before he went away again to sea, he heard his mother praying in the night room, and that made him more angry. He went far out on the sea, and a storm came up and he was ordered to very perilous duty, and he ran up the ratlines, and among the shrouds of the ship he heard a voice that he had heard in the night room. He tried to whistle it off, he tried to rally his courage; but he could not silence the voice he had heard in the night room, and there in the storm and darkness he said, "O Lord! what a wretch have been? What a wretch I am! Help me just now, Lord God." And I thought in this assemblage to-day there may be some who may have the memory of father's petition, or a mother's pressing mightily upon the soul, and at this hour they may make the same resolution I find in my text, saying: "I will arise and go to my father."

A lad at Liverpool went out to bathe, went out into the sea, went out too far, got beyond his depth and he floated away. A ship bound for Dublin came along and took him on board. Sailors, generally very generous fellows, and they gave him a cap, and another gave him a jacket, and another gave him shoes. A gentleman passing along on the beach at Liverpool found the lad's clothes and took them home, and the father was heartbroken, the mother was heartbroken, the loss of their child. They had heard nothing from him day after day, and they ordered the usual mourning for the event. But the lad took ship from Dublin and arrived in Liverpool the very day mourning arrived. He knocked at the door, the father was overjoyed and the mother was overjoyed at the return of their lost son. Oh, my friends, have you waded out too deep? Have you waded down into sin? Have you waded from the shore? Will you come back? Will you come back will you come in the name of your sin, or will you come robed in the Saviour's righteousness? I believe I am waiting for you. Go home to your God to-day. Go home!

But I remark the characteristic of this resolution was, it was immediately put into execution. The context says "he arose and came to his father." The trouble is not nine hundred and ninety-nine times out of a thousand is that our resolutions amount to nothing, because we make them me distant time. If I resolve to become Christian next year, that amounts to nothing at all. If I resolve to become a Christian to-morrow, that amounts to nothing at all. If I resolve at the service this day to become a Christian, that amounts to nothing at all. If I resolve to go home to-day to yield my heart to God, that amounts to nothing at all. The only kind of resolution that amounts to anything is the resolution that is immediately put into execution. There is a man who had the typhoid fever, he said: "Oh! if I could get over this terrible disease; if this fever should depart; if I could be restored to health, I would all the rest of my life serve God." The fever departed. He got well enough to walk and the block. He got well enough to go over to business. He is well to-day — well as he ever was. Where is the broken vow? There is a man who said, long ago: "If I could live to the year 1896, at that time I will have my business matters all arranged, and I will have time to attend to religion, and I will be a good, thorough, consecrated Christian." The year 1896 has come. January, February, March, April — a fourth of the year gone. Where is your broken vow? "Oh," says the man, "I'll attend to that when I get my character fixed up, when I can get over my evil habits; I am now giving to strong drink;" or, says the man, "I am ven to uncleanness;" or, says the man, "I am given to dishonesty. When I get over my present habits, then I'll be a thorough Christian." My brother, you will get worse and worse, until Christ takes you in hand. "Not the righteous, sinners Jesus came to call." Oh, but you say, "I agree with you in all that, but I just put it off a little longer." Do you know there were many who came just as far as you are to the kingdom of God and never entered it? I was at Easthampton, and I went into the cemetery to look around, and in that cemetery there were twelve graves side by side—the graves of sailors. This crew, some years ago, in a ship went into the breakers at Amagansett, about three miles away. My brother, when preaching at Easthampton, had been at the burial. These men of the crew came very near being saved. The people from Amagansett saw the vessel, and they shot rockets, and they sent ropes from the shore, and these poor fellows got into the boat, and they pulled mightily for the shore, but just before they got to the shore the rope snapped and the boat capsized, and they were lost, their bodies afterward washed upon the beach. Oh! what a solemn day it was—I have been told of it by my brother — when these twelve men lay at the foot of the pulpit, and he read for them the funeral service. They were very near shore — within shouting distance of the shore, yet did not arrive on solid land. There are some men who come almost to the shore of God's mercy, but do not quite, not quite. To be almost saved is to be lost!

I will tell you of two prodigals—the one that got back and the other that did not get back. In Richmond, Va., there is a very prosperous and beautiful home in every respect. A young man wandered away from that home. He wandered very far into sin. They heard of him after, but he was always on the wrong track. He would not go home. At the door of that beautiful home one night there was a great outcry. The young man of the house ran down to open the door to see what was the matter. It was midnight. The rest of the family were asleep. There were the wife and children of this prodigal young man. The fact was he had come home and driven them out. He said, "Out of this house. Away with these children; will dash their brains out. Out into the storm!" The mother gathered them up and fled. The next morning the brother, the young man who had staid at home, went out to find this prodigal brother and son, and he came where he was, and saw the young man wandering up and down in front of the place where he had been staying, and the young man who had kept his integrity said to the older brother: "Here, what does all this mean? What is the matter with you? Why do you act in this way?" The prodigal looked at him and said: "Who am I? Who do you take me to be?" He said: "You are my brother." "No, I am not. I am a brute. Have you seen anything of my wife and children? Are they dead? I drove them out last night in the storm. I am a brute. John, do you think there is any help for me? Do you think I will ever get over this life of dissipation?" He said: "John, there is one thing that will stop this." The prodigal ran his fingers across his throat and said: "That will stop it, and I will stop it before night. Oh, my brain; I can stand it no longer." That prodigal never got home. But I will tell you of a prodigal that did get home. In England two young men started from their father's house and went down to Portsmouth—I have been there—a beautiful seaport. Some of you have been there. The father could not pursue his children—for some reason he could not leave home—and so he wrote a letter down to Mr. Griffin, saying:

"Mr. Griffin, I wish you would go and see my two sons. They have arrived in Portsmouth, and they are going to take ship, and going away from home. I wish you would persuade them back."

Mr. Griffin went and tried to persuade them back. He persuaded one to go. He went with very easy persuasion, because he was very homesick already. The other young man, "I will not go. I have had enough of home. I'll never go home."

"Well," said Mr. Griffin, "then if you won't go home, I'll get you a respectable position on a respectable ship." "No, from influential person to influential person, until in some way he got that young man's pardon. He came down on the dock, and as he arrived on the dock with the pardon the father came. He had heard that his son, under a disguised name, had been committing crime and was going to be put to death. So Mr. Griffin and the father went on ship's deck, and at the very moment Mr. Griffin offered the pardon to the young man, the old father threw his arms around the son's neck, and the son said: "Father, I have done very wrong and I am very sorry. I wish I had never broken your heart. I am very sorry!" "Oh," said the father, "don't mention it. It won't make any difference now. It is all over. I forgive you, my son," and he kissed him and kissed him and kissed him. To-day I offer you the pardon of the Gospel — full pardon, free pardon. I do not care what your crime has been. Though you say you have committed a crime against God, against your own soul, against your fellow-man, against your family, against the day of judgment, against the cross of Christ — whatever your crime has been, here is pardon, full pardon, and the very moment you take that pardon your Heavenly Father throws his arms round about you and says: "My son, I forgive you. It is all right. You are as much in my favor now as if you had never sinned." Oh, there is joy on earth, and joy in heaven. Who will take the Father's embrace?

A Blind Singer for Christ.

A Philadelphia lady, Miss Josephine Gilbert, sends this touching incident to THE

On the Banks of the Nile.

(Continued from first page.)

Mahomet el Senoussi, the most venerated man in the Mohammedan world, whose words are a law to all Mohammedans in every land. The Mahdi of the Soudan and even the Sultan himself are inferior in influence to Senoussi, who boasts that thirty million men, or a third of the Mohammedan world are sworn to obey his orders. In proclaiming a "Holy War" at this juncture he is fulfilling a prediction of Koranic prophecy which declared that in the thirteen hundredth year of the Hegira, which corresponds to the year 1883 of our era a great leader would arise who would scourge the enemies of Islam and carry the banner of Mahomet triumphantly through the world. It is remarkable that Senoussi attained his majority in 1883, and that certain other conditions as to the names of his parents and the place of his birth are fulfilled in his person. At his command and with his support, the Mahdi may be expected to put forth all his strength. Should a disaster such as overtook the Hicks expedition befall the English army the consequences would be felt in every land where Christians and Mohammedans are living.

ABBAS II, KHEWIVE OF EGYPT.

The citadel of Cairo, of which a picture appears on the first page, is one of the ancient buildings of the city and having been kept in good repair is still a fortification of some strength. It was built by Saladin in the twelfth century and his palace was within its enclosure. The palace was demolished in 1824 and a mosque now occupies its site. It was in this citadel that the Mamelukes were massacred in 1811 and it was there that Ismail, the late Khedive, shut up the young men who had been educated in Europe at his expense, until each had translated into Arabic the French text book on civil engineering and the mechanical arts which had been assigned to him. The work occupied four months during which time the students were kept close prisoners in the citadel. Abbas II, the Khedive, whose portrait we give, is the grandson of Ismail. He ascended the throne in January, 1892 on the death of his father Tewfik. He is now twenty-one years of age. Some time ago, encouraged by France, Abbas made an attempt to shake off the British control and to himself govern as an independent sovereign. The native officials, it was believed, were ready to support him, as they cordially hate the British, who have cut down their privileges and curtailed their depredations on the revenue; but the movement failed as Arab's did and Egypt still remains the bondswoman of the nations in more than one sense of the word. It is a mortgaged land, whose only hope of redemption lies in the power and the honesty of a race alien to its own. It is remarkable that the initial step which thus connected England with Egypt, and gave her the right to interfere in Egyptian affairs, was the work of Lord Beaconsfield, a member of the race whom the Egyptians oppressed and enslaved in Goshen nearly forty centuries ago.

NEW DONGOLA, THE OBJECTIVE POINT OF THE EXPEDITION.

you won't," said the prodigal; "no you won't. I am going as a private sailor; as a common sailor; that will plague my father most, and what will do most to tantalize and worry him will please me best." Years passed on, and Mr. Griffin was seated in his study one day when a messenger came to him, saying there was a young man in irons on a ship at the dock—a young man condemned to death—who wished to see this clergyman. Mr. Griffin went down to the dock and went on ship-board. The young man said to him: "You don't know me, do you?" "No," he said, "I don't know you." "Why, don't you remember that young man you tried to persuade to go home and he wouldn't go?" "Oh, yes," said Mr. Griffin, "are you that man?" "Yes, I am that man," said the other. "I would like to have you pray for me. I have committed murder, and I must die; but I don't want to go out of this world until some one prays for me. You are my father's friend, and I would like to have you pray for me." Mr. Griffin went from judicial authority to judicial authority to get that young man's pardon. He slept not night nor day. He went

CHRISTIAN HERALD: Sitting by a sick friend in the sunny ward of a hospital I saw two young girls enter it with their arms full of sweet roses. The face of the older one was very beautiful; but there was a slight hesitancy or something I did not quite understand in her manner, she seemed so dependent upon her younger sister. But as she held a dewy rosebud for my friend to take, I looked up into the lovely face to find, what I had not dreamed of, that she was totally blind.

The sisters had been coming to sing to the sick for some weeks, the youngest one playing her afflicted sister's accompaniments, for God had given her a voice to use for him. I felt that the angels joined with her in song as she stood there in girlish innocence.

If we are sick we would not fret nor chafe. Thereby we shall only make our illness worse, retarding our recovery, while at the same time we shall mar the work of grace going on in our inner life. The captive bird that sits on its perch and sings is wiser than the bird that flies against the wires and tries to get out, only bruising its wings in its unavailing efforts. The sick-room may be made a holy of holies instead of a prison. Then it will be a place of blessing.

The Need of the Hour at Bethel Church.

WHAT Bethel Church needs is a young, stirring pastor," said Deacon Binley, truculently, pointing a lean forefinger at Deacon Weaver, to emphasize his remarks.

Deacon Weaver was a gentle old man, with blue eyes, steadfast as steel, and snow-white hair. Everybody loved him, and it was conceded that he was the leag man in Bethel Church, but since Deacon Binley had become the superintendent of the Sunday School, there had been for the first time in its history, a fission in Bethel. Nobody could tell when it was that dissatisfaction crept in, intly murmuring; nobody could find anyone who would say out, straight and plain in so many words, that he or she wasired of the dear old pastor, Dr. Lansingburgh, the man who had come to Bethel, thirty years ago, in the fulness and glow of his youth, with honors thick upon his head. Then, churches had clamored for the brilliant and rising young man; recalls had been on his study table at anywhen he chose Bethel, as the church was clearly indicated by Providence, as his here of work. Far and wide, crowds came to listen to him, the aisles were thronged, the evening services were famous, and the young and old acknowledged Dr. Lansingburgh as able, eloquent, scholarly and devout. What had he not done for Bethel! He had lived the Pauline life, the Christ life, among and before his people, visiting them, marrying them, visiting them in sickness, burying their dead.

Nobody could say that Dr. Lansingburgh's pulpit power had declined. He still reached strong and thoughtful sermons which the young people voted too good, but the older people heard with a thrill and a song of thanksgiving. Often, in the morning service, you might have seen a pin drop, so solemn was the hush, and the same evening a beggarly array of empty pews, depressed the few who did come and grieved the Doctor, so that the spirit of disappointment and defeat entered his very soul.

Like they knew how bitter was the cup of sorrow. No sorrow was more poignant, not bereavement, loss of fortune, not mortal illness, not anything is harder to endure than failure when one has had and deserves still to have success.

"And, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me," prayed the minister in his study, adding his Master's ending to the prayer, "Nevertheless, thy will be done."

Then he buttoned up his overcoat to the throat, for the autumn night was very chill, and, hat in hand, bent to kiss the tearful daughter, who was all that was left of him on this side the river, to bequeath to her as his very own. Wife and children slept on the hillside, the minister's invalid Gertrude were by themselves in the parsonage here, and Gertrude was fading away. Doctor Lansingburgh knew the future bravely, knowing that as long as man could see, another year would find his house left to him desolate.

As he turned the corner, the minister found that Deacon Binley said those words about the need of the church for a younger man to Deacon Weaver. The pastor heard them; he could not help it, and he heard Deacon Weaver's swift reply: "Over while John Lansingburgh lives, shall another man stand in that pulpit, so long as my name is Peter Weaver."

Nobody knew that the pastor had been near enough to hear their conversation. He said, "Good evening, brethren," in his usual cordial manner, and entered the chapel door. Presently, as the congregation gathered—it was the night of the weekly prayer-meeting—he gave out a hymn,—"Blessed be the tie that binds."

The meeting went on, it was remembered afterward how fervent was the pastor's exhortation, how tender his petitions, how he forgot nobody, how gentle and reverent was his manner. No one could have guessed how under his tranquil face, and his even tones, there surged like the wail of the ocean, "The need of the hour, for Bethel is a younger man."

Doctor Lansingburgh loved Bethel Church, as a husband loves his wife, as a soldier loves his command, as a painter the great picture into which he has put his best art.

You must not think that a frequent or chance talk between two deacons, had decided the Doctor in any step he now resolved to take. That bit of talk simply focussed certain lines of action which had been determining themselves in his mind. It showed him that what he had hitherto supposed a mere matter of antagonism was taking definite shape. The malcontents were audibly expressing their weariness of an old, and, as they would have said, behind-the-times pastor. Doctor Lansingburgh resolved to resign.

SLAVE-TRADING CHIEF MLOZI, AND HIS BODY-GUARD.

On the following Saturday he sent for Deacon Weaver and fought a loving battle out with that dear friend. In the proper way and at the proper time, he would cease to obstruct the path of progress in Bethel. But next Sabbath he would preach as usual. No one who was there ever lost the impression of that next Sabbath. Dr. Lansingburgh took for his text, "Little children, love one another." Never in his youngest day had he spoken with more fire, more sweetness, more winning persuasiveness. But as the last words of the last prayer were uttered, the minister's face suddenly grew ashen gray, he tottered, swayed, fell, and was caught in the arms of Deacon Weaver who sprang to his aid. They laid him down on the floor of the vestry-room, and three physicians came at once, but John Lansingburgh never breathed again. This final sermon had been his swan-song. The bitter cup had passed from his lips, and instead he was given a cup of the water of life at the right hand of God.

Bethel Church has its young and stirring pastor, but the need of the hour for it and all churches remains still, an outpouring of the Spirit from on high.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Freeing African Slaves.

Recent Operations in Nyassaland — The Philafrican Liberator's League making Rapid Progress in America.

A SLAVE CARAVAN GUARD. Men and women in different walks of life residing in different States, have offered their services for work in Africa under the League. Although no appeal for money has been made, contributions are coming in. A young ladies' school of Lausanne, Switzerland, offers voluntarily to work with needle and brush, and in other ways toward a bazaar for the benefit of the League's African proteges. But what is, perhaps, the best guarantee of success in the present stage of the movement, is the unanimous and hearty approval with which the League is received by the prominent philanthropists of New York. Bishop Potter speaks of it as "a noble recognition of an imperious duty" which has his "hearty sympathy and approval." The Hon. Chas. P. Daly, the learned and venerable president of the American Geographical Society, hails it, as "the only practical plan he has yet seen for the removal of the two greatest evils afflicting the Dark Continent, the trade in human flesh and the belief in witchcraft." Dr. Josiah Strong, of the Evangelical Alliance, thinks this project is "entirely feasible," far-sighted and calculated to contribute much to the healing of the "open sore of the world." An editorial in The Evangelist declares that "what is necessary is to spread the knowledge of this deserving project for ameliorating the sad condition of millions of our fellow-beings. In the rush of affairs and the press of 'causes,' the best undertaking must be vigorously pushed. We very gladly give this good enterprise what impetus our words can lend." Cyrus C. Adams, of New York, than whom no editor in America is better versed in African matters, says: "The fact that Mr. Chatelain has interested some of the best known men in the country in his proposed work is probably due as much to their confidence in the man as to their approval of his scheme. For everybody who knows him can testify that every dollar he has had for twelve years has gone into his work, save that required to give him the barest subsistence."

Interest in the African Slave Trade during the last few weeks has centred in the operations of Sir Henry Hamilton Johnston, the British Commissioner, against the Arab slave-traders around Lake Nyassa. The most powerful combination of Arabs was settled near Karongas at the north end of the Lake, under the command of Mlozi, who styled himself Sultan of Konde. He was the leader in the war of 1888, when the Arabs sought to expel the British from the district. After three years of fighting peace was made by the then Commissioner, Mr. H. H. Johnston, but the Arabs broke every engagement they had entered into, fortified their villages in the very strongest manner possible, and recently defied the British power, going so far as to fire upon some of the Administration officials. On December 3d last, Johnston assembled at Karonga all his available forces, and by a swift advance surrounded the Arab towns, and after two days' bombardment carried the stockades by assault. Nearly six hundred slaves were liberated, showing that the Arabs had been carrying on their nefarious practices in spite of all treaties and promises. Mlozi was duly tried, and his guilt having been fully proved, he was sentenced to death and hanged. The photograph represents this well-known slave-trader, Mlozi, with his bodyguard, on a visit to Karonga after the first peace was made.

It is for the purpose of liberating and educating poor natives such as those who were enslaved by this despot, and others like him, that the Philafrican Liberator's League has been formed. All who desire to be fully informed concerning its objects, and who wish to become identified with its Christ-like and Samaritan work should communicate with the League at No. 511 Charities Building, 22d street and 4th ave., New York City.

Why They Trusted Each Other.

A stranger arrived in a Western city by an evening train. Tired and dusty, he hurried to the principal hotel and was disappointed at not being able to secure a room for himself alone. The hotel was filled to overflowing, with cots in the parlors all engaged. A great convention was in session in the city, and as he went to the other hotels he found the same difficulty; not a room, not even a cot, could be secure. At last, at a third-rate hotel, he found that he could secure a bed in a double-room. He tried to hire both beds, but one bed had been already hired, and so he was obliged to take his chances. He went upstairs, and concluded that he would not go to sleep until he had seen what kind of man was to occupy the other bed. He took out his pocket Bible and soon became deeply interested. He was engaged in this study when the door opened, and the stranger who was to be his roommate for the night entered. The man, as he entered, gave a sharp glance at him, and then went across the room and prepared for bed.

Looking over the top of his Bible he quietly studied the stranger. The man appeared to be a quiet person and seemed to be honest. Still he hesitated about trusting a stranger, and began to make calculations about keeping awake. But he changed his mind; for he saw the stranger, who was ready to retire, quietly kneel down, in a manner that showed it to be a familiar custom, and engage in prayer. That was enough; he put the Bible under his pillow and went off himself into a quiet, refreshing sleep. In the morning, while they were dressing, he turned to the stranger, and explaining the circumstances of the past evening, said: "So I slept well." The stranger listened attentively, and then said: "I slept well, too. I had not expected to sleep at all in this place, with one that I did not know in the other bed, but when I came in suddenly and found you reading your Bible, I concluded I could trust you."

ONE WEEK MORE OF THE FUND.

Who have Not Yet Contributed Should Help Armenia Now—How the Work has Expanded—Letters from Missionary Distributors.

NE more week remains in which our readers and their friends may contribute to the relief of the suffering Christians of Armenia, through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. Nearly $40,000 already been distributed through the agencies. This sum represents the gratified gifts of over 15,000 Christian men and women, who have made the stricken Armenia their own, and prayed that its persecutions may be ended. How these prayers have been answered, the result has been a flood-tide of practical sympathy been flowing toward that unhappy land these last six months, and benefactors from Europe and America have poured upon its people. The hand of massacre has only partly ceased, yet the great Russian nation—nominal Christian if no more—has interested when all Europe turned coldly aside, some slight assurance of return.

For our own immediate friends, who once again responded nobly to the suffering humanity, they have been beyond all expectation. When the journal directed their attention to the relief of Armenia in September last, it was in contemplation to attempt the shipment of a modest relief work at. But experience has shown that cannot fix the limit of Christian effort when it is begun in the enthusiastic of self-sacrifice, and soon the Van Bureau was extended to nearly a of other centres in Armenia and across the frontier to Persia. Now the work is approaching a close, we desire to express to all who have aided in its development and in bringing about the glorious results it has accomplished, our sincere acknowledgments for their hearty co-operation. All honor to the army of Christian men and women, who have helped the Fund, and, by their increasing and devoted labors as distributors, have made every dollar and every dime a real benefaction to the Armenian people and the means, under the Divine blessing, of saving many thousands who must otherwise have perished.

We trust that during the closing week of the Fund, our friends will not relax their efforts, but that all who intend contributing will send in their gifts as soon as possible.

One of the missionaries at Erzerum, Rev. W. N. Chambers, writing under date of Feb. 24, gives this statement of the relief work. (Dr. Chambers received $2000 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund for distribution in the Erzerum and Erzingan districts.) "To-day has been a very heavy day for us. We change the tickets for bread each week. On Monday we issued over 800 bread tickets. These 800 women—each one representing a family—3500 persons—came for their tickets; 2300 others came in the hope of getting tickets. In addition, a lot of people from near villages came in for wheat. So that between 1200 and 1500 people entered our house to-day. The villagers who came to-day and received wheat represented about 1500 destitute. So that this day's work consisted in issuing rations for a week to about 5000 destitute people. We are working on the basis of spending $1000 a month in this province. This does not allow more than a starvation ration to each person assisted. But there are many not reached. It leaves out of count the thousands that are without bedding in this severe weather, having scant clothing. It is absolutely impossible to supply even a fraction of the necessary wants.

"The death rate amongst children is very large. The outlook is most dark. These people will be dependent on charity for a year under the most favorable circumstances possible now. We fail to understand what the West means. The only hope of saving life is transportation of the people. Whoever escapes the Turkish sword, famine will pursue. The eyes of the people are turned still to England and

ARMENIAN WOMAN AND CHILD.

America. Oh! may God grant that those two nations may not fail them again. Let America and England know that $1,000,000 will not cover the need or relieve the people. The emigration scheme should be pushed to completion.

"Our need for money will increase greatly within a month, and even after the winter is over they will need help for seed corn, or else starvation will complete the job next winter. Sometimes I wonder how long flesh and blood can bear such a strain, but we are 'in for it' and must hold on as long as we can. There is much to try one's patience in such a land at any time, but now more than all."

From Casarea, another missionary, Rev. J. L. Fowle, sends an account of the relief work now in progress there. His letter is dated March 2nd, and shows that the work has been extended from Casarea to Gemerek, Sharkusla, Sarumsakka and other points where relief has been afforded. Clothing has been received from Bardezag, Scutari, Constantinople, Pera, Kortal, Nicomedia and elsewhere, and distributed in Casarea, Sivas, and Harpoot by Gregorians, Protestants and Americans.

In her latest statement of the condition of the Relief Work at Van, Miss Kimball writes as follows:

"If my shoes are clean and comfortable at a standstill. Only the Industrial Bureau is alive, and keeps the courage of the people up by its activity. Thus, day by day, the numbers both in city and country are increasing. A family that has been able to eke out a living till to-day, now finds that its wheat and other food-stuffs are exhausted; there is no more to be had anywhere, and so the family sends its representative, father or mother or grown son, to beg for work. It is a noticeable fact that the demand nine cases out of ten is for work—rarely for free bread. But day after day the tide of destitution rolls in upon us and we are in hope of reaching an end only when we reach the limit of the population.

We have distributed from the first of this month (February) to the fifteenth 3,687 sewed garments, 1011 webs of cloth and 500 yards of goods to 2,860 persons. It should be understood that the webs of cloth mean from eight to eighteen yards only. The value of these goods is some $400 and is almost entirely the product of our own work.

My heart aches for the babies and little children who are accustomed to live on the abundant milk in the villages; poor little things with nothing but coarse dry bread to munch now. And even the supply for the nursing gives out when the poor mothers eat only insufficient dry bread and underclothing; not only every physical hardship, but the mental suffering often of grief for husband and brother murdered, always for houses robbed, property destroyed and the hopelessness for the future. I call to mind one of hundreds of similar instances a family of refugees in a house which I can see from where I sit while writing this. The father was killed; the mother with five small children fled to the city and found refuge in a cold damp stable; no beds, no fire, no food and no clothing—the thermometer below zero.

The mother fell ill with fever, and when my attention was called to the family, the baby was simply a skeleton in the last stages of starvation and the other children but little better. It was a real satisfaction to be able through the generosity of the people at home to send on now with fuel, clothing, beds and medicine. But, alas! one of the men came the next day for a winding sheet for the baby!

During the past week the following contributions have been received for the relief of the Armenian sufferers:

Clark, Miss Grace	1.00	Dodd, J. F.	1.00	Hawkins, Mar.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Pease, Miss M. A.	1.00	Symes, G. H.	1.00	Suber, Mr.	1.00
Clark, Mary A.	3.00	Dorning, Mrs. I.	10.00	Haworth, Alvida	25	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Pease, E. H.	5.00	Symonds, John	5.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Clarke, Chas. J.	4.00	Drown, Oliver	3.50	Hayes, Mrs. I. E.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Perkins, Everett V.	5.00	Tange, D. E.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Clay, Mrs. E. L.	1.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Perry, J. & wife	5.00	Tank, August	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coan, Mrs. L. A.	25	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Tarble, Anna	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Cobb, Susan	4.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1.00
Coffey, C. P.	2.00	Dunker, A.	1.00	Hemmerling, Mrs. M.	5.00	McClintock, Mrs. M.	2.00	Peterson, T.	25	Taylor, C. A.	1.00	Suber, Mrs.	1

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your remittance when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canada, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, Post Office at New York, N. Y., March 1, 1879.

The Spreading of Lent.

HOW the world and the Church change! Most of us can remember when the season of Lent was poorly thought of by all non-Episcopal Churches; but when this year the season of fasting opened, the good people of every denomination of Christians became reverent. We can all see that, physically, mentally and spiritually, a pause in merry-making and festivity is advantageous. While there is in the world a large population who are underfed and need no charge against gluttony and surfeit—for they have hard struggle to get even the necessities of life—among the prosperous classes there are many who eat too much, and drink too much, and sacrifice slumber to carousal, and go to bed only a little while before they ought to be able to arise. So we said in February, "Hail! season of forty days' moderation!" In many of the non-Episcopal Churches two of the solemnities are observed—the one charged with the memories of crucifixion, and the other with memories of resurrection: Good Friday and Easter morning. Pathos of tenderest music for the one. Open diapason of doxology for the other. Tears for the one. Flowers in garlands, and crowns, and arches for the other. Say you that all days ought to be sacred? So they ought, but as what is everybody's business is nobody's business, so what ought to belong to all the days belongs to none of them. As I am glad for the multiplication of secular holidays which allow the lifting of burdens from the body, so I am glad of the multiplication of religious days for the recuperation of the soul. While the Episcopal and Roman Catholic churches during Lent gather at altars of prayer, let every denomination of Christians be sympathetic with its observance. The danger is not in too many holidays; the danger is in the direction of scarcity. And this by one who is not an Episcopalian.

Believe Something.

MY opinion is that the men who have given up the religion of Jesus Christ are the most miserable beings on earth. They try to make you think they are happy, but their anxiety to impress you in that direction creates suspicion. They are just as happy as a shipman with compass and log washed overboard, and drifting he knows not whither. Just as happy as that. If a man tells me that he is happy when he knows nothing about his eternal destiny, is not even certain there is any future world, and has no assurance for the future, I know

WESTERN RELIEF FUND.

Detailed Expense Account of "The Christian Herald" Fund for the Relief of Drouth Sufferers in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, &c.

FOR RELIEF.

1894. Dec. 10.	Sundry distributors; 196 at $5 and 2 at $10.	$1000.00
1895. Jan. 11.	Rev. Geo. W. Sharp; for distribution among the destitute in Kan. and Neb.	300.00
" Jan. 11.	Sundry distributors; 213 at $5; 37 at $10; 2 at $20; 3 at $25, and 3 at $50.	1700.00
" Jan. 11.	The World-Herald, Omaha; for immediate relief requirements in Neb.	1000.00
" Feb. 9.	Rev. Luther P. Ludden, Chairman of Nebraska State Relief Committee.	5000.00
" Feb. 9.	Rev. L. P. Ludden; Coffee, Tea and Sugar Fund for aged and invalid sufferers.	500.00
" Feb. 9.	Rev. Dr. Huntington's Relief Committee, Lincoln, Nebraska.	1000.00
" Feb. 9.	Church Home Relief of G. A. R. Veterans in drouth-smitten districts.	1000.00
" Feb. 9.	Rev. Geo. W. Sharp; for distribution in Nebraska and Kansas.	1000.00
" Feb. 9.	Denver Republican; contribution to the Denver Republican Colorado Relief Fund which finally exceeded $5,000, and resulted in very effective work in the Eastern counties of Colorado.	1100.00
" Feb. 9.	Rev. B. T. Vincent, D.D., Denver, Colorado.	250.00
" Feb. 9.	Topeka Capital; contribution to Kansas Relief Fund, energetically and successfully conducted, and judiciously expended through Maj. J. K. Hudson, editor-in-chief.	1000.00
" Feb. 9.	Nebraska Grand Lodge Good Templars.	250.00
" Feb. 9.	Mrs. Emerson, Lincoln, Nebraska.	20.00
" Feb. 13.	Julius Wolff, Sterling, Nebraska.	10.00
" Feb. 13.	Mrs. E. J. Scott, Max, Nebraska.	10.00
" Feb. 27.	Rev. W. H. Thrall, Huron, South Dakota.	250.00
" Feb. 27.	Rev. C. M. Daley, Huron, South Dakota.	250.00
" Feb. 27.	Rev. J. H. Parker, Kingfisher, Oklahoma.	250.00
" Feb. 27.	Rev. J. F. Palmer, Kingfisher, Oklahoma.	250.00
" Mar. 21.	Topeka Capital; second instalment.	500.00
" April 1.	Rev. S. F. Hayden, Indianola, Nebraska.	10.00
" April 1.	Rev. C. Regier, Fairfax, South Dakota.	100.00
" April 1.	Nebraska State Relief Committee; Rev. Luther P. Ludden, Chairman.	500.00
" April 1.	Rev. C. A. Hale, Holdrege, Nebraska.	250.00
" April 9.	Rev. William B. Stewart, Faulkton, South Dakota.	30.00
" April 9.	P. J. Heintz, M.D., Gove City, Kansas.	30.00
" April 9.	Rev. George Harding, Tulare, South Dakota.	30.00
" April 12.	Rev. William Nicholl, Millersborough, Nebraska.	30.00
" April 27.	Rev. Mr. Stagemen, Grand View, South Dakota.	25.00
" May 4.	Charles Hatfield, Chairman, Lillie Vale, Kay Co., Oklahoma.	100.00
		$17,745.00
	Credit by Checks Returned.	$50.00
		$17,695.00
	Food and Clothing Shipped to various Points, Estimated.	$15,000.00
	Forward.	$32,695.00

FOR MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

Pennsylvania Railroad Co., freight.....	$724.50
Advertising in New York daily papers for clothing and other supplies.....	96.40
Rent of store, 740 and 742 Broadway, as Central Depot for reception of relief supplies.....	100.00
Postal Telegraph Co., telegrams, etc.....	25.52
William Miller, hire of horses.....	55.00
George Hughes & Co., printing.....	35.64
Tallman, painting signs and posters.....	60.00
Tice & Co., repairs in store.....	2.23
Stationery.....	17.00
American Express Co.....	23.18
D. Goetz, cartage.....	161.55
B. Ryan, carpenter.....	25.11
Postage, traveling expenses, various freight charges, sundry trucking and expressage, and all other miscellaneous expenses.....	404.26
Consolidated Gas Co.....	9.00
Salaries of clerks, packers, and drivers involved in the handling of over $15,000 worth of supplies, covering a period of nearly three months.....	289.92
Grand Total.....	$34,724.31

See Charity Balance Sheet, page 188, issue of March 4, 1896.

See Charity Balance Sheet, page 188, issue of March 4, 1896.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be pleased to have the names and addresses of all Gospel and Rescue Missions that are absolutely supporting through the labors of the inmates or otherwise, and which do not depend on contributions from outside sources.

H. P. Meyer writes:

Your Sunday School Missionary, Rev. Mr. is doing a noble work; if every community Sabbath School, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, read in every family, I believe every family in America would be converted to Christianity before we write 1900.

Adam B. Neumeier, Macungie, Pa. Is it right for a Christian, if he knew at what hour a thief came, to watch and not suffer him to break into his house?

It is always right to prevent a crime, if possible. In the case suggested, the householder, unless well prepared for the visitor, would stand a chance of being attacked, therefore he would be justified in summoning aid to prevent the commission of a crime and to save the housebreaker.

G. McK., Detroit, Mich. We often hear of very large churches. Can you tell us where the smallest church in the world is situated?

In the village of St. Lawrence, England, there is a little stone, moss-covered church, whose outer walls are twenty-five feet long, eleven feet wide and six feet in height. At Tadac, near the Saginaw River, Canada, is a church founded by Jacques Cartier, that holds only twenty persons. There are some churches in Ireland almost as small as those mentioned.

Mrs. E. B. Ashman, Baltimore, Md. Where the Bible can I find the quotation "A merciful man is merciful to his beast?"

It is not to be found in the Bible, the picture form being: "A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast" (Prov. 12: 10). In a similar way other Bible passages have been quoted and are frequently quoted as though in Scripture. Among these are: "A nation all be born in a day," for the correct reading which see Isaiah 66: 8: "He who runs as read," see Habakkuk 2: 2, and many others.

Eva Mann, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. In reading a few days ago, I came across a reference to a distinguished historical personage who witnessed his own obsequies. Who was he?

Charles V. was probably meant, though others have indulged a similar ghastly whim. His empress having died, he was so impressed with the solemn services that he expressed a wish to have his own obsequies celebrated in his presence. Accordingly a great catafalque was erected and the ceremony performed, which an effect was produced upon the monarch's mind by this impious mummery that he died soon afterward.

P. L., Memphis, Tenn. What is the religion the people of Abyssinia and their form of government?

They are of Semitic descent and accepted Christianity in the fourth century, A.D. The great wave of Moslem conquest in the seventh century resulted in the isolation of the Abyssinians who were cut off from communication with other Christian nations for a long period. Christianity has been likened to that which prevailed in the seventh century, and as a result of their hermit-like condition, there was little spiritual progress. An archbishop of Abyssinia is the head of the church. The people call themselves, "Gees," (freemen), in reference to Abyssinian, the latter being rather a term of reproach than otherwise.

Henry P., Lakeside, Cal. 1. Who founded the title Church at Rome? 2. Did St. Paul die a natural death or not?

1. Nothing is known of the first founder of the Christian Church at Rome. Papal writers claim the honor for Peter, but it is not certain that Peter ever was within the walls of Rome. Christianity may have been introduced by the strangers from Rome, who were present at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. The first church there was probably a Gentile Church with many Jewish converts. It is believed by most writers to have been established at Rome, although there is a tradition dating from the fourth century, that he was released at his first trial and made several arduous journeys afterward before meeting martyrdom.

Subscriber, La Salle, Wis. "Thoroughly" the old form of "thoroughly."—Mrs. J. P. Jansen, Grass Farm. She is still active in Christian work.—Subscriber, Ill. 1. The weight of the talisman was legendary. 2. He might reasonably take a pleasure in all good music.—Mrs. Wood, Boston. He does not use the ampoule N. F. W., Smyrna, Del. We believe not, and find no record to that effect.—R. O. H., Fair Springs, Pa. 1. Yes, he should take all needful precautions against loss. 2. Certainly. We are the means and ask God for the blessing.—R. Mouton, O. The address is Chicago, Ill.—C. Lebeck, Bethel, N. Y. No; it is not right.—Joseph, Ore. No, there is a wide and excellent story to choose from in the field of sacred literature.—Subscriber, Princeton, Neb. We find nothing in such a contest. It is a question of complete intellectual kill.—Miss Chandler of the Old Home, Towlawa Ave., Paterson, N. J., can use religious reading matter in Christian work.—W. L., South Charleston, O. He is a conductor musical composer, a native of Italy, we believe.—Pearl Allen, 1. Write to Scribner's, N. Y. If an English publication, we believe. 2. The first known, the other Methodist.—Rush, Polite. The best are best discussed in the columns of a journal.—Brooklyn Subscriber. 1. See John 2. The following are the numbers in the first list that represent good literature: 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8.

that his statement is in direct antagonism to the truth. There never has been a happy infidel, and there never will be. Such people may laugh in apparent glee, and caricature sacred things, and joke about God and defy retribution, but they are a bundle of keen and unadulterated wretchedness. Alas! for this religion of "Don't know." Are you immortal? "Don't know." Do you think that the soul in the future state will have any relation to the body that dies? "Don't know." Will we recognize each other in the next world? "Don't know." Will the spirit in the future state see its Creator? "Don't know." This religion of "Don't know" is made up of a hundred ingredients. The first fifty are darkness, and the other fifty are midnight. In contrast with the religion of "Don't know," I put the glorious and conquering religion of "I know." "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and that he will stand in the last day. "I know my sheep and am known of mine." "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he will keep that which I have committed unto him." This religion of "I know" is made up of a hundred ingredients. The first fifty all sunlight, and the other fifty all noonday. Oh! if all those who have been hostile to Christianity would frankly tell their dissatisfactions, what service for God and the truth.

Voltaire, the ablest infidel of the centuries, says: "I wish that I had never been born." Hume, the celebrated Hume, cries out: "Where am I? or from what cause did I derive my existence? and to what condition shall I return? Whose favor shall I court, and whose anger shall I dread?" Thomas Paine went shrieking out of this world? The infidels of the day have tried very hard to cover up his death-bed, but there have been too many records made of its wretchedness and horror even to obliterate the story. In contrast with the dissatisfaction of infidelity, I place the lives of ten thousand Christians who are singing their way through trial and buffetings on toward their heavenly home. Comforted in all their sorrows; strengthened in all their sickness. They go out of this world with an expectancy that illumines their faces long after the spirit has flown. You see the flash of the opening gate clear down on the wilted pillow of the dying bed.

At the last hour of life multitudes of unbelievers have expressed sorrow at their life of unbelief; but not one person, since the world was created, in the last hour regretted the service of Jesus Christ. I defy the whole earth to present one instance. Against the dissatisfaction of infidelity I place the irradiations of Christian belief.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Cave of the Winds.

FEW sections of this continent are as rich in natural scenery or as abundant in natural wonders as the region of Niagara and the Great Lakes. On the rocky shores of Lake Superior, hidden from the casual observer are many wonderful caves and grottoes, that vie in picturesque grandeur with the famous Luray Cave of Virginia, the Missouri caverns recently described by our Sunday School Missionary, Rev. G. W. Sharp, and in some respects even with the great Mammoth Cave itself. Such a subterranean marvel is "The Cave of the Winds," on Lake Superior, the entrance to which is shown in one of the illustrations on this page. Within its dizzying depths there are marvelous chambers that might have been hewn out to serve as throne rooms or banqueting halls for a race of Titans. Great apartments, hung with ice-covered rock crystals, stalagmites and stalactites, and whose walls flash back myriads of answering lights to the explorers' torch or lantern; halls whose colored crystal frettings might be the driven handiwork of a race of geni, and whose echoes multiply and resound to the wonderment of the visitor; congealed formations that suggest statuary in every conceivable pose—these are some of the wonders they contain. This wonderful cavern, formed by the action of the waters day and night on the white cliffs, is simply one of many similar formations. In some places, nature has been assisted by man and bridges have been built from rock to rock and across yawning chasms. The roar of the waters, intensified by the rocky vault which acts as a huge sounding-board, is described as almost deafening. These secret chambers of the earth are found in almost every land and through the exploration of such places much light has been thrown upon geological history and not a few of the old earth's secrets laid bare. Men are apt to speak of such wonders as the work of nature, but to the Christian, each is eloquent with the wisdom and majesty of his Father, whose still more wonderful work in the spiritual world these wonders typify:

I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and I will lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates and thy gates of carbuncles and thy borders of pleasant stones. (Isa. 54: 11, 12.)

The Conditions of Inheritance.

An application has been made to the courts in New York to change the conditions under which certain persons may receive legacies left to them in the will of an eccentric old lady who died about twenty years ago. She was a wealthy Jewess, and very much attached to her ancient faith. After providing in her will for her children, she set apart a large sum of money for her grandchildren, of whom at the time of her death, there were eight. The money is left on condition that none of them shall marry a person who does not belong to the Jewish race. Any grandchild marrying a Gentile is to forfeit his or her share of the legacy, which will then be to increase the portions of the others. It appears that one or more of the grandchildren would like to be free of this condition and the courts are to be asked to set aside on the ground that it is contrary to public policy. No exactly similar case has yet been decided so the decision of the courts is awaited with some interest, as it will be a precedent. That it will be favorable to the applicants is generally doubted, as the judges are naturally reluctant to restrict a testator's right to prescribe the conditions under which the legacy may be received. They would interfere to prevent a person's rights being abridged, but are little likely to grant relief to persons who want to enjoy a privilege without fulfilling the conditions attached to it. The same principle applies to spiritual matters. Every one would like to have the heavenly inheritance if it could be had without sacrificing the world and their inclinations. Christ suffered no one to be in doubt on that question:

Whoever doth not bear his cross and come after me cannot be my disciple. (Luke 14: 27.)

To Restrict Immigration.

Two important measures have been proposed in Congress and reported favorably by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Their object is to prevent the settlement in this country of illiterate persons and persons already excluded by law. One of the laws proposed authorizes immigration inspectors at our ports to refuse admission to any person between the ages of sixteen and sixty who cannot both read and write the English or some other language. The second measure arranges for investigation at the beginning of the voyage here. It enacts that no immigrant shall be received who does not bring a certificate from the American consul at the consular station nearest to the place where the immigrant last resided, certifying that the immigrant does not belong to any of the classes of immigrants prohibited from settling in the United States. If these measures should become laws, they will probably materially reduce the number of immigrants who reach our ports, as they not only provide a new test, but secure the investigation of the other tests being made where there is no liability of deception. It will, however, be better for the intending immigrant that he should know before starting on his journey that he will not be admitted, than to make the voyage only to be disappointed of admission. There is reason to fear that many who hope to enter heaven at the end of the voyage of life are so disappointed. But in their case they are not excluded for lack of a certificate, nor because they do not possess educational qualifications, but because of defects in character, and these defects are clearly described in God's Word:

ENTRANCE TO THE CAVE.

There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither anything that worketh abomination or maketh a lie. (Rev. 21: 27.)

The Burglar's Bible.

A Western lawyer of some distinction relates an incident of his practice, which shows that even a lawyer may be deceived by appearances. One evening he received a message from the prison that two young men who had been arrested desired him to defend them. They were charged with stealing a boat, but that was only a technicality. The police had formed the opinion that they were expert burglars and had taken the boat to reach a certain house up the river which they intended to rob. The lawyer was impressed by their frank, open manner and their concern that the news of their arrest should not reach their families, as it would break the hearts of their parents to know that such a disgraceful charge was made against them. Nothing had been found on the men but a Bible and a child's picture, bearing a loving inscription and having a little arrangement of hooks and wires apparently for hanging up the picture. The lawyer agreed to defend them and, in his address to the jury, made a strong point of the indications of good character which their sole property furnished. He convinced the jury that two young men cherishing a child's picture and a Bible were not the kind of men to commit a burglary. That was his own opinion; but after the trial he was undeceived. As he insisted on keeping the book and the picture until he had been paid for his services, the clients told him why it was important that they should have them. The hooks and wires attached to the picture were capable in the hands of a skilful man of becoming skeleton keys. The thick covers of the Bible, when pried open, revealed a set of delicate saws and files. Equipped with the tools and keys there were few houses that they could not enter. The Bible and the child's picture were used to divert suspicion. So wicked men often use church-membership or religious activity to conceal evil deeds. They congratulate late themselves on their success forgetting that a day of reckoning is to come:

THE CAVE OF THE WINDS, LAKE SUPERIOR

What is the hope of the hypocrite though he hath gained when God taketh away his soul. (Job 27: 13.)

Exiled by a Threat.

The reason why a prominent citizen of Arkansas is wandering around Europe and is not likely to return for an indefinite time, was told a few days ago by his intimate friends to a reporter of the Washington Post. Ten years ago, the man who is now an exile, was a prosperous man in busy life, with the prospect of gaining high distinction in his State. He had the misfortune to quarrel with a young man of dissipated habits, who was nevertheless the idol of his parents. The young man vowed he would kill the other and, though he was not likely to do it in cold blood, it was feared that he might do so when inflamed with liquor. The time came and the young man did his utmost to kill the man whom he regarded as his enemy. He was so desperate in his attack, which was entirely unprovoked, that there was no way of escape, but by acting in self-defence and the young man was shot down and died in a few hours. There had been several witnesses who could have saved him at his trial, and the facts were so clear that no jury would have convicted him, but the case never came to trial. The homicide forfeited his bail of eight thousand dollars and sailed for Europe. He has never returned. He was told that the father of the young man whom he slew had registered a vow that if the verdict of the jury was "justifiable homicide," he would avenge his son by killing his slayer himself. He was known to be a most determined man who had never failed to keep his word and, rather than run the risk of being murdered, he sacrificed his interests and left the country. He will never return while the avenger lives. So much will a man give up to save his life when he knows it is threatened by a man famous for fulfilling his threats. Yet men will go on unconcerned in a course of evil, though they know that God who has warned them of the consequences is a Being who will fulfil his word.

Thou thoughtest I was altogether such an one as myself, but I will prove thee false. (Ps. 50: 21.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Reformed Church in Hungary, as shown by the late census, numbers 222,725 souls, of whom about 25,000 are Germans.

The Latest University to Open its Doors to women is that of Athens. Five women have been admitted to the winter term, but without violent objection from some of the students.

Mr. E. P. Telford has been Holding Twelve days' mission in the Baptist Church, Bath, England. He had been in mission in Nottingham, where he has had large crowds, and an earnest invitation to return in the autumn for another mission.

Dr. A. T. Pierson has Concluded his Stay in Belfast, Ireland. Before his departure he addressed mass meetings in the Union and Conservative Halls. It was stated that they never had any man in Belfast whose discourse had so appealed to the members of the churches.

Rev. Andrew Murray has been Welcomed back to South Africa by meetings at Cape Town. The many invitation from various quarters to deliver addresses on his next visit which he has received since his return to the colony, show that he is one of the most popular of modern preachers.

According to the Summary of the Census of the German Empire, published by the Independent, the number of clergymen in the whole country is 30,250. Of these, exactly 15,000 are Protestants and 15,250 are Catholics. These figures are remarkable, as the Protestants constitute two-thirds of the population, and the Catholics only one-third.

Evangelist Bilhorn has been holding a successful series of meetings at the Covenant Congregational Church, Chicago. The audiences were large and there were many remarkable conversions.

At a Recent Communion Service at Princeton, Tenn., Union Church, Chicago, which grew out of a Sunday School, the Superintendent reported twenty-eight members, several of whom were baptized. One of the latter was a man nearly eighty-seven years of age.

Rev. Thos. Harrison held a remarkable all-day service in the Methodist Church, Philadelphia, March 22. Dr. Harrison is the introducing him said: "I have the privilege of presenting to you a man whom God has honored, and among whose friends and admirers I count myself. Hundreds and thou sands of men and women bless God to-day that he ever called Brother Harrison into his service."

There has been a Very Successful Revival work carried on in the city of Bellfonte, Penn., under the lead of Evangelist Leonard Weaver, of Canada. During the meetings, which lasted four weeks, it is reported that there were two hundred conversions.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, the Evangelist, Commences this day April 8 a series of meetings in Buffalo, N. Y., to continue till April 29. Extensive arrangements have been made by committees from over forty co-operating churches. Noon-day (Business Men's) meetings will be held, and the largest auditoriums in the city are engaged to accommodate the evening meetings. A choir of 300 voices has been organized to lead the singing.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey was Welcomed at Santa Cruz, Cal., on March 19, by the whole Christian population of the city. The large Methodist church was crowded to hear him sing, and the local journals say that there were enough people outside who could not get in, to fill two such edifices. Mr. Sankey delighted the audience with his singing.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been Paying a visit to New York. He preached on March 25 in the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church, where he was ordained to the ministry. The pastor, Dr. Buchanan, in introducing him, said that he had attended Mr. Hammond's baptism in 1840, when he was a boy and had reason to bless God for that experience. Mr. Hammond says that during his recent tour in Canada he visited towns where he labored twenty years ago, and found that children converted then are now Sunday School Superintendents, teachers and Christian workers. An invitation has been sent to Mr. Hammond to visit them, where there are many Christians converted under his ministry when they were children.

A Mountain Peasant-Bridal.

One of the Many Pleasant and Picturesque Phases of Life in Scandinavia.

FEW more attractive subjects could ever fascinate the eye of the painter than that which is represented in the illustration on this page. Across a mountain-girt lake, in the hill country of Scandinavia, speeds a boat containing a happy bridal party. In that romantic section of Europe, the lakes wind in and out among the mountains, rendering travel by boat often preferable to journey by road. The hardy peasants, inured to toil, and vigorous with their continual outdoor life, enter with zest into the fetes of every description, and especially do they delight in weddings. When a marriage party wish to travel by boat, a roomy vessel is chosen and decorated with vines and flowers. Filled with happy, laughing people, and with the bride and bridegroom as central figures, it sails out smoothly and joyously on the bosom of the lake, the surrounding hills echoing with laughter and song, which are kept up until the other side is reached. A young bridesmaid, possibly the sister of the bride waves her handkerchief gayly to the party in the following boat, while friends and relatives in the boat ahead look back affectionately at the young couple, whose worldly happiness seems now assured.

Herr Bachmann, the artist of this famous picture, is a painter of world-wide reputation, and has devoted himself especially to the delineation of picturesque phases of peasant life. His brush has found material in the Tyrol, the Hartz mountains, the Bohemian Alps, and among the quaintly-garbed peasantry of Dalecarlia and Friesland, or Norway and Sweden, in which latter he could have the dark, gloomy fjords and snow-capped mountains as background for his pictures. The subject here presented is one of his master pieces, and has been incorporated in collections of great art productions of the world.

Invite your Guest Also.

In many homes there is some hesitation felt by the host or hostess about inviting a guest to join in the family worship. Touching this question, Mrs. Amelia E. Barr has this to say in the Ladies' Home Journal: "Perhaps the reluctance arises from a dissimilarity of creed, and fear of offense in consequence. More likely it arises from that sin of restraining spiritual confidence, which is a peculiarly besetting one in this materialistic age, for the diversity of creeds is no bar. Prayer is the universal religion; and men of every creed, and men of no creed may meet together at the feet of our Heavenly Father. The reluctance more likely arises from that weak shame-facedness that too often prevents sympathy between friends on spiritual subjects. They are afraid to be misunderstood, smiled at, criticized. This latter dilemma is one that even good and great men have not always met bravely, for when Dr. Fuller had some guests of great quality and fashion—God-fearing as he was—on their account. This act he bitterly repented. But we should remember that our guests, though they be ever so high or rich, are yet, by all the laws of hospitality, below us while they sojourn under our roof. Therefore, whoever comes within our door should also come within our household customs and discipline. If they sit at our table for meat, it is but kind and right they should also bow at it in prayer."

Where "Pussy" Came From.

"Puss" or "pussy" is a term which is applied not only to the familiar cat or kitten, but by thousands of fathers and mothers playfully to some of their children, and we suppose its equivalent is to be found in almost every language under the sun. A clever writer thus explains the supposed origin of the term: Many ed his way up in the world. I've heard so much of this sort of thing that I'm sick and tired of the whole business; and I'm glad we shan't have men bragging through all eternity how they worked their way into heaven."

Origin of the Wedding-Cake.

When the guests assemble at a wedding-feast and look upon the handsome and artistic wedding-cake that adorns the centre of the table, few probably pause to consider the origin of a custom which is far older than our present civilization. Wedding feasts belong to the earliest ages of the world's history. When in ancient or imperial Rome a maiden was wedded according to the proper custom, she always carried three ears of wheat in her hand, while over her head was broken a simple cake of far and mola salsa as a presage of plenty and an ample abundance of the good things of life. From this primitive custom grew the elaborate plum loaves and the dainty beribboned boxes of luscious richness that form so conspicuous a feature of modern marriage feasts. The bridal wreath of an early English bride was fashioned of bearded and gilded wheat spikes, while, on her return from church, corn and cereals were showered upon her and then carefully gathered up and consumed by the wedding guests. In course of time the grain was ground and made into large, thin, dry biscuit, which were shattered Song of the Van Mother.*

I WILL not rock you, little boy, that sleep;
your soul may bind;
Your brothers have arisen; you only stay behind.
Awake from sleep, my darling! From the West hath shone the sun.
Awake! The happy fortune of Armenia has begun.
Lo, it is fallen, dashed to bits, the Sultan's golden throne!
From under it the liberty of many lands has shone.
Now he who speedily shall rise shall find it liberty:
Will my fair son alone remain fast bound slavery?
We have implored the Sultan with mournful and with cries:
We washed his hands, we washed his feet with salt tears from our eyes.
He would not heed our piteous prayers, our sad, beseeching words;
Now let us see if he will heed the clashing of our swords!
My darling, let me from thine arms unbind
the swaddling band,
And lay a sword of steel within that weak
tender hand!
Go to the bloody battlefield, O slave, and back freed!
O Lord, our God, with thou one day unto our prayer give heed?

—RAPHAEL PATKANIAN.

* From Armenian Poems, by Alice Stone Blackwell.

Fireside Bible Studies.

THERE are many ways in which the lessons of Scripture may be brought home to the juvenile intelligences more pleasantly and pointedly than by books and oral lessons. One lady who takes a deep interest in Scripture object-teaching writes: "Perhaps this can be suggested by telling what I have been successfully used for the amusement of one such little one. At two and a-half years of age things began to be introduced. The first was a well-stocked Noah's Ark. Gradually other sources of amusement were added. At three years there came the temple of knowledge, an ingenious and instructive Bible puzzle often recommended as a freely advertised. Soon after that some picture cards, illustrative of the life of Joseph, were purchased, and proved attractive and useful. Later, the Temple blocks were procured, and the latest source of amusement added is one that would scarcely be thought of in this connection—a chart of Jewish national history. A home-made scrap-book filled with pictures from religious papers has also helped, and so has one of the smaller illustrated Bible dictionaries for picture-books, a home-made 'sand-map,' a set of dolls dressed to represent different missionary countries; a few wool or tin camels, donkeys, or sheep. The last can be used in an endless variety of ways.

The camels would make the trip with which Eleazer went to seek a wife for Isaac; one of the donkeys the ass which Balaam rode; the sheep, the flock tended by Moses or David; they all would represent the wealth of Jacob or Job. It is not so much the material used, so be there is something of appropriateness in the cause to which it is devoted, and the ingenuity and time the mother put into its use, that will make these amusements a joy to the child."

How to Avoid Worry.

An elderly, amiable Christian, speaking to a party of girls, gave them this little bit of wholesome advice:

"You wonder that nothing ever seems to annoy me. Some people, you know, have their trouble three times (I used to have)—first in anticipation, next in experiencing the reality, and, lastly, in living it all over again. But I have made up my mind that to have troubles once is enough. I prefer variety, you see. So now I wait till the disaster befalls; and then I think about it as little as possible, unless I see some way to remedy it, and I forget as soon as I can. I have found out that it isn't really worth while to be disturbed especially by an occurrence that cannot be helped. Thus I escape two-thirds of the worry that I would otherwise have."

A SCANDINAVIAN PEASANT WEDDING PARTY

years ago the people of Egypt, who have many idol gods, worshipped the cat. They thought that she was like the moon, because she was more active at night, and because her eyes changed, just as the moon changes, which is sometimes full, and sometimes only a little bright crescent, or half moon, as we say. Did you ever notice your pussy's eyes to see how they change? So the people made an idol with the cat's head, and named it Pasht, the same name which they gave to the moon; for the word means the "face of the moon." That word has been changed to "Pas," or "Pus," and has come at last to be "Puss," the name which almost everyone gives to the cat. Puss and pussy cat are pet names for kitty everywhere. Whoever thought of it as given to her thousands of years ago, and that then people bowed down and prayed to her?

No Boasters in Heaven.

Mr. Moody has a peculiarly telling way of making an effective point in his gospel addresses. On a recent occasion, speaking of salvation by grace he has said: "It is well that a man can't save himself; for if a man could only work his own way into heaven, you never would hear the last of it. Why, down here in this world, if a man happens to get a little ahead of his fellows, and scrapes a few thousand dollars together, you'll hear him bragging about his being a self-made man, and telling how he began as a poor boy and work-above the blushing maid's flowing locks and then distributed among the bystanders. To this day, too, in some portions of Scotland it is still customary for the best man and first bridesmaid to break a cake over a young wife's head as she crosses the threshold after the marriage ceremony. This is partaken of by all the assembled friends."

Mannerisms of Speech.

There are many mannerisms of speech that belong to certain parts of the country and which are caught up unconsciously by young people, so that when they go away from home those who meet them have little difficulty in deciding from what point they started. For instance, if a young girl drops her final g's, and says mornin', evenin', greetin', meetin', comin', and goin', it is known where she comes from. "I have visited in a place or two where the sweet-voiced people nearly all cut off their final g's," says an observant writer, "and if she rolls her r's, and says the words that have r in them with a burr, I see all a journey made one summer, and I remember numbers of girls who all paid the compliment of twisting it lovingly around their tongues as they used it. A girl who says down for down and caw for cow labels herself as plainly as if she labelled a trunk." It is a good plan for parents to watch these mannerisms on the part of their children and check them, wherever possible.

We now consider the necessity of a personal recognition at the judgment-seat, and whatever difficulty it may present to some minds, such should remember our Lord's words, which say, "We must all appear, that every man may receive according to that he hath done;" and again, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give to me at that day." These and other similar expressions point to a personal recognition, a personal confession, and a personal rewarding.

Saving the Child Waifs.

The Grand Work of Child Redemption that Has Sprung Out of the Efforts of One Man in Louisiana.

THE NEW ORLEANS "WAIFS' HOME."

SAVE the children! "is the watchword of the Christian worker of to-day, who wisely recognizes the truth that in the present redemption of the children lies the true solution to the spiritual condition of the men and women of the future. In many of the larger cities of the United States there are now beneficent agencies at work in behalf of the neglected child."

interest has been awakened in the interest of the children of this State this year than in all the previous years of its history. One year ago I stood almost alone. Here and there was one who had faith in my intentions, and thought there would be no harm in allowing me to experiment. My brethren in the ministry, with one or two notable exceptions, stood aloof from me. I was even waited upon by a committee of prominent gentlemen, and told that a minister should not be at the head of such an association. Christian papers studiously avoided saying anything about the work."

A quotation from Mr. Clay's first annual address will further illustrate his convictions of this work. "For myself, let me say here, what I have not said to any living creature. One time last year, after several weeks' illness, I stood at the gate of the Celestial city—a choice was given me between life and death. Above me, all radiant in glory, stood my mother, a baby brother, two sisters and a company of shining ones, and with sweet voices and beckoning hands they called me, but beneath me were pleading faces and outstretched hands; I could hear the wailing of hunger-pinched children, and the sighing of homeless ones, and it said, 'Lord, I would rather continue this work of child-redemption, much as I would like to rush into those dear arms which so often enfolded me in infancy,' so I came back to work."

Mr. Clay has very much broadened the scope of the work he originally undertook. A Home for the waifs and strays rescued from vicious and immoral parents, became a necessity, and in answer to a plea, in three months the Waifs' Home was purchased and dedicated to this work. Here the society has its offices and headquarters. Into this kindly shelter came

FOUNDERS OF THE NEW ORLEANS WAIFS' HOME.

DR. W. LAWRENCE.

MRS. A. E. CLAY.

REV. A. E. CLAY.

children of the alleys and the slums—the poor waifs who through crime or misfortune have become practically outcast—and they are now being folded by hundreds and thousands in Homes and similar institutions, under the auspices of Christian managers, where they are fed and educated, taught to perform useful labor, and inducted in the Christian religion. Such a work is deserving of sympathy and support, wherever found. The history of a most interesting work of this character, established in a Southern city, is outlined below:

Rev. Alfred E. Clay, President of the Louisiana S. P. C. C., and of the Waifs' Home, began work in the interest of waif and outcast children Feb. 12, 1892. He was then pastor of the Dryades Street M. C. S. in the city of New Orleans. After thorough investigation, extending through two winters, of the slums and dark places of the city, he became convinced that the work of child redemption was of paramount importance, and began a course of Sunday afternoon lectures, which culminated in the organization of the Louisiana Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. This was uphill work. Few could be found who were willing to stand by Mr. Clay in this enterprise. Undaunted, the intrepid man kept on his way until success perched upon his banner. Gradually, friend after friend came to his rescue, willing to share his toil and assist him in his endeavors, so that at this day the Society is one of the most beneficent and firmly established institutions in the country.

Mr. Clay, in speaking of the success of the Society after last year's work, used this language: "I believe that a greater hundreds of poor children from Sorrowland. Mrs. Alfred E. Clay, at her own cost, undertook the care and maintenance of the Home for two years, when the funds of the society became sufficiently large to pay a matron.

During the summer in New Orleans, the mortality among young children becomes very great. Noting this, Mr. Clay conceived the idea of gathering the children of the streets together and giving them a wholesome seaside outing. Last year he undertook the work. Near Biloxi, on the Mississippi Sound, the Seashore Academy was for rent, and here the children were brought. Dr. W. Laurence Stevenson, a prominent physician of New Orleans, and secretary of the society, gave his services gratuitously, as superintendent of the outing. Mr. Clay is now endeavoring to purchase, at a cost of about $6,000, a home on the Gulf coast, to be used as a permanent home for the summer outings, and as a winter sanitarium and agricultural school. $2,275 has been already subscribed. Friends who are interested can learn all needed particulars by addressing the Secretary at the Waifs' Home, 141 Clito street, New Orleans.

Lifted Up.

IN the midst of the ages, God's wonderful son Atoned on the cross for sins we have done, Lifted up for the world, that he healing might give, That sin-bitten souls might behold him and live. Make haste, O ye sinners, fix on him your eyes, The dear Friend of sinners, the one sacrifice. O, let his rich life-blood flow over your soul, 'Twill cleanse you and save you, make perfectly whole.

Make haste to forsake and forever to leave, Whatever the dear loving Saviour will grieve, Make haste to adore him, with joyful acclaim, And live evermore to the praise of his name.

SARAH M. PARKER.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government and Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N.Y.

thin baby

To be thin, for a baby, is to be deprived of its natural ease; to suffer and not be able to feel it; to wear a sad pinched face; to live on the edge of sickness; to grow imperfectly; and to lose the power of resisting disease. When a baby is thin it needs more fat than it gets from its food; it is starved, fat-starved. Scott's Emulsion is the easiest fat it can have; the fat it needs.

50c. and $1.00 at all druggists.

Drink Pure Water

—filtered water. But get the right filter. There's one that's best for many reasons—one reason is the perfect automatic cleaning device. To learn the other reasons, send for book about the "Crystal Fountain" Germ-proof Filter. Free for the asking. Also Gravity Filters, in which we use the Crystal Fountain Rock Tube.

The Geo. L. Squier Mfg. Co.,
Filter Dept. "G." Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A.

LAUGHING CAMERA. 10c.

The latest invention in Cameras. You look through the lens and your stout friends will look like living skeletons, your thin friends like Dime Museum fat men, horses like giraffes, and in fact everything appears as though you were living in another world. Each camera contains two strong lenses in nearly finished leather case. The latest method on the market creates pictures of sport, Catalogues of funny novelties and landscapes. Camera 10c. for 25c., mailed postpaid. Agents wanted. Robert H. Ingersoll & Bro., Dept. No. 10 65 Cortlandt St., New York.

8 Years Cured:
W. L. WEDGER,
Roslindale, Boston, Mass.

7 Years Cured:
J. L. TREVILLYAN,
24 5th St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

8 Years Cured:
MRS. A. P. FOSTER,
Chelsea, Mass.

5 Years Cured:
J. W. GILLESPIE,
Black River, N. Y.

5 Years Cured:
W. E. WELLER,
164 Cherry St., Burlington, Vt.

TO HAY-FEVER
SUFFERERS
WE OFFER
A CURE THAT STAYS.

Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief, but eradicates the cause of the disease and cures to stay cured. Particulars and blank for free examination on application.

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.
Rose Cold, June Cold, Hay-Fever, Asthma.

Great

Sales proved by the statements of leading druggists everywhere, show that the people have an abiding confidence in Hood's Sarsaparilla. Great

Cures proved by the voluntary statements of thousands of people, show that Hood's Sarsaparilla has great power over disease by purifying, enriching and invigorating the blood, upon which health and life depend.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Jackson Sanatorium

At DANVILLE, NEW YORK.

Main Building Absolutely Fire-proof.

For thirty-seven years the leading Health Institution in America, is under the personal care of regularly educated and experienced physicians, and is distinctive in its methods and character. A delightful home for health and rest seekers in which every provision is made for recreation, comfort, and good cheer, as well as for skilled medical care and treatment.

For illustrated pamphlet address
J. ARTHUR JACKSON, M.D., Sec'y.
P. O. Box 1865.

ALL WOOL

SUIT

for $5.95

Made in frock or sack suits in the latest styles, equal to any clothier's $12 garments. Higher priced suits equally as cheap. We do not ask you to buy a "blind pig" but will send samples of the leading spring and summer cloths, measurement blank and tape line free. Agents Wanted.
JOHN Z. QUINCY & CO.,
04-106 West Quincy St., Chicago, Ill.

THE IMPROVED

Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and retains the rupture under the most excessive or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lacks attendant troubles. Examine the same at once.
IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

Requests for Prayer.

AT the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Mar. 29, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Sons and Daughters. "Believer," Springfield, Ill., for the conversion of a son who is away from home and is in danger of becoming addicted to intoxicating drink; also for a daughter and daughter-in-law who have not given their hearts to God.—"Father, Mother and Sisters," Trent, S. D., that two sons who are good and dutiful but not decided Christians may give their hearts to the Lord; also for three sons-in-law who are without hope of heaven.—"D.I.M., Washington, D. C., that sons who need God's converting grace may be saved from their besetting sins and made sons of God.—"Anxious Father," Westminster, Conn., that an only son away from home, a good boy but not yet a Christian may give himself to Christ.—"J. H. S., Round Top, Tenn., for the conversion of his eldest son and daughter.—"L. D., Marshfield, Ore., for the conversion of three sons, the youngest of whom is giving much cause for anxiety.—"Reader," Grub Gulch, Cal., for the conversion of a son.—"C. M., Pilot Mound, Ia., that three grown-up children now unconvinced might be brought to God, especially that one of them who has been cruel to his mother might be brought to repentance.—"True Believer," Vermont, for three sons and two daughters who are not Christians, especially for one daughter who is not long for this world, that she might return to the Saviour whom she once professed to follow.—"Believer," Fulkerson, Mo., that two sons and a daughter may give their hearts to God.—"One who loves Jesus," Home, Pa., that two sons and a daughter might be brought to Christ, especially one son who is in sore trouble over the loss of his wife, that in his distress he might turn to the Lord.—"I. N. N., Iowa, that a daughter whose undutiful conduct is a source of trouble might have a new heart.—"A Wisconsin Mother," for the conversion of two sons, especially the younger whose love of tobacco is leading him to saloons and is in great danger of ruin.—"Reader," Giltner, Neb., that two sons who are not yet in Christ might be led to him.—"Mrs. F., Los Angeles, Cal., for the conversion of two sons and their wives, who are all in need of God's converting grace.—"A. A. H., Greenfield, Mass., that three sons just emerging from boyhood might be won to Christ in their youth.—"H. W., Sprague, Neb., for the salvation of ten children, whose lost condition is the worst of many troubles and anxieties in a very sad life.

For the Conversion of other Relatives. "Hoping One," Winfield, Kan., that her husband who thinks he can be saved by his good moral life may be brought to see his need of a Saviour.—"One in Trouble," Tannery, Md., that a brother who is the victim of an insidious drug might be delivered and made a child of God.—"Daughter," Ft. Atkinson, Wis., on behalf of an aged mother.—"M., Wisconsin, for four brothers and that their parents might become more faithful and devoted Christians.—"R. G., Mebane, N. C., that a beloved father now an aged man might be led to give his heart to God.—"N. S. C., Stanton, Tenn., for many grandchildren that they might all become children of God.—"Believer in Prayer," Vt., that a husband who has become an infidel might see the error of his way and learn to love God and trust in Christ.—"Christian Endeavorer," Ohio, for the conversion of a brother-in-law who is leading a sinful life.—"L. D., Marshfield, Ore., that her husband might be converted and restored to his family.—"Ruth," that husband and wife who are seeking Christ might be enabled to find him, and that two brothers and two brothers-in-law might be aroused by the Holy Spirit to pray for their own salvation.—"R. R. S., Berlin, Mass., for the conversion of a brother who is very sick.—"M. S., Ada, O., that God would mercifully save husband, brother, sister and sister-in-law who are all unconcerned about their eternal welfare.—"H. H., DeForest, Wis., that God would speak peace to her husband's heart and enable him to see that there is no ground for the despair that is making him almost demented.—"A. B. N., Macungie, Pa., that a brother who is seeking peace with God and peace with his family might be enabled to find it wholly and implicitly.

For the Conversion of Friends. "Anxious Mother," Springfield, Ia., for the conversion of a man and his wife, who are urgently in need of a change of heart.—"L. E., Scranton, that a beloved friend who is in circumstances of fierce temptation and is in danger of being lost might be brought to Christ.—"A. C., New York City, that one who seems bent on going to ruin and is proving false to sacred promises, might be led to see the error of his ways and fly to Jesus for deliverance.—"Epworth Leaguer," for a dear friend for whom prayers have been offered in secret for many weeks, that she may turn from her sin and seek Christ.—"Reader," Bond Head, for a young friend that he may be converted from the temptations surrounding him and seek grace to be a true Christian.—"J. S. A., Holt, Mich., that a young man and his wife who are worldly and profane might be truly converted to God.—"Broken Hearted," Brooklyn, N. Y., for the conversion of a young man who seemed so good and such a devoted Christian and who was trusted implicitly but proves to have been all the time unsaved, that he may realize his wickedness and seek pardon and do all that is now possible to atone for his wrong-doing.—"Reader," Hazard, Neb., that a husband and wife who appear to be drifting apart from each other and liable to have their home broken up, might be led to seek Christ and through him may have new hearts softened and sanctified and be made one in Christ.—"J. H., Missouri, that two dear friends, young married men, might be aroused to seek salvation.—"Constant Reader," Pa., that a dear friend and his wife might both be brought to Christ and that the husband might forsake his life of sin and become once more the affectionate, faithful kindly man he used to be.

For the Restoration of Health. "One who must believe," Michigan, that a distressing nervous affliction from which a sincere Christian is now suffering may be removed.—"A. S. H., Valley View, Tex., that one who has already been healed in answer to prayer may recover from a new trial.—"Daughter," Binghamton, N. Y., that her mother may be healed and spared further suffering.—"E. T., Claverack, N. Y., who is suffering from epilepsy, that he and his father who is also very ill might be healed by the Great Physician.—"New Subscriber," Worcester, Pa., who has been many years a sufferer that God would give healing so that certain duties may be performed; also that guidance may be given in a momentous matter.—"S. E. P., Mexico, Mo., that the mother of a family who some months ago sustained an injury that deprived her of the power of walking, may recover and be able to attend to her maternal duties; also that her married daughter may be restored to health.—"Sorrowing One," Orangeburg, S. C., a minister who has long been ill and whose means have been swept away by the expenses of his sickness so that he is liable to lose his home, that God would restore him to health and enable him to meet his obligations.—"S. E. C., New Jersey, for the restoration of health of herself and brother.—"M. A., Streator, Ill., who has been a sufferer for many years and is now threatened with nervous prostration, that God would give her the physical and mental strength she needs and save her from losing her reason.—"D. T. M., Washington, D. C., for recovery from physical and mental weakness which is becoming very distressing.—"Reader," that God would mercifully restore the sense of hearing.—"Friend," that a sick girl about to go into a hospital might recover under the treatment she is to receive.—"J. S. A., Holt, Mich., that he may recover health and strength to resume his pulpit work.—"Daughter," Ft. Atkinson, Wis., that God would restore her aged mother's hearing.

For Special Blessings. "H. L. B., Bolton Landing, N. Y., for one who is passing through deep, bitter grief, that God would give her his sweet consolation and lead her to trust in him and be resigned to her lot.—"Friend and Believer," Missouri, for help in an impending crisis.—"E. E. E., for grace and strength to overcome a habit which it is feared is sinful but which it seems impossible to break off.—"X. Y. Z., that the wealthy kindred of an aged couple may be moved to provide them with the necessities of life.—"Distressed Widow, Harris, Ga., that the way may be opened for her to support her three small children.—"Believer," Central, O., that one who has been rescued from a long course of dissipation may be relieved from despondency, may be kept from relapsing into sin and that God would enable him to atone for the past by a life of Christian service.—"M. M. C., Fort Scott, Kans., that a home now made miserable by wicked temper may be again the abode of peace.—"C. M., Pilot Mound, Ia., who has lost her husband and seems likely to lose all her property that in mercy God would raise up friends and give her the strength to do his will.—"J. H. S., Round Top, Tenn., who is living far away from church privileges that in some way there may be a change so that he may once more enjoy the services of the sanctuary.—"N. A. J., Lake Helen, Fla., for God's grace to touch the hearts of outsiders that there may be a great revival which shall bring them into the church.—"Reader, Baltimore, Md., that the trouble and unhappiness in the home may be removed.—"P. L. H., Brooklyn, N. Y., that in some way the means may be provided to enable him to return to college and complete his preparations for the ministry.—"Believer," Newcastle, Pa., that one who is sorrowful and distressed may have consolation of the Gospel and have more heart to work in the Master's service.—"The following persons ask prayers that they may be enabled to meet the circumstances of sore trial that they may honestly discharge the obligations they have incurred:—"Believer," Hanover, N. H.;—"Reader," Gillingham, Mo.;—"Believer," Fort Ann, N. Y.;—"W. H. S., Salina, Kans.

The Power of a Good Example.
Gen. John Nicholson, a Christian soldier, who bore a distinguished part in the Indian Mutiny, was greatly respected and admired by the Sikhs; some of them, indeed, were prepared literally to worship him as a god. It was a common sight of an evening to see groups of Sikhs come into camp in order that they might see Nicholson; they used to be admitted into his tent in bodies of about a dozen at a time. Once in his presence, they seated themselves on the ground and fixed their eyes upon the object of their adoration, who all the while went steadfastly on with whatever work he was engaged in, never even lifting his eyes to their faces. Sometimes one of them would prostrate himself in prayer. This was an offence against which warning had been given, and the penalty never varied—three dozen lashes with the cat-o-nine tails on the bare back. This they rejoiced in, saying, "Our god knew that we had been doing wrong, and therefore punished us." When, however, the news reached them of Nicholson's death, one of them addressing the others, said: "Nicholson always said that he was a man like as we are, and that he worshipped a God whom we could not see, but who was always near us. Let us learn to worship his God." The tribe, under Christian teachers, were all subsequently baptised.

A pure cream of tartar powder.

CLEVELAND'S

Only a rounded spoonful is required, of Cleveland's Baking Powder not a heaping spoonful.

BAKING POWDER

"Pure" and "Sure."

Food raised with Cleveland's baking powder has no bitter taste, but is sweet and keeps sweet and fresh.

Going To... EUROPE?
H. Gaze & Sons (Ltd.)
The Universal Tourist Agents (Est. 1849) will send out 67 Escorted Parties of the highest class. Write for the details. Individual Tours Everywhere and direct berths on all steamship lines. TOURIST GAZETTE—Post FREE. 113 Broadway, N.Y. or 411 Washington St., Boston, 220 So. Clark St., Chicago, 135 So. Fifth St., Philadelphia.

HOW TO LIVE WELL ON 25 CENTS A DAY.

By Mrs. Cassie Lemcke, one of the most noted cooks and housekeepers of the day. It contains a complete list of recipes for every day's meals, also valuable hints for housewives.

This book is for sale by all dealers, or it will be sent by mail postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents by J. S. BIGLOW PUBLISHING COMPANY, 65 Rose St., N. Y. Agents Wanted.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps).
THE HUMAN HAIR.
Why it Falls Out, How to Grow It, and the Remedy.
By Prof. HARLEY LARKER, F.R.S., London.
D. G. LONG & Co., 103 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
"Every one should read this little book."—Athenaeum

Armenia and Her People.

By Rev. GEORGE H. LILIAN, banished by the Turkish Government from the Evangelical Church at Marsovan. Endorsed by the Rev. C. C. HARRIS, R. S. STODDARD, HENRY VAN DYKE, and the clergy generally. Fully illustrated and bound in a handsome case and bound in cloth. Price 25c. A great deal of territory and save time. Write for a copy and it will be sent to you. Address: THE AMERICAN PUBLISHING CO., Hartford, Conn.

SEE HOW FLEXIBLE!

New style, No. 224, at $1.00; extra long waist. For young girls' needs—for study, gymnastics, for everyday wear—there is no waist so yielding, so free from undue pressure and restraint, affording such support to the figure and imparting such grace of contour as the for Misses. Made in all sizes for Women and Children also. Long or short waist, high or low bust. Children's 25c. to 50c. Misses' 50c. to $1. Ladies' $1 to $2. For sale by all retailers.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE CORSET WAIST

Get Acquainted WITH THE B...&... H Lamp

YOU WILL LIKE IT.
Our Little Book, mailed free, gives particulars and will interest you in our Gas and Electric Fixtures, Fireplace Furniture, B. & H. Oil Heaters, Art Metal Goods, etc. Leading Dealers will supply Our Goods.

BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO., Meriden, Conn.
NEW YORK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA.

WANTED.—SALESMEN to introduce REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGES' latest greatest, most famous book, "THE EARTH GIRDLED."
Samoa, Hawaii, the South Seas, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Europe, and all their wonders. Thrilling experiences among savages, cannibals, and wild races. Amazing heat, then superlatives, startling revelations: 400 original photographs of curious races and strange places. $12 a day to salesmen. No capital or experience required, exclusive territory. Extraordinary inducements and illustrated circulars free. Be quick. Address, Historical Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

GIVEN TO EVERY LADY A New Book on Fancy Work containing 50 handsome illustrations. Among them are designs for Sofa Pillows, Table Covers, Scarfs, Tray Cloths, Dollies, Celluloid Work, Tapestry Painting and Embroidery; also another book giving directions how to make all kinds of Rugs and Mats, 65 in all. These two books will mail you free. You will send 10c for a 3 months trial subscription to The Home a 21 page paper containing stories, fashions and latest work. It is illustrated. Send in 10c. The Home, 141 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME.
Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School.
$30 per 100 copies.
Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People.
$30 per 100 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of lower price. The best are cheapest!!
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
76 BURLING ST. NEW YORK. 215 WILSON AVE. CHICAGO.

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Decorative, Durable and Best
For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new.
Send for Catalogue B.
H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

MUSIC SALE
To close out our stock we send by mail 70 pieces, full sheet music, size 10 in. and instrumental, all parts complete, all for 20c.; or 4 for 50c. Most back of our stock. "Only One Girl in the World for Me," and 100 Songs with music. 5c. each. H. S. Northrop, 333 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

CATARRH. Send name for FREE package, sure cure, send post paid to you.
G. S. STODDARD, 1223 Niagara street, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE CAP OF THE SPHINX.

AMONG the many archaeological discoveries recently made in Egypt, there are few that surpass in interest one made on Feb. 24 last, at Ghizeh. While Col. G. E. Raum, who has been conducting excavations around the base of the Sphinx and the Pyramids, was at work in a temple whose ruins lie between the fore-paws of the colossal figure of the Sphinx, he suddenly came upon the missing cap of the figure, at a depth of nearly fifteen feet below the surface of the earth. The cap (which is shown in the illustration on this page), bears on one of its sides a carved representation of the three lotus columns with a snake beneath them. It is 51 inches in width at the bottom and twenty-six inches across the top, and the entire stone is painted red. As this cap or headpiece of the mysterious figure has been missing for centuries, and its absence has been a subject for discussion among learned societies and by archaeologists generally, its recovery will be hailed with delight by all who are interested in the study of antiquity.

THE SPHINX'S CAP.

Missing for Centuries . . . Recovered Feb. 24, 1896.

To Col. Raum belongs the credit not only of finding this remarkable relic, but also of discovering the fact that in the head of the figure of the Sphinx there was a deep hole, which had evidently been intended to support some crown or head-dress. This hole had been filled up with sand of the desert and was overlooked for centuries. It was in the course of his search for the missing head-piece that he unearthed the temple between the fore-paws of the colossus. Among the debris of this temple ruin was found the missing cap. Although thousands of years have elapsed since the figure was constructed and set up there, the paint of the stone cap is still quite clear and of good color. It is supposed to have either fallen down from its lofty position by accident at some remote period, or to have been taken down designedly during some disturbance in Egypt.

There are certain investigators who discredit the discovery, declaring that there is not sufficient evidence to show that the archaeological find of Col. Raum is really the Sphinx's cap at all. They point to the fact that the head of the figure is nearly thirty feet long, and fourteen feet wide across the brows, while the headdress at each side extends still further beyond this. Even allowing that the width at the top would be considerably less, still it is claimed that a cap of the dimensions of that found by Col. Raum would be altogether inadequate, and would look absurdly out of place. If the relic should be really the cap, it is in all probability only a fragment, instead of the whole.

A Missionary's Peril.

From China comes the report of a narrow escape from death of the Rev. Griffith John, one of the most distinguished missionaries in that land, whose portrait was recently published in this journal. It appears that Dr. John and Mr. Bonsey were desirous of visiting Tien-Men and King Shan in the interests of the missionary society. The journey had to be made by boat, as the whole district was flooded, and the country in which there are three lakes was one wide sea. Dr. John says: We anchored at a small place called Yu-kia-hang. No sooner did we anchor than the wind changed, and began to blow from the north. Before midnight it had risen to a hurricane, and the cold had become very intense. Early next morning I ventured outside. Whilst standing on the fore part of the boat, a rickety old house just in front of me began to swing to and fro, and before I had time to give it a second thought, the whole concern was down about my ears. Fortunately, the structure consisted of timber and thatch, and so fell against the boat as to form a perfect pen, in which I found myself most snugly ensconced. Not a post nor a beam touched me. When I realized the situation, it appeared to me so ridiculous that I found it impossible not to indulge in a loud laugh, which, as I learnt afterwards, brought much relief to the fold with me. No sooner, however, did I emerge out of the debris than I saw that the event might have had a very different ending, and my heart went out in gratitude to God for the escape.

The Indwelling Christ.

DWELLING, O God, in me,
Dwelling in me;
Gladly my heart would plead
To welcome thee;
Tho' wondrous thought it be,
Dwelling, O God, in me,
Dwelling in me.
By faith I wait on thee,
Spirit Divine!
Come, shed abroad thy love,
My will incline;
'Tis life and peace to be
Dwelling, O God, in me,
Dwelling in me.
My heart thy temple make
Secure for thee;
Live there both rich and full,
Thyself for me;
Thus pure my thoughts shall be,
Dwelling, O God, in me,
Dwelling in me.
Thy grace sufficient is
For every strife;
Help me, by faith and love,
To show my life
A vict'ry won by thee,
Dwelling, O God, in me,
Dwelling in me.
Then, till my latest breath,
Thyself impress;
That brightly may my face
And life express
The sweetest joy of thee,
Dwelling, O God, in me,
Dwelling in me.

—REV. D. M. BUCHANAN.

Lanark, Ont.

O'NEILL'S

Sixth Avenue,
20th to 21st St.
NEW YORK.Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Millinery, Cloaks, Costumes, Children's Clothing, House Furnishings, Furniture,
China, Glassware, Etc.

Go where You may—

you will find no such variety of Spring Colors and Styles in Children's Garments as that displayed at "The Big Store." Every novelty that adds grace and comfort to the juvenile apparel is found in these departments. Our Prices are different from those of any other house—they are lower. These, for instance:

For Girls

Flannel Dresses.

Girls All-Wool Flannel Dresses,
Handsomely trimmed with braid and Bretelles, variety of colorings,
6 to 14 year sizes:

$1.98

For Boys

Middy Suits

Of fine serge or Cheviot, same design as above cut, in 3 to 8 year sizes; actually worth $6.00, on sale at $3.98

Send for our Grocery Catalogue. Every Housekeeper within 100 miles of New York City who desires to save from 25 to 40 per cent. on Grocery purchases should have one.

CATALOGUE

FREE

Now is the time to buy a PIANO or ORGAN from the largest manufacturers in the world, who sell their instruments direct to the public at wholesale factory prices. DON'T PAY a profit to agents and middlemen. Terms to suit all. No money asked in advance. Proof of testing organ or piano in your own home 30 days. No expense to you if not satisfactory. Warranted 15 years.

REFERENCE Bank references furnished on application; the editor of this paper; any business man of this town, and to the thousands using our instruments in their homes. A book of testimonials sent with every catalogue. As an advertisement we will sell the first Piano in a place for only $160. The first Organ only $25, Steel, Book, &c. FREE. If you want to buy for cash, If you want to buy on instalments, BUT DON'T BUY UNTIL YOU Write Us.

BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO.

P. O. Box 741 WASHINGTON, N. J.

SAMPLES FREE

FREIGHT PREPAID

ALFRED PEATS

Prize

WALL PAPER

We will mail you samples free of our Prize Patterns, 1896 Series, together with our guide, "How to Paper, and Economy in Home Decoration." If you will send us a description of the different rooms you have to paper, and what they are used for, we will carefully select the patterns and colorings most suitable. Our new $1,000 Prize Designs are the most artistic and delicately colored papers in the market, and are better made than those of any other manufacturer. Prices

10 cents and up per roll.

The New York World says: "None so beautiful, so perfect, or offered so cheap." The Chicago Tribune says: "They will be in great demand by people of artistic taste." Over 2,000,000 rolls of other papers carried in stock. Prices marked in plain figures on each sample.

3 cents and up per roll.

WE PREPAY THE FREIGHT.

Send to us for samples and you will positively get the latest colorings and designs to select from.

AGENTS WANTED. One agent wanted in each town who can furnish good references, to sell from our large sample books on commission, and to whom we can forward all requests for samples in their vicinity. Experience not necessary. Agent's outfit complete.

Prices and Samples are Our Best Argument.

Write to nearest address.

41-43 W. 14th St.
NEW YORK.

ALFRED PEATS

143-145 WABASH AVE.
CHICAGO.For Over-Indulgence
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

It preserves and renews the vitality, strengthens the nerves and stimulates the stomach to healthy action.

Do not put off taking a spring medicine. Little ailments, if neglected, will soon break up the system. Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate now to expel disease and give you strength and health.

FOR BRONCHIAL AND ASTHMATIC COMPLAINTS, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" have remarkable curative properties.

POLIO

THE NEW MONUMENT.

PASSING down the street in Washington, attention now is directed to the large and expensive pedestal for the monument of General Hancock, and my mind goes into a reverie concerning that remarkable man. The grandest physique that was probably ever built on this continent went to ruin when Hancock died. As Melrose or Kenilworth Castle has only broken arches or fragments of stately aisles to show for all the courtly or imperial pomp that once worshipped or reigned in its the kingly soul of General Hancock departed and left only the dismantled ruins of a great tower of national strength and a shattered temple of the Holy Ghost. When God honors such a soul with such a body, the world should recognize it. After the human race has for six thousand years been smitten of pneumonias, and consumptions, and rheumatisms, and dropsy, and marasms, and all that cruel, enervating and dissipated habit can inflict, it is a grand thing to have a physical giant like Hancock show what the human race was before man began to evolve downward, and what it may be when all human element has been extirpated from the world and men pay as much attention to the blood of the human race as they do the blood of animals, and the Southdown and the Alderney shall be no more common in the fields of our great stock owners, than the six feet four inches high and well proportioned shall become on the streets of our great cities.

Even the giants, that the world has heard of, have not, for the most part, turned out well. Samson, who was great in piling down pillars, but not great in rearing them; Goliath, who defied the armies of the living God; the lofty Og, King of Bashan, remarkable for nothing but the length of his iron bedstead; Saul, the assassin and suicide; the sons of Anak, who defied Israel; the mythological titans, good for nothing but to rock the foundations of the earth and turn them into billowing alleys. So that when we find, in our day, a man of lofty and magnificent stature devoting himself to the best interests of his country and to his family, as did General Hancock, we say, at his appearance on the stage of action, "All hail!" at his exit we would like, with every appropriate demonstration, to do honor to his memory. Many of the achievements of the North and South seemed brilliant accidents, and climbed up on the gun carriages into civil positions which they never could have reached. But Gettysburg did not make Hancock; Hancock made Gettysburg. The nation did nothing for him. The effort to put him in the White House failed. So he stood at the top, with none of the glamor of civil office upon his brow, with no honor except that which he had earned by a useful life, and a sword that had put back into its scabbard with as much force as that with which he once unsheathed it. There is no need that one make comparison as to who was greatest in army or navy during these four years innamined with fratricidal slaughter. In the twenty-five hundred dollars were bequeathed to the man who should be found the bravest in the British army. The two executors of the will called upon the Duke of Wellington and offered him the money. He declined it, saying, "It is due Sir James MacDonell for the defense of the Pigmont farm-house at Waterloo, receding the gates after they had been forced open." But when the money was offered to Sir James MacDonell, as the bravest man in the army, he also declined it and it is said that no one whom the executors thought worthy of the honorable prize would take it, each one asking that it be bestowed upon some other, and if the honor of being called the bravest man in the Northern army had been offered to Hancock, or Grant, or Sherman, or McClellan, or Nathaniel Lyon, or Reynolds, or in the Southern army to Lee, or Jackson, or Leonidas Polk, or Stuart, or Sidney Johnston, each would in favor of some other have declined it. We shall not take the responsibility of saying who was the greatest. You cannot measure men as you measure mountains. These Mt. Blancs of the human race reach above the clouds, and no altimeter can estimate their comparative elevations. The one excels in valor, another in patience of attack, another other in power of organization, another in personal magnetism, one in besiegement, one in skilful resistance, one on the land, and one on the sea.

Plenty of room in the gallery of our national firmament for both Halleck and Grant, although unwise contestants have engaged in battle of graveyards, and by the defilement of one, attempted the glorification of the other. In my opinion, if George B. McClellan had been at the head of the Northern army at the close of the war, as he was at the beginning, when everything was chaotic and the soldiers were untired, and the Southern army were in the enthusiasm of their first successes, he would have gained as decisive victories and received as many honors as did the one to whom the Confederacy finally surrendered. Room for all their names on the roll of national fame, and for the recitation of their deeds in the anthem of the centuries! At death Hancock went out to meet his regiments that fell at Contreras, and Churubusco, and Hatcher's Run, and the Wilderness, and Spottsylvania Court-house, and Cold Harbor. What a meeting it must have been when the heroes began to gather in the "land of the dead," and the newly-arrived told of the restored peace of the nation and the high prosperity resultant upon their deed, whether they were hewn down by the saber of cavalryman, or dropped into the midnight stream by the flash of sharpshooter, or wasted away from the malaria inhaled in the swamps of the Chickahominy.

This monument in Washington to Hancock suggests to me his fidelity to home life. What a sadness that so many of the warriors of the earth have been as noted for their faults as for their heroics! On nearly all the public squares of England stand the highest monuments to Lord Nelson, the fearless one of Santa Cruz and Trafalgar, as mighty a name as Great Britain can boast of, yet soiled with a social infamy that he mentioned with pride, rather than repentance, when he came to die, and the world cannot forget that though he saved England he destroyed the home of Lord Hamilton. But this monument to Hancock suggests a character untarnished and in every way illustrious. The last time I saw this friend was one day in his home at Governor's Island, when he pointed me to the picture of the beautiful daughter who had died years before, but his manner indicated that the grief was unabated and the loss overshadowing still. The next time I see him will be in the day when the reveille of the resurrection sounds and the Lord of Hosts shall marshal all the armies of the living and the dead, and they shall come up from Theban, and Babylonian, and Crimean, and Sardinian, and Egyptian, and Italian, and American battlefields, and great commander shall be as private soldier, and the king as his subject, and it shall be found out how each one of us, whether in high position or low, did his duty.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE.

A Soldier's Faith.

The late Dr. Adolph Saphir, in his remarkable book, "The Divine Unity of the Scriptures," relates that General Schmidt, a battle-scarred veteran who was noted for his courage, was asked by the infidel King Frederick, called "the Great," why he believed the Bible? "Because," promptly responded the gallant soldier, "it reveals to me a Father who numbers the very hairs of my head; because it reveals to me a Saviour who expiates every one of my sins; because it reveals to me a heaven where I am to spend an everlasting and blessed eternity." Such faith is sure to give courage amid the trials of life, and to meet "the last enemy that is to be conquered."

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these and hundreds of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1764 Broadway, New York, is sending out large trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a large trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Nervous Headache

few escape. It is one of the penalties of the age. Our grandparents never had it. They had nerve but not nerves. In their day more than half the physicians were not prescribing

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

as a nerve sedative, as they are today. Contains no opiate of any kind. Perfectly safe. Prompt relief. Builds up and strengthens the whole system.

Regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. All druggists. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Sample by mail 25 cents. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co., Manufacturing Chemists,

106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

3

Beautiful Chrysanthemums For 10c

Send 10c for the above 3 Chrysanthemums.

The Big Six Chrysanthemum Set for 25 Cents.

A beautiful ivory white chrysanthemum, A charming incurved lemon colored sort. A delicate pink variety. A large and distinct orange prize kind. A splendid rich bright crimson variety. A gorgeous and unique drooping kind.

The above fine set of Chrysanthemums for 25c.

6 Charming and Sweet Scented Tea Roses, label'd for 25c
6 Splendid Double Geraniums all colors, label'd for 25c
6 Beautiful Single Geraniums fine assortment, label'd for 25c
6 Sweetest and best Carnations, choice colors, label'd for 25c
6 The Loveliest Fuchsias, double and single, label'd for 25c
6 Giant Prize Chrysanthemums, all fine colors, 25c
The Grand African Blue Lily, 25c

Our Great Chrysanthemum Offer. The Mikado Collection of 15 PRIZE CHRYSANTHEMUMS FOR 50c.

Send 10c for our beautiful catalogue full of original illustrations. Our special bargain edition free to all. MCGREGOR BROS., Springfield, O.

3 NOVELTIES HIGH QUALITY LOW PRICE.

ASTER, GIANT COMET WHITE. Immense. CUPID SWEET PEA. Six seeds. White. Japanese Imperial Morning Glory. See cut. Pansy Parisian Fancy. 40 colors. New strain. Petunia--Pyramidal Tree. Poppies--Double. All colors. Snow Queen Candytuft. Sweet Peas, 40 kinds. Verbenas--Mammoth.

16 ABOVE FLOWERS FOR 25c.

To anyone sending for 4 of these collections from 4 people, with names and addresses enclosed I will send

FREE 5 BEGONIA BULBS IN 5 COLORS OR 5 BULBS 50 CENTS.

Flowers are 4 inches across. Crimson, Yellow, White, Pink and Blotched. Bloom in pots in the house summer and winter; outside are smothered with bloom all summer. Try to secure 4 orders and get these free. Little work, good pay. Catalogue--Directions for Growing, Premium, and Prize Books with every order. You can make money selling my seeds.

MISS MARY E. MARTIN, FLORAL PARK, NEW YORK.

We guarantee Heiskell's Ointment to quickly and permanently cure Eczema, Scald-Head, Barber's Itch or Tetter without the aid of internal medicine. 50c. per box at Druggists or by mail. JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., 531 Commerce St., PHILADELPHIA.

SEED TIME

is at hand, and what to do next, is best told by Vaughan's Gardening Illustrated for 1896. It tells the whole story of Gardening to date, and illustrates the best and most complete stock of Fresh Flower and Vegetable Seeds in America. Our customers claim and we agree with them, that should be sown in every garden. For trial we shall give away

Six Best Novelties 1 Pkt. Giant Japan Morning-glory 1 Pkt. New Red Pansy 1 Pkt. New Yellow Aster 1 Pkt. Double Sweet Peas 1 Pkt. Yellow Sweet Peas 1 Pkt. Verbena--fiery scarlet Provided you name this paper. Write to-day.

FOR 14c. postpaid VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE, New York Chicago 26 Barclay St. or 44 Randolph St.

15 LARGE PKTS. NEW FLOWER SEEDS FOR ONLY 15 CENTS

To pay postage and packing. 1 Pkt. New Japanese Imperial Morning Glory (as shown in cut). This grand new variety is truly Wonderful; flowers very large, all colors, red, green, marble tined, white spotted with blue, and a lot of incomparable beauty. 1 Pkt. Mammoth Pansy, 1 Pkt. Cosmos, 1 Pkt. Crimson Eye Hibiscus, 1 Pkt. Chinese Pink, 1 Pkt. Aster, 1 Pkt. Gaillardia, 1 Pkt. Godetia, 1 Pkt. Larkspur, 1 Pkt. Giant Cozcomb, 1 Pkt. Sweet Alyssum, 1 Pkt. Candytuft, 1 Pkt. Mignonette, 1 Pkt. Phlox. 1 Pkt. Sweet Pea. 15 large packets chosen vegetable seeds, all different kinds 15 cts. 15 bulbs New Gladioli 15 cts. We will send the three collections for Only 35 Cents. Remember we refund your money if not as represented.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

INCUBATORS, BROODERS, VEGETABLE and CLOVER CUTTERS. BONE and GRAIN MILLS. A complete line of poultry supplies at lowest prices. Green cut bone will MAKE HENS LAY in winter and produce fertile eggs for hatching. Send for catalog and valuable information on poultry raising. PERLESS INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., 513 Y Ohio St., QUINA, ILL. Self-Regulating.

SOLD! UNDER A POSITIVE GUARANTEE

to wash as clean as can be done on the washboard and with much more ease. This applies to Terrier's Perfect Washing Machine which has been on trial at wholesale prices; if not satisfactory money refunded. Agents Wanted. For exclusive territory, terms and prices write PORTLAND MFG. CO., Box 62 Portland, Me.

NEW MAMMOTH POULTRY GUIDE showing colored plate of chickens in natural colors. Finest book ever published. Almost 100 pages. Tells all about Poultry for Profit or Pleasure. Price only 15c. JOHN BAUSCHER, JR., Box 68 Freeport, Ill.

Japanese Imperial Morning Glory. Regular price, 15 cts. a pkt. Flowers are 4 inches across. Crimson, Yellow, White, Pink and Blotched. Bloom in pots in the house summer and winter; outside are smothered with bloom all summer. Try to secure 4 orders and get these free. Little work, good pay. Catalogue--Directions for Growing, Premium, and Prize Books with every order. You can make money selling my seeds.

High Arm MY HUSBAND (can't see how you do it). $30 Kenwood Machine for - $23.00 $50 Arlington Machine for - $19.50 Standard Singer - $4.00, $11.00, $15.00, and other sizes. All attachments FREE. We pay freight shipping anywhere on 30 days free trial. Any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Satisfaction guaranteed. Over 100,000 in use. (Illustrations of Sewing Machines) Send for Free Catalogue. (Full list of Agents) CASH BROS.' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., B 13, Chicago, Ills.

CONSUMPTION CURED AT LAST.

The Generous Offer that is Being Made by T. A. Slocum, M. C.,
New York City, America's Most Eminent Chemist.

WONDERFUL PROGRESS OF MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Confident of the Value of His Discoveries,
He will Send Free, Two Bottles, Upon
Application, to Any Person Suffering from Chest, Lung, and Pulmonary Affections.

(From the New York Weekly Tribune.)

"The appalling ravages of lung troubles and consumption in this country, continued from year to year, present a showing before which all lovers of humanity must stand aghast.

Lung troubles lead to consumption; loss of flesh, and wasting conditions.

Of all the diseases which afflict the human race, consumption is the most fatal. Its ravages are by no means confined to the lungs alone. It attacks, in fact, almost every part of the body.

Last year, as proven by the official records at Washington, over 263,000 died from consumption in the United States—representing an average of 5,000 every week, and 700 every day; a waste of life that seems incredible.

More than four-fifths of this number might to-day be living, had they but known wherein restoration lay, and made timely use of the only infallible remedies that have thus far been discovered.

Slocum's Newly Discovered Remedy is the only one whose results have been practically successful.

Thousands of witnesses could be brought forward—whose testimony is incontrovertible—to prove not only that the Slocum System of Scientific Treatment is wonderfully efficacious in the cure of throat, chest and lung affections, all pulmonary disorders—and conditions of wasting—but that it does cure in cases of well defined and unmistakable consumption.

Consumption has, it is now believed, at last been conquered, and through the leading papers the distinguished chemist offers his discovery free.

For the purpose of bringing these remedies to the attention of the public, and making their great merits known, Mr. Slocum now makes a most generous offer that should certainly be taken advantage of.

He will send free, two bottles, to any sufferer applying. Simply write express and postoffice address.

This proposition speaks eloquently indeed of the "good faith" of the great chemist.

Nothing could be fairer or more philanthropic.

There will be no mistake in sending—the mistake will be in overlooking the generous invitation."

Sufferers may address T. A. Slocum, M.C., 183 Pearl Street, New York. When writing the Doctor, please mention reading this in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Slocum's Newly Discovered System of Scientific Treatment

CURES CONSUMPTION and Lung Troubles

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT and Laboratory

T. A. SLOCUM COMPANY,

181 & 183 Pearl St., New York City

MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS,
181 & 183 Pearl St.,

New York, March 26th, 1896.

To Readers of The Christian Herald:

I have an absolute remedy for Consumption and all Throat, Chest and Lung Diseases; also for Loss of Flesh and all Conditions of Wasting. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have already been PERMANENTLY CURED.

So proof-positive am I of its power, that to increase its usefulness and make known its great merits, I propose to SEND FREE, TWO BOTTLES, to readers of your paper who will write me, giving their Express, Postoffice and street address.

Most Sincerely,

T. A. SLOCUM, M. C.

Dictated by T. A. S.

183 Pearl St., New York.

When writing the Doctor, please state that you read this letter in The Christian Herald.

The New York Herald Tribune. Knowing his remedy to be infallible, and having unlimited confidence in its beneficial results, based upon experience, the great Chemist considers it his duty—a religious duty which he owes to humanity—to donate his infallible remedy. Mr. Slocum is without doubt the most eminent Chemist in America. He holds thousands of testimonials endorsing his newly discovered System of Scientific Treatment from sufferers in all parts of the world, greatly benefited and cured.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

NUMBER 16.

W. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
Offices: — Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, APRIL 15, 1896.

Price Five Cents.

AN EVENING BIBLE READING AND "GOOD-NIGHT SERVICE" IN A MICHIGAN LOGGING CAMP. (See Page 102.)

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

NEXT TO THE THRONE.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Genesis 37: 28, "They drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit and sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver." Genesis 45: 26, "He is governor over all the land of Egypt."

YOU cannot keep a good man down. God has decreed for him a certain point of elevation. He will bring him to that though it cost him a thousand worlds. You sometimes find men fearful they will not be properly appreciated. Every man comes to be valued at just what he is worth. You cannot write him up, and you cannot write him down. These facts are powerfully illustrated in my subject. It would be an insult to suppose that you were not all familiar with the life of Joseph. How his jealous brothers threw him into a pit, but seeing a caravan of Arabian merchants trudging along on their camels, with spices and gums that loaded the air with aroma, sold their brother to these merchants, who carried him down into Egypt; Joseph there sold to Potiphar, a man of influence and office. How by Joseph's integrity he raised himself to high position in the realm, until under the false charge of a vile wretch he was hurled into the penitentiary. How in prison he commanded respect and confidence. How by the interpretation of Pharaoh's dream he was freed and became the chief man in the realm, the Bismarck of his century. How in the time of famine Joseph had the control of a magnificent storehouse which he had filled during seven years of plenty. How when his brothers, who had thrown him into the pit and sold him into captivity, applied for corn, he sent them home with the beasts of burden borne down under the weight of the corn-sacks. How the sin against their brother which had so long been hidden came out at last and was returned by that brother's forgiveness and kindness—the only revenge he took.

You see, in the first place, that the world is compelled to honor Christian character. Potiphar was only a man of the world, yet Joseph rose in his estimation until all the affairs of that great house were committed to his charge. From his servant no honor or confidence was withheld. When Joseph was in prison he soon won the heart of the keeper, and though placed there for being a scoundrel, he soon convinced the jailer that he was an innocent and trustworthy man, and released from close confinement he became general superintendent of prison affairs. Wherever Joseph was placed, whether a servant in the house of Potiphar, or a prisoner in the penitentiary, he became the first man everywhere, and is an illustration of the truth I lay down, that the world is compelled to honor Christian character. There are those who affect to despise a religious life. They sneer at it as a system of phylloxera by which the human mind is killed and its courage and nobility. They say he has demeaned himself. They pretend to have no more confidence in life than before his conversion. But all this is hypocrisy. There is a great deal of hypocrisy in the Church and there is a great deal of hypocrisy outside the Church. It is impossible for any man not to admire and confide in a man who shows that he has really become a child of God, and is what he professes to be. You cannot despise a son of the Lord God Almighty. Of course we have no admiration for the sham of religion.

I was at a place a few hours after the ruffians had gone into the rail-train and demanded that the passengers throw up their arms, and then these ruffians took the pocket-books; and Satan comes and suggests to a man that he throw up his arms in hypocritical prayer and pretension, and then steals his soul. For the mere pretension of religion we have abhorrence. Redwald, the king, after baptism, had an altar of Christian sacrifice and an altar for sacrifice to devils; and there are many men now attempting the same thing—half a heart for God and half a heart for the world—and it is a dead failure, and it is a caricature of religion, and the only successful assault ever made on Christianity is the inconsistency of its professors. You may have a contempt for pretension to religion, but when you behold the excellency of Jesus Christ come out in the life of one of his disciples, all that there is good and noble in your soul rises up into admiration, and you cannot help it. Though that man be as far beneath you in estate as the Egyptian slave of whom we are discoursing was beneath his rulers, by an irrevocable law of your nature, Potiphar and Pharaoh will always esteem Joseph. When Eudoxia, the Empress, threatened Chrysostom with death, he made the reply, "Tell the Empress I fear nothing but sin."

Such a scene as that compels the admiration of the world. There was something in Agrippa and Felix which demanded their respect for Paul, the rebel against government. I doubt not they would willingly have yielded their office and dignity for a thousandth part of that true heroism which beamed in the eye and beat in the heart of that unconquerable apostle. Paul did not cower before Felix; Felix cowered before Paul. The infidel and worldling are compelled to honor in their hearts, although they may not eulogize with their lips, a Christian firm in persecution, cheerful in poverty, trustful in losses, triumphant in death. I find Christian men in all professions and occupations, and I find them respected and honored and successful. John Frederick Oberlin alleviating ignorance and distress; Howard passing from dungeon to lazaretto with healing for the body and soul; Elizabeth Fry going to the profligacy of Newgate Prison to shake its obduracy as the angel came to the prison at Philippi, driving open the doors and snapping loose the chain, as well as the lives of thousands of followers of Jesus who have devoted themselves to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the race, are monuments of the Christian religion that shall not crumble while the world lasts. A man said to me in the cars: "What is religion? Judging from the character of many professors of religion I do not admire religion." I said: "Now suppose we went to an artist in the City of Rome and while in his gallery asked him, 'What is the art of painting?' would he take us out in a low alley and show us a mere daub of a pretender at painting? or would he take us down into the corridors and show us the Rubens, and the Raphaels, and the Michael Angelos? When we asked him, 'What is the art of painting?' he would point to the works of these great masters, and say, 'That is painting.' Now, you propose to find the mere caricature of religion, to seek after that which is the mere pretension of a holy life, and you call that religion. I point you to the splendid men and women whom this Gospel has blessed and lifted and crowned. Look at the masterpieces of Divine grace if you want to know what religion is."

We learn also from this story of Joseph that the result of persecution is elevation. Had it not been for his being sold into Egyptian bondage by his malicious brothers, and his false imprisonment, Joseph never would have become a governor. Everybody accepts the promise, "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven," but they do not realize the fact that this principle applies to worldly as well as spiritual success. It is true in all departments. Men rise to high official positions through misrepresentation. Public abuse is all that some of our public men have had to rely upon for their elevation. It has brought to them what talent and executive force could not have achieved. Many of those who are making great effort for place and power will never succeed, just because they are not of enough importance to be abused. It is the nature of men—that is of all generous and reasonable men—to gather about those who are persecuted and defend them, and they are apt to forget the fault of those who are the subjects of attack while attempting to drive back the slanderers. Persecution is elevation. Helen Stirk, the Scotch martyr, standing with her husband at the place of execution, said: "Husband, let us rejoice to-day; we have lived together many happy years; this is the happiest time of all our life; you see we are to be happy together forever. Be brave now, be brave. I will not say 'Good night' to you for we shall soon be in the kingdom of our Father together." Persecution shows the heroes and heroines. I go into another department and I find that those great denominations of Christians which have been most abused have spread the most rapidly. No good man was ever more violently maltreated than John Wesley—belied and caricatured and slandered until one day he stood in a pulpit in London, and a man arose in the audience and said: "You were drunk last night," and John Wesley said: "Thank God, the whole catalogue is now complete. I have been charged with everything but that!" His followers were hooted at and maligned and called by every detestable name that infernal ingenuity could invent, but the hotter the persecution the more rapidly they spread, until you know what a great host they have become and what a tremendous force for God and the truth they are wielding all the world over! It was persecution that gave Scotland to Presbyterianism. It was persecution that gave our land first to civil liberty and afterward to religious freedom. Yea, I might go further back and say it was persecution that gave the world the great salvation of the Gospel. The ribald mockery, the hungering and thirsting, the unjust charge, the ignominious death, when all the force of hell's fury was hurled against the Cross, was the introduction of that religion which is yet to be the earth's deliverance and our eternal salvation. The State sometimes said to the Church, "Come, take my hand and I will help you." What was the result? The Church went back and it lost its estate of holiness, and it became ineffective. At other times the State said to the Church, "I will crush you." What has been the result? After the storms have spent their fury the Church, so far from having lost any of its force, has increased and is worth infinitely more after the assault than before. Read all history and you will find that true. The Church is far more indebted to the opposition of civil government than its approval. The fires of the stake have only been the torches which Christ held in his hand, by the light of which the Church has marched to her present glorious position. In the sound of racks and implements of torture I hear the rumbling of the Gospel chariot. The scaffolds martyrdom have been the stairs by which the Church mounted.

Learn also from our subject that sin will come to exposure. Long, long ago those brothers sold Joseph into Egypt. They had made the old father believe that his favorite child was dead. They had suppressed the crime, and it was a profound secret well kept by the brothers. But suddenly the secret is out. The old father hears that his son is in Egypt, having been sold there by the malice of his own brothers. How their cheeks must have burned and their hearts sunk at the flaming out of this long suppressed crime. The smallest iniquity has a thousand tongues, and they will blab out exposure. Saul was sent to destroy the Canaanites, their sheep and their oxen; but when he got down there among the pastures, he saw some fine sheep and oxen too fat to kill, so he thought he would steal the sheep. Nobody would know it. He drove the stolen sheep and oxen toward home, but stopped to report to the prophet how he had executed his mission, when in the distance the sheep began to bleat and the oxen to bellow. The secret was out, and Samuel said to the blushing and confused Saul: "What meaneth the bleating of the sheep that I hear and the bellowing of the cattle?" Ah! my hearer, you cannot keep an iniquity still. At just the wrong time the sheep will bleat and the oxen will bellow. Achan cannot steal the Babylonian garment without being stoned to death, nor Arnold betray his country without having his neck stretched. Look over the police arrests. These thieves, these burglars, these counterfeiters, these highway men, these assassins, they all thought they could bury their iniquity so deep down, it would never come to resurrection, but there was some shoe that answered the print in the soil, some false keys found in their possession, some bloody knife that whispered of the death, and the public indignation and the anathema of outraged law hurled them into the dungeon, hoisted them on the gallows. Francis King of France, stood counseling with his officers how he could take his army into Italy, when Amerigo, the fool of the court, leaped out from a corner of the room and said: "You had better be consulting how you will get your army back;" and it was found that Francis I., and not Amerigo, was the fool. Instead of consulting as to the best way of getting into sin, you had better consult as to whether you will be able to get out of it. If the world does not expose you, you will tell it yourself. There is an awful power in an aroused conscience. A highwayman plunged out upon Whitefield as he rode along on horseback, a sack of money on the horse—money that he had raised for orphan asylums, and the highwayman put his hand on the saddle and Whitefield turned to him and said: "Touch that if you dare—that belongs to the Lord Jesus Christ." And the ruffian slunk into the forest. Conscience! Conscience! The ruffian had a pistol, but Whitefield shook at him the finger of doom. Do not think you can hide a great and protracted sin in your heart, my brother. In an unguarded moment it will slip off the lip, or some slight action for the moment set ajar this door that you wanted to keep closed. But suppose that in this life you hide it, and you get along with this transgression burning in your heart, as a ship on fire within for the hindering the flames from bursting out by keeping down the hatches, yet at last in the judgment that iniquity will blaze it before God and the universe.

Learn also from this subject that there is an inseparable connection between events, however remote. The universe by one thought of God. Those things which seemed fragmentary and isolated are only different parts of that great truth. How far apart seemed these two events—Joseph sold to the Arabian merchants and his rulership of Egypt, yet you see in what a mysterious way God connects the two into one plan. So the events are linked together. You who are aged run back and group together a thousand things in your life that once seemed isolated. One undivided chain of events reaches from the Garden of Eden to the Cross of Calvary, and thus up to the Kingdom of Heaven. There is a relation between the smallest insect that hums in the summer air and the archangel on his throne. God can trace a direct ancestral line from the blue-jay that this Spring will build its nest in the tree behind the house to some one of the flock of birds which, when Noah hoisted the ark's window, with a whirr and dash of bright wings went out to sing over Mount Ararat. The tulips that bloom in the garden this Spring were nursed by the snow-flakes. The furthest star on one side of the universe could not look toward the furthest star on the other side of the universe and say: "You are no relation to me," for from that bright orb a voice of light would ring across the heavens responding, "Yes, yes, we are sisters." Nothing in God's universe swings at loose ends. Accidents are only God's way of turning a leaf in the book of his eternal decrees. From our cradle to our grave there is a path all marked out. Each event in our life is connected with every other event in our life. Crosses may be the most direct road to regain. Our defeat and our victory are in the brothers. The whole direction of your life was changed by something which at the time seemed to you trifling, while some occurrence which seemed tremendous affected you but little. God's plans are magnificent beyond all comprehension. He leads us, and turns and directs us, and we know it not. Thousands of years are to him as the flight of a shuttle. The most trifling occurrence does not make God tremble. The most triumphant achievement does not lift him into rapture. That one great thought of God goes out through the centuries, and nations rise and fall, and empires pass, and the world changes, but God still keeps the undivided mastery, linking event to event and century to century. To God they are all one event, one history, one plan, one development, one system. Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! I was years ago in New Orleans at the Exposition rooms, when a telegram was sent to the President of the United States, at Washington, and we waited some fifteen or twenty minutes and then the President's answer came back, and then the presiding officer waved his hand, and the signal was sent to Washington that we were ready to have the machinery of the Exposition started, and the President put his finger on the electric button, and instantly the great Corliss wheel began to move—rumbling, rumbling, rolling, rolling. It was overwhelming and 15,000 people clapped and shouted. The one finger at Washington started the vast machinery, hundreds and hundreds of miles away, and I thought then at least now, that men sometimes touch levers that respond in the far distance, day years from now, fifty years from now, a thousand years from now—a million years from now—one touch sounding through the ages.

We also learn from this story the propriety of laying up for the future. During the seven years of plenty, Joseph prepared for the famine, and when it came he had a divided storehouse. The life of most men in worldly respect is divided into years of plenty and famine. It is seldom that a man passes through life without at least seven years of plenty. During those seven years, your business bears a rich harvest. You scarcely know where all the money comes from, it comes so fast. Every bargain you make seems to turn into gold. You contract few bad debts. You are astonished with large dividends. You invest more and more capital. You wonder how men can be content with a small business, gathering in only a few hundred dollars while you reap your thousands. Those are the seven years of plenty. Now Joseph has time to prepare for the threatened famine, for to almost every man there do come seven years of famine. You will be sick, you will be unfortunate, you will be defrauded, there will be hard times, you will be disappointed, and if you have no storehouse upon which to fall back, you may be famine-struck. We have no admiration for this denying one's self all personal comfort and luxury for the mere pleasure of hoarding up, this grasping, grasping for the mere pleasure of seeing how large a pile you can get, this always being poor because as soon as a dollar comes in it is sent out to see if it can find another dollar. We have a contempt for all those things, but there is an intelligent and noble-minded forecast which we love to see in men who have families and kindred depending upon them for the blessings of education and home. God sends us to the insects for a lesson, which while they do not stint themselves in the present, do not forget their duty to forecast the future. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise; which having no guide, overseer or ruler, provideth her meat in the Summer and gathereth her food in the harvest."

A LOGGING CAMP IN WINTER.

Now, there are two ways of laying up money. One of these is to put it in stock and deposit it in bank, and invest it on bond and mortgage. The other way to lay up money is giving it away. He is the safest who makes both of these investments. There are in this house men who if they lose every dollar they have in the world would be millionaires for eternity. They made the spiritual investment; but the man who devotes none of his gains to the cause of Christ and looks only for his own comfort and luxury is not safe. I care not how the money is invested. He acts as the Rose if it should say: "I will hold my breath, and none shall have a snatch of fragrance from me until next week; then I will set all the garden afloat with my aroma." Of course the Rose, refusing to breathe, died. But above all, lay up treasures in heaven. They never depreciate in value. They never are at a discount. They are always available. You may feel safe now with your $1,000 or $2,000 or $10,000 or $20,000 income, but what will such an income be worth after you are dead? Others will get it. Perhaps some of them will quarrel about it before you are buried. They will be so glad when you are dead. They are only waiting for you to die. What then will all your earthly accumulations be worth? If you gathered it all in your bosom and walked up with it to heaven's gate, it would not purchase your admission. Or if allowed to enter, it could not buy you a crown or a robe, and the poorest saint in heaven would look down at you and say: "Where did that pauper come from?" May we all have treasures in heaven.

Gospel Work Among the Loggers.

How the Bible and the Gospel Song have Taken the Place of the Dance and Rivalry in many Lumber Camps.

MOST encouraging evidences have been given on all hands of the interest

SHARPENING THE WOODMAN'S AXE.

aroused by our previous notices of the work carried on by Miss Emma C. Nason among the lumbermen of Michigan, Wisconsin, and other States. We are enabled to present on our first page this week a picture of a typical interior of one of these logging-camps, prepared from a photograph kindly furnished by Miss Nason. It will give our readers an idea of how the camp looks in the evening, when, the day's work over, and the evening meal finished, the hardy toilers of the forest gather around the stove for social pleasure before turning into the bunks for a night's rest. The Evangelists whom Miss Nason has been sending among the camps found that this evening hour was often a time of se-

PUBLISHER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE large increase in the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has rendered our Press Room and Bindery totally inadequate for our requirements, and we find ourselves under the necessity of removing these Departments to much more spacious quarters. The disarrangement of our mechanical facilities which this removal will involve may compel the occasional omission of color work in the near future. Four years ago, when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD first established its own Press Room and Bindery, we started them in a small basement on Broadway. Within six months we were compelled to remove them to larger quarters and accordingly an extensive loft was hired in the Devine Building, where the Century Magazine is printed. A year afterward, we found it necessary to again enlarge our accommodations by taking an additional loft. Owing to the gigantic increase in circulation, we are once again compelled to remove, this time into the largest loft in the city of New York, covering nearly an entire acre of ground and affording ample room for our new color presses, black-and-white presses and folding and binding machinery. When the removal has been effected, and the new machinery is completed and in working order, the appearance of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be even brighter than at present. Until these changes are accomplished, we shall unavoidably omit, with more or less frequency, the color page, as our facilities for getting out that particular part of the paper have been most severely taxed by the phenomenal increase resulting on the introduction of that wonderfully attractive feature.

We are constantly receiving letters asking whether the unique and beautiful Palestine Floral Album, which we offered last fall as a premium, is out of stock, and if not, whether we would sell copies of the same to present subscribers whose term of subscription does not expire until the end of the present year. It will be remembered that the edition of this rare and valuable Album was necessarily limited. The flowers that enrich its pages were collected in Palestine by Rev. H. B. Greene, B.A., and were pressed, preserved, and bound in album form, every volume bound in rich olive silk cloth, solid gold edges with gold side and back stamp and emblematic design on the cover. Within the covers of each book were perfect specimens of all the royal family of flowers from the Saviour's own country, thus making it a priceless souvenir of Palestine. Fortunately there are still a few copies left, and these we will be glad to send to our subscribers, as far as the stock on hand will go, at the price of $2 each; but the order for the Albums will have to reach us soon, as the stock is very limited. This unapproachable premium was made up for our subscribers exclusively, and not a single Album has been sold outside THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Family Circle.

Nobody can estimate just how much the cause of temperance in America has been helped and advanced by ex-United States Senator Blair's great pamphlet on "The Temperance Reform," a large number of copies of which have already been sold, far and wide, through this journal. It is admitted, on all sides, to be the ablest argument for temperance that has appeared in a generation. Clubs, societies, churches, etc., can be supplied with the pamphlet at five cents per single copy or at $3 per 100, by addressing THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

All Christendom still looks in pity toward Armenia, the story of whose terrible persecutions and martyrdoms has stirred the world as nothing has done for centuries. That story, in all its dramatic details, is truthfully told, holding nothing back, in The Rule of the Turk, a book written by Rev. F. D. Greene, himself a missionary and a missionary's son. His story of the great massacres and other revolting barbarities, being accurate in every detail, afford a real idea of the barbarian Moslems with whom the civilized world will yet have to deal. This book, which Gladstone has personally praised, is finely illustrated with photographs and map, and can be had (in paper covers) by sending fifty cents to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

Sunday School Lesson for April 26. Luke 16: 19-31. Golden Text, Luke 16: 13. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

HE evangelist Luke was not of the same order of "unlearned and ignorant men" (Acts 4: 13), as Peter and John. He was a physician (Col. 4: 14), and evidently a man of letters, as the authorship of his Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles bear witness. It is no wonder, therefore, that so much more is told us in his Gospel about the rich than in either of the other Gospels. He had known the dangers and the temptations of the rich among whom he had moved, and it was natural that he should remember, and place on record what the Lord had said about the rich. It is he who records the song of Mary, and the words, "the rich he hath sent empty away." (Luke 6: 24.) He gives us the parable of the rich fool, and draws therefrom the lesson, "So is he that is not rich toward God." (Luke 12: 16-21.) He records the teaching of our Lord as to those whom Christians should bid to a feast. He excludes "thy rich neighbors." He alone gives the parable of the rich man's steward (Luke 16: 1-8), of the rich man and Lazarus, and the history of Zachaeus, the publican, who was rich; neither of which are mentioned in the other three Gospels.

All through the Gospel of Luke the responsibility of man is insisted on; Christ's manhood, and God's idea of manhood as it should be in the true disciple, comes out more in this Gospel than in either of the others. The is the lesson of the parable before us. "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day." That is to say he served himself with his riches; his clothing and his table were his chief concern. His riches ministered to his pride; and to the indulgence of his appetites. No outward sin is laid to his charge; he was simply a man who lived to himself. No word is said about any lack of honesty in this man, any oppression of his workmen, nor yet of any moral stain; immorality or drunkenness. He was no infidel, he claimed to be of Abraham's seed, and Abraham called him, "son," and yet, when he died, his place was that of torment.

Responsibility of the Rich

"And there was a certain beggar, named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover, the dogs came and licked his sores." We are not told if his request was granted, but it would hardly have been otherwise; for the dogs would have driven away an unwelcome beggar. The rich man did not refuse the crumbs, the fragments of food which were so precious to him, to the suffering beggar. Inside how many houses in all large cities might we find the original of this inspired portrait!

And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died and was buried." To the very last, his money should serve him, every expense that could be was lavished on the ceremony of putting into the earth the corrupting body which had only served the purpose of glorifying the spirit in the place of torment. And the misspent life was at an end! What commandment had he broke? We are not told that he had committed murder, or adultery, or that he had, so far as we know, borne no false witness: he had not coveted, for his circumstances left him no temptations to covet, and he may have honored his father and mother. He had not outwardly worshipped any but the true God, nor bowed down to a graven image, nor taken the name of Jehovah in vain, nor broken the Sabbath ceremonially.

And yet, in spirit he had broken every command of the decalogue, for he had neither loved the Lord his God with all his heart and mind and soul and strength, nor yet his neighbor as himself. He had bowed down practically before

One Great Idol: Himself

His heart and mind and soul and strength had served, loved, obeyed, been occupied with himself. He had eaten and drunk to please himself, he had gone hither and thither to please himself; he had done business or taken rest to please himself; he had worn his costly clothing to honor and to attract admiration to himself. This was his sin; he was a self-worshipper, and put himself out of his way neither to serve God nor man. And God lifts the veil and shows how such a life is estimated by him, and what is its inevitable issue.

"And in hell (literally hades, the place of departed spirits), he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham and Lazarus in his bosom." Did he think that the relations of master and servant, rich and poor, extended into another life when he cried and said: "Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame?" Why did he appeal to Abraham? Why not to God himself? Alas, he had never made acquaintance with God; his life had slipped away; and the purpose for which God had given him life, that he might know and serve him had been utterly ignored by this self idolater.

"But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented." Here was the rich man's indictment. Those who pray to be seen of men or who give alms to be seen of men have received their reward." (Matt. 6: 2, 5). All the reward they will ever have is on earth. The rich man, like them, has sown to his own flesh, and of the flesh he must reap corruption, (Gal. 6: 3); nothing for eternity can proceed from such a sowing. Thou hast received thy good things, thou hast chosen time instead of eternity, thyself instead of God, and now thou must reap the inevitable consequences, thou art thy own destroyer, thou hast sealed thy doom. Instead of seeking "glory, honor and immortality" (Rom. 2: 7), thou hast spent thy time and strength and money for what is of the earth earthly; thou hast not one treasure laid up in heaven; it is but the return of what thou hast laid out.

"And beside all this, between us and you there is fixed; so that they which would pass from us to you cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence." And yet in that realm of disembodied spirits, the lost and the saved could recognize one another! The peace of the saved who were "comforted" and the anguish of the lost who were "tormented" was palpable to the others. And yet there was no possibility of helping or being helped. How Abraham and those who were of his company could bear to see and hear the misery of the lost, we cannot conceive. But as the knowledge of God, even in our life on earth, gives a true and real color to all things around us, and we learn to justify him in all his dealing with ourselves, and find that he is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works" (Ps. 145: 17), so must it have been with the saved who were in Hades.

A Great Gulf

The rich man, foiled in his first petition, now urges another, "I pray thee, therefore, Father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house, for I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them, lest they come into this place of torment." How had he treated the testimony of men of God whom he had heard during his lifetime? The gorgeous dress was more to him than the testimony which, in his remorse, he believed now it was too late; the luxurious dinner party, the public meeting, the pleasures and honors of society, all these things had been given the first place in his mistaken life; how then would his brethren listen if he had not done so?

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

AN ORIENTAL BEGGAR.

EBREW forms of thought and speech were adopted by Christ in his teaching in order that the lessons he wished to convey might lose none of their force by unfamiliar imagery. It is important to remember this fact in dealing with the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. It would not be safe to assume that Christ was making, in this parable, a revelation of the condition of existence in the next world, and to regard it as proving that they were so near that conversation could be held across the great gulf between them. Christ took the traditional views of the other world, common at the time, and made them the background of his picture. To dwell on this background or setting of the picture might divert attention from its direct purpose. Christ's obvious intention was to teach the plain, practical duty of concern for the welfare of the poor, and the wickedness of living selfish, sensual lives. He does so by two vivid contrasts. There are two extremes of happiness and misery in each, but the personalities are reversed. The man who has luxury and ease in this world, has misery in the next; the wretched man whose life here was a burden to him is happy beyond the grave. But it is important to remember that their condition in the next world was not determined by their condition here, but by their character. The rich man does not suffer because he was rich, but because he did not fulfil his duties. His money was spent on personal luxuries, expensive clothing and rich food. He was aware of the misery around him, as there was the specimen at his own gate which he must have seen as he came out and in. Yet he showed no concern about it. Even the dogs took more interest in the man than he did. Yet this beggar was a good man, one of God's children. The rich man did not know it, but he might have known if he had possessed a compassionate heart and had talked with the man. He lived for himself and took no thought for anyone else, which in Christ's eyes was an abominable life. He who loved men so well as to die for them, could have no patience with a man who saw his brother man in need and did not give to him when he had abundance. It showed a bad, greedy spirit. The next picture shows the rich man in misery and the poor man comforted and in peace. The rich man is represented as a Jew, for he addresses Abraham as "Father," and bemoans his condition. There is no contrition in his words, but only complaint. The logic of the reply is in the implied reminder that when he saw Lazarus similarly in misery he did nothing for him. It is his own principle of action applied to himself, and he has no right to complain. Besides, the opportunity to help one another does not exist then; the avenue of help-ness is closed by the great gulf. Then the man pleads for his brothers, and there the implied reproach that he had been insufficiently warned. But Abraham tells him the sad fact that men who do not accept the warnings they have, would not be moved by more sensational ones—a fact proved abundantly by experience. No one can suppose that if this despised beggar could have appeared to the five brothers, that it would have changed the character. The lesson taught is one which Christ continually dwelt—that love and kindness and unselfishness. There would be a changed world if that lesson were learned.

The rich man also died. His riches could not prevent that. Denton says that when Runjeet Singh of Lahore was told that his life was menaced and that the doctors feared he could not recover, his first thought was to offer a bribe. The payment of money had delivered him from so many difficulties that he thought it would deliver him from death. He sent off at once the costliest gifts to the idol temples. Gift after gift was sent and as they produced no effect, but the sufferer grew weaker, more money was sent. He saw himself going down irresistibly before death and he became frantic. "Give more," was his order and other gifts were despatched. It is computed that on the last day of his life the gifts Runjeet bestowed were worth five million dollars. He was enormous wealthy, but the rich man also died.

Son, remember. M'Cheyne mentions a fact he had noticed in his experience of revivals of religion, which other pastors, to have observed. Whenever a man came under the Holy Spirit's influence after having been a regular hearer of the Word for years, he remembered passages of sermons which he had taken little note of at the time and had altogether forgotten. They appeared to have been automatically stored in the memory and revived when the man reached a stage of conviction that made them applicable. M'Cheyne asks this strange psychological phenomenon must not be a hint to us of what will occur at death. If the mind unconsciously notes a stores away sermons is it not likely that when the warnings are fulfilled the man may recall the fact that he was warned.

He is comforted and thou art tormented. The eminent preacher compares the difference in the estimates of men, as given by Christ and the world to vertical and horizontal lines. The world draws the line horizontally and speaks of the poor as the low classes and the rich as the higher or upper classes, and of men rising or falling to one class or the other, according as they gain or lose money. Christ's division is vertical and according to character. It is a vertical dividing good from bad and it goes through all the social strata. There are rich and poor on both sides of the line. Christ pays no attention to wealth in his estimate. If a man's character was right, he was on the right side of the line, whether he was rich or poor. The poor man must not think because he is miserable in this world he is sure of being comforted in the next. He will be miserable there, too, unless through Christ he makes his peace with God.

Desiring to be fed. "I have three persons in my church," says a well known clergyman, "who represent as many ways of dealing with the poor. One of them gives to every beggar who comes to his house a store. It is the simplest way, he content to put the hand in the pocket and hand a nickel or a quarter as the case may be, but it is unsatisfactory. Most of his money goes to persistent beggars, who would rather beg than work. There is no character in this. The second refuses all and gives his money to societies, who disburse it for him. This is more sensible, but it lacks the personal contact which is essential to true happiness. The third is my ideal Christian philanthropy, and the curious feature of it is that the philanthropist is poor, herself. She has a small income which is just enough to provide her with the necessities of life, and she consequently gives little or nothing, but if she were die none would be so missed. If any one is sick, or in trouble, if a widow is penniless, or a man or a boy is out of work, she seems to hear of it first, and she will go and nurse, or work, or hunt for a situation and take endless pains. The poor most worship her because she gives to herself. That is my idea of Christian philanthropy. All cannot do it, but we can do such work in some degree, by bearing the burden of one or more.

TRAINING CHILD WAIFS AND STRAYS.

The Work of the Abigail Free Kindergarten in New York City—A Typical Institution for the Benefit of a Much Neglected Class.

MR. AND MRS. C. P. DEVARE.

ONE of the healthiest signs of the abounding vitality of our Christian churches in the present day is the interest that is manifested in behalf of the fallen and the out-cast. Rescue work among adults finds a wide and a spiritually profitable field for the energies of all who desire to undertake it; but it is also beginning to be understood that if the proverbial "ounce of prevention" were applied in the form of an effort in behalf of the neglected children of our great cities, much more substantial and enduring results would be accomplished. Homes, Nurseries, Training Schools, and Kindergartens are multiplying in our populous centres, and nowhere as rapidly as in New York itself. In the lower wards of the city there is a large and constantly increasing population of old "waifs and strays," who, unless brought under proper influences now, will assuredly live to be "rescued" later from the lives of vice and lawlessness that are the inevitable outcome of their present surroundings. Such children, even between the ages of three and seven, are in special need of training, as it is during these years that habits are formed and impressions so fixed that they may be said to last a lifetime. For the neglected children of tender years, whose school is the street and whose teachers are the profane and vicious, there is indeed a hard lot in prospect. Authorities in criminology agree that the average criminal is usually recruited from the ranks of just such little waifs as those described. Where the child, in its tender years, is brought under kind Christian influences, trained to habits of industry, and imbued with the love of reality, the result is far different.

One of the simplest means of reaching childish intelligence is the Kindergarten. There are now in New York a number of these institutions where very young children receive, in addition to moral instruction, that mild domestic and industrial training which acts as a safeguard against childish temptation and evil habits and paves the way for a wholesome and moral maturity.

One of the typical institutions of this class in New York is the Abigail Free School and Kindergarten, which was organized six years ago, and opened at No. 30 Beach street, in a section literally swarming with children. They flocked in crowds to the halls that had been prepared for them—for the most part as uncouth, unwashed, and seemingly uncivilized a lot of urchins as could be found anywhere in Uncle Sam's broad dominions.

Mr. C. P. Devare, the projector of this humanitarian scheme, personally superintended the work, assisted by Mrs. E. P. Devare his wife. Together they undertook the task of preventing or at least minimizing crime and misery in the crowded section in which they lived and among the little ones whom they collected round about them. Difficulties arose, but ably seconded by his wife, Mr. Devare determined that—God helping him—he would make his scheme a success. They made themselves children again, mingled with their juvenile playfellows in their little games, washed, fed, clothed, and taught them to sing with earnestness and sincere feeling: "I love Jesus;" "Jesus loves me;" and many other hymns of the kind which children never forget. After one held in the evenings, and rescue meetings for boys are held by some of the young lads connected with the Abigail Free School and under its auspices and much good has already resulted.

Since the Kindergarten was opened over five thousand children have been trained and prepared there, and the foundations of Christian character and industrious habits have been enduringly laid. The total cost of the work is in the neighborhood of $500 a month, which is defrayed wholly by contribution.

Some pleasant phases of child-life at the Abigail are shown in the photographs on this page. The sewing school is a source of enjoyment and profitable instruction to the young girls, many of whom quickly become quite expert with the needle. The boys' band is the pride and delight of the institution. On gala days, and especially in the bright summer weather, it plays outdoors, and the strains

How a Drunkard was Won.

An Incident in the Work of the McAll Mission in Paris.

AMONG the multitudes who have been brought to Christ through the McAll

THE FREE KINDERGARTEN BAND.

Mission in Paris, few cases possess more interest than that described in the following story of a drunkard and gambler's conversion, as related by a recent writer:

"You remember," said the man, addressing the mission worker, "you were giving lectures at the McAll Hall of Boulevard Ornano. At that time I was the greatest drunkard of that district, an incorrigible gambler. One cold evening, being penniless, I strolled along the Boulevard, when I heard people singing in the hall. I went in to hear you speak on the joys of the family. After fifteen minutes I had enough of you, and went away murmuring: 'That speaker is evidently an old priest or an old bachelor; he never had a wife or children.' A fortnight after, penniless again, I again went in and spoke on 'The Workman.' 'Workmen,' you said, 'my father had one hundred of you. I was somewhat educated on your knees, and therefore I know you. If you belong to such a class of workmen, you gain so much a day, you spend so much for your breakfast, so much for your lunch and dinner, so much a day for your room.' When I heard you say that I murmured, 'That fellow is not a priest, but a Jesuit.' But you went on: 'Now, my friends, subtract what you spend from what you gain, and do not tell me, because I know what you do with the rest. You go to l'Esperance to drink and drink, gamble and gamble. I cannot convert you. God alone can do it.' When I heard this I got up and slammed the door, shouting with rage, 'That speaker is a horrid man!' On my way I said to myself, 'Who is he? Who are those four hundred fools who patiently listen to him? What does he mean when he says: Workmen, show me a workman who reads the Gospel with his wife and children 365 times a year, and I promise you to bring here a happy family. Read the Bible! Surely that would be no joy for me.'

"Next day I drank, gambled and lost. I was going to take my last glass, when I remembered your words. I could not drink. On the next day I said, 'That man made me lose a glass of wine; if I go to the bar I am sure to lose another. It is better to wait.' On the third day God laid hold of me. He placed the glass in my way, on my tools, on my table—everywhere. The Saturday evening came, and not knowing what to do with my money, I said, 'Wife, here is money for you and the children.' My wife had anxiously followed my struggle during the week. We went together to hear your address on 'Christ, the Friend of the Workman.' Since then you have left, but we go every week to the hall. If you pass one evening in such a street, and before such a number, come up, and you will see four nicely furnished rooms, you will see the father, the mother and the children round a table—they read the Gospel together 365 times a year. Those children receive now more pieces of bread than boxes on the ears. The Gospel is not only the guide to heaven, but also to happiness and prosperity in this world, because it is the most practical of all books on social economy."

IN THE FREE KINDERGARTEN SEWING SCHOOL.

year's work the Free Kindergarten had an average daily attendance of more than one hundred children ranging in age from two to seven, and all of them as devoted to their teachers as to their own parents. Besides, the appearance of the children was entirely changed; they became neat, clean and polite, and a credit to the school. Their parents were proud of them and never tired of blessing the school and its founders. The school is now located in more spacious quarters at No. 154 West Houston Street, where the successful experience of previous years has been continued and the work greatly increased in magnitude. During the six years of its existence the work has been almost wholly supported by Mr. John S. Huyler, the well-known business philanthropist of New York, after whose mother the school received the name of "Abigail." It is an incorporated institution, Mr. Huyler being president, and having associated with him as Directors, Messrs. S. S. Swaim, H. B. Smith, Wm. Baldwin, E. F. Hofman and Rev. Stephen Merritt. At present the attendance in the various departments averages about one hundred and fifty children daily, the infant department alone having from fifty to sixty little ones under seven years of age. In addition to the regular kindergarten work, praise meetings with an average attendance of sixty-five, are it produces are as thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated as though the performers were the most skilful professionals. Altogether, the experience of the children at the Abigail is a pleasant and salutary one.

'Twill not be Long.

'Twill not be long until this form
Shall rest from tempest and from storm
Beneath the silent sod;
Above my grave the willow trees
Will tremble in the zephyr breeze,
But I shall be with God.

My body only shall decay,
My soul shall gladly fly away
To brighter shores above,
And there I shall behold the King
Whose praises angel legions sing
'Mid everlasting love.

My earthly friends perhaps will weep
Will sadly mourn as though I sleep
Low in the dismal ground,
But I shall sing—my troubles past,
My soul at home with God at last,
Beyond temptation's bound.

Oh, help me to be true to thee
Until I pass beyond the sea,
My Saviour and my God,
And let my body only sleep
Where breezes sigh and willows weep,
Beneath the silent sod.

Newman Grove, Neb.

J. N. GORTNER.

MR. JOHN S. HUYLER, Patron.

The Big Policeman.

AS I passed the big policeman, the one who stands at the crossing near the ferry, and keeps back the horses so that old ladies and little children may get over the street in safety, I saw that his face was very sad. It had the peculiar gray hue and dazed expression of one who is carrying a burden of deep anxiety. Evidently something was on his mind, some weight of care or trouble.

I was in the greatest haste, and did not know how I could spare a moment, but something tugged at my heart, and felt like a tug at my sleeve, as I went up the street, so that I turned and retraced my steps. I stopped and waited till there was a lull in the noisy thoroughfare, and a momentary ebb in the flowing tide of trucks, express wagons, carts, cabs and conveyances of every description, and then I walked up to my giant, he is one of the tallest men on the force, and gently said to him:

"Is there anything the matter? Can I do anything to help you? I am sure there is something amiss."

The man looked at me for a second as if he did not fully comprehend my questions. Then a light broke over his face, as if human sympathy had for an instant scattered the dark cloud. It came to me then, and I have never forgotten it since, that we have very little compassion to spare for uniformed men, who seem to us only officials paid to serve us, and to smooth our way. How seldom we give a thought to the waiter who takes our order in the restaurant, to the brakeman on the train, to the engineer or the pilot, the postman on his rounds, the motorman on the trolley, or the policeman on his beat. All these have wives and children, or sisters and sweethearts; they carry home their wages, and spend their earnings that their boys and girls may have jackets and shoes, their rent be paid, their people be kept in comfort and respectability. Quite as fully as the rest of us, they know the fullness of life's satisfactions, and the dearest of life's disappointments.

The policeman's voice quivered as he put his hand into his pocket and drew out a card.

"That's where I live; my wife is there. Our boy, our Willie, eight years old, was badly hurt by a car, yesterday; he is at the hospital; they say they must take off his leg."

There was a sorrow! The crowd came surging up the street again. My policeman addressed himself to his duty. I went on my way, hoping that my interest and sympathy had been a cup of cold water given "In His Name," to a soul that was sore athirst.

I did my errands, and then, a little doubtful whether the call might not be regarded as an intrusion, I went to see my unknown friend, the big policeman's wife. I found their home in a large apartment house, clean, bright with sunshine, and well-ordered, and ascending three flights of stairs, I tapped on the first door to the right. Big men generally choose little rooms for their homes, and so I was not surprised when the door was opened by a tiny, small woman, with brown eyes, and brown hair in smooth satin bands on either side of her head, parted plainly in the middle, and knotted low, just over the back of her neck. A small table, with a vase of flowers, stood near the window, and a baby in a high chair was placed with some toys, a rattle, a soft ball, and a string of spoons. The sewing machine had evidently been a guest, and there was a pile of white work lying beside it. Either Mrs. Policeman was very extravagant in supplying her own wardrobe, or else she helped the family finances by taking in work. I decided that the latter was the case, and respected her the more.

Explaining how I happened to call, the little wife smiled. "Dear John," she said, "he takes everything so terribly hard. But it did look black enough last night, and John hasn't heard the good news yet. I've been to the hospital, and Willie's leg will be saved. It's dreadful to have him suffer, but there is a bright side, and so I'm just being thankful to the good Lord."

Well, was not her's the best philosophy? I lingered long enough to know when she might expect her John home for the afternoon, and to be told that he would be allowed to see his boy for a few minutes that day, and then I went on, leaving a bunch of carnations to sweeten the room and make a bright spot beside the sewing machine. As I was borne homeward on the cars, I thought of the aching hearts that are always near us, and of the value of a kind word. "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have I give unto you," should day by day be our dominant feeling; our marching orders, ever leading us "to serve the present age," copies of this journal, or other suitable religious reading matter, should not fail to select from the list of institutions which we published last week, one that is nearby to which such literature may be sent. It is Christian work that will repay the worker a hundredfold.

To Free African Slaves.

A SEVEN-YEAR-OLD SLAVE BOY.

HERE is a rapidly-growing interest in connection with the newly organized Philafrican Liberator's League, which has for its object the freeing and educating of native slaves in Africa. Many inquiries have been received by mail at the offices of the League, No. 511 Charities Building, Twenty-second street and Fourth avenue, New York City, and large numbers of pamphlets, explanatory of the objects of the League have been distributed free in reply to such inquiries, and informing them how they may become identified with this philanthropic work.

If it is a mistake to think that all Africans are cannibals, it is equally erroneous to believe that the practice of eating human flesh for food has disappeared from the Dark Continent. It is still flourishing watch from a hiding-place. If a poor hungry child comes along and picks up the abandoned food, it is pounced upon and sold before its protectors have time to make a fuss over it. As Africans are never taught by their mothers that stealing is a sin which cannot escape the notice of an all-seeing God, only too many children become the victims of these vicious schemers. Kidnapping of unaccompanied children is a common occurrence.

When a chief (and every slave-holder is one), wants to go hunting, he calls his friends and companions to a feast, then he orders a little slave between ten and twelve years of age to be brought for a sacrifice to ensure good luck in the hunt.

After the head has been severed by means of an ordinary iron knife, the blood of the victim is poured into the river, as the hunters depart full of confidence in the success of their enterprise. Young slaves are preferred for these sacrifices because it is easier to kill them. A missionary, who arrived at Liranga, found that his neighbors at Nyange, Butome, Busmide and Irebu enjoyed every week the luxury of two or three sacrifices of human beings. They were the holidays of these towns. Everybody would gather in the square and stir themselves up to the wildest enthusiasm by dancing, singing and freely drinking from huge gourds of palm-wine. The chosen victims had to be patient spectators of all the merriment. When the turn of a victim was come, he would be tied, seated on a low block, his hands fastened to the ground by means of forked sticks, his legs stretched out and also fixed to the soil, and his back tied to stakks. His head was attached by bush-ropes to an elastic pole stuck in the ground some seven feet away and bent over so as to stretch the neck of the prisoner. The executioner, after much gesticulation, dancing a singing, draws with white chalk around his victim's neck the line where he intends to strike. Twice he brandishes his knife and brings it close to the mark line. Then he recedes. Silence reigns. Suddenly he leaps again to the victim; twice he swings the sword, to test his arm; a third time the severed head flies afar off, and the sanguinary crowd rushes on the lifeless body. A moment after, return with happy faces to their homes.

At Bonga, near Liranga, a victim is garrotted and stretched on the ground. A log is placed on his throat; the executioner, leaning on his hands and feet on the ends of the log, and thus strangles the unfortunate.

Since the arrival of the white men and of European authorities, these horrible public exhibitions have been discontinued in the immediate neighborhoods of the stations. Few slaves are still killed and eaten. Now they are gagged and stantly speared to death.

Our illustrations are not ancient, but represent a condition of affairs existing in Africa at the present time. Although slavery has nominally been abolished, and under the Brussels Treaty, the European governments guarantee the freedom of the native African, the curse still fell on Ham and his descendants still blight a large portion of the Dark Continent. One of the photographs shows a familiar scene in the streets of Zanzibar. Slaves who have attempted to run away and are captured are usually punished in the manner indicated. This little boy of seven years old—had carried the heavy iron weighing over thirty-two pounds, a worn this chain for over a year, at a time when a missionary member of the Universities Mission, Zanzibar, took the photograph which we reproduce from the London Graphic. In the larger illustration, a more pronounced instance of human slavery is presented. Part of a slave caravan halted to rest. Heavily chained to each other, escape for the wretched captives would seem to be impossible. They are stout and strong-looking, and evidently have not yet traveled a great distance, and undergone much of the hardships which such caravans usually encounter. Such scenes, Mr. Heli Chatelain declares, are not uncommon in many parts of the interior.

AN AFRICAN SLAVE CARAVAN RESTING ON THE WAY TO THE SLAVE MART.

and those who are forming the rank and file of its soldiery.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Good Literature in the Prisons.

Many more letters have been received from chaplains, wardens, sheriffs, and keepers of reformatories in many states, all heartily commending THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S recent experiment of a free distribution of good religious literature among the prisoners. A letter from the Chaplain of the Albany Penitentiary, Rev. Mr. Sanderson, says: "A cordial welcome is always extended by the prisoners to all religious papers; but, without intending or desiring to disparage any other publication, I can truthfully say that the welcome accorded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is always more cordial than that given to any other. Hence I was glad to receive the copies you so kindly sent. I could distribute five hundred copies every Sunday with great profit to the prisoners, if I had them." Those of our readers who have old in the basin of the Mobanghi, the mighty northern affluent of the Congo River. Cannibalism and slavery are intimately connected, for no free person can be legally put to death by an individual while the slave may be killed and eaten by the master whose chattel he is, without transgression of any law. The slaves are far more numerous than the free men. These often make a show of their wealth by wantonly killing some of their slaves, just as a boastful young lord will sometimes throw a handful of pennies to the street Arabs. Young slaves are the regular currency. Instead of saying, "their canoe is worth so many dollars," it is customary to say, "it is worth so many slaves." Some children who were redeemed by missionaries, had been the property of more than twenty masters.

As native law has it, every thief caught in the act, can immediately be seized and sold by the offended party. Instead of setting traps for field-rats or rabbits, many in that region set out bananas and other articles of food along the paths and keep dom of the native African, the curse still fell on Ham and his descendants still blight a large portion of the Dark Continent. One of the photographs shows a familiar scene in the streets of Zanzibar. Slaves who have attempted to run away and are captured are usually punished in the manner indicated. This little boy of seven years old—had carried the heavy iron weighing over thirty-two pounds, a worn this chain for over a year, at a time when a missionary member of the Universities Mission, Zanzibar, took the photograph which we reproduce from the London Graphic. In the larger illustration, a more pronounced instance of human slavery is presented. Part of a slave caravan halted to rest. Heavily chained to each other, escape for the wretched captives would seem to be impossible. They are stout and strong-looking, and evidently have not yet traveled a great distance, and undergone much of the hardships which such caravans usually encounter. Such scenes, Mr. Heli Chatelain declares, are not uncommon in many parts of the interior.

CLOSING THE RELIEF FUND.

Has Accomplished a Blessed Work in Armenia—The Present Condition and Prospects of the Sufferers.

WITH the present issue of this journal, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Armenian Relief Fund reaches a close. Its original object—the succoring of the starving Christian population of Van—has been accomplished; and it has also been the means of carrying help and new hope to seventeen other Armenian cities, and rough them to the afflicted population of hundreds of desolated villages in the interior of the various provinces. Indeed, it may be said that to every section of Armenia where the hand of persecution and the sword of massacre have been most severely felt, the Relief Fund has gone with its message of cheer and consolation. It has not only fed and afforded employment to the peasant exiles of Van, but thousands of those who were ruined by the terrible slaughter at Erzingan and Erzerum have cause to bless it, and so, too, have the dwellers of the desolated villages around Harpoot, the frightened fugitives who still throng Diarbekir, the homeless survivors of the massacres at Palu, Hadjin, Oorfa, Marash, Malatia, Gurun, Sivas, Adabkir and Cesarea. At all of these points as well as at Mardin, in ancient Mesopotamia, and Urumiah, in Persia, the Relief Fund has established centres of activity under charge of the American Board missionaries at which the good work has gone on uninterruptedly, saving thousands of valuable lives.

Miss Kimball's latest letter, just received, states the progress of the work at Van and shows the improvement in the situation. She writes:

Van, March 4th, 1896.

DEAR MR. KIMBALL:—I am sending to-day my first telegram to you of safety seven weeks. It is very difficult during to send such a message as this in the face of the fact that you are still in the hands of the Government, and that you are still in the hands of the Government, and that you are still in the hands of the Government. I enclose herewith the resolutions adopted at our last Committee meeting, that you may see the general direction that our work is taking. We are supplying about 8000 with bread from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BAKERY; and are also distributing wheat to the near villages on the same account. The 400 bushels were so distributed in January and February. The Industrial Bureau is running some 1250 employees; but both this department and the Bakery are in imminent danger of running out of raw material, as we have entirely exhausted supplies of cotton and wool in the city, and there is very little more wheat to be had. In the first instance, we are very much afraid that we shall be obliged to shut down until the roads open so that wheat can come in from Persia. This would involve the Relief Treasury in a very considerable unproductive outlay, for we should be obliged to support all our workers during the shut-down. In the meantime, we hope that the local Government will come to our rescue and order wheat in from the lake. During the past week we have been fairly overwhelmed by multitudes of the villagers attracted by the rumors of aid and driven by their own cruel necessities. The condition of the country seems to be improving—at least not growing worse governmentally, and there is hope for peace at last.

G. W. KIMBALL.

The resolutions referred to in Miss Kimball's letter set forth that relief work is to be closed in Van city for those refugees who belong to the twenty-seven villages reported as fairly safe; that after 7th of March no relief will be given to villagers not already on the lists; that in the case of 125 villages reported as unsafe, every endeavor is to be made to induce the villagers now on the bread lists, to return to their homes; and that estimates be prepared for the maintenance of the Industrial Bureau for three months. This letter was written before the receipt of the latest remittance of $2500 from the Relief Fund for the Van work. The money is doubtless now in Miss Kimball's hands.

In a letter from Cesarea, dated March 16, Rev. J. Fowle, the American Board missionary there acknowledges the receipt of Like an angel's visit your messenger came. All said "God sent him in answer to our cry!"

Dr. Fowle adds: "The letter is signed, 'Resurrection Abrahamson,' and surely the writer shows a spirit worthy of a son of Abraham! Tell the people that their generous response to these appeals for aid is making a deep impression on all thoughtful ones among these suffering Christians."

This intelligence comes to us direct from the field and from an authoritative source and may therefore be accepted as describing the actual situation at the present moment: The acute and almost universal suffering from hunger is practically over; in its place there has come a slow, dull agony that will take years to assuage. The people have been stripped of everything and, even in peace and toleration, could not regain in many years what has been lost. Not so many have died of starvation as was feared, and this is largely owing to the timely and beneficent relief afforded. The great massacres, this same authority de-

THE NINETEEN STATIONS OF "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" ARMENIAN RELIEF FUND.

Van	$15,000	Harpoot	$5,500	Oorfa	$2,500
Erzerum	1,000	Marash	1,500	Cesarea	1,000
Diarbakir	1,000	Erzurum	1,000	Urumiah	1,000
Sivas	1,000	Gurun	500	Palu	500
Malatia	1,000	Hadjin	500	Mardin	500
Antab	500	Gemerek	500	Ararat	500

$1000 from the Relief Fund, a portion of which will be used in the Gemerek district. Dr. Fowle forwards to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a translation of a letter from an Armenian of Gemerek, announcing the joy with which the news of the coming relief was hailed in that terribly afflicted place. The letter says:

Your aid comes to us like an "Angel of Deliverance" in our time of greatest need. May the Lord be near to aid you all through your lives! I had already given to those whose need was greatest, enough to keep them from starving. They crowded in upon us until we couldn't find our heads. I cut off the giving instantly and cried "There's no more! You can get no more!" Just as the words "No more!" rang out of my mouth, your messenger arrived, sprang from his horse, and gave your letter. As for myself, God knows what relief I had given!

clares, are probably ended, but persecution and isolated cases of outrage and murder will continue. At the present time, one of the most serious dangers is that of plague. The unsanitary condition of the cities and villages has already produced an epidemic of typhoid at several places and worse is feared. The American missionaries, who have practically distributed all the funds raised thus far, have a whole year's duty ahead in connection with relief and medical work alone. They have distributed the Armenian Fund raised in Constantinople, the English Fund (the British Ambassador, Sir Philip Currie, standing staunchly by them and supporting them at every turn), and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund. The Porte knows these missionaries and trusts them. The Sultan grants them privileges he accords to no one else, solely because they are trusted. This is the reason their work of distribution has not been stopped or even seriously impeded, at any particular point. Every dollar sent to these missionaries for relief purposes has come safely to hand and been quietly and judiciously applied to the alleviation of suffering. There are large sections in Northern Armenia, particularly around Kara-Hissar, where the suffering has been intense, and but little relief was afforded, as the world did not know of it and there were no missionaries near. Unquestionably, the worst section at the present time, where the deepest destitution exists, is in the Harpoot district. The same authority referred in terms of the highest praise to the great generosity of Christian America, as displayed in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund and otherwise, which had been the means of reviving hope and courage when these were well-nigh dead in Armenia.

In the map printed on this page are shown the location of the nineteen relief stations established by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, and conducted by the American Board missionaries. Too much cannot be said in commendation of these godly men and women, who, without thought of reward, and regardless of the great labor involved, carried on the work of distribution during these crucial months of slaughter and suffering. They, better than all others, know the Armenian people and their needs, and are beloved and trusted by them. Although THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund is now virtually closed as announced, its original mission having been accomplished, we trust that those of our readers and the friends who have not sent a help-offering and a prayer to stricken Armenia, will not fail to do so even yet. All contributions in aid of the Armenians should be sent hereafter to this address:

REV. DR. CREEGAN,
Am. Board of Foreign Missions,
Bible House, N. Y.

Every contribution will be acknowledged and the total weekly contributions will be cabled by Dr. Creegan regularly to the Bible House Committee, Constantinople, and by them sent at once to the different points of the field where most needed. Every remittance cabled by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund has been sent through this same safe and reliable channel. Thus, the work will be continued in the hands of the missionaries who have given such faithful and efficient service from the beginning of the suffering till now, and all the future wants of Van, Harpoot and other necessitous points, will be duly cared for.

The contributions to the Fund during the past week were as follows:

ev. ack $40,691.17	Hickman, Abbie L. 1.00	Keplinger, Mrs. E. R. 1.00	Mead, Mrs. M. L. 1.00	Pohlmeier, E. C. 5.00	Sch. Grace 30	Toson, Wm 5.00	Fern. Lynch 25
Ev. Amanda 25	Hickman, Annie L. 1.00	Kirby, E. R. 5.00	Mensch B. 2.00	Pollock, R. 1.00	Sill, Jesse 25	Townsend, C. W. 1.00	Harriet, St. Law Co. 1.00
Ev. Jacob 50	Hickman, Edna 1.00	Kinsinger, Mrs. W. L. 1.00	Middlekauff, Mrs. E. 1.00	Pollock, Mrs. Wm 25	Sill, Loyd 25	Travers, Adeline M. 1.00	John W. M. St. Louis 1.00
Ev. Mrs. Jacob 25	Hickman, Flora 1.00	Kosta, Lida 1.50	Milgarden, Nels 1.00	Poppie, Mr. 1.00	Sill, W. H. 2.00	Treat, Christian 1.00	Willie B. Columbia 50
Ev. Mrs. Ellen 1.00	Hickman, Maggie Q. 2.00	Kopp, E. 5.00	Miller, C. M. 1.00	Powell, Mr. 1.00	Sill, W. H. 2.00	Truman, Jane A. 2.00	Bessy, M. 1.00
Ev. Mrs. L. T. 1.00	Hickman, Nellie 1.00	Kyle, Mrs. May 1.00	Miller, P. C. 1.00	Powell, Mrs. T. 1.00	Simmons, J. 1.00	Trumbull, Mr. E. 2.00	Ernest, E. Pass 15
Ev. Mrs. M. 1.00	Hickman, Park J. 2.00	Landers, Robt. 5.00	Mishler, C. J. 1.50	Purinton, Fanny 1.00	Simmons, Mrs. Annie 2.00	Tam, Mary 2.00	S. H. M. Harding 3.00
Ev. Rev. P. 1.00	Hickman, Mrs. W. 8.00	Lattig, Mrs. P. 5.00	Mitchell, L. L. 5.00	Rand, Wm 2.00	Simpson, H. A. 2.00	Tiedle, Mr. & Mrs. S. 2.00	Mrs. A. M. K. Hampden 1.00
Ev. L. H. 2.00	Hickman, Zetta B. 2.00	Lawrence, Wm 2.00	Mitchell, John 2.00	Randolph, Maynard 2.00	Simpson, Mr. & Mrs. 2.00	Upshaw, Dan 5.00	W. W. B. 1.00
Ev. Mrs. Orville 3.00	Hill, M. J. 2.00	Lea, T. 7.00	Moffitt, Mrs. Rev. A. S. 1.00	Randolph, John A. F. 5.00	Sinclair, A. F. 5.00	VanVoorhis, Mrs. D. 1.00	W. I. W. B. 2.00
Ev. Mrs. G. A. 1.00	Hudson, J. B. 1.00	Leiten, Janet 1.00	Monson, J. G. 5.00	Ray, Mrs. F. E. 1.00	Sinclair, A. F. 5.00	VonVill, Mrs. A. 1.00	N. H. S. Milton 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hugger, L. 1.00	Leitch, John 1.00	Monson, Andrew 5.00	Reeve, M. C. 1.00	Skinner, M. G. 1.00	Walker, Mrs. Willard 1.00	H. E. G. Springfield 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hickman, Mrs. & Mrs. T. 1.00	Lewis, Arthur 1.00	Montgomery, M. E. 5.00	Reid, Mary D. 4.00	Slipston, H. L. 1.00	Wagon, Mrs. Wm 1.00	J. C. 20.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hunt, J. O. 1.00	Linson, Annabel 1.00	Moore, A. A. 1.00	Renick, Emeline 1.00	Shette, Gilbert P. 1.00	Wayward, A. 1.00	Mrs. M. H. Maytown 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hunt, Miss S. 2.00	Little, R. A. 1.00	Moore, E. H. 5.00	Reynolds, Mrs. M. 2.00	Smith, Coll. by Anna 1.00	Wayward, T. 1.50	A. E. E. Wilmington 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	House, Polly 2.00	Loughry, Mrs. J. F. 2.00	Morehouse, A. L. 2.00	Reids, Mrs. S. C. 5.00	Smith, Ed. 5.00	Walwood, Hannah 2.00	N. B. Howe 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Howard, Miss Edna 1.00	Locke, P. T. 1.00	Moreland, A. L. 1.00	Richards, M. S. 1.00	Smith, Elsie May 2.00	Ward, Mary in memory of dear Irish 1.00	F. W. Chanute 5.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Howard, Mrs. H. B. 1.00	Loomis, Mrs. R. M. 1.00	Moxton, Lizzie 5.00	Richards, S. 1.00	Smith, Lizzie A. 5.00	Ward, Mary in memory of dear Irish 1.00	J. L. R. Strabane 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Howe, Mary E. 1.00	Loughlin, Miss Ada 2.00	Moyer, Elmer F. 1.00	R. E. Strom, Mrs. A. N. 1.00	Smith, Mary W. 1.00	Wasson, R. 1.00	H. E. K. Washford 5.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Ho, T. Thos 1.00	Lounsborough, Ma. J. 1.00	Murphy, Miss A. 2.00	Roberts, H. J. 5.00	Snate, Pearl L. 5.00	Warner, Mrs. S. H. 4.00	A. P. P. Balto 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Huber, John 2.00	Lovett, Mrs. Laura 1.00	Murray, Mrs. M. 2.00	Roberts, R. 1.00	Smith, Rebecca C. 5.00	Washington, A. J. & wife 2.00	A. J. C. Clarendon 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hual, Chas 5.00	Lovett, H. A. 1.00	Mussetman, John 1.00	Robinson, Mrs. J. M. 1.00	Smith, A. E. 1.00	Wasson, Mrs. M. M. 1.00	P. A. Pleasant hill 5.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hual, Grover H. 1.00	Lowry, Dr. W. G. 2.00	Neagle, J. P. 5.00	Rofof, A. J. 2.00	Southgate, G. 1.00	Wasson, Mrs. M. M. 1.00	N. N. Liberty 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Hunt, A. E. 2.00	McAlister, R. D. 1.00	Nelson, Jacob 1.00	Rofof, A. J. 2.00	Spence, Mrs. & family 3.00	Waterman, I. V. & L. 3.00	L. R. Crossville 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Irwin, W. J. K. 1.00	McArthur, Miss C. 1.00	Nelson, Mrs. W. 1.00	Rorher, Mr. B. 3.00	Spinner, Martin 5.00	Woodman, G. 1.00	A. R. E. Peoria 5.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jackson, D. P. 5.00	McArthur, Miss C. 1.00	Nelson, E. 2.00	Rounsvell, Bessie 5.00	Squires, Miss Kitty 5.00	Wright, Frank B. 1.00	W. W. K. Mazoo 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jackson, W. D. 1.00	McArthur, Miss C. 1.00	Nelson, E. 2.00	Rounsvell, Bessie 5.00	Stanton, Mrs. Margaret 1.00	Wright, Frank B. 1.00	E. W. Dafford 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jackson, F. 1.00	McArthur, Mrs. S. N. 2.00	Nordby, J. H. 5.00	Rouzie, A. F. 5.00	Stanhope, J. M. 1.00	Wright, Miss A. S. 5.00	H. A. C. Seranton 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jaquith, L. M. 1.00	McCreary, Mrs. J. 5.00	Noyes, Mrs. M. 5.00	Rouzie, Mrs. V. M. 5.00	Stanley, Mrs. M. 1.00	White, B. A. 1.00	E. N. J. Woodhaver 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jerome, Mrs. H. N. 1.00	McCreary, Mrs. J. 5.00	Oakman, N. P. 1.00	Ruchman, Mathews 5.00	Stark, W. B. 2.00	White, Mabel 1.00	Arthur & Dorothy 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jenkins, Mrs. J. H. 5.00	McClendon, Hugh C. 1.00	Olmshead, C. E. 1.00	Rumier, Mrs. 2.00	Stedman, Mrs. T. B. 1.00	White, Mrs. Wm 2.00	CHURCHMAN 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jerrill, Miss R. M. 1.00	McElwain, J. & F. J. 2.00	O'son, Ole 1.00	St. Sauver, Ethel V. 1.00	Stevenson, L. J. 2.00	Whitney, Mrs. J. W. A. 1.00	Frances, A. J. 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Jessett, Dr. O. W. 2.00	McElwain, E. C. 1.00	Ostland, Nels 5.00	Sanders, Martha 1.00	Stewart, Frank 1.00	Whitney, Mrs. J. W. A. 1.00	Margaret F. Pittsburgh 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, M. 2.00	McGee, R. 1.00	Ostland, Nels 5.00	Savage, J. A. 3.15	Stewart, J. O. 2.00	Whitney, Mrs. S. H. 1.00	Lillian C. Wolfsville 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, Abbie C. 2.00	McGee, R. 1.00	Palmer, Gus & Hard 5.00	Savage, Mrs. E. J. 5.00	Stewart, Mr. Jas 1.00	Wiggin, L. F. 1.00	Edna, Birmingham 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, Mrs. C. and Mrs. E. Williams 2.00	McGee, Mrs. Thos. 5.00	Parl. E. Mrs. R. A. 1.00	Sawyer, E. L. 1.00	Stewart, M. E. 2.00	Wilder, Geo 1.00	Fiera, Martindale 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, Mrs. Peter 5.00	McKee, Cyrus 4.00	Parkhurst, Mr. 2.00	Sawyer, F. 1.00	Stewart, Nettie 5.00	Williams, Arvilla 1.00	M. S. H. Lowell 3.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, Capt. Sam 1.00	McKee, D. 5.00	Paterson, P. 2.00	Sawyer, Mrs. F. A. 1.00	Stokes, J. 1.00	Williams, Mrs. F. M. 1.00	I. S. D. Wegatchie 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, Toilef 1.00	McKee, D. 5.00	Patton, Birt 2.00	Sayles, Harold F. 1.00	Stout, Mrs. Chas 1.50	Williams, J. F. 2.00	E. A. D. Coon Rapids 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Johnson, Mrs. A. and daughters 3.00	McKee, D. 5.00	Patton, Birt 2.00	Scheer, Mrs. D. C. 1.00	Stubs, John & N. 2.00	Williams, Mrs. W. E. 2.00	W. H. K. 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kaser, John A. 5.00	McWilliams, Chas 3.00	Paulson, J. A. 5.00	Schneider, J. B. 1.00	Suits, A. M. 2.00	Williams, W. H. 1.00	C. M. W. Mt. Gilead 5.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kay, Mrs. Grace 5.00	MacMahan, Rev. John 4.00	Penfield, E. S. 1.00	Schrems, M. 4.00	Super, A. D. 5.00	Winger, Miss Helen 1.00	S. S. O. 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Keach, Mrs. E. W. 10.00	MacMahan, Rev. John 4.00	Peterson, A. S. 2.00	Schwartz, Carrie 2.00	Swartz, Mrs. Barbara 5.00	Woodlaver, Mrs. J. H. 1.00	K. M. Nantucket 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Keene, Mrs. A. O. 1.00	Martin, Miss Jennie 5.00	Peterson, A. S. 2.00	Schwartz, Mrs. John & daughter 2.00	Swartz, Mrs. John & daughter 2.00	Woodlaver, Phebe 1.00	A. J. B. Ontkary Falls 3.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Keith, Hannah 5.00	Mason, Mr. & Mrs. J. 10.00	Peterson, S. F. 2.00	Shaffer, Mrs. Leona 1.00	Sweet, Mrs. B. C. 1.00	Wright, Miss A. M. 2.00	M. R. La Fayette 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kemp, Mrs. 5.00	Matthews, F. A. 5.00	Phipps, W. H. 1.00	Sheldon, Mrs. A. E. 1.00	Swiger, Anna S. 2.00	Wright, Miss A. M. 2.00	E. J. G. Jack Reef 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kennedy, Harry 3.00	Matthews, F. Elizabeth 1.00	Pickerskill, Rex. In memory of little 2.00	Shoemaker, John H. 1.00	Switzer, Mary D. 2.00	Wright, Mrs. C. 1.00	S. J. M. N. City 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kennel, Mrs. 2.00	Matthews, Mrs. John 1.00	Pickthorne, John 1.50	Shoemaker, Mrs. L. 5.00	Symonds, M. E. 1.00	Yates, Mrs. M. A. 1.00	G. Doe Run 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kepner, Mrs. 5.00	Matthee, Mary E. 2.00	Platz, Minnie 5.00	Short, Mrs. R. 5.00	Thompson, M. E. 1.00	Yates, W. J. 1.00	T. M. & family 2.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kerr, Isabella 1.00	Macle, Mrs. Ed 10.00	Platton, Miss Lillian 5.00	Shuler, D. M. 1.00	Thompson, N. 2.00	Yerdon, Mrs. J. H. 1.00	E. W. J. Franklin 1.00
Ev. G. W. 1.00	Kerr, Giles 1.00	Mead, E. D. 1.00		Sill, Elmer 2.00	Tittel, Mrs. L. B. 1.00	Mamma, John, Besse & Byron, Mich. 1.00	W. B. Albany 2.00

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Savage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadas, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,

Bible House, New York City.

Entered at Post-Office at New York, as Second-Class Matter

Christian Work.

A GREAT deal of the work we are called upon to do in this world is unsatisfactory. It is so many pounds to be lifted, or so many miles to be walked, or so many wheels to be tired, or so many feet of wall to be constructed; and when the work is done, and we get our wages; or when the goods are sold, and we get our pay; or when the column is written, and we receive our compensation, our work seems there and then to end. But it is not so with distinctively Christian work. There the fabric is immortal, the results are immortal. If an architect constructs a bridge, or raises a secular institution, he has his name chiseled on the buttress of the bridge, or on the foundation of the wall of the structure; and the elements may beat against it, but for scores and hundreds of years the words chiseled into that stone will last, and tell to coming generations who built the bridge and who reared the structure. But after the passage of a certain number of years the bridge will fall, the secular building will crumble, and the name of the architect will be forgotten. He built with perishable material, and, of course, his name finally vanishes. But he who works in Christian departments inweaves his name into that which is positively imperishable, and there shall be no power in the roll of centuries of time, of cycles of eternity, to efface that word. Who will be the men that will be remembered longest? Those who have achieved the largest fortunes, gained the highest secular position, won the most resounding name, led the largest military host? or will it be those whose personal and high-hearted consecration to the service of God make their life parallel in all the future with the life of the everlasting God? Men sometimes build monuments for their fellows at large expense of hundreds and thousands of dollars, but how little satisfaction in the rearing of such structures that stand generally in the cemeteries. Only a few men pass them thoughtfully, and stop and read the inscription and learn the lesson of the life and death of the man whose departure is there announced. The vast majority go along, and they whistle and they talk and they forget. Whereas the man who gives anything to the cause of Jesus Christ, who toils in religious departments, is building a monument that will last for eternal ages.

It is impossible that it be defaced; it is impossible that it ever crumble. That thought ought to give great satisfaction to Christian workmen. There is in the final reminiscences of life a great thrill of comfort connected with the service of God. We have seen a great many people die. We have never heard one of them talk in this wise: "I invented a new sewing-machine. I built a large house. I gathered three hundred thousand dollars. I made a bid in the money-market that shook all the cities." Men in their last hour never have any such reminiscence. The accumulations, and emoluments, and achievements of this world to the Christian man, in his closing moment, do not seem worth a single mention. But we have heard a great many Christians in their last moments express it as a matter of gratitude to God that they have been permitted to work in the Church, and consecrate their energies to religious uses.

There is also a heavenly world-reminiscence of Christian work that must be highly delightful and satisfactory. When we reach heaven we will have a great deal of time to think. How very small this world will seem when looked upon from that high residence, and all that we may have gathered up in this world will seem insignificant. But suppose that in this world we set our hand and heart to serve God, in that blessed land we shall see all around us the results of our work. Suppose, now, that in this world a man had given one hundred dollars to the cause of Christ, and that one hundred dollars went toward the building of a church, the construction of a pew, the fashioning of an organ which would sound forth the praises of God, the molding of a bell which should ring out to all the city invitation for worship.

Suppose that through the contribution of one hundred dollars, he has been the means in this world of saving two souls, and that those two souls had been the means of saving ten souls, and the ten of bringing a hundred into the kingdom of God, and the hundred a thousand, and the thousand a million, and the million still more millions, the tide of influence rolling on through all the ages of eternity.

Now I suppose the soul rising up in heaven will have the skill and acumen to trace out all these lines of influence, and trace them back to one contribution which he made a thousand years ago on earth. God will permit him to see that he did it—it was his instrumentality, starting that one contribution, reaching out through the salvation of all these immortals, helping to make heaven more jubilant. We suppose that will be one of our sweetest occupations in heaven, if we have accomplished anything for Christ on earth, to count it, measure it, weigh it, estimate it. Now, if there is so much satisfaction in Christian work, why not let us all enter it?

Striking the Bible.

THE religious world is frequently agitated by a determination on the part of the theologians to square off and fight the religion of their fathers. Some think it argues great pluck for a man to assail the Bible and the church, and set up a new religion. The fact is, it requires no courage at all to do so, for he is always sure of the favor and applause of a multitude who hate the Bible and would be glad to see it struck on any side, and to have Christianity crippled. The Bible antagonists do not realize they are attempting to stop an express train by putting their foot on the track, or to arrest an Alpine avalanche by bracing themselves against one of the ice-cakes. The Bible goes right on, and the Church of God goes right on, and Christianity goes right on, and the chief damage is done to the critics. There have never been so many live churches in the United States as to-day. More people believe the Gospel than ever before, and vaster multitudes are attempting to practice its precepts. The attempt to shatter the Bible for the last three hundred years has not rent asunder or dislodged a single doctrine or sentiment. After its present assailants are all dead, their funeral sermons will be preached from King James's Translation, not one verse omitted from the first page of Genesis to the last page of Revelations. One would think the world would get tired of a bombardment of the Bible castle when with all their concentrated fire of three hundred years they have not been able to knock out of its walls a splinter large enough to make the most sensitive eyeball quiver. Oh! I am so glad we are in the army which will finally win the day. Here and there a repulse may come through the perfidy of some officer, or the backing out of some traitor in the camp; but there are enough of the mounted cavalry of the King to ride down all opposition and to dismount the guns of the enemy. I have no nervousness as to the result. I am only anxious to be on the right side in the contest, and to do my share in the hard marching and hard fighting.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Inquirer. Is George Muller still living, and if so, where is he?

He is probably in England. Lately he has been traveling extensively in Europe and the East.

Subscriber, Oshkosh, Wis. Please inform me through your paper just who and what the Scandinavians are?

The term, "Scandinavian," is applied generally to the Germanic peoples, including Swedes, Norwegians, Danes, and Icelanders. Originally the term would have also embraced portions of Great Britain.

"Reader," Bancroft, Mich. Are Divine Healing and Christian Science the same in principle and practice?

No, there is all the difference between them that there is between the objective and the subjective. The principle of Divine Healing is that Christ will heal those who apply to him now in faith, as he healed the sick when he was upon the earth. The principle of Christian science is to influence the body through the operations of the mind—to attain such a condition of equanimity and passivity that the body throws off disease by the superior power of the mind. Briefly, to believe that you are well and that all your sickness is taken away, and you will be well. There is a very wide difference between the two, as you may see.

"In His Name," St. Louis, Mo. Can you explain how God and the Lord Jesus Christ can be one? If they are one, how could Christ pray to the Father?

No one yet has been able to give a satisfactory explanation of the Trinity. There are certain matters that we believe to have been revealed, and which we accept on faith, without being able to perfectly understand them. The Trinity is one. If you try to grasp the idea of God being manifest in the flesh, of his taking on a human form that he might reveal himself to men in such a way as that they could understand the divine nature better than they could when they thought of it as pure spirit and invisible, you will get a glimpse of the mystery. You need not give up belief in the doctrine because you do not understand it. You cannot clearly understand the trinity of body, mind, and soul in your own nature, yet we suppose you accept it.

E. J. C., Brooklyn, N. Y. Do you think that persons born out of wedlock are excluded from heaven? I have some difficulty in understanding Deuteronomy 23, as I know good Christian people who come under its prohibitions.

It is not clear to whom the prohibitions referred. The general opinion among scholars is that the reference was to the offspring of Jewish fathers and heathen mothers, especially of the priestesses. It was necessary in the circumstances in which Israel was placed, with the heathen on all sides, to enact very stringent laws to keep the nation from intermarriage. The phrase, "entering into the congregation," does not appear to apply to the eternal state, but the body politic. As we should phrase it, they could not become citizens, nor share in the property of their father and his tribe. In any case, it does not apply to such persons now. No man is excluded from heaven but he who rejects the salvation offered through Christ.

J. D. T., Forest Hill, W. Va. 1. Does Paul's disclaimer of authority in 1 Cor. 7:12 refer to all he wrote on the subject? 2. Did he write under inspiration when he wrote 1 Timothy 2?

1. We do not understand the words in the sense that you appear to do. Paul wrote that the things that had gone before were written "by permission, not of commandment;" by which, as we understand, he meant that such things were permissible or allowable, they were not a duty, and he goes on to point out that he, himself, had not done them. If any one were so situated as he described, they might do as he said, if they wished. He does not appear to us to mean that his own utterance was permitted, not commanded. The Revised Version confirms this view. It renders it, "by way of permission, not of commandment."

2. We believe the whole of his writings to be inspired; but we do not believe that if he were writing to modern churches he would have written as he did to those at Rome or Corinth. He would be more likely to caution them against modern evils than against eating meats sacrificed to idols. He gave advice suitable to the circumstances in which the churches were placed, and in doing so laid down broad, general principles which have been applicable to subsequent complication.

L. H. H., St. Louis. Is it a wife's duty to remain regularly at home from the weekly prayer-meeting of the church of which she is a member, simply to be company for her husband, who is a member of the church, and will not go to a meeting with her?

We do not so consider it. Unless he be selfish and unreasonable, indeed, he will not put any obstacle in the way, and he may ultimately be moved by her example and his prayers to take a different view of religion.

Reader. 1. Where can the descendants of 1

Rehobites be found, or do they now exist?

2. What is the story of the origin of the Wampanoag?

1. As late as the twelfth century, Benjamin of Tudela, mentioned that, near El Jubar, found Jews who called themselves Rechabites. They were 100,000 in number, and were governed by a prince who traced his genealogy to the house of David. A later traveller, I. Wolff (1839), gave a similar report of Rechabites living near Mecca. Dr. Pierotti (1866) describes a tribe of Rechabites living near Dead Sea in caverns and low houses. 2. Its foundation in the legend that the Saviour, turning to one of his enemies who had reviled, spat upon and smote him as he passed on the way to Calvary, uttered the words "Tarry thou till I come," and that thenceforth the wretched man had wandered up and down the earth, vainly seeking forgetfulness and oblivion in death.

H. E. W., Richmond, Va. Is there any account in the Bible of the building of the Temple that was used in the time of Christ?

The Jews called it the second Temple, a contention that it was the one built under the superintendence of Nehemiah and Ezra. A matter of fact, however, little if any of the structure remained in the Temple in Christ's time. Herod proposed to pull it down and build it on a more magnificent scale. The Jews, however, objected. They thought there was possibility of his not living to complete it, and therefore a part was pulled down and rebuilt before another part was pulled down. During the process of reconstruction they were without a place of national public worship, though when completed it was really a new building. The history of the work is given in Josephus, and is not in the Bible.

A subscriber in Kapadartse, Macedonia, Turkey, writes us:

Some time ago I sent you a postal informing that I did not receive the paper. I am sorry that should have been stopped by the government, but I think it has been at Salonica. I desire very much to get it, but it is difficult. My impression is that has been stopped because of the articles it published concerning Armenia.

This is an illustration of Turkish press censorship. The Sultan's government, when it encounters a journal bold enough to print the truth, decrees that it shall not enter Turkish dominions.

The following acknowledgment will interest many of our readers:

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.
58 Reade St., New York, March 30, 1896.
To the Publisher of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the readers thereof, who, by their donations, have aided me in wiping out that eight thousand dollar of indebtedness, I desire to return my heartfelt thanks, and the prayers of a grateful heart for any value, let me assure those who have helped National Temperance Society, that they have in all fullness and Christian love. Sincerely,
C. H. MEAD, Field Secretary.

Any reader having old numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD or other good reading matter, can aid the Dock Meetings at Elizabeth, N. J., by sending them, freight prepaid, William C. Finck, 721 Pearl St., Elizabeth, N. J.

J. W. M., Burklitsville. Your questions are in the line of conundrums and are somewhat out of place.—A. M. S., Stone Mills, Mich. We cannot give information.—F. W. C., Pioneer, Mont. It is a complicated international question and not to be dealt with impulsively, but with calm and deliberate statesmanship.—D. G. H., Bismark, Ia. He does not have access to all the literature on the subject and adapted at will from the various legends, brew, Arabic, and others.—Phidias B., Le Mans, Mass. We have not the information.—F. H. Hill Top, Md. The dates given in Egyptian chronology were the estimates of authorities on the subject and cannot be regarded as conclusive. On the other hand, the dates which you find on the margin of the Bible are not a portion of the inspired text, but are estimates by another distinguished biblical authority and chronologist, Archbishop Usher, lived 200 years ago. The Bible itself gives no information concerning the points in question.—All inquiries concerning the "Mabellus" mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, should communicate with Mr. Charles L. Philbrick, Librarians' League, No. 1, Chalmers Building, Twenty-second street and Third Avenue, New York City.—A. F. D., Brooklyn.

2. Write to Enrollment Bureau, Navy Department, Washington, D. C., for all information. 3. H. writing is fair.—F. K. S., Linsithig, N. Y. 4. To the nearest jail, penitentiary, almshouse, or hospital. They will certainly be appropriate.—A. Elizabeth, N. J. The story is probably one of many legends, with very doubtful foundation.—Subscriber, Oshkosh, Wis. Write to Rev. Dr. Torrey, The Institute, Chicago, Ill.—M. E. M., Monroeville, Pa. Her married surname is Wetton.—E. S., Starkboro, Vt. Send to Rev. G. W. Sharp, K. ville, Mo., prepaying postage.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Soudanese Expedition.

RECENT cable dispatches announce the arrival of the first contingent of the Egyptian army at Akasheh, which was to be the first place occupied in the Soudan campaign. Sir H. H. Kitchener, who is in command of the expedition, is instructed not to penetrate further for the present; but it is generally believed if the forces can hold Akasheh, reinforcements will be sent to enable him to occupy Dongola. An expedition of ten thousand men from India is also to be sent to Suakim, which is on the Red Sea coast, further south, to operate against the dershahs should they decide to attack the position at Akasheh. The Egyptian Government guided by the English officials are evidently proceeding with the utmost caution. Experience would suggest the wisdom of their doing so, as a disaster such as that which overtook Hicks in 1883 would probably be fatal to Egypt. Indications are to be seen everywhere of a restlessness and an activity among the followers of the Mahdi, which are the usual precursors of offensive operations. Osman Digna, the chief Mahdist General, a brave and able man, is reported to be marching on Kassala, whether to wrest the fortress from the Italians for his master, or to cooperate with the Abyssinians for the benefit of the Emperor of Abyssinia, is uncertain. The obvious intention of the English expedition is to divert this force from Kassala. Should Osman Digna succeed in capturing it, he would possess the principal key to Khartoum and be able to control the whole of the Soudan, and menace Egypt on her weakest frontier. The dershah force directed against Kassala is it appears only one of four which are advancing in different directions, with the common object of driving Europeans out of north-western Africa. When the expedition to Akasheh was dispatched, one of these advanced positions was within a hundred miles of the Egyptian frontier, showing an attack on Egypt was contemplated. The British Government has not avowed its intention of reconquering the Soudan, which it abandoned twelve years ago, but there is little doubt that they cherish that hope. So long as the Soudan is in anarchy, or in the hands of an enemy, there is the hope of the permanent pacification, security of Egypt. The present expedition is, therefore, probably designed with the double purpose of relieving Kassala and precipitating a conflict with the Mahdists which must come sooner or later. Excepting in France and Russia public opinion is with the expedition, as the Mahdists are not patriots fighting for their country, but cruel oppressors who are the terror of the people of the Soudan, slave raiders and ruthless fanatics like the Mohammedans of Armenia. England, with the Egyptians, is fighting the battle of Christianity and civilization against the enemies of both. It may be hoped that the issue of this war and of the occupation of Egypt will be the extension of Christianity in that distracted land and that soon the promise will be fulfilled:

The Lord shall smite Egypt, smiting and healing; and he shall return unto the Lord, and he will be treated of them and will heal them. (Isa. 19 : 22.)

Sensitive Cell.

Two suspected criminals were transferred from the custody of the State of Ohio to that of Kentucky recently. The tradition proceedings were allowed to go through, as there was not sufficient evidence to hold them for the crime they were suspected of committing in Ohio. A Cincinnati journal says that there were very strong grounds for the suspicion, and describes a curious test that was applied to them. There is in the detective headquarters in that city a cell known as the "sensitive cell." It has double walls, and the door shuts so closely that it is almost airtight, save for the ventilators above. Not a sound of any kind can be heard in the cell, and the effect on a prisoner of the deadly silence of this living tomb is usually very depressing. Concealed in the walls are a number of telephone receivers, with wires attached to the chief office. Two prisoners, confined in the "sensitive cell," generally fall into conversation after a short time, and every word they say is distinctly heard in the office, where a stenographer records it. The clues to many important crimes have been obtained from this cell. The two extradited prisoners, however, were silent, having probably received a hint from some one that the walls had ears. They were more fortunate than others, who have not known how the resources of civilization have been utilized for their detection. Our ancestors would have been incredulous if they had been told of this and other specimens of these resources that are now familiar to us. But even with this knowledge, men are often oblivious to the fact declared centuries ago by the Psalmist:

There is not a word in my tongue, but lo O Lord, thou knowest it altogether. (Ps. 139 : 4.)

A Child's Peril.

A little girl about five years old had a narrow escape from death at Port Washington, L. I., a few days ago. She was playing with a big mastiff belonging to her father and wandered away from home.

THE SOUDANESE EXPEDITION—THE MARCH ACROSS THE DESERT.

The dog was devotedly attached to her, so it was thought she was safe with him. But they began romping in a field which abutted on the big mill-pond. They rolled and tumbled about getting nearer and nearer to the edge of the pond. In wrestling with the dog the child fell over. The dog followed her and getting his shoulders under her, kept her above water. But there was a stone bulkhead three feet above the surface of the water and though the dog could hold up the child he could not climb the bulkhead with her. He was getting exhausted when a man went to his help. He jumped into the water and catching up the child swam with her to the bulkhead, but like the dog, he could not climb it with his burden and his water-soaked clothes. Happily the alarm had been given and the child's mother came running down to the bulkhead in time to take her little daughter from her rescuer and help him out. The mother scarcely knew whether to scold or caress the dog. He had been the occasion of her child's peril, but she would have been drowned, if he had not gone to her rescue. He had done all in his power to undo the mischief he had caused. It is not always possible either for dogs or men to avert the consequences of their thoughtlessness. Many a converted man would be glad to give his life if he could rescue those who through his influence in the days of his sin were led into evil. Even when Christ has forgiven such a man he cannot forgive himself for the evil he did and cannot repair.

Whoso causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way shall fall himself into his own pit. (Prov. 28 : 10.)

Believed Himself Guilty.

The Governor of Michigan issued a pardon a few days ago to an innocent man who has been six years in prison for a crime he did not commit. The curious feature of the case is that the man believed in his own guilt. He was living up to November 1889 at Matchwood, Ontonagon County, Michigan, in a lonely house in the woods with four other persons—two men and their wives. He was a quiet peaceable man when he was sober, but was quarrelsome if he was provoked when he had been drinking. One night one of the women was killed by a gun shot and the other was seriously wounded. The latter was carried to a hospital where she was for a long time deprived of her reasoning faculties. The two husbands charged the other man with having committed the murder of the one woman and the wounding of the other. At the trial the accused man admitted that he had been drinking heavily on the night of the murder and could not remember having committed it. When he emerged from his drunken stupor, he said, he found himself struggling with one of the other men for the possession of a gun and the dead woman was lying on the floor. As the other two men was tried originally in the Surrogate's court about ten years ago. I cannot remember the exact details, but the question to be decided was whether the claimant, who was a lady, was the person whose name was in the record of the family on that fly-leaf and thereby acknowledged as the daughter of a deceased wealthy citizen. If she could establish her identity, she was entitled to a large sum of money as her share of the estate that was in question.

The other side disputed her claim, and when the Bible was produced in court, it certainly bore marks of manipulation.

OSMAN DIGNA.

SIR H. H. KITCHENER.

The page was badly blurred, and the writer had made an erasure, or it had been made for him, just in that first name of his daughter on which the suit hinged. The case was finally compromised, but I remember thinking what a big sum depended on a single word in an old book. It is well for the Christian who is an heir of God, and who depends on the Bible for the evidence of his title, that there can never be any dispute about the broad and emphatic terms it contains.

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. (Rom. 8 : 14.)

BRIEF NOTES.

In Reply to Several Inquiries from our Subscribers, we must positively decline to receive contributions intended for the support of the so-called Ben-Oliel Mission in Jerusalem.

A Recent Report of the National Bible Society of Scotland shows that the number of copies of Scriptures distributed during the preceding year has been larger than that of any other year.

In a Statement Made by Commander Ballington Booth to the New York Recorder, he is reported as saying that the money remitted from the American Salvation Army to International headquarters while he had been in command, amounted to $113,000.

At the Ninety-second Anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society recently celebrated, it was reported that during its existence it had issued over 200,000,000 Bibles in 300 languages. There were published last year 40,000,000 copies. The Society is now occupied with 102 translations into as many dialects.

A Christian Alliance has been Organized at Madison, Wis. It is an organization of the Christian workers of the city for missionary work and municipal reform. Its object is to unite the Christian citizens of the city and render effective their efforts to promote its welfare. It is the outgrowth of the evangelistic meetings led by the Rev. B. Fay Mills.

The Northfield Training School having for its object the fitting of Christian workers for successful and effective work in all forms of Christian service, closed its sixth year on March 26. Of the graduates, 2 are ordained pastors of churches, 7 are at work in foreign fields, 6 are preparing for foreign mission work, 50 are at work in home mission fields, and 50 are increasing their preparation in other institutions.

Prof. Peilman, the Sociologist of the University of Bonn, reports that he has traced the descendants of a German drunken and dishonest woman who died in 1794 so far as they could be found. Seven of them had suffered as murderers, 76 had been more or less frequently in prison, costing the country 13 seventy-nine years about a million dollars; 208 were professional beggars and 181 were vicious women.

More than Three Hundred Persons, Chiefly men, have made profession of faith at the Monday afternoon meetings in Cooper Union, New York, during the past three months. Dr. A. C. Dixon writes: "Truly God is doing great things for us. We earnestly request Christians everywhere to pray for a deep and widespread revival in New York and Brooklyn and that these meetings may be used of God to promote it."

The Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, at its meeting in the Bible House on April 2, made appropriations aggregating $123,771 for conducting Bible work in foreign lands. These included: The Society's Agencies in the Levant, in China, in Siam and Laos, in Korea, in Persia, and in Venezuela; to the Bible Societies' Committee for Japan, to the Bible Society of France, to the Russian Bible Society, to the American Board for Bible Work in Spain, and to the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church for Bible work in Bengal. During the year ended, March 31, the number of volumes of the Word of God issued from the Bible House, exclusive of those issued in foreign lands, was 966,702.

Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance. (Ps. 90 : 8.)

A Doubtful Entry.

"One of the most stubbornly contested cases in which I have been engaged," says a New York lawyer in the course of some recently published reminiscences, "turned on the entry on the fly-leaf of a Bible. It

Under Nice's Blue Skies.

The Quaint Old Town Where Royalty Goes to Recuperate—Peasant Washerwomen who Make a River Their Wash-tub.

HERE is no pleasanter or more salubrious city in all Europe than Nice, that old and quaintly-beautiful sea-coast resort of France, once a part of the Kingdom of Sardinia, and now the chief of the Department of Alpes Maritimes. Its splendid piers and sea-bathing establishments, its magnificent promenades, and grand public squares, its crystal palace, cathedral, churches, chapels and synagogues, together with its affluence of lycées, museums, libraries, observatories combine to make it attractive to the visitor. These, taken in conjunction with the fact that the mercury rarely goes to the freezing point, that snow is practically unknown, and that the maximum summer heat is ninety degrees, with one of the most perfect climates imaginable, make Nice altogether an ideal resort, and it is not surprising that royalty and the very rich and distinguished people of the Old World and not a few Americans, are to be found there at a time when other lands are feeling the rigors of winter. Its climate is believed to be the best Europe affords for certain classes of invalids. Aged Queen Victoria frequently passes a few weeks in winter at Cimiez, a little suburb, which lies on a hillside two miles back of Nice. Thither she will go shortly, with a few attendants. To reach Cimiez, one passes along the prettiest roads imaginable, between luxuriant villa gardens and fine olive groves, until a height of 360 feet above sea-level is reached. Near the Queen's villa are others belonging to various royalties, one being the property of Princess Beatress, and another of ex-Empress Eugénie of France.

Through a portion of the city of Nice—the oldest and least fashionable section—flows the Paillon, a small stream, with hardly sufficient volume to be called a river. It is often dried up in summer, but in the spring and fall it runs, as clear as crystal, to the sea. Along its banks, the lavandieres or laundresses of the ancient town, gather in line to wash the linen of their rich patrons, and it is an interesting sight to witness them so engaged. Our photograph on this page was recently taken on one of those "perfect days" for which Nice is deservedly famous, and shows the lavandieres at work, some rubbing and "rinsing" the clothes, others spreading them out on the smooth white stones, or stretching them upon lines to bleach snow-white in the sun. On specially fine days, both banks of the Paillon for a mile or more, present just such a picture as is here shown. The housewives of Nice have a great reputation for cleanliness and this doubtless is due in part to the fact that the natural advantages afforded by the little river as a great wastub for the town, are almost universally availed of.

The Food Question in China.

In China, the food question is an all-important one. Domestic economy has long since discovered, in that country, how to make food products go farther and accomplish more than in any other part of the world. J. Oscar Peterson, writing on this subject, says: The vastness of the Chinese empire, the climate, population and areas of the land are factors that render the food of the people in some parts more or less different to that in other parts.

In the north and western parts animal milk is to some extent used for food. In the south, goats' milk may be found for the benefit of infants. In the centres of dense population animal milk is out of question. Laws of economics do not admit the soil to be used in the production of food for cattle, but only cereals, vegetables and fruits as food for the people. Rice is the staple food. The aggregate of all other articles of diet amount to less than the quantity of rice alone that is consumed. The Chinese are exempt from nervous diseases and disorders that prey on civilized nations of the West, the cause of which, we are told, can be ascribed only to the consumption of flesh foods and of wine that in China are ly reach us, and that the best tea to be had anywhere is not that grown in China but in India or Ceylon. "Brick tea" constitutes a large article of export, especially black brick tea, which is shipped by caravans of camels into Russian Siberia. The black tea is subjected to such great pressure as to be formed into bricks, which are shipped by steamer or canal to near Peking, where camels are laden with over five hundred pounds each and driven beyond the Great Wall and through Mongolia with their valuable freight. This is distinguished from the leaf tea as we have it, mostly in the mode of preparation, for the Russians who cut it off as they wish from the solid mass into which it has been pressed into a solid mass. The Russian trade is regarded as quite valuable, and the present Czar when in China visited those tea districts whence Russia obtains her largest supplies. Tea dust is also exported and also tea pressed into tablets, but these last two items do not exceed a half million dollars in value, yearly. There are three pickings of tea annually from the same bushes. The earliest picking of the tender leaves before the rain is regarded as best, and such tea is called "U. Z.," or "Before the Rain." More than half of the tea shipped to Russia goes by sea to Odessa, while the rest goes by caravan to Siberia via Kiakhta. Russia is a larger consumer of tea than both England and the United gether, and make a tongue for yourself. At every recital of this humorous sal against the English, the Boer lads and lasses laugh, and the veterans who fought at Majuba Hill and the Krugersdorp show their sides with glee.

Going to the Country.

THE season will shortly be here when the usual exodus of city folks to the country will begin. Dr. T. Mage, who in his long lifetime had experience both as city dweller and ruralist, writes thus of the efforts of town people to domesticate themselves in the country: "The city man hastens out the first beck of pleasant weather, wishes to sit in what poets call 'the lap of spring.' We have ourselves sat, seven times, in her lap, and pronounce her the roughest nurse that ever had anything to do with us. Through March, April, and May, for the last few years, the maid seems to have been out of patience, and she blows, and frets, and spits in your face with storm, till, seemingly exhausted with worry, she lies down at the end of June. The family of the city men for the first ten days after going into the country, kept in the house by bad weather. It is the Paradise of mud. The ground, enraptured with the dainty feet of the city belle, takes their photograph up and down the lane, and secures its pay by absorbing one of her overshoes up by the barn, and other by the woods. Mud on the dress. Mud on carriage-wheels. Mud the door-step. A very carnival of mud!

"The poultry of the man are Golden Hamburgs, and Buff Dorkins and Bengallers, and Cradle-crowns, and Black Polands, and Chittapies. But they are stingy of laying, and notwithstanding all the inducements of pensive coop, and ingenious nests, and handsome surroundings, are averse to any practical or useful expression. They eat, drink, and cackle, and everything but lay. You feed them hot mush, and throw lime out of which they are to make the shell, and strew ashes to kill the lice, and call them by all the glorious memory of a distinguished ancestry to do something worthy of their name, all in vain. Here and there an egg, dropped in the pointed place, gives you a specimen of what they might do if they will. We owned such a hen. We had given an outrageous price for her. We lavished on that creature every possible kindness. Though useless, she made more noise than all the other denizens of the barn-yard, and, as some faithful came from her nest, would join in cackle, as much as to say, 'Ain't we doing well?'"

We came to hate the sight of the hen. She knew it well, and as she saw coming, would clear the fence with a squawk, as if her conscience troubled her. We would not give one of our unpretending Dominicks for three full-blooded Clatsaps.

"Yet, after all, only those who come of the heats of the town, know the enchantment of country life. Years ago on the prongs of a long fork, with which we tossed the hay into the mow, pitched away our last attack of 'the blues.' We can beat back any despondency ever knew with a hoe-handle. Born and brought up in the country, we have, since we left it, been longing to go back, though doomed for most of the time to stay in town. The most rapturous lay poet about country life has never come to our own experiences. Among the grandest attractions about the Heavenly City are the trees, and the rivers, and the white horses. When we had a place in the country, the banquet lasted all summer, beginning with cups of crocus, and ending with tankards of autumn-leaf."

THE WASHERWOMEN OF NICE.

conspicuous by their absence. In temperance and frugality, we have much to learn from this very ancient people.

Young Old People.

There are those who may be said to remain perennially young, in whose hearts the spirit of youth shows no signs of weariness and aging. Yet most of us, on reaching middle life, begin to feel the touch of time. For the woman who knows that her youth is passing from her, and who looks with apprehension toward approaching old age, there is cheer in the opening stanza of Rabbi Ben Ezra, that beautiful poem into which Robert Browning has put so many thoughts. If she has to look back upon a youth of neglected opportunities and wasted days, there is infinite comfort in the knowledge that the last of life may atone in a measure for the first; that it is still possible to make old age good and beautiful. Or, if life for her has been full of striving toward the true and the pure, there is inspiration in the thought that the last part may be of more; that it is possible to live more and more grandly unto the end. And for both it is a source of comfort that there is a divine plan which embraces life from beginning to end, and a divine hand which leads all the way. Here are the lines:

One must not be too hard on the first way made.
One must not be too hard on the first way made.
One must not be too hard on the first way made.
One must not be too hard on the first way made.

Tea and its Votaries.

Probably no luxury is used quite as universally as tea. Experts in the tea trade tell us that the very choicest brands rarely States. England's favorite tea is the Congou, while our own people prefer the Oolong, as shown by the export tables.

A Boer Home Legend.

Sojourners among the Boers in the Transvaal frequently listen to some odd folk-tales that are told by the firesides of these hospitable people. One of these tales or legends relates to the origin of the English language. They say that when Dame Nature was employed in giving tongues to the various nations, she stood at a large table on which lay a piece of meat. She had a knife in her hand, and a pair of scissors lay on the table. With the one she cut the tongue out of the meat, and with the scissors she gave to each tongue its peculiarities. To her came all the nation. "De Fransman," "de Duitcher," and even "de Boersman," were provided for, but "de Engelsman" was not there. The Boers continue their explanation by a long story founded upon the habits of the English as the Boers see them. According to this, the "Engelsman" went into a "canteen" to drink, and stayed there while his money lasted. Then, at last, he presented himself before Dame Nature, and there was no tongue left. "Never mind," said Dame Nature, "there are plenty of snips on the floor—take half a dozen of these, join them to-

The Good Part.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor topic for the Week Beginning April 26. Luke 10: 38-42; Matt. 6: 31-34.

HOW to make the best life, is a problem that young people may consider with some purpose. The middle-aged and the old often say, "If I could live my life over again, how differently I would live, by many mistakes I would avoid." It is possible to choose in youth, and those who learn from the experience of others, instead of wasting their lives in pursuits that bring sorrow and shame and vain regret, may live so that at the close they will look back on it with satisfaction and thankfulness. Christ said that but one thing is needful, and Mary had chosen that good part. What it was that Mary chose? She was seeking spiritual enlightenment, using an opportunity that came but once in the story of the world, to get from it the best that it could afford. Few women in the house with her would have commended her then; few women now have any doubt of her wisdom. Her sister was concerned about her duties as a guest. So honored a guest Jesus should be well served, and who can imagine for a moment that Jesus cared for the attentions that Martha was so anxious about? He would not be unmindful of them, but they were not the essential thing. The best thing. So it is now; there are many things that are blamable, many things that are even commendable, which, nevertheless, should not occupy the chief place in life. The good part should be the supreme object, and the others should have their subordinate places. To the man who seeks above all things to please God, to live so as to help his fellow-men, his business is sanctified and his household duty is faithfully done. So then we come nearer to the secret of the wise choice. It is the highest spiritual development and the greatest personal service. Duty may lead a man to a far different path from the Christian ministry; it may call a woman who longs to be a deaconess or a foreign missionary, to home duties and household drudgery, but in the duty the blessing will come. The mistake consists in allowing the soul to be engrossed in unworthy objects, to concentrate its powers on attainments and achievements of a worldly nature, and making no effort after spiritual advancement. There are many lives which the acquisition of a fortune, or social distinction, monopolizes all thought and effort. There are others so self-centered, that ease and pleasure and amusement are the supreme end of ambition and both cases life is wasted. They are animal lives, not the lives creatures should have who have an eternity before them. So teach children that play is good and recreation is beneficial. We are glad that the boy at school should excel in the playground, but if he neglects his studies, we perceive that he has missed the very object which he was sent to school. It is poor compensation if he comes home with medals won in athletic sports, if to win them he has sacrificed his opportunity of gaining knowledge. So when a man stands at the threshold of the unseen world, it will be a sad thing if he has no preparation for it, though he may have made a million dollars. He has lived for time; he has lined what he strove to gain and he must live all behind. He who has sought the good part, who has longed and yearned for righteousness, for usefulness and service, takes his treasures with him, and begins his new life in the spirit that will illuminate it in its new sphere. Thus in another sense he who sows to the flesh reaps corruption, while he who sows to the spirit reaps life everlasting.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

TO THE WORK, ONE AND ALL.

W. P. M. Geo. C. Hugg.

1. To the work, one and all, let the call re-sound! To the work, one and all let the
 2. To the work, one and all, with a will-ing hand! Send the word of life o-ver
 3. To the work, one and all, let the chil-dren hear! Tell the won-drous love of the word go round; If to reap, or sow, you His love would show, Go forth in Je-sus' name.

 all the land. To the sons of men speak the word a-gain, Go forth in Je-sus' name.
 Sav-iour dear; Bring them in to-day from the broad highway; Go forth in Je-sus' name.

Chorus.
 La-bor on, La-bor on, la-bor on, la-bor on, In the vine-yard of the Lord. la-bor on,
 La-bor on, La-bor on, la-bor on, la-bor on, And thy toil He shall re-ward. re-ward.

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.
 From HIGHEST PRAISE for SABBATH SCHOOLS.
 By per of the Publishers

Needed Blessings.

WE ask not that our path be always bright,
 But for thy aid to walk therein aright;
 That thou, O Lord, through all its devious way,
 Wilt give us strength sufficient to our day,
 For this, for this we pray.

Not for the fleeting joys that earth bestows,
 Not for exemption from its many woes;
 But that, come joy or woe, come good or ill,
 With childlike faith we trust thy guidance still.
 And do thy holy will.

Teach us, dear Lord, to find the latent good
 That sorrow yields, when rightly understood;
 And for the frequent joy that crowns our days
 Help us with grateful hearts our hymns to raise.

Of thankfulness and praise.

Thou knowest all our needs, and wilt supply:
 No veil of darkness hides us from thine eye,
 Nor vainly, from the depths, on thee we call;
 Thy tender love, that breaks the tempter's thrall,
 Folds and encircles all.

— W. H. BURLEIGH.

Flowers in the Sick-room.

FAIR in their sunny beds they grew,
 Or hung on the trellised bowers,
 Nor lost their scent, nor paled their hue,
 As a nosegay of gathered flowers;
 But fairer still, and yet more sweet,
 With the summer's breath and bloom,
 They seemed in that narrow crowded street,
 And that feeble sufferer's room.

Alone, but not companionless,
 Had her silent hours gone by:
 From the dreary sickroom's narrow space

There were paths that reached the sky.
 The page that tells of life through death
 Had brightened her anxious thought;
 And the summer flowers to the eye of faith
 The good land nearer brought.

Thus breaks the bloom of a better hope
 On the dimness and the strife, —
 The dusty aims and the narrow scope
 Of this poor and passing life;
 And thus, through Nature's works and ways,
 Such helps to faith are given,
 That the flowers of earth may lift our gaze
 To the fadeless flowers of heaven.

— FRANCES BROWNE.

Waiting Upon God.

AS those that watch for the day
 Through the restless night of pain,
 When the first faint streaks of gray
 Bring rest and ease again—
 And they turn their sleepless eyes
 The eastern sky to see,
 Long hours before sunrise—
 So waiteth my soul for thee!

As those that watch for the day
 Through the long, long night of grief,
 When the soul can only pray
 That the day may bring relief—
 When the eyes with weeping spent,
 No dawn of hope can see,
 But the heart keeps watch intent—
 So waiteth my soul for thee!

As those that watch for the day
 Through that deepest night of all,
 When trembling and sin have sway,
 And the shades of Thy absence fall;
 As they search through clouds of fear
 The Morning Star to see,
 And the Light of Life appear—
 So waiteth my soul for thee!

Saints in Judgment.

Rewards According to Meritorious Service to be Appointed at the Judgment.
 BY NATHANIEL SANKEY.

THE whole tenor of the passages relating to this judgment is that we shall yet see the distribution of rewards, and the Lord, the righteous Judge, dividing to every man severally as he will.

A white stone to each, and in the stone the new name written, probably denoting his title or dignity. A crown, to each, but possibly having distinction according to the rule and authority given over five cities or ten.

As one star differeth from another star in glory, so also shall these in their resurrection state. Then shall it be seen who hath laid up treasure in the heavens that fadeeth not, and what it means. Who by "using the office of a deacon—or any other—well, has purchased to himself a good degree, and great boldness in the faith." Here shall be seen those whose building having been gold, silver, and precious stones, their work abides the test of that presence, which as fire and light shall manifest every man's work of what sort it is, and they receive a reward. Whatever mistakes we have made about our own, or another man's work, shall then and there be corrected; and the least service done to the Master's eye and his glory, shall not lose its reward.

In the bestowment of an individual crown, and the acknowledgment of individual work, we think, too, there must be some mention made of individual failure, failure of judgment rather than of principle; zeal for God it may have been, but not according to knowledge. In the light of that presence, right and wrong must take color and shape according to truth, and when wrong is seen to be wrong, the very light that discovers it will reprove it. Right must be vindicated, and wrong must be re-proved, though it shall have been committed by the best of men. When he makes darkness light before us, every crooked thing shall be made straight, and every rough place plain. Sharp contentions between brethren, such as that between Paul and Barnabas respecting Mark, which have never been cleared up, must then be settled by the Master, and each made to bear his own blame if both were wrong. Then possibly we shall see whether Paul was altogether right in withstanding to the face of Peter—chief apostle as he was—or whether it would not have been more in the Spirit of his Master to have taken Peter aside, privately, and told him his fault, and so gained his brother Peter: whether such rough handling by Paul may not have left a soreness between the two eminent servants of the Church which was never quite healed: whether the persecuting spirit in Calvin, as it fell upon Castilio, Jacques Gruet, and Michael Servetus, even unto death, will not claim attention and reproof in that day: how far contentions for doctrine in the eighteenth century, carried on between the Calvinists and the Arminians, when debates, envyings, strifes, were not only tolerated, but cultivated in defence of doctrinal truth, will be countenanced or condemned by the Master, and who was most to blame, will then have to be determined. The light of the same presence which has tested and approved the work of some, must test and disapprove the work of others. Wood, hay, and stubble are mentioned among the building materials, and these are all combustible. What then do we read? "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire."

(To be continued.)

Copyright, 1896.
CHAPTER XV.
That Picture.

JUDSON SKEELE could not sleep after the hearing in the selectmen's room. Was it any wonder? He had a very troublesome bed-fellow. It might wake up any hour of the night. If it did, the lawyer must wake also, perhaps get up and walk about his room, curse the night, and wish it were morning. This uncomfortable companion was conscience. It was an inseparable companion, walking out with him in the morning, going with him through the day, not only a torment in his bosom, but a burden on his back. It was this bowing him down. It came home with him at night, going to bed with him, then rising as he rose. It now anticipated his hour of rising and it made him do a strange thing. After tossing about restlessly for what seemed a long while, he rose, lighted a lamp and opened his bureau. From an inner drawer he took a picture and gazed at it intently. It was the picture of a woman still young. What interest could such a man have in such a picture? There was some interest evidently and not a pleasant one. Just then, the wind rattled an outside blind with a weird sound. Skeele dropped the picture as if it had been a live coal and fled to his bed at a bound.

He tried to sleep but could not. The lamp was still burning and Skeele rose again and went back to the bureau and took up the picture. "The very image of her," he muttered. "How like that child was! It can't be her's. Her child is now in New York. Yet what a likeness! When that fellow set her on the table it gave me a turn. I wonder where she came from! Her very eyes and mouth! I must find out about her!"

Again the blind cracked loudly. "This wind is a nuisance," he growled, but he did not have courage to go to the window, open it and fasten the blind. Then he would have heard still more distinctly the wind hoarsely blowing through the firs and a sound like one long-continued boom of a funeral-bell. Judson Skeele did not like that kind of a noise.

"I will go down stairs," he said, "into the sitting-room, uncover the coals in the fire-place, and stay where it is warm."

He was going down through the hall softly, on tip-toe, that Lavina might not hear him; he carried the picture with him and laid it on the old-fashioned mantel above the fire-place in the sitting-room. Then he lighted every lamp in the room, four in number, started up the fire vigorously, and trying to occupy his thoughts with a book, he and conscience waited for the day that would come some time, but would not bring any more light than the four burning lamps and the blazing fire. The morning, when it came, saw Lawyer Skeele going at an early hour to his office, and Mrs. Blakey Chase also coming to the Morton mansion. She reported on her arrival to Lavina.

"Got here in good season, you see, Miss Skeele," said Mrs. Blakey with an energy that was breathless. "When I got your note askin' me to do some sewin', I told Blakey I must try and be 'commodat'ed."

"That is right, Mrs. Chase, and your work is all ready. You will find it in the sitting-room. I will be there before long."

"My!" said Mrs. Blakey to herself, as she entered the sitting-room. "Got it and fixed up since I was here. That Viney knows how to spend the money Miss Morton left her, and slick up things." Her sight wandered curiously from one object to another. "Ah!" she said finally. "What is that on the mantel? A pictur? Must take care, perr!"

There was an interference with this purpose. Lavina entered suddenly and Mrs. Blakey's greedy fingers did not reach the desired picture. The opportunity came, though, when Lavina left the room, the latter part of the forenoon; "I must go out to do a little shopping, and you will get through and leave before I return. I will try to have another job for you before long." Lavina said this as she went out.

Mrs. Blakey and the sitting-room clock had everything to themselves. She sewed away steadily till her task was done. Then she rose to pack her "things" in a little traveling bag. She looked at the clock to get the record of the hours. Then she hastily turned toward the mantel, exclaiming, "My! If I didn't most forgit! There's that picture! I must have one look at that!"

She took it up, gave one glance at it and then dropped it as if it had given her an electric shock. "Lizzie!" she exclaimed, "Where did you come from? How you scat me! If I—ever! If I ever! How did that come up here in this house? No doubt about it!"

There was no doubt about it. This face with the searching eyes was the same as one hidden away in a drawer at home. This was the picture of that niece who seemed almost mythical now, yet once having an existence as undoubted as Mrs. Blakey.

"I must hurry home," she murmured, "to see if I could have made a mistake—if I brought it up here myself and laid it down—gittin' so absent-minded, I know."

But when Mrs. Blakey reached her home and opened the drawer the picture was there in its place.

"If that ain't a myst'ry!" said Mrs. Blakey carefully handling the picture to make sure it was a veritable thing of paper and not an illusion. She wanted to go back at once and find out from Lavina where that second picture originated and how it ever came to the big mansion. But by this time it was raining furiously and Mrs. Blakey had to postpone her investigation. Nor would she go the next day being detained by work that must be done. When she did get out, she heard news that seemed more wonderful than the discovery of the picture. She herself told it to Janet Morton.

"Have you heard that Ethel's gone?" she asked, breaking in on Janet as the latter sat sewing.

"Gone? Where?" Janet asked in surprise. "No one knows," said Mrs. Blakey, "except the person that lugged her off."

"What a strange thing!" said Janet, "do tell me about it."

"Well, I was down at Skipper Dan's when Ned came in with a letter for the Skipper. It seems that it was from somebody that he calls 'Skipper Joe,' and it turns out that it is Skipper Joe who has the say about Ethel and yet is off a good deal and can't look after her and so he tells Skipper Dan in Philadelphia that he might have her awhile. Wall, you can imagine how it was, Skipper Dan took a fancy to the little thing and brought her home you know, and they have had her month after month and it's three or four now, and they sort of forgot that Skipper Joe might want her again—but—"

She paused and stole a glance at Janet to see if she retained her interest. Janet was listening intently and now spoke up. "But, what, Mrs. Blakey?"

"Oh, Joe's letter reminded them that Ethel was wanted, and it jest took their breath when Joe said he was a-goin' through in the cars to-day, and if they would have her ready and have her at the station, he would take her along. Jest think of it!"

"And did he come?"

"Why, yes! There them poor things flew round and fixed her not more'n half off, and she cried because she couldn't find a picture belongin' to her and—wasn't it too bad?"

"And did she go?"

"Why, yes."

"Where has she gone?"

"Gone somewhere. Skipper Joe was on hand and took her. I b'lieve she is a-goin' to see some folks while he goes off on a coastin' trip—"

"Why couldn't she stay here while he goes a-coasting?"

"Don't ax me. I never heard sich do-in's."

"Seems to me it is very sudden and strange and—"

"It is. Of course, it is. I b'lieve Skipper Dan is a-goin' to hunt up that picture she couldn't find, and took on so about it. There he was a-tryin' to comfort the child, sayin', 'Gampsie will find it, Gampsie will find it.' There he goes now. Jest see him!"

The two women looked out of the window, and there was Skipper Dan trudging up the street. He was working his wooden leg as rapidly as possible while his one eye was fastened without wavering on a point ahead. That point ahead was the store where the Newhall Brothers sold some groceries but more rum. When Skipper Dan entered the store, there was a small crowd gathered there. But Skipper Dan fastened his one eye on a particular person and kept it fastened there.

"Hullo, Skipper Dan," was the greeting given him by various members of this crowd. He nodded stiffly and grunted, "How dye do?" but he did not take his eye off that one particular person. He went up to him and whispered, "I want to see ye, John Newhall."

"Well, here I am. Look at me, Skipper," said the grocer.

The Skipper was not to be bluffed. "Here, come in here," said the Skipper, pulling John into a little black den in the rear where liquor had been freely sold. In the late prosecution that had been undertaken against this mongrel establishment the beasts of Drink such as barrels of whiskey and ale had been driven from this den.

"Say, John."

"What is it, Skipper Dan?"

"I came up here and sold you a picture, one day—like a fool, too—sold it for ten cents—got a glass of rum with it. You got that picture?"

"Lem me see," said the puzzled grocer. "What did I do with it?"

"I want it. Here's the ten cents."

"What did I do with it?" wondered the grocer. "Oh, I tell ye. Tobias was in here and saw it and sort of fancied it, and took it up to his office. I didn't want the picture, mind ye. I was pressed to take it. You said, 'It's worth ten cents. Give me a glass for it.' I didn't want the thing. You go up to the office and git it."

Tobias Newhall, sitting in the outer apartment of Lawyer Skeele's office, soon heard a thumping on the stairs. It was an ascending thump, a vigorous, persistent thump, one that meant to get to the top of the stairs and then get into the office.

"Ah, good day, Skipper," said Tobias, cheerily and patronizingly, "What can I do for you?"

"I want a picture which I, like a fool, traded off to your brother for a glass of rum, a kind of—wall, suthin' on which I wanted to raise ten cents—more's the shame on me. Your brother says you have got it. That so?"

"You want that?"

"Me? Wouldn't ask for it if I didn't. Here's the ten cents. That's what I got on the picture—the shame on me."

"I don't want your ten cents. And you don't want your picture."

"I don't? 'Taint mine to begin with, but the person does that owns it. The shame on me!"

"Then you stole it?"

The skipper's one eye let out an unusual amount of light. He did not try to dodge the point or refuse to shoulder the burden of shame.

"Well, I didn't think the owner cared. Sort of friend, ye know."

"Whose was it?" said Tobias, cruelly driving his dart deeper yet.

"I cal'lute you know, or you wouldn't want it."

"Know?" confusedly muttered Tobias, unprepared for the skipper's sudden thrust. "What do you think I want the picture for? You may have the thing. I'll leave it to any brother's. Don't come here about it again."

The skipper had started for the door, but returned to deposit a ten cent piece on the table.

"Take it! I don't want it," shouted Tobias, pitching the coin after skipper Dan. It rolled away and hid under a heavy boot case, but if it had rolled into the skipper's pocket, he would not have suffered it stay there. He looked upon it as the price of an abominable crime. His wooden leg made a furious racket on the stairs as he pounded his way down to the outer and liberty.

"Don't want to go in there agin!" muttered. "Looks like a jail. Now wonder what he wanted that picture for. The shame on me!"

Why did Tobias want this picture when he saw one day at the store of Newhall Brothers? The reason was that he knew the original of the picture. He knew whose child Ethel was when he saw it. He had his reason for suspecting that Lawyer Skeele knew as much as he about the child's mother, though his employment was ignorant that the child was in the neighborhood until Blakey Chase came to set her on the selectmen's table the evening of the hearing. Tobias had reason to think that in connection with the child's interests, Lawyer Skeele was guilty of great rascality.

"Only a suspicion!" soliloquized Tobias. "Don't know that Skeele is doing it, but 'twould be like him. Anyway, try him. I'll just leave the picture on the table and see how he takes it. If it is, think, I'll let him know what I suspect. 'Twill give me a new hold on him. These temperance fanatics trouble Joe and me any more about our business. Can count on Skeele's help. I can't get money from him. Oh, I'll make a visit this thing and put him into it and squeal him harder and harder! Yes, I will!"

Here Tobias chuckled, and taking a heavy law book, he pressed it against the wall as if he had actually put it into use, and then he pretended to "screw up," and take "still another turn on," and as the book was jammed harder and harder, he imagined it to be "Judson Skeele," and he shouted merrily, "His bones crack! I've got him! Now give him another turn! Does he want to come out? Can't come out unless he pays a thousand dollars or—or—I'll tell you know about one Judson Skeele, yes, I will!"

Tobias was not mistaken. He laid the picture on the lawyer's table and said, "I'll leave it here. I would like to leave it. She is the mother of that girl we saw at the selectmen's meeting when your brother all made asses of themselves."

Judson Skeele jumped as if to avoid a torpedo.

"Where—where did that come from?" he asked.

"Oh, I got it!" Then Tobias Newhall proceeded to put Judson Skeele into a very bad case, and more than one bone did Tobias hit crack, and for money Tobias let him. Skeele was very glad to bring back from the Morton mansion a picture which he carried there because Tobias had advised him to show it to Lavina, as "she knew the woman."

"He won't show it to Lavina. She'll ask too many questions," said Tobias, a tormentor. "But I'll show my power. I'll make him take it home. He won't refuse."

The servant of Tobias Newhall did his part as he was bidden. He carried the picture, but did not show it to Lavina. He brought it back when he was bidden. Then Tobias left it at the store as he had promised the Skipper, who gladly brought home. At the Skipper's, how that picture was scrutinized! When Mrs. Blakey was at the house of the Skipper, she threw up her hands in eager affirmation, "It's jest like the picture in my drawer of hum. Yes, that is my niece, Lizzie!"

"She ain't!" said Paulina. "Do tell me, yes, she is, same one!"

"Who'd a-thought it! Wall, now we've got it, we must send it to Ethel."

But when they tried to learn her whereabouts, they were utterly at a loss. Skipper Joe had gone to sea leaving Ethel with other people. Who they were, nobody knew. Lawyer Skeele, though, knew. He was familiar, too, with Skipper Joe's movements. Indeed, as soon as he had found out that "Lizzie's child" was in the neighborhood, he got word to Skipper Joe that he must take her away. She had been taken away. She was the little white whose white sail we see off the shore the night goes down, but when the sun shines again, whither has that white sail flown?

(To be Continued.)

His Name.
WHEN I shall go where my Redeemer is,
In the far city on the other side,
At the threshold of his palaces
I shall loose my sandals, ever to abide;
I know my heavenly King will smiling wait
To give me welcome as I touch the gate.
O joy! oh, bliss! for I shall see his face,
And wear his blessed name upon my brow!
The name that stands for pardon, love and grace,
That name before which every knee shall bow.
No music half so sweet can ever be
As that dear name which he shall write for me!
Thou, till I go to meet my Father's smile,
I keep my forehead smooth from passion's scars.
Fin' angry frowns that trample and defile,
And every sin that desecrates or mars;
Thou may lift a face unflushed with shame,
Whereon my Lord may write his holy name.

Founder of 10,000 Sunday Schools.
It was the Life-Work of the Late Rev. W. Paxson in his District—Over One Million Children Taught the Gospel.

FROM Rev. Geo. W. Sharp, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School Missionary, comes this week a most interesting and instructive letter. He shows what can be accomplished by one consecrated, energetic missionary in a lifetime, and modestly avoiding all mention of his own spiritual labors and triumphs, he pays a generous tribute to the late Dr. W. P. Paxson, whose career was recently outlined in these columns. The letter is as follows:

ATLANTA, MO., April 6th, 1896.
The recent death of Rev. William P. Paxson, D.D., on the 10th day of March he removed a man whose life work would long be a blessing to the nation; and the results spiritually, only eternity can fully reveal them. His father the late Stephen Paxson, was converted through the instrumentality of a Sunday School organized in Winchester, Ill., by a missionary of the American Sunday School Union. His little daughter, Mary, eight years of age was one of the scholars, and she induced her father who was then irreligious, to attend the School, and by it he was led to Christ. He became an earnest Christian and an enthusiastic and most efficient Sunday School worker.
His labors as a missionary of the American Sunday School Union were very abundant and wonderfully successful. He gathered many thousands of children and young people into the schools he planted. His old age, after I had been for some time a missionary of that Society, I had an interview with him in which he inquired how I liked the work and the Society. I told him I was delighted with both. He rejoined with warmth, "Yes, and the more you know it the better you will like it."
His son William early became a Christian, and before he had arrived at manhood, began to share the enthusiasm of his father in gathering the people into Bible schools. He became a missionary of that Society in whose work his father had been so signally blessed. About thirty years ago he organized the South-western department of the Society, consisting of Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, and the Indian Territory. He was superintendent of the department to the end of his life. His report of the labors of himself and the missionaries in his field for twenty-nine years (the report was printed before last year's work was completed and it was therefore not included), shows the new schools were 10,222; schools otherwise aided 11,348, having in the two classes of schools 115,044 teachers, and 1,551,919 scholars. He was a man of great abilities and great heart. More than seven years ago, at his solicitation, I became a missionary in his department, and during all that time he was my faithful friend and brother, as well as my superintendent. His experience and counsel were invaluable. As a fellow-laborer, he was a delightful companion—earnest and hopeful, genial and cordial. The last letter I received from him was written only the day before the paralytic stroke which ended his pilgrimage. The letter bore me a message of good news which he knew would gladden my heart. It was a gratifying kindness, all the more to be appreciated because it came unsought from his noble, Christian impulses.

He was ardently attached to the work of the American Sunday School Union and from his long experience in connection with it, he unhesitatingly approved the following endorsement of Mr. D.L. Moody: "I am fully prepared to commend the Society as the most efficient and economical agency in the field for evangelizing the destitute rural settlements of our country. The mixed character of our population makes union work a necessity in thousands of the country settlements."
I write from a part of my field through which I am passing. May I ask the prayers of the Christian reader that God, in the riches of his grace, may continue to bless this work abundantly?
GEO. W. SHARP,
"Christian Herald" Missionary of Am. S. S. Union.

A Moravian Colony in Canada.
SEVERAL years ago, a project was started with the object of inviting Russia Stundists who had been subjected to persecution at home, to emigrate to Northwest Canada. As a parallel illustration, a writer in The Christian Guardian says: The success of the Alberta Moravian colonies will probably turn the attention of many in the remote east to the freedom and fertile millions of acres of our country. A new element has been introduced into our population, and its growth promises good results for Canada, and for suffering Christians in eastern Europe. Methodism has had its share in the fostering of this movement, and the interest taken by a sister church cannot be otherwise than gratifying to the Moravians. Rev. Morris W. Leibert gives, in a recent pamphlet, the following interesting description of a Moravian religious service at Bruderfeld: "One by one the families assemble. Across furrowed fields, whose pitchy loam vies in blackness with the darkness of the moonless, starless night, through thickets, in and out of which wind the old Indian footpaths, over new roads in which upturned roots and prostrate trunks interfere sadly with safety and with speed, come the brethren and sisters with their children by their sides, and with their babes wrapped in shawls. They are impelled to attend the services provided through stated lay activity, or chance ministerial visit, by the spirit that led them from their native villages in a fair and dear land. Every seat is taken. All the standing-room is occupied. As they cross the threshold the worshippers fold their hands and bow their heads in prayer. Silently the moments speed until all who may be expected are orderly arranged. A striking, impressive sight it is. Devotion, expectation are written on every feature. The men are in a group by themselves, giving the better places to the mothers and little ones. Remnants of Russian robes are mingled with the prevailing German garb in picturesque profusion, lending to the whole an aspect at once outlandish and decorous. Several can start and carry a tune. Members of a scattered trombone choir, twelve men strong, are among the colonists. A tune need but be indicated by its number, and the proper note is instantly struck. All sing. They do it heartily and correct-

Now
Is the time when you should take a Spring Medicine to purify your blood, give you good appetite, sound sleep, steady nerves and perfect digestion. That scrofulous taint, that skin trouble, that liver difficulty, that bilious tendency, that tired feeling are all cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Give this medicine a fair trial and you will realize its positive merit. It is not what we say, but what the people who are cured say, which proves that

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Is the One True Blood Purifier. $1; Six for $5.
Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Hood's Pills cure Liver Ills; easy to take; easy to operate. 25c.

ly. Some of our old chorales brought cheer to the hearts and tears to the eyes of the congregation as our worship progressed."
A Brave Mother.
Anna Campbell, a mountaineer, was a brave woman. A flood came down the Engadine from the meeting of two hundred glaciers, carrying some twenty bridges along with it; when over the bridge of wood that in the narrow gorges separated the town from the pastor's house, Anna dared for her husband's sake to cross; and, the two side piers being just then swept away, she was left standing in the raging flood and storm, alone on the midmost. They heard her clear, musical voice singing, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit"; when suddenly remembering that she had the keys of the cupboard at her girdle, and the children would need their supper, she stopped her prayer and shouted, "There's the keys!" and threw them ashore, disappearing at the same moment down the ravine.

That City!
I KNOW the walls are jasper,
The palaces are fair,
And to the sounds of harpings
The saints are singing there;
I know that living waters
Flow under fruitful trees;
But oh, to make my heaven,
It needeth more than these!
Read in the sacred story,
What more doth it unfold,
Beside the pearly gateways
And streets of shining gold?
No temple hath that city,
For none is needed there.
No sun nor moon enlighteneth;—
Can darkness then be fair?
Oh, heaven without my Saviour
Would be no heaven to me:
Dim were the walls of jasper—
Rayless the crystal sea.
He girds earth's darkest valleys
With light and joy and peace
What then must be the radiance
When night and death shall cease?
—HELEN M. PARMLEE.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Largest United States Government Food Report.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.
You can make a delicious cup of chocolate if you have the right kind—that is WHITMAN'S Instantaneous CHOCOLATE.
Perfect in flavor and quality. In pound and half pound tins. At your dealers.
STEPHEN F. WHITMAN & SON, Sole Mfrs., Philadelphia.

Quick as a Wink
Stamping Outfit. 91 patterns, outline designs—50c. Conventional designs—60c. Patterns for painting & embroidery—1.00. In high 24 alphabets. A large forget-me-not pattern, and many others very desirable. All this and a 3 months' subscription to The Home, a 16-page story paper, with fashions and fancy work illustrated. Sent for only 10c. The Home, 141 Milk St. Boston, Mass.

DROPSY TREATED FREE
Cured with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. In 10 days at least 6% of all symptoms are removed. Book of testimonials of cures and 10 days' treatment free by mail. Drs. Green & Sons, Atlanta, Ga.
300 ORDERS in Three Weeks! "10 orders in every 12 calls!" $5 to $10 profit every day! "130 orders in 3 1-2 days!" Terms free. Outfit 30 cents. JAS. H. EARLE, Publisher, Boston.

2 Trying Times are Spring and Fall, trying to those with weak lungs and frail systems.
SCOTT'S Emulsion
makes weak people strong. Fancy preparations of cod-liver oil won't do in place of Scott's. You need the oil digested, and skillfully combined with hypophosphites as in the peculiar process by which Scott's Emulsion is made.
50 cts. and $1.00 at all druggists.

There was a girl in our town
And she was wondrous fair,
She put some Cupid hair pins
In her rebellious hair;
Now every lock in beauty blends
Like gleams of golden mist.
And for a nickel you can have
The charm—
it's in the TWIST.
Made by RICHARDSON & DE LONG, Phila. Pa.

WALL-PAPER
Samples mailed free from the largest concern in U.S. Prices 30% lower than others.
PAPERS from 2c. to $3.25 a Roll—8 Yards.
DEALERS can have large books by express with TRADE DISCOUNTS.
A MILLION ROLLS—An Unlimited Variety.
982-984 Market St. 418 Arch St., PHILADELPHIA.
KAYSER & ALLMAN

Your Dinner
can be cooked at one time on one burner of any kind of stove, if you use the Peerless Steam Cooker.
Prevents steam and odors. Whistle. When the cooker needs more water, it rings. The agent's bonanza. Agents wanted.
PEERLESS COOKER CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

K C FLOUR
Contains no impurities. It is the purest flour. It is the best flour for all purposes. It is the most economical flour. It is the most healthful flour. It is the most delicious flour. It is the most reliable flour. It is the most popular flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet flour. It is the most pleasant flour. It is the most agreeable flour. It is the most acceptable flour. It is the most desirable flour. It is the most precious flour. It is the most valuable flour. It is the most useful flour. It is the most serviceable flour. It is the most profitable flour. It is the most successful flour. It is the most famous flour. It is the most celebrated flour. It is the most distinguished flour. It is the most illustrious flour. It is the most noble flour. It is the most heroic flour. It is the most magnanimous flour. It is the most generous flour. It is the most liberal flour. It is the most bountiful flour. It is the most beneficent flour. It is the most merciful flour. It is the most kind flour. It is the most gentle flour. It is the most sweet Armenian Relief Fund.

Continued from page 307.

Abrams, J. H.	500	Geissler, Mrs M M	100
Adrian, Mrs G	100	Gilchrist, D T & L	500
Agard, Mrs Lucius	200	Gilchrist, Mrs M C	100
Albright, Miss	100	Giles, T	100
Albright, Miss	69	Gillespie, Mrs E R	100
Allen, Mrs Cecil	100	Glabbe, Miss E	50
Allen, Mrs N	100	Glabbe, Thomas	50
Allen, S A	200	Goffrey, Mrs A	600
Alpers, Dr	50	Goodrich, Mrs E	100
Alstrom, Mrs C	100	Graham, J	100
Anderson, Mr	100	Grant, Rev	50
Anderson, A J	25	Grant, J S	100
Anderson, Mrs M A R	75	Gray, W A	500
Atwood, Mrs M E	50	Grubb, Mrs Eva	100
Atwood, Mrs M E	50	Grubb, Elizabeth	200
Baker, M E	100	Hacker, Ella	100
Baker, Mrs C P	100	Hacker, Miss Ella	25
Barber, Mrs H L	25	Hacker, J Arthur	75
Barnes, M A	100	Hackett, Elder Wm	100
Barton, Mrs S V	300	Higman, A	100
Bates, Mrs Lucy	100	Hill, Mrs Dr	200
Bear's, Miss, School	82	Hammerbacher, F E	25
Bear's, Miss, School	82	Hammerbacher, Mar	25
Beckner, Mrs G M	300	Harmon, Mrs W B	300
Beck, Theo C	100	Harman, Mrs Corde	50
Begeman, Mrs N C	50	Harman, Mrs Corde	25
Belmont, Mr & Mrs	50	Harper, Mary B	100
Belmont, J W	50	Harper, Mrs Z J	100
Belney Louis	250	Harris, Jennie	200
Berch, M	25	Harris, Mary E	100
Besson, Frances	100	Harrison, Geo	100
Bessie, E	100	Hart, E	100
Bessie, H	100	Hart, Pearl	100
Bilven, L A	100	Hast, Miss S	100
Blackwood, L A	200	Hays, Mr & Mrs R A	500
Blackwood, Mrs	25	Heap and Parson	200
Bonar, Sam L	100	Healy, Mrs S U	100
Bonnel Mrs Wm	200	Henning, Mrs F H	100
Bradley, John	100	Henning, Mrs F H	200
Bradley, A J	100	Hewitt, Master W	200
Brady, Mr & Mrs	100	Hielman, Mrs Mary	200
Brady, Mrs Herbert	100	Hilgenberger, J S & V	300
Brady, Mr Theo	25	Hill, Mrs A F	50
Brethauer, Mrs	25	Hill, Mrs S A, Miss	100
Brown, J I	25	Jennie Perry and	100
Brown, E M	100	Mr W M Hill	300
Brown, Frank, Col by	200	Holden, Sarah P	50
Brown, J B	100	Holmes, Mrs	100
Brown, J D	25	Hollister, Mrs E	25
Brown, Mrs J S	25	Hollister, T S	100
Brown, James	25	Holzer, Christian	500
Brown, Mrs M	200	Hoover, Mrs A T	100
Brown, Mrs R P	100	Hornbrook, Mrs J R	50
Brown, Mrs Theo	250	Hornby, Mrs M J	100
Brown, Mrs Theo	250	Horning, Mrs O	100
Bruner, Maud	25	Horr, Mrs C B	125
Brunson, E S	100	Howe, Newton	100
Buente, H	500	Hubbard, Mrs Lucia	500
Burgan, Mrs Simon	100	Hubbbs, M M	200
Burnett, Mrs	100	Hudson, Mrs M A	25
Burnett, Carl	25	Hunt, J H	100
Burnham, Mrs A W	400	Jackson, Mrs I F	200
Butler, Wm	10	Jacobs, W T	100
Cadle, Dora	200	Janny, A	100
Cadwell, Thos	100	Joffe, C E	25
Calhoun, G N	100	Joffe, C Virginia	100
Calder, Wm	25	Jessop, R N	500
Campbell, A M	500	Johnson, A	25
Carey, Mrs	50	Johnson, Mrs A A	100
Cary, A	500	Johnson, Mrs C L D	500
Castle, Mrs	100	Johnson, J C	500
Castle, Dorothy	50	Johnson, Miss M A	500
Caughey, Mrs D C	50	Johnson, Mrs A	50
Caughey, Enelia	25	Johnson, J J	100
Chambers, Georgia	300	Kee & Chapel	100
Church, F W	100	Keeler, G N	100
Clark, Mr & Mrs H T	600	Kesacker, M V	50
Clark, Rev T	100	Kennedy, C E	250
Clark, Wm	10	Kerstadt, Mrs C G	100
Clements, E N	100	Kerns, Elias	200
Clemmons, Mary	50	Kerr, Chas	100
Coffman, Mr & Mrs	500	Kimball, G H	100
Colcord, C A	100	Kimball, M A	500
Coleman, Miss V	300	King, J E	25
Collison, J M	500	King, L W	100
Compton, Mrs Oscar	500	Kirby, Mrs	25
Cook, Rena	500	Kirby, Geo	100
Cook, E G	100	Kittel, Rachel M	100
Cornorther, Mrs E	100	Knapp, Mrs E S	500
Corwin, L J	40	Knapp, Mrs M	100
Covey, Jas H	300	Knapp, W Y	200
Craig, L N	200	Kob, John	200
Cranston, H E	100	Kuhn, Miss A	25
Crater, Chas H	200	Lake, Mrs	100
Crayton, A	15	Lake, Lina	100
Creveling, J W	800	Larson, M	100
Cress, M	100	Lathrop, Mrs B	100
Cropper, A M	100	Laughlin, Dr John	100
Cummings, Mrs L W	200	Lawrence's family	350
Cuppenell, M V	50	Lee L C	200
Dalbender, Mr & Mrs	200	Leffert, Mrs C O	50
Damon, Alice	50	Lemna, Mr & Mrs W	50
Danels, Thos	200	Leonard, C C	100
Davenport, David J	100	Levin, M	100
Davidson, Mary M	100	Lewis, Amorette	200
Deane, R P	100	Libby, Mrs W A	50
Davis, Mrs S T	100	Lindholm, Ida	100
Day, W H	100	Lindholm, Carl	200
Duggs, J Moses	125	Lindholm, Mrs A	30
Donagh, M M	500	Lindholm, Rev S	100
Donny, Mrs Sarah E	100	McCarthy, Mrs W	225
Dougherty, Miss R	500	McCarthy, J & wife	200
Douglass, Mrs B	100	McConnell, Mrs H	200
Douglas, Maggie S	50	McCarthy, Mrs H	200
Dunham, Mrs C O, &	100	McCarthy, Mrs R S	15
Mrs Emma Andrews	100	McCarthy, Mrs Alex	40
Dunnet, Nellie	100	McCarthy, Mrs D K	200
Dutton, Adell	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Eaton, D A	25	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Eastman, Mary M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Eaton, Mrs	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Ellerman, Mrs C	95	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Elliott, A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Emerson, Mrs	25	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Epley, S A	500	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, M	25	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Z	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs B	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs C	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs D	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Z	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs B	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs C	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs D	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Z	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs B	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs C	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs D	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Z	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs B	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs C	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs D	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Z	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs B	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs C	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs D	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Z	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs A	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs B	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs C	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs D	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs E	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs F	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs G	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs H	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs I	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs J	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs K	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs L	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs M	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs N	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs O	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs P	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Q	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs R	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs S	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs T	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs U	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs V	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs W	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs X	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	200
Evans, Mrs Y	100	McCarthy, Mrs J H	20

Requests for Prayer.

The Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission. prayer was offered on April 5, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Sons and Daughters. Constant Reader, New York, that a son, whose mother is dead after a long life of service in the case of the sick colored people of the city, might give his heart to God and work in his vine.—B. B. G., Pisgah, Ky., for the conversion of a daughter and her husband.—“Anxious Mother,” Arkadelphia, Ark., for the salvation of a dear son who has fallen under the power of liquor, and whose wife and children are suffering sorely by his conduct. He is quite helpless to save himself, but God can save him.—“Reader,” Barre Plains, Mass., for a son whose love for drink and tobacco is driving him away from church and family.—“Anxious Wife,” Lawrence, Kan., that her daughter might be led to Christ.—“Anxious Mother,” Bristol, Tenn., on behalf of an only son, that his soul might be saved and the special strength be given him to resist temptation.—“Distressed Mother,” Mo., that a dear and only son who is giving way to inperance may be rescued and kept from the influence of bad companions.—“Subscriber,” Mansfield, O., for a son who has made a profession of Christ, but is leaving his love, that he may be truly saved.—“M. E. C.,” Kansas City, Mo., that God would save four sons and a daughter, and that the youngest son, who is in temptation, might be preserved from acquiring a love for liquor.—“Mother,” for the speedy conversion of her the sons.—G. E. M., Dalcorn, Ia., for an only child, a son fourteen years old, that he might give his heart to God and be able to resist temptation.—H. E. B., Wray, Colo., for a dear son who has done wrong in the past, that he may seek forgiveness and be saved through Christ; also that other children might be saved.—M. H. L., Danville, Ill., that two sons who are living careless lives, might be turned to a sense of their condition and their need of a Saviour.—E. P., Prince Edward Island, that a son and daughter away from home might be kept from evil and saved through Christ.—“Anxious Mother,” Illinois, that two sons who are church members, but do not know the power of God, may be truly converted and made consistent Christians.—“Constant Reader,” Cuckoo, Va., on behalf of a son and son-in-law that both might be led to Christ.

For the Conversion of Other Relatives. “Reader,” Dover, Del., that an aged father and his two sons might be converted and be led to renounce their opposition to the Gospel.—“Father in Christ,” Maryland, that a brother and his wife and their three children might all be God's own children; also for another brother who, with his family, need converting grace.—S. E. C., Odessa, Ont., that a grand-son and grand-daughter, who are attracted by the world's pleasures, might be led to seek Christ as the chief blessing.—Subscriber, O., that two brothers and a sister might give their hearts to God; also that a suffering and ill wife might have grace to do her duty to her unkind husband.—B. C., Lebanon, Ky., that her husband and his brother might be led to Christ.—J. C., Wisconsin, for the conversion of her husband, and that he may be enabled to live honestly.—“Believer,” that a brother who is in trial and another brother and his wife who are living in the world might all be brought into Christ's kingdom and that a man and his wife might be one in Christ, and serve him in spirit and in truth.—“Anxious Wife,” Lawrence, Kans., that her husband might be converted.—“Anxious Believer,” Missouri, that an only son might be saved from the power of drink and give his heart to God.—C. F. B., Ber, Mont., for a brother, the victim of evil habit, that he might have power to overcome it and give his heart to the Lord.

For the Conversion of Friends. “Reader,” Eufaula, Ind. Ter., that four persons now unsaved might be led to Christ.—L. V., Toronto, that an aged lady not long for this world, might give her heart to God before she dies.—C. C., McMinnville, Tenn., that three friends still unconverted might be saved.—“Reader,” Queenie, Ont., on behalf of a young man now in Kingston Penitentiary, that God would give him repentance and lead him to the Christ for keeping power.—“Reader,” for the speedy conversion of a dear friend.—C. L., Brooklyn, N. Y., that two brothers, still in a vicious and evil life, may see their need of a Saviour and seek Christ; also that a young lady surrounded by the good things of this world, might be converted and live for Christ.—“Believer,” Miss., that earnest prayer be offered for the salvation of a loved one who is very wicked.—“Lonely and Homeless,” Stee, Cal., on behalf of four young men who have left their homes to make their own way and are far from God, might be led to seek him and his righteousness.—Reader, Penola, Ia., that a young man who by selling liquor and by other means is doing a great deal of harm in a certain neighborhood, might be led to see the evil of his ways and turn to the Lord.—B. B. G., Pisgah, Ky., that a gentleman and his wife who have experienced a reverse of fortune, might be led to Christ and be enabled to lead useful lives.

For the Restoration of Health. “Widowed Mother,” Lovelton, Pa., who has been sick for many years, that she might be spared to her family and regain her strength.—G. C. M., Carron City, Mich., on behalf of a son who has long been an invalid that he may be completely restored.—“Widowed Mother,” Illinois, for the recovery of an only child, a dear son who is suffering.—Reader, Racine, Wis., for the recovery of a sister and a niece both in sad circumstances.—L. D., Texas, that a dear friend who has been confined to her room for two years might be restored to health; also that a little girl who is losing much time with her education through recurring sicknesses, might have better health.—“Believer,” Queenie, Ont., that a young friend who, it is feared, is suffering from consumption might be cured.—C. F. B., Baker, Mont., for an invalid mother who bears almost constant pain that God would send relief.—“Believer,” Camden, N. J., for the recovery of the sense of hearing.—R. H., Warrentown, Va., that a beloved sister, who has been afflicted for fifteen years might be speedily restored to health if it is in accordance with the will of God.—“Firm Believer,” Ohio, that a young man now preparing for the ministry, might regain his health and complete his studies.—Mother, Leasonia, that her daughter might be healed of the pains in her head which are sorely trying her.—“Anxious Husband,” that the surgical operation soon to be performed on his wife might be blessed to her complete recovery.—“Anxious Mother,” Illinois, that two invalid daughters might be restored to health and regain the mental equanimity which long suffering has undermined.—Earnest Mother, Harrisburg, Pa., for the recovery of a daughter suffering from a distressing nervous affliction.—“Sister,” Maryland, that God would recover a dear sister and a sister-in-law who have been sick for some time, and that grace may be given them to bear their lot with patience.—G. E. M., Dalcorn, Ia., that a dear, sick sister may be healed.—E. A. P., Fosterdale, N. Y., for the recovery of a widowed mother, who for two years past has suffered much.—“Submissive,” Weaver, Ala., who has suffered terribly from nervous prostration, that if it be God's will, relief and recovery may be vouchsafed.—The following afflicted persons also ask prayers for recovery: R. C. T., Gambier, O.; N. P. T., Lawrence, Kans.; A. D. M., Pomona, Cal.; “Reader,” K. M., Nantucket, Mass.; L. H. G., Randolph, Vt.; “Believer,” Council Bluffs, Ia.

For Special Blessings. Young Girl, Philadelphia, Pa., for grace to overcome a besetting sin, and for help in a money difficulty.—A. E. R., Kansas City, Mo., that strength might be given to shake off an evil habit which seems to have acquired a mastery that even prayer will not shake.—I. T., Toronto, Ont., that in making appointments of ministers, the Methodist Conference might be so guided that a dull, lifeless church might get a pastor who is suited for it and divinely helped.—“Reader,” Eufaula, I. T., that a husband and his wife, now separated and estranged, might be reconciled and reunited, and may each perceive that their trouble has come through the faults of others.—“Believer,” Southern Minnesota, that conditions apparently unfavorable to the crops might be so changed as that there may be an abundant harvest.—“Believer,” Mississippi, that a couple once loving and devoted to each other, but now estranged, might regain love and confidence, and that God would fill their hearts with his Spirit, and bring them together again in their once happy home, so that the trouble now impending over two families might be averted.—I. D. T., Baltimore, Md., for an orphan who has recently lost one of the best of mothers, that God will make his will plain as to the future, and open up a way to a useful life.—“Catherine,” Ohio, who is in distressing anxiety about her spiritual state, having joined a church before she was converted, and who is troubled by evil thoughts, that God would give her the peace that passes understanding, and keep her close to himself.—E. J. B., Albion, N. Y., that the members of a small society may receive a baptism of the Holy Spirit, and be moved to go out and seek souls for the Master.—“Hope,” Ohio, having agonized long over a great trouble, longs for the peace that God alone can give.—“Reader,” Gilroy, Cal., who wants to be a Christian, that God would give a new heart and the love that prompts service.—Reader, Hinton, Mass., for help and light and peace in a troubled life.—J. E., Great Barrington, Mass., that a family with an unblemished name, respected in several generations, but now threatened with terrible disgrace, might be saved from the impending evil.—“Hungering and Thirsting One,” who is in great spiritual darkness, and fears having committed the unpardonable sin, that God would relieve the distress and speak peace to the troubled soul.—“Believer,” Sickness Among Children. is prevalent at all seasons of the year, but can be avoided largely when they are properly cared for. Infant Health is the title of a valuable pamphlet accessible to all who will send address to the N. Y. Condensed Milk Co., N. Y. City.

Monongahela, Pa., that a sorrow that has been a great burden for years, might be lifted, and the lips of enemies cease to utter slander and ask forgiveness of God.—W. L. C., Dresden Mills, Me., who is in bitter sorrow, having been bereaved of his beloved young wife, who led him to Christ, and who was a blessing to all who came in contact with her, and whom he passionately loved, that God would comfort him and his wife's parents in their sorrow, and keep them from cherishing rebellious thoughts, and that they might hold fast their faith.—“One who Believes,” Creston, O., that God would give all that her child needs for body, mind, and soul.—“Troubled One,” Wayne, Ind., that a dear friend who has met with a bitter disappointment may be reconciled to his loss and be drawn by it nearer to his Saviour; also that one alone in the world might find friends and an open way to usefulness.—C. R. B., Pleasant Hill, Ala., an aged widow recently rendered homeless by fire, that God would guide her, help and provide for her in her extremity.—J. A. S., Waterside, Pa., that financial help may in some way be provided in an impending crisis.—H. E. B., Thurlow, Pa., that the way may be opened for him to complete his education, so that he may enter the ministry.—Distressed Wife, New York City, that hasty words spoken in anger, which started her husband in a wrong course, might be forgotten and forgiven, and that she may regain the love that she seemed to despise.—L. A. X., Staten Island, N. Y., that God would give her a clean heart, and that the wicked desires which torment her, and which in her soul she hates, might be taken away.—The following persons ask prayer that God would, if consistent with his will, grant them blessings for which they have long besought him: S. K. C., Huston, Ky.; “Believer,” Hamilton, O.; Lonely, Stege, Cal.

Missionary Progress. For nearly eleven years, says The Mission World, missionaries of the various societies engaged in Mission work in China labored in Foochow and its neighborhood without a single convert, and the work was on the eve of being given up. But in 1861 three men became converted, and now in that one province there are 30,000 professed Christians, and the Church Missionary Society alone has in it ten ordained Christian ministers and one hundred and seventy churches.

Brown's French Dressing

Shoe Dressings

IT is the most reliable dressing on the market, and more of Brown's French Dressing is sold throughout the world than any other make.

Ask your dealer for it, and accept no substitute. Take only

BROWN'S FRENCH DRESSING.

Absorbs Like a Sponge.

+AMOLIN+

the only

Odorless Antiseptic Dress Shield

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

(A new coal tar product.)

The Only New Remedy

odorless, healthful, harmless and positive deodorant for Dress Shields, etc.

soothing, healing, antiseptic for scalding, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants or Adults.

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

Columbia Bicycles

Unequalled in Strength

The high-carbon steel and nickel steel used in the tubing of Columbia bicycles have no equal in their power to resist the strains to which a bicycle frame is put. This tubing is all made in the Columbia mills especially for Columbias

Standard of the World

Columbias in quality and construction are in a class by themselves. $100 to all alike

The Columbia Catalogue, handsomest art work of the year, is free from the Columbia agent, or is mailed for two 2-cent stamps.

POPE MFG. CO., Hartford, Conn.

Columbia Branch Houses and Agencies are almost everywhere.

CRIPPLES

Men, Ladies and Childrens Hand- and Foot Power-TRICYCLES

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

FAY MFG. CO., 80 Pine St. Elyria, O.

Maverley BICYCLES.

$85

AMERICA'S FAVORITES.

Are Built in the Largest and Best Equipped Factory on Earth.

Our unequalled facilities enable us to supply better bicycles for less money than other makers can afford to market an inferior production, hence in purchasing a Maverley there is a clear saving of $15.00 or more. A higher grade bicycle, it is impossible to produce. Our catalogue explains all. Send for it.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

The Book of Beginnings.*

ALL comparisons made, or contrasts drawn, between the first and second chapters of Genesis on the assumption that they are separate and independent accounts of the same transaction are necessarily fallacious. In the one the scene embraces all the world with what it contains. In the other it is limited to the garden of Eden, which is fitted up for the habitation of the first human pair. The first advances by a succession of mighty fiats from the initial production of inanimate matter to the culmination of the whole grand process in the creation of man in the image of God. The second deals exclusively with the primitive state of man, which is minutely explained with a special view to the temptation and fall; all is on the plane of individual life and moves steadily forward to that first transgression by which man lost his original holiness and communion with God. The second chapter is thus in no sense parallel to the first, but is its natural sequel. It is the succeeding scene in the sacred history, the next act, so to speak, in the divine drama which is here transacting. It introduces the reader to a new and distinct stage in the unfolding of that plan of God which it is the purpose of the book of Genesis to record.

With such marked difference in the design and the contents of the two chapters, it follows, of course, that each has a character of its own distinct from the other. It is very easy to set one over against the other and to point out their distinctive qualities. But the dissimilar features, which so readily offer themselves to the observer, result directly and necessarily from the diversity of the subjects respectively treated in each, and require no assumption of the idiosyncrasies of different writers or the peculiarities of separate documents to account for them.

Cain.

The fact is that Cain was expelled from the seat of God's presence, the society of man, and cultivated land, to the wild steppes of the land of Nod, equivalent to the nomad region. The Hebrew word for city is in the usage broad enough to cover a nomadic encampment. The dread lest his murder might be avenged, betrayed itself afresh in his constructing such a defence for himself and his family, which subsequently may have grown from these small beginnings into much larger proportions. The builders of the first huts on the site of Chicago may be said to have laid the foundations of the city. Cain had previously been a "tiller of the ground." That he continued to be an agriculturalist is certainly not stated in the text and is in fact inconsistent with it. The arts developed by his descendants are those of nomads, viz., pasturage, music, and metallurgy, but not the cultivation of the soil. Jabal was "the father of such as dwell in tents and have cattle," in a very different sense in that in which Abel was a "keeper of sheep" at his paternal home.

The Nephilim.

The sons of God are not angels nor demi-gods, whose intermarriage with the daughters of men brought forth a race of monsters or superhuman beings. This purely mythological conceit was foisted upon the passage in certain apocryphal books like the book of Enoch; also by Philo and Josephus, who were misled by the analogy of ancient heathen fables. But it was repelled by the great body of Jewish and Christian interpreters from the earliest periods, though it has been taken up again by a number of modern scholars.

It was an original work and written by Moses. In replying to the Critics he enters in detail into the arguments they have put forth. Dr. Green is the author of a number of books on the Bible and on the history of the Jews. He is a member of the New York Bible Society and of the American Bible Society. He is also a member of the New York Bible Society and of the American Bible Society. He is also a member of the New York Bible Society and of the American Bible Society.

On the contrary, "sons of God" is a familiar designation of the chosen race, the worshippers of the true God. Moses is instructed to say to Pharaoh (Ex. 4: 22), "Thus saith Jehovah, Israel is my son: let my son go. And, on the other hand, the worshippers of false gods are called their children. Thus (Num. 21: 29) the people of Moab are spoken of as the sons and daughters of Chemosh. Mal. 2: 11, an Israelite who had taken a foreign wife is said to have married the daughter of a strange god. It is in entire accord with this Biblical usage that the pious race, who adhered to the true worship of God, are called the sons of God in contrast with the descendants of Cain, who had gone out from the presence of Jehovah, and abandoned the seat of his worship entirely.

Early Man and Eden.*

"GAN EDEN," says Sir Henry Rawlinson, "answers to the old Babylonian Gan Dunya, and must have been situated on the Euphrates and three other rivers watering the plain of Babylonia." Many of the older writers, as is well known, favor this view, and among later authorities may be mentioned Delitsch, Pinches and Sayce. It agrees also, as we have seen, with the introductory description. Without waiting at present to notice objections, we may proceed at once to indicate the character of the geographical description, and the consequent standpoint and date of the writer.

Eden, according to our narrator, was a district or region within which, and probably in its eastern part, was planted the "Garden" intended for the primal abode of man. It was irrigated by four rivers, and I think in a document so ancient it is not necessary to insist on a later Semitic usage, which would cause us to understand the word "heads" as "mouths" and so to render unintelligible the whole description from a geographical point of view. We may assume that the four rivers were confluent in the region and that the "heads" into which they were divided are their sources.

One of these rivers, the Euphrates, or Perath, was evidently the standpoint of the writer, for he merely gives its name. The second, Hiddekel, or Tigris, he says, goeth in or toward the front or east of Assyria or Asshur. The third, Gihon (rushing or pushing river), is said to run around the land of Cush. The fourth, or more distant river, Pison (spreading river), being probably more distant and less known to his readers, he characterizes more fully. It runs around the land of Havilah, where there is gold, "and the gold of that land is good; there is bedolach and shoham stone." We are thus restricted to the region of the Euphrates and Tigris; and to the eastward of the latter are the important rivers Kherkah and Karun, both flowing into the Shat-el-Arab formed by the confluence of the Euphrates and Tigris, and, as modern exploration shows, corresponding with the indications of our old geographer.

Taking them now in the order of the narrative, and identifying the Pison with the Karun, we find that this alone of the four rivers flows down from the high range of the mountains of Luristan (the ancient Zagros), which lies along the western frontier of Persia, and is the only range of gigantic and metamorphic rocks near to the old Eden plain. These hills have, according to the late eminent geologist, William Kennet Loftus, gold washings in some of their streams, abundance of garnets, crystalline quartz and serpentine, as well as of the pure white gypsum, afterwards used so extensively by the Assyrians, and they afford also jade, flinty slate, chert and jasper, suitable for the tools and implements of primitive man. Furthermore, this is the sole region near to the valley of the Lower Euphrates which yields these treasures. Thus the Karun, the Pasi-Tigris of Greek writers, flowing from the ancient Mount Zagros, and spreading on the Euphrates plain, is the only one of the four great rivers of the region to which the description of our author can apply, and for this identification we are indebted to the labors of an English geologist, who had, however, no reference in his explorations to Biblical history. This same river Pison is said to traverse the land of Havilah; and as this name belongs to the early post-diluvian period, it proves the date of our writer.

The next river, the Gihon, which, if represented by the modern Kherkah, runs parallel to, but not from the Zagros chain, is said to compass the land of Cush, not an African Cush or Ethiopia, but that same Cushite people which, according to Genesis, established the earliest kingdom in the plain of Shinar. The existence of this early Cushite or Turanian kingdom, and its importance and civilization, and the colonies which it sent into Arabia and Africa, are now well known from the ancient Chaldean inscriptions, especially those of Tel-loh; and Hommel has quite recently confirmed the identification of Nimrod with the old Chaldean hero Gisdubar, and has ever published an inscription calling him the founder of Erech, the city which, according to Genesis, was the beginning of his kingdom. The connection of the Tigris from the earliest times with the beginning of the Assyrian empire is well known. Thus we identify the site of Eden by both the physical and the historical geography of our narrative.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Progress in Spiritual Knowledge, by Rev. Channcey Giles. A memorial volume with a biographical sketch and portrait of the author; pp. 360, price $1.50. American New Church Tract and Publication Soc., Philadelphia.

Memorial of the Golden Jubilee of the Rev. Sylvester Malone. Edited by Sylvester J. Malone; pp. 224, price $2.00, by mail $2.25. From D. S. Holmes, 388 Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

She Did What She Could.

On March 11, 1896, the beloved Governor of Massachusetts was buried. The floral display was magnificent, flowers here, there, everywhere; wreaths from friends, state officers, societies, lodges, in fact the entire space allotted for them was completely filled and the little church in Lowell, Governor Greenhalge's home, was soon expected to be packed. As the florists and others stood back to survey the effect of a new piece just added, a tall, elderly lady, very plainly and neatly dressed came slowly in the church and looked sadly on the scene and then from one to another evidently wishing to speak to someone. A kindly man asked her what she wished. She said:

"I am most ashamed to bring it, but he once showed me a kindness and this one lily is all I have to bring. Please put it somewhere for me."

As the gentleman searched in vain for a vacant place for it, he at last laid the beautiful calla lily on the pulpit Bible, and there it appropriately remained throughout the entire service, as pure and lovely as any in the vast collection. Perhaps this was the most touching and costly gift to them all.

No lamp is a good one without its particular chimney.

The Index tells what Number to get; sent free.

"Pearl top" or "pearl glass."

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa

Not a Patent Medicine.

In cases of

Paralysis
Vertigo
Dyspepsia
Insomnia
Constipation
Sick and Nervous
Headaches

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant.

has been prescribed by over forty thousand physicians with wonderful success. Sample by mail, 25 cents; regular bottle, $1.00. 10 doses. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., sent to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,

Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on
Every Bottle

LADIES' SPRING CAPE
LATEST STYLES
AND PATTERNS.

Shipped anywhere, allowing trial; direct from factory to wearer, at wholesale prices. We ask no money in advance, as our goods speak for themselves.

This Elegant Cape

made from BEST quality, black imported English, Gray Worsted Diagonal; double row of fluted Lisse around shoulder, headed with JET GIMP; lace ribbon Ruche on Collar, with Streamers in front; lined with silk Rhadame and interlined with canvas; 20 inches long and 160-inch sweep. Makes as serviceable and certainly as stylish garment as any lady would desire for SPRING, EARLY SUMMER or FALL wear, and worth $10 up, at any retail ladies' tailor. Our special price for 30 days to introduce by express, at once, allow full examination, and satisfactory it does not cost you a cent. Finest Sample Book of latest style Ladies' Spring Capes and Suits, mailed FREE. Write us at once and SAVE YOU 50 per cent, and GUARANTEE to please you. GRAYDON, PALMER CO., Cloak De, Market and Madison Streets, Chicago, Ill.

DO GOOD!

DO YOU KNOW
One who is in trouble and needs comforting?
One who has lost a dear one who feels that life is worth living?
One who is not a Christian One whose soul you are anxious about?

A good way to reach such a person is to send a selected leaflet. Samples mailed on receipt of ten cents.
Y. P. C. A., 350 Ninth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Every purpose that a pencil serves is best served by—
DIXON'S
American Graphite
PENCILS.
If dealer does not keep them, send for pencils worth double the money.
Jas. Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

Ideal Spring Beds. Our Booklets "Sleep" illustrating and describing, sent free. An up-to-date pocket in your State, sent on receipt of two stamps.
Foster Bros. Mfg Co.
4 Clay St., U.S.A.

FREE
As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and money thus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c, to cover postage.
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLANDT ST., N. Y.

THE HALF-HOSE THAT ARE STAMPED

Shawknit

ON THE TOE

Fit Well, Look Well, Wear Well.

They are the only half-hose constructed in accordance with

THE SHAPE OF THE HUMAN FOOT.

Sold by the trade generally, and obtainable direct from the makers, who will send Descriptive Price List to any applicant.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

Do you know that there is science in neatness? Be wise and use

SAPOLIO

Jerusalem of To-day.

A Celebrated Author's Pen Picture of the Holy City as it Now Appears.

NEW names are more widely known in contemporaneous literature than that of Pierre Loti, the famous French author, scientist and traveler. He gives in a recent article in a Paris journal the most interesting description of the Holy City: On foot, and accompanied by an Arab for my guide, I left my hotel to go last to the Holy Sepulchre. It is almost in the heart of Jerusalem. I passed through little, narrow, and tortuous streets, between walls of houses old as the Crusades, without windows and without doors. On the damp pavements and under a sky still obscure were the costumes of the East, worn by Turks, Bedouins and Jews. The women looked like phantoms with their long veils. The town still remains Saracen. On the way I noticed that we were passing through an Oriental bazaar, where the stalls were occupied by vendors wearing turbans; and in the shadow of the covered streets there moved slowly a file of enormous camels, which compelled us to take shelter in the doorways. A little further on we were again obliged to stand aside to make room for a long and strange procession of Russian women, all about sixty years old at least. They walked rapidly, leaning upon sticks or umbrellas, and wearing faded dresses and fur cloaks. Their faces, with an expression of fatigue and suffering, were framed, as it were, by black handkerchiefs, presenting a dark and gloomy picture in the midst of the high colors of the Orient. They moved along when an excited and at the same time an agitated air, jostling everything and everybody without noticing anything, like somnambulists, with fixed eyes, as if in a celestial dream; and old moujiks by hundreds succeeded them, with the same expression of ecstasy on their faces. Upon their breasts were many medals, indicating that they were old soldiers. They had entered the Holy City the day before, and were coming back from their first visit to the place of adoration, where I was going. Poor pilgrims! they come here by thousands, traveling on foot, sleeping outdoors under the rain or snow, suffering from hunger, and leaving many of their dead upon the roads. As they approach, the Eastern objects upon the stands disappear to give place to objects of obscure Christian piety—beads, the thousand crosses, religious lamps, images and icons. And here the crowd becomes greater. The pilgrims stop to purchase the little beads made of wood, and the two-cent crucifixes, which they carry away as relics to be held sacred forever. At last, in an old wall, rough as a rock, there appears a shapeless opening, narrow at low, and by a series of descending steps we come out upon a place overhung by high, sombre walls in front of the Basilica of the Holy Sepulchre. Here it is customary to uncover, as soon as the Holy Sepulchre comes into view. Entering we find ourselves in a sort of vestibule, revealing the magnificent domes where innumerable lamps are burning. Turkish guards, armed as if for a massacre, occupy the entrance. Seated on thrones upon a large divan, they look with scorn upon the passing adorers of this place, which, from their point of view, is the disgrace of Mohammedan Jerusalem. Ah, that unexpected and never-to-be-forgotten impression which one receives on entering there for the first time! Here is a labyrinth of dark sanctuaries of all periods and of all aspects, communicating by stairs and porticos, superb colonnades, little domes, and openings like the entrances to caverns. Some are elevated like high towers, where we notice in obscure corners groups of women wearing long veils; others, underground, where we brush against spectres along the sides of the dank and damp rock; and all this in a space of half night, except here and there glimmers of light, which intensify the neighboring obscurity, the whole infinitely strewn by the little flames of golden and silver lamps which descend in thousands into the vault. And everywhere we find crowds moving along, or standing grouped according to their nationalities around the altars.

Psalmodies, lamentations, and joyous chants fill the high vaults and vibrate in the sepulchral sonorities below—the nasal melopoeia of the Greeks, broken by the shouts of the Kopts—and in all these voices there is an intermingling of grief and prayers, blending the discords in manner indescribably strange, and sounding like the great wail of humanity, the last cry of its distress in the presence of death. The rotunda with a high cupola, into which we first enter and from which we can imagine the obscure chaos of the other sanctuaries, is occupied in the centre by a grand kiosk of marble of semi-barbarous beauty and loaded with silver lamps. It encloses the stone of the sepulchre. All around this holy kiosk the crowd gathers or remains stationary. On one side there are hundreds of moujiks and matouchkas kneeling upon the flags. On the other are the women of Jerusalem standing upright and wearing long white veils. One would take them to be antique virgins in this dreamy penumbra. Further on we find Abyssinians and Arabs prostrated, with their foreheads on the flags; Turks with drawn sabres, and people of all communions and of all languages. In profound obscurity we go down to the chapel of St. Helena through the wide staircase of about thirty steps, worn, broken, and dangerous, looking like a tumble-down ruin, and lined with crouching spectres. Our candles, as we go by, light up those vague creatures, immovable and of the color of the side of the rock. They are maimed beggars, demented creatures, devoured with ulcers, all sinister looking, with their hands under their chins, and their long hair falling down about their faces. Among these frightened objects is a blind young man enveloped in his magnificent blond curls which cover him like a cloak. In the background the chapel of St. Helena appears in the pure rays of the day, which come in pale bluish tints through the openings of the vault. It is certainly one of the strangest pieces of this whole place which is called the Holy Sepulchre. Here we experience in the most striking fashion the sentiment of the terrible past. It was silent when I came and it was empty under the gaze of the phantoms that occupied the staircase of the entrance. There was an indistinct sound from the bells and the chants above. Behind the altar another staircase, occupied by the same kind of personages with long hair, reaches further down into the darkness. From the depths below there comes a procession of Abyssinian priests, looking like ancient Magi coming from the bowels of the earth. In the distance, near the kiosk of the Sepulchre, the rock of Calvary appears. It supports two chapels, into which one enters by about twenty stone steps, which for the crowd form the chief places for prostration and sobs. From the peristyle of these chapels, as from an elevated balcony, the view commands a confused mass of tabernacles, a labyrinth of churches. The most splendid of all is that of the Greeks. Upon a nimbus of silver, which shines out in the background like a rainbow, there appear in life size the pale images of three crucified ones—Christ and the two thieves. The walls disappear under the icons of silver, gold, and precious stones. The altar is erected at the traditional place where the crucifixion took place. Under the altar rail a trellage of silver leaves in view in the dark rock the hole where the cross was planted, and it is there that the pilgrims crawl on their knees, moistening those sombre stones with their tears and their kisses, while a soothing sound of chant and prayers incessantly comes from the churches below. And here for now nearly 2,000 years the same scenes have been enacted in this place, although under different forms and in different basilics, with interruption of sieges, battles, and massacres, only to be reproduced again more passionately than ever. Here is the same concert of prayer, the same ensemble of supplications and of triumphant acts of grace. Surely the first Christians, in the purely spiritual spring of their faith, when the teaching of the Master was still fresh in their souls, did not encumber themselves with the magnificences of symbols and images. Certainly it was not earthly recollections—the place of martyrdom or an empty sepulchre—that preoccupied them. They did not seek their Redeemer there, because they saw him forever freed from transitory things and standing above in serene light. But we, the people of the West and of the North, have escaped more recently from naive barbarities than the antique societies from which the first Christians sprung. In the middle ages, when the faith penetrated our forests, it was obscured by a thousand primitive religions; and it is the smallest number among us that have been sufficiently enfranchised from accumulated traditions to be able to embrace the evangelical worship in spirit and in truth. And, moreover, when faith is extinguished in the modern souls it is still toward this veneration of sacred spots and cherished recollections that unbelievers are brought by the sad regret of the lost Saviour. Oh, that Christ, for whom all these crowds have come and for whom the poor old woman near me kneels down, kisses the pavement, and throws upon the flags her broken heart, while shedding tears of delicious hope! Let his memory be adored for his sublime teachings of brotherly love, of hope, and of eternity!

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC New York.
BRADLEY New York.
BROOKLYN New York.
JEWETT New York.
ULSTER New York.
UNION New York.
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN Chicago.
COLLIER Chicago.
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL St. Louis.
SOUTHERN St. Louis.
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO. Philadelphia.
MORLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

WELL DRESSED MEN

wear only merchant tailor made clothes.

A Tailor-Made Suit For $10.00

We'll make to your measure a Frock or Sack Suit of equal to any tailors $14.00 garment for $10.00. Other Suits and Trousers just as cheap. We save 40 per cent by buying big lots of wools direct from the mills—that accounts for it.

ALL WOOL GOODS

All goods sent C. O. D. with privilege of examination and try on before paying express agent. We pay express charges. Send for samples of cloth, tape line and full particulars. Free.

B. LOUIS VEHON, Tailor, 155 W. Jackson St., Chicago.

KNICKERBOCKER.

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Suits for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, &c. By mail $1.00 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send check measure of your body under arms. Circular free.

Address KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN., U.S.A.

MUSIC SALE

To close out our stock we send by mail 70 pieces, full sheet music size, vocal and instrumental, all parts complete, all for 20c.; or 4 lots .50c. Money back if not suited. "Only One Girl in the World for Me," and 100 Songs with music. Sec. C. H. Hathorn, 345 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair, and remove scalp diseases. Address, Altenheim Medical Dispensary, 127 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

DEAFNESS & HEAD NOISES CURED

By using INVISIBL Ear Candles. Have hope more to good than all other devices combined. Whipple HEARD Help ears as glasses do eyes. F. H. Hixcox, 853 Broadway, N. Y. Book of proofs FREE.

IT IS JUST AS EASY, and a heap more sensible, to use a little care in the selection of materials when having painting done and secure the best result as it is to take chances and use mixtures of which you know nothing. To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands). Any shade or color desired can be easily obtained by using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s brands of Pure White Lead and Tinting Colors.

Pure White Lead

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forwarded upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York.

CATALOGUE

FREE

Now is the time to buy a PIANO or ORGAN from the largest manufacturer in the world, who sell their instruments direct to the public at wholesale factory prices. Don't pay a profit to agents and middlemen. We sell at CASH. No money asked in advance. Privilege of testing organ or piano in your own home. Warranted 15 years.

REFERENCE Ask references furnished on application; the editor of this paper; any business man of this town; and to the thousands using our instruments in their homes. A book of testimonials sent with every catalogue. An advertisement we will sell the first Piano is a place for only $160. The first Organ only $25. Send, Book FREE.

If you want to buy for cash, Write Us. BEETHOVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO.
If you want to buy on instalments, BUT DON'T BUY UNTIL YOU
P. O. Box 741 WASHINGTON, N. J.

10 cts.

BEAUTIFUL FRUIT PICTURE for the dining-room. Size 17x14 inches. Painted on a beautiful collection of richly colored fruits. Worth $1.00. If you will MENTION THIS PAPER and ENCLOSE 10 CENTS TO PAY POSTAGE AND PACKING we will send post-paid FREE with liberal premium offers to get envelopes. H. M. Wall, 31 Frost St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

WANTED-AGENTS

To sell Sash Locks & Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free by mail for 2c. stamp. Best sellers ever invented. Beate weights. $12 a doz. Write to GROHARD & CO., Box 21, Philadelphia.

HOME STUDY

Bookkeeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, Short Hand, etc. thoroughly taught by Mail students. Home, low rates, no previous education. Cat. free. Trial lesson 10c. BRYANT & STRATTON, 75 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

CATARRH.

Send name for FREE package, sure cure. Send post paid to you. G. N. STODDARD, 1223 Niagara street, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE IMPROVED Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it is the only one that never wears out, does not chafe or become tight, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lady attendants and nurses. Free circular free. Send for one.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

$3 A DAY SURE.

Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day abundantly in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee our profit of $3 for every day a week, thereby your entire outlay REAL MANUFACTURING CO., BOX 22, DETROIT, MICH.

For a Nerve Tonic

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. H. M. HARLOW, Augusta, Me., says: "I regard it as one of the best remedies in all cases in which the system requires an acid and a nerve tonic."

To impart strength purify the blood and to give a feeling of health and vigor throughout the system, there is nothing equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. Take only Hood's this spring.

"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" are an effectual remedy for all Bronchial Affections.

THE GOVERNOR RELENTED.

BELIEVERS in the power of prayer will find encouragement in the following incident, which is related by Rev. E. Payson Hammond: Revival meetings were being held in San Francisco, and some of the friends went out on the streets and held a short song service inviting the people to come to the Union Hall. Among those who listened to one of these services and heard the invitation was a young woman who was living a life of shame. She heard it as she sat listlessly at her open window, and she determined to go. Her mother was a Christian, though her father was a thoroughly worldly man. He was the Governor of his State and a man of considerable influence. The daughter had moved in the best society, but living for this world only. She was sought in marriage by a young man of whom her parents disapproved, but she gave her whole heart to him, and as her parents would not give their consent to the union, she ran away from home and married him. It did not take long to prove to her that her parents' judgment was wiser than her own. She learned by bitter experience the worthless character of her husband. He neglected, and finally deserted her. Then she grew reckless, went to San Francisco and abandoned the path of virtue altogether.

She kept her resolution to go to the meetings and went for several nights. One night she stayed with others seeking salvation and was converted.

"What shall I do?" was the question that pressed on her. Her father had forbidden her ever entering his home, her mother was longing to see her, but she dared not go home. One of the ladies who had talked with her, said to her, however, "This God, who for Christ's sake has forgiven you your sins and changed your heart, loves you. He hears and answers prayer. He says, 'Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee the great and mighty things, which thou knowest not.' (Jer. 33: 3.) Let us pray for your father. The same Holy Spirit who has filled your heart with joy can change him so that he will seek salvation for himself, and if he gets forgiveness he will forgive you." So they prayed for this man, prayed that he might come under the power of the Holy Spirit.

Unknown to them, the Governor came to San Francisco. His home was two thousand miles away, but he was irresistibly drawn thither. He told his wife that he needed a few days' change and had decided to take a trip to California. Looking over the papers on the evening of his arrival, he saw columns about the wonderful meetings and determined to attend one. He went and his heart was touched. He wept like a child, and humbly pleaded for the pardon of his sins through Christ. His prayer was answered, and the light of a new life shone in his face. As he turned to leave the hall his daughter saw him. The recognition was mutual; he opened his arms to her and she sprang to them, saying, like the Prodigal, "Father I have sinned. Can you forgive me as God has forgiven me?"

The father looked lovingly on his beautiful daughter, and said, "He has forgiven me, too. Surely I will forgive you and he will make me a new man."

The friends standing around were melted to tears; and did not angels in heaven rejoice, as, leaning on her father's arm, she went out of that hall with him? The next day they went home, where they found the wife and mother ready to say with good Simeon, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for my eyes have seen thy salvation."

Surely this remarkable answer to prayer should lead us to believe the promise, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not."

An Indian Hymn-Writer.

Not a few of the Indians in the Northwestern States who have embraced Christianity in recent years and been brought under civilizing influences, have developed remarkable traits of character. Writing of missions work among the Flathead Indians and Kiowas, Rev. N. B. Rairden says:

"The Kiowas have shown a remarkable interest in the Gospel, considering all their past history. It is, indeed, a wonderful thing that they should have received the Gospel from us at all, considering their proud spirit and the feeling they have manifested toward the whites. This very fact has prevented them from receiving as fully the vices of our civilization as many other tribes who have been more friendly. The first convert at Andarko, Chief Big Tree's wife, has been a tower of strength. Her brother, Go-te-bo, a man of large influence in the tribe, has also done much to influence his people towards Christianity. These two have ever been faithful and consistent, and have sought in every possible way to cause others to accept Christ. Go-te-bo has proved himself to be a poet of no mean order, considering his opportunities and lack of even the rudiments of education. He has composed quite a number of Kiowa hymns, which are sung with great zest by the people. Go-te-bo has been a deacon in the little church since it was organized in January, 1894. Chief Big Tree, also a deacon, has ever been ready to exhort and admonish his people to leave the old life and seek a new heart and a new life by faith in Jesus." And thus, through humble instruments, many are being brought into the fold.

Good Causes Helped.

The following sums have been contributed by the readers of this journal to the various worthy causes mentioned below:

For the Bethesda Home for Friendless Women.

Previously ack'd.	$18.00
Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler.	50
L. M. Panama, N. Y.	50
L. H. N. Westfield.	1.00
Mrs. Silas Moore.	1.00
C. P. F. Hookstown.	1.00
Jas. Winter.	.87
R. E. S. Monroe.	1.00
Total	$23.87

For Mrs. Bella Cook's Work.

Previously ack'd.	$4.00
Mrs. H. M. S. Byfield.	50
In His Name, Phila.	4.00
C. P. F. Hookstown.	1.00
L. W. Bates.	1.00
S. A. Wing.	1.00
Total	$11.50

For the Door of Hope.

Previously ack'd.	$1.50
S. A. Wing.	1.00
Total	$2.50

For Foreign Missions.

Previously ack'd.	$16.50
Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler.	50
T. D. Bowers.	1.00
Point Judith.	1.00
Boston, Mass.	3.00
Friend, So. Berkshire.	1.00
Mrs. C. Houghton.	1.00
R. E. S. Monroe, N. Y.	1.00
Total	$24.50

For Any Good Cause.

Previously ack'd.	$6.50
Kelseyville.	1.00
T. R. Taylor.	1.00
Mrs. A. Betty.	1.00
Geo. W. Stockwell.	2.50
William Bradley.	1.00
Mr. C. T. Stringham.	25
T. S. R. Sullivan.	5.00
M. H. Mathison.	5.00
C. M. & F. L. Putnam.	5.00
Mrs. A. R. Naylor.	25
John D. Bowers.	1.00
Total	$25.00

Home Missions.

Previously ack'd.	$5.50
Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler.	50
Friend, So. Berkshire.	2.00
R. E. S. Monroe.	1.00
Total	$9.00

For Mrs. Jamal's Training School, Jerusalem.

Previously ack'd.	$15.00
Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler.	50
Mrs. J. G. E. Bethel.	1.00
Mrs. Wm. Anderson.	3.00
Mrs. J. White.	50
Total	$20.00

For Miss Emma Nason's Work among converts.

Previously ack'd.	$3.00
Mrs. M. A. Churchill.	1.00
Lambert, Boston.	5.00
Friend, No. Lansing.	5.00
Anonymous.	2.00
Mrs. M. S.	1.00
Anna C. Johnson.	1.00
Julia.	5.00
John R. Fisher.	1.00
James L. Ricketts.	1.00
Mrs. J. W. Wells.	2.00
Mrs. H. Lucetta Ward.	10.00
A. D. Worthington.	2.00
P. H. Hill.	5.00
Mrs. J. C. Houghton.	1.00
J. B. Fox, Leeds, Me.	50
Total	$45.00

For the J. C. Houghton Mission.

Previously ack'd.	1.00
Mrs. J. C. Houghton.	2.00
Total	$3.00

For Mrs. Lamadrid, St. Andrews, N. B.

Previously ack'd.	$1.00
B. F. Reber.	1.00
S. A. Wing.	50
C. E. Simmons.	50
Total	$3.00

For the J. C. Houghton Children's Home.

Previously ack'd.	$11.50
D. H. Ross.	50
James F. Farrell.	50
John Houghton.	50
Beat Houghton.	11
Mrs. L. A. Atwood.	1.00
Mrs. Bessie Broadhead.	1.00
F. M. Mott.	1.00
In His Name, Phila.	5.00
Mrs. J. C. Houghton.	1.00
C. P. F. Hookstown.	1.00
Total	$23.00

New Discovery for Kidneys and Bladder.

For The Christian Herald S. S. Missionary.

Previously ack'd.	$36.50
Mrs. O. Jewett.	4.25
Mrs. Lydia E. Wheeler.	50
Mrs. Verda Gillogly.	50
M. D. Coos.	1.00
In His Name, Phila.	4.00
Jacob W. Aumack.	5.00
Henry C. Meyer.	1.25
A. D. Worthington.	3.00
L. W. Bates.	2.00
Mrs. C. D. Bartlett.	1.00
Sub. r. Sinking Valley.	1.00
B. Vt.	1.50
A. R. G. Edwards.	1.00
Mrs. Evans.	10.00
L. F. Symonds.	2.00
Mrs. N. P. Gordon.	1.00
Total	$75.50

For Mrs. Williamson's Home.

Previously ack'd.	$88.00
E. S. Tyler.	4.50
M. Oppenheim.	1.00
Geo. H. Downing.	1.00
Harris Levy.	2.00
N. Y. City.	5.00
A. Sister in Christ.	1.00
Goodland.	1.00
Thomas Daniels.	2.00
Total	$104.50

For American Board's Foreign Missions.

Previously ack'd.	37.66
Reader, Jackson.	4.00
In Christ's Name.	50.00
Anna E. Sharpless.	1.00
J. F. Dodd.	1.00
Mrs. F. A. Glover.	1.00
E. W. C. N. Mex.	1.00
Matt. 25: 40. Rockport.	10.00
Friend E. Bklyn.	2.50
C. E. Kenney.	2.50
Rosalia L. Dayaguet.	25
Mrs. Jas. Gamblin.	5.00
In His Name.	1.00
Total	$116.11

Stephen Merrill's Travellers' Club.

In His Name, Phila.	4.00
Philippian Liberator's League.	5.00
C. E. Welsh.	5.00
Mrs. Mary Shaw.	1.00
Total	$6.00

For the J. C. Houghton Mission.

Previously ack'd.	1.00
Mrs. J. C. Houghton.	2.00
Total	$3.00

For Mrs. Lamadrid, St. Andrews, N. B.

Previously ack'd.	$1.00
B. F. Reber.	1.00
S. A. Wing.	50
C. E. Simmons.	50
Total	$3.00

For the J. C. Houghton Children's Home.

Previously ack'd.	$11.50
D. H. Ross.	50
James F. Farrell.	50
John Houghton.	50
Beat Houghton.	11
Mrs. L. A. Atwood.	1.00
Mrs. Bessie Broadhead.	1.00
F. M. Mott.	1.00
In His Name, Phila.	5.00
Mrs. J. C. Houghton.	1.00
C. P. F. Hookstown.	1.00
Total	$23.00

Consumption

If you value your Life
Or the Lives of those nearest and dearest to you,
Read!

DEAR MR. CONGREVE.—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your Balsamic Elixir. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation. Yours heartily,

Spurgeon.
"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs and Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that fatal disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order for $1.00 bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE, 367 Canal St., New York, and London, Eng.
Mention this paper.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS and a "Chautauqua" Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE COLLAJINS . . .

100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . . . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00 IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE.—The combination offer of the Larkin Soap Manufacturing Co., although unusually generous genuine. From personal inspection of the factory and experience with their goods and premiums we think that they are all that is claimed for them and can heartily recommend them.—The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE.—We have examined the goods and premiums, as described above and know they will give satisfaction. We know the company have personally visited their establishment in Buffalo, have purchased and the goods, and gladly say everything is as represented.—Epworth Herald, Chicago.

PIANOS! ORGANS! FREE!

TEST TRIAL FOR 30 DAYS IN YOUR OWN HOME, NO MONEY REQUIRED

PIANOS-ORGANS FROM $25.00 UP

Including a Complete Musical Outfit. CASH or EASY PAYMENTS.

NEW SOUVENIR CATALOGUE

A work of art illustrated in 10 colors. Worth its weight in gold. We pay charges on it and send it FREE, all you have to do is ask for it today please. Remember this is the old established house of CORNISH & CO., the only firm in the world selling exclusively from Factory to Family direct. A single instrument at wholesale price. We save you from $25.00 to $50.00. Write at once to Mention Paper. CORNISH & CO., Est'd 30 years, Washington, N. J.

CRITERION STEREOPTICONS, MAGIC LANTERNS, ELECTRIC FOCUSING LAMPS, &c.

J.B. COLT & CO.,
115-117 NASSAU ST.,
AND 59 FIFTH AVE.,
NEW YORK.

SEND FOR CATALOG.

ALL WOOL SUIT for $5.95

Made in frock or suit style in the latest styles, equal to any clothing's $12 garments. Higher priced suits equally as cheap. We do not ask you to buy a "blind pig" but we send samples of the leading spring and summer clothes, menswear, women's dress and more from Agents Wanted.

JOHN Z. QUINCY & CO.,
104-106 West Quincy St., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNES

and Head Noises relieved as with Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum. New scientific invention different from all other devices. The only simple, comfortable and most effective Ear Drum in the world. Helpless medical skill fails. No wire or attachment. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.
Office: 223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
1123 Broadway, New York.

DON'T MISS THIS

EXTRA

SPECIAL OFFER

ON NEXT

2500 Sets.

ONE MORE

Grand Opportunity

FOR LIBERAL

Self-Education.

LOOK !!

SPECIAL TERMS

ON THESE

2500 Sets Only

$1.00 DOWN

$1.40 a Month

FOR

ONE YEAR!

Fine Cloth Binding.

Regular Price $42

Four Massive Volumes. 5,357 Pages. 3,000 Illustrations. 250,000 Words Defined. 50,000 Encyclopædic Subjects. Weight of Set about 40 lbs.

ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY

OUR low introduction prices and liberal terms, last year, on The Encyclopædic Dictionary brought us orders from thousands of Christian Herald readers; thousands more waited long, or were unable at the time to embrace our great special offer. Now we are getting hundreds of requests — they come by every mail — for an extension of time and books the old introductory figures. Our liberal advertising of 1895, coupled with the self-evident value and phenomenal popularity of our unrivalled home-educator, brought us far more business than we bargained for. Like the farmer in the old story, we "dug up more snakes than we could kill." To meet this new and imperative demand, and to give all our unsatisfied correspondents one more chance all around, we have decided to let 2500 additional sets go at a very slight advance, and on terms easier than ever. But don't miss this chance! If you hesitated before, act promptly now, and you may secure the great Encyclopædic Dictionary at little more than cost of paper, printing and binding.

Adopted as the Standard in the Public Schools of Philadelphia, St. Louis, Toledo, and scores of other American cities and towns in preference to all other Dictionaries and Encyclopaedias, Because it is a complete Dictionary of the English language, containing 250,000 defined words — nearly twice as many as the best "unabridged," and fully 25,000 more than are found in its nearest competitor. No other dictionary treats so intelligently and exhaustively the history of words — etymology. Variant spellings are given back to the time of Chaucer, and definitions and pronunciations down to the present year, 1896, make this the only complete and thoroughly satisfactory word-book in English print. Every word is systematically treated as to its origin, spelling, pronunciation, and various shades of meaning. Every vowel sound is indicated by means of diacritical marks so that mispronunciation is impossible. These points of undoubted superiority have rendered The Encyclopædic Dictionary a "court of last resort" — the acknowledged standard wherever the English language is spoken.

Because it is a comprehensive Encyclopædia of all branches of human knowledge, ancient, mediæval and modern. More than 50,000 Encyclopædic subjects are concisely yet fully treated, embodying the ripest wisdom of the scores of eminent scientists who edited and arranged this colossal work, including such intellectual giants as the great Prof. Huxley and the world-famed Proctor. It is the only book which tells you of the Röntgen method of shadow photography — the "X-rays"; the latest facts regarding appendicitis; Dr. Edson's plan for curing consumption by the use of aseptolin, and dozens of other up-to-date topics. No branch of study is neglected: — mechanics, music, art, law, medicine, pharmacy, chemistry, theology, zoology, botany, natural philosophy, architecture, &c. — all are covered in a masterly fashion by famous scientists, each pre-eminent in his own particular field.

More than $750,000 Required to Produce this Magnificent Self-Educator WHICH IS NOW PLACED WITHIN THE EASY AND IMMEDIATE REACH OF EVERY Six Representative Opinions. THOUSANDS SIMILAR.

Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst, D.D., New York. "It is a library condensed into four volumes, and reduced to forty pounds of quinine, sugar, and, withal, as much as the most comprehensive treatise on the subject."

St. Louis Public Schools. "After an extensive examination of all the leading dictionaries, we have selected this as the best for the use of our scholars."

Scientific American. "It came to itself a library for the busy man of affairs, the mechanic, the student, or the apprentice, just making a start."

Christian Herald. "The purpose of a complete reference library."

Rev. S. W. Miller, D.D. "There is no other work of many times the size and cost that contains so much information."

Rev. Oliver Crane, D.D., LL.D. "A marvel of condensation — a boon to every student."

STUDENT TEACHER CLERGYMAN LAWYER FARMER MECHANIC
INVENTOR APPRENTICE
HOUSEWIFE

See How Easy it is to Get this Great Work.

Send $1.00 by Post-Office Order, Express Order or Check, and the entire Four Volumes will be forwarded. Every month thereafter send $1.40 in the same manner for months making the total payment of $17.80. Understand, the whole set of Four volumes is sent after the first payment of $1.00, thus you have the use of them while paying the balance at the rate of 5 cents per day. All freight or express charges must be paid by the purchaser. Anyone wishing to pay cash for the complete set may deduct ten per cent. and send $16.02. This allowance is practically the cost of keeping the account if purchased on easy terms. We refer to any commercial agency, or any bank or newspaper in Philadelphia.

If the Half-Russia style, regular price, $62.50 is desired, the payments will be $1.75 a month; and the Full Sheep edition (regular price, $60.00), will be furnished on monthly payments of $2.00. The first payment is only $1.00 in any case, and the cash discount is allowed on all styles. When ordering please state which style you select. We recommend the Half-Russia. Pamphlet of 80 Specimen Pages Free on Receipt of 6 Cents to Pay Postage. Agents Wanted. Mention this paper.

Books Guaranteed as Represented, or Money refunded if returned within 10 days
Only 2500 Sets on these terms. Our future announcements will record higher prices. ORDER TO-DAY.

SYNDICATE PUBLISHING CO. 234 South 8th St., Philadelphia

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

W. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
Offices: — Bible House, New York City.

COPYRIGHT 1896, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NEW YORK, APRIL 22, 1896.

NUMBER 17.

Price Five Cents.

A BEDOUIN ENCAMPMENT AMID THE RUINS OF ANCIENT JERICHO, PALESTINE. (See Page 323.)

on the banks of the Kennebec, or at the foot of the Green Mountains, and you are here now. Some of you on the prairies of the West, or the table-lands, and you are here now. Oh! how many of us far away from home. All of us exiles. This is not our home. Heaven is our home. Oh! I am so glad when the royal exile went back he left the gate ajar, or left it wide open. "Going home!" That is the dying exclamation of the majority of Christians.

I have seen many Christians die. I think that nine out of ten of them in their last moment say, "Going home." Going home out of banishment and sin and sorrow and sadness. Going home to in the hilarities of our parents and our dear children who have already departed. Going home to Christ. Going home to God. Going home to stay. Where are our loved ones that died in Christ? You try them. Ah! they ought to pity you. You are an exile far from home. They are home! Oh! what a time it will be for you when the gatekeeper of heaven shall say: "Take off that rough sandal; the journey's ended. Put down that sabre; the battle's won. Put off that iron coat-of-mail and put on the robe of conqueror." At the gate of triumph I leave you to-day.

The Children in the Fold.

Notes of our Sunday School Missionary's Work in the Southwest—A Vigorous Young Sunday School.

CONCERNING his recent work in the founding of new Sunday Schools, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD missionary, Rev. Geo. W. Sharp, writes as follows: "In a tour of ten days the latter part of March, I delivered eleven addresses and six sermons. At the last place where I preached opportunity having been given for persons to express their purpose to serve God and those who wished prayer that they might be saved—all were requested to indicate their purpose and request by standing."

Every person in the house rose up, bowing we united in prayer amidst a deep and quiet interest and God gave his blessing. He has very manifestly blessed revivals at other places in the tour.

"On that tour I met a pastor who said: the school you organized at the Price School House last Spring was booming all summer—every Sunday thirty to forty little boys and girls would repeat verses of scripture, and the people gave me between thirty and forty dollars for coming from town between my appointments and teaching for them in the afternoon. The school closed in the winter but an appointment is out to reorganize next Sunday."

"That is the school house where last summer I met the giantess, Miss Ella Ewing, whose height was eight feet two inches,—I wrote you about her at the time. Her home is in that school district. "My recent tour was not all sunshine. Near one town visited a middle-aged man as found in a dying condition one morning near a haystack with a bullet wound in his head and a revolver by his side, a note beside it stating that he was going to kill himself, and adding: 'No work, no money, no home.' He was dead when I saw him, having expired when he was taken to town."

Mr. Sharp's work in the West and Southwest, where he has established several hundred new Sunday Schools and a number of churches during the last three years is already well known to many readers of this journal. This work is wholly denominational. Already in many places has borne fruit in the bringing of souls in the awakening of a religious sentiment in communities whose people had no church or Sunday School privileges, and only at rare intervals, and by long travel, could hear a sermon. Mr. Sharp has labored faithfully in his field, and is deserving of warm encouragement and support. Many of our friends who desire to help him in his excellent work and to facilitate his labors by bearing a portion of the expense for the current year, can send their contributions for that purpose to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Bedouins of Jericho.

Nomads who Camp Amid the Ruins of the Ancient City—Their Strange Life.

BEDOUIN OF THE DESERT.

THE sons and daughters of Ishmael, the Bedouins are the Gypsies of Palestine, Syria, Arabia, and the adjacent Oriental countries. Nomadic to the last degree, they are found moving from place to place at all seasons and under all circumstances. Their traveling bands camp at any convenient point that offers, whether on the plain, the mountain-side, the banks of the Jordan, or the inhospitable margin of the Dead Sea. Our colored illustration, which appears on the first page of this issue, is from a recent photograph of an encampment of Bedouins among the venerable ruins of Jericho. The scene is a picturesque and effective one. In the immediate foreground sit the women and children, while in the shadowy recess of the tattered tent one can discern the outlines of a woman's figure, near a fire on which steams a vessel containing some savory mess in preparation for a meal. The men, despite their rough, aimless lives, absolute lack of ambition, and disregard of personal appearance, still preserve a rude sort of dignity that is peculiar to their race.

It is estimated that there are over 5,000,000 Bedouins distributed in the different countries of the East. They are nearly all pure Arabs, and do not intermarry with other races. Though often supposed to be Moslems, they are not so by adoption or by religious inheritance. When near towns and cities, they fast and recite Moslem prayers, but as soon as they reach the desert all is changed, and the pretence of Mohammedanism is cast to the winds, and they neither fast nor pray; yet they are not without a knowledge of God, and they have a deep reverence for holy things. They are hospitable to strangers and intensely loyal to friends, although to all others to whom they have not been tied by the bonds of affection or gratitude, they are hostile and treacherous.

There has been comparatively little missionary work done among the Bedouins for various reasons. To succeed with them, the missionary must travel with them, live in tents as they do and be contented with their rude fare. Should he be above doing this, he will be regarded as spurning their hospitality and will lose caste at once. Missionaries can only work among them in winter—that is from October to July—the summer in the desert being intolerably hot. After May 1st, when the dry season begins, the Bedouins camp along the western shores of the Jordan, the Tigris, Euphrates and Orontes where grass is plentiful, the object being to find food for their horses, goats and camels. The men, if they have any calling at all, are shepherds and horsemen, while the women and girls do the work of the household. They live very plainly and eat sparingly, and many reach a great age, their simple habits, together with their outdoor life, being conducive to longevity.

Bedouins have some peculiar superstitions, among them being that of the "Evil Eye," which if a person possesses, he or she is able to injure another by a look; and the existence of genii or "djinn," little sprites that annoy the flocks at night or fly about in the wind-clouds.

A Bedouin tribe or family on the march is a sight worth seeing. First, they start the flock of sheep and goats in the early morning; then come the camels with their loads of tents, furniture, food and the sick and aged. Next come the women with the donkeys, all heavily laden. The men are usually scattered about, wherever they are most needed. By sunset a halt is made, the tents pitched, and with all the camels and other animals unloaded and resting, the fire blazing and savory dishes cooking for the evening meal, the camp as a whole presents a not unattractive aspect. No one, however, must be too critical of its cleanliness, for that is a quality of which, unfortunately, the average Bedouin has no appreciation.

Bedouin women are a sadly neglected class. Socially they stand about on the same level as the hard-working squaw of the uncivilized North American Indian. There is sore need of Gospel influence among them. At a few points in Syria and Arabia, some spiritual progress has been made. In the Arabian city of Homs, Mr. Van Tassel, an American missionary, several years ago established schools for boys and girls, and a small Christian church. The American Arabian Mission has been doing work in Arabia for the last eight years, its workers being Rev. James Cantine and Rev. S. M. Zwemer. The Keith Falconer Mission of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland has also done active work there for a number of years. As already stated, however, comparatively little religious work has been attempted among the Bedouins.

"Sons of Ishmael," "Children of the Desert," and other similar appellations give an idea how the civilized part of mankind has regarded the Bedouins for many generations. Shepherds, robbers, beggars—whatsoever their avocation, they have always preserved their racial peculiarities, in Syria, the great Arabian deserts, Persia, Kurdistan, or the Soudan. Physically, they are among the finest of the Oriental races, with splendid figures, brown-skinned, spare and wiry, and capable of great endurance. Morally, they are, however, very far from being models of good conduct. Polygamy, with an occasional interchange of wives, marks the low condition of Bedouin womanhood. Their women rarely preserve their good looks after their eighteenth year, and they become squat, ungraceful, and heavily-browed, their faces assuming that vacuous expression that is inseparable from endless drudgery. Although viewed with contempt by the dwellers in cities, their chiefs bear themselves with a loftiness that accords with their claim of royal descent. Hagar's son was the father of the Arab race, and many of the tribes the Israelites had to overcome in the wilderness were Ishmaelites. But the nomads themselves declare that there were once great and powerful nations of their people, and that the Bedouin Kings were among the principal monarchs who brought gifts to Solomon. They conquered all Syria. To-day they are a race of wanderers and mendicants.

YOUNG BEDOUIN SHEIK OF PALESTINE.

PUBLISHER'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

More beautiful, practical or enduring souvenir of Palestine has ever been carried across the sea to these shores than the highly polished Olive Wood slabs, imported by this journal especially for its own readers and their friends.

These slabs are from olive trees grown on the hallowed Mount of Olives. They are selected with great care and beautifully polished by native workmen in Bethlehem, their shining, transparent surface showing clearly the exquisite designs and delicate tracings of the heart of the wood beneath. No tree is so rich in coloring as the olive. These slabs, of which we have a number now on hand, are suitable for desk or mantel ornaments, paper-weights or keepsakes. As a gift to a friend, nothing of the kind could give greater pleasure and satisfaction. Such a memento is sure to be cherished by all who receive it. Perfect specimens of the Olive Wood, in the form of slabs from three to four and one-half inches diameter and averaging an inch in thickness, will be forwarded, postage prepaid, at the merely nominal charge of twenty-five cents each.

"How Can I Study the Bible to best Advantage?" is a question that is being asked by thousands of thoughtful, earnest men and women to-day. At no time in the world's history has more light been shed on the mysteries of the Sacred Book than in our own day and generation. All the results of learned and pious investigation, consecrated scholarship and the ripest ability have been collated and preserved and are now combined in a single volume known as Helps to the Study of the Bible. This book is a complete library in itself, comprising as it does summaries of the sacred writings, with copious explanatory notes, Bible chronology, history of the Bible lands and their characteristics, tables illustrative of Scripture history, a complete Subject-Index, a Concordance, a Bible Dictionary, and a series of colored maps. There is, besides, a wealth of varied information concerning the birds, beasts, insects, fishes, plants, trees, and flowers of the Bible. With these HELPS at hand, it is difficult to understand how any Bible student can greatly err or misapprehend. The volume represents ages of labor, and is in this sense priceless; yet it is within everyone's reach, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will supply copies to all who send 50 cents for that purpose.

No book that has ever come from Dr. Talmage's facile pen has reached such an amazing popularity as his greatest work, From Manger to Throne, the wonderfully told story of the earthly life of our Saviour. It is doubtless the most complete, popular presentation of this great subject that has ever appeared in our own land, at least. Rich in engravings and half-tone illustrations and elegantly bound in cloth with decorative cover, this delightful volume of 544 pages will hold the reader fascinated from its preface to the concluding sentence. It is a splendid addition to the household library, and makes a handsome book on the centretable. But apart from all others considerations, there is the old, sweet story of Jesus, as told in Dr. Talmage's own unapproachable way, with a pen tipped with the eloquence of inspiration almost, and that story is invested with a new charm for old and young. Copies of From Manger to Throne may be secured, all charges prepaid, by sending one dollar to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

One of the few, indeed, very few things no right-thinking and right-living man or woman can dispense with is a copy of the sacred Book. And as none, nowadays, think of possessing any save the best, this naturally narrows down the selection to that premier of modern Bibles—the International, Teachers' Self-Pronouncing Bible. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's offer of these valuable Bibles as premiums to be sent with a year's subscription at $3, still remains good. Remember that these elegant Bibles are of the finest quality, both as to paper and binding—being leather-lined, red under gold edges, and silk-sewed. Such a volume will last a lifetime, and will still look well after years of constant handling.

FAITH.

Sunday School Lesson for May 3. Luke 17: 5-19. Golden Text, Luke 17: 5. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

HE disciples pray to their divine Master, "Increase our faith," and the prayer is left unanswered. Why? It was not a prayer of faith. The great mystery which hath been hid from ages and generations "had not yet been manifested to the twelve, they had no conception of "Christ in you, the Hope of glory." Therefore, when Jesus proposes to them forgiveness of a brother on a scale hitherto unprecedented (seven times in one day), they, not finding in themselves any possibility of coming up to such a standard, throw the responsibility on him, and say, "Increase our faith." The answer of the Saviour is of the deepest significance, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye would say unto this sycamore tree, be thou rooted up, and be thou planted in the sea; and it would have obeyed you." (R.V.) But ye must obey God, if ye would exercise faith. The servant who has ploughed or kept sheep in the field all day does not think it hard when immediately on his entering the house, he must get the meal ready for his master, before he can take any refreshment himself. He only does his duty, and he is not to expect any unusual thanks from his master. And this is the position of a true follower of Christ. When he has "done all," when he has succeeded in forgiving the same brother seven times in one day he is still but a servant, an unprofitable servant, who has done no more than was his duty to do.

Is this hard on the part of our God? Look closely into it. God demands impossibilities. All our human nature revolts from pardoning the brother, the Christian brother, who in one day the offence which not only touches us personally, but injures the work and the reputation of our Lord. Such a strain is more than human nature can sustain. Are we not justified in throwing the responsibility upon him who requires such impossibilities? Here it is that faith comes in. It is true, absolutely true, that human nature cannot reach out to do what is divine, and it is divine and not human to forgive seven times running in the same day the same brother for the same offence. It is divine, and God has done the same thing to you and to me. But you will say, I am not divine I am human. So says reason, so says feeling, so says experience. What says faith? The great mystery to which we have alluded, "Christ in you the Hope of Glory," can be apprehended and received only by faith, "that Christ may dwell in your heart

Repeats Seven Times

By Faith,"

(Eph. 3: 17.) Just as forgiveness of sins is ours as we believe what God says about it in the Bible so Christ dwells in us as we believe what Christ says in the Bible about the indwelling. Believing that in very deed Christ, the patient, the meek and lowly One, is really dwelling in our hearts by faith, we do not consult our feelings as to whether we can, seven times over, forgive the brother in one day; we look instinctively at what Christ in us can do. Instead of shifting the responsibility upon God, and praying for more faith, we do what Christ said to the disciples. The sycamore tree of self-life, which feels the wrong done by the brother, is there, but Christ, who has "all power both in heaven and earth," is there also; and in his name, we can say, "Be thou rooted up, and be thou planted in the sea." Faith sees the presence of Christ above the difficulties, but faith never can cast on God the responsibility which is rightfully our own.

Faith sees God, and honors him in everything: conscious of our inability to do anything which is truly spiritual and yet never saying "I can't," but "God can," or rather, "I can do all things in Christ who strengthens me." A real prayer of faith is by no means the prerogative of very advanced Christians: often, indeed, the prayers of children in years or of newborn babes in Christ, is the most really a prayer of faith. It is simply dealing with God himself, and what he says and is, instead of dealing with ourselves, what we are and what we feel; or with others, as to what they think and what they say. There is something painfully sad in the way in which some people will talk of a Christian, as though the greatest credit were due to him simply because he believes God means what he says, and has to be taken at his Word! What a sad revelation it is of the terrible state of the Christian Church, that it should be the exception, and not the rule, to believe in the living God!

Many there are who are constantly occupied with the question how much faith they have, and whether their faith will reach out to all the contingencies of the day. We might as well study our breathing apparatus. We know we breathe by breathing.

We Know we Believe

by believing. Faith is not faith when it is not in exercise. When we read that Paul says to the saints at Ephesus, and the faithful in Christ Jesus, that our Father has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ (Eph. 1: 2, 3), and that having saved us by his grace, he has raised us up with Christ and made us to sit with him in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus,—how shall we act? Shall we, like beggars, pray for the spiritual blessings which Paul tells us we are blessed with in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus? Would not that be a prayer of unbelief? Shall we then try to feel we possess these spiritual blessings? But that would be to call an earthly witness to a heavenly reality and "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned" (1. Cor. 2: 14). What then shall we do? Surely take our position in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, i. e., believe that Jesus Christ is in us, that God is indeed on our side in all things, that all these spiritual blessings are ours. Then we shall praise our God for them while we recognize that they are ours only while we sit in heavenly places, abiding in Christ and turning our back upon ourselves.

Having taught his disciples this great lesson, the Lord Jesus, on his way up to Jerusalem, was passing through the midst of Samaria and Galilee, "and as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers which stood afar off." This was not an unusual sight. Alas! the lepers are plentiful now also in many lands. Poor, miserable beings, often with hands from which every finger has dropped off; feet in the same condition; parts of their faces wanting, and suffering very great pain as the awful disease does its deadly work upon them. Their need was great: some rumor of the healing power of Jesus must have reached them; he was there in the neighborhood and might never be there again. They were not busied with the measure of their faith, they gauged instead the power of the Lord Jesus, and his willingness to save the poor and wretched; they used the little faith they had instead of asking for more, and their sycamore tree was soon dislodged. "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us," was all of their all-inclusive prayer. Their words were fair; they recognized in him a Saviour, Jesus, but also a Master, who had a right to their service; they did not come with almost a command like the nobleman of Cana in Galilee, "Sir, come down, else my child die" (John 4); theirs was a plea for mercy only. But it was a plea which was not rejected, although Jesus knew whom he had to deal with. God always responds to real faith. And that faith must be tested. "Go," Jesus said to them, when the wretched and mutilating disease was still upon them, "and shew yourselves to the priests." "What would be the use of such a journey?" reason would say; the priests have examined and excommunicated us, we are under compulsion to stand afar off, and to come near none of our fellowmen; what can it avail to go again to the priests?"

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

LEPERS BY THE WAYSIDE.

faith. The disciples must have believed that Christ had some mysterious power over them, otherwise they would not have supposed that he could do what they asked. They evidently believed in his power to increase their faith. Their desire was doubtless based on the fact that Christ had in many ways impressed them with the belief that faith was the channel by which development and power could come to them. They had seen, again and again, his own dependence on faith. In one instance it is recorded that he could not do mighty works in a district, because of unbelief; and repeatedly, when applicants came to him to be healed, his preliminary question was as to whether they believed. If they believed, anything was possible. We get a light on this attitude from our own experience. A boy has little likelihood of getting help from a teacher, unless the boy believes in his teacher. A physician knows how much easier his work is, if his patient believes in his skill. But this measure of faith on the part of his disciples, Christ in his reply counts as infinitesimal. If they had the slightest degree of faith—faith so small as to be comparable to the smallest seed, their power would be so mighty over the forces of nature that even a tree would obey them. Several similar utterances in the Gospels imply that there is a power of mind over matter that is not even yet understood. Christ's utterance is mysterious, and it may have been intended as a figure. We know, as a fact, that the tearing up a tree is a work far less difficult than the rooting out of human nature the passions and evil proclivities that ruin it. A man who has a tree in his garden that he wishes removed, can do it easily, but if he is addicted to drinking and gambling, he could not so easily eradicate those vices from his nature. This, as we know, can be done through faith, and it is a greater miracle. Connected with this remark was a warning against self-confidence and self-importance. This gift that the disciples sought must not be used for their own glory. It was a gift for a specific purpose. Possessing it, they must be like the servant Christ describes, whose duty it is to serve his master, and is not entitled to honor or credit for his service. The gift is a trust, and that it produces belongs to him who has imparted it. The disciples would be enabled to work miracles, but the miracles were not to be worked to excite wonder or attract honor to themselves. What all was done they were to remember to this strange power had been given for the Lord's benefit. With singular felicity, the Lesson Committee has included in the lesson the incident of the leper. Although its direct teaching is a lesson of gratitude, it may, however, be used as an illustration of faith. The diseased man must have had some faith to have started to go to the priests before they were healed. As they went, they were cleansed. This is the faith Christ requires. If the lepers had said, Let us first be cleansed and then there will be some reason for us to go to the priests, there would have been no cure. Diseased as they were, they stood, relying on Christ's power, and they were healed as they went. The obvious lesson is that the kind of faith sinners are required to exercise is that which shows itself in obedience. They are required to quit their sins, and the power does so comes not to the man who bemoans his weakness and makes no effort. It comes to the man who tries, sure that power not his own, will be given to him.

If ye had faith. Dr. Grossart compares faith to the railroad coupling. "Look," he says, "at the mighty locomotive at the depot, it snorts like a strong war-horse. All its parts—boiler, tubes, piston, fire steam—are in perfect order. But the stand the cars laden with passengers stand and unable to move. The locomotive back to them. Still the cars stand motionless. What is needed? The connection between the cars and the locomotive. The links are brought together and the locomotive steams out of the depot with the cars behind it. There is almighty power at the disposal of men, but the connection must be made and that connection is faith."

As they went they were cleansed. Naam had a similar experience. He must obey and thus show faith before he could be healed. An illustration of this which has often been used is that of the captain of a vessel accustomed to navigate a sea as the Mediterranean in which the tides are low. Coming to the mouth of a river he is stopped by the bar. Signals are flashed to him from the shore to lighten his cargo and be ready at a certain hour. Part of his cargo is taken off and the Captain makes all his preparations though there is no apparent sense in them. But the tide comes; the vessel is lifted, sails safely over the bar. The man who determines to obey God and begins trusting to the power Christ will give him is the man who exercises the true faith showing his faith by his works.

When ye shall have done all. Faith in God's power has been honored in many extraordinary ways. One remarkable instance occurred during the Napoleonic wars. On the day before Easter Sunday, in 1796, the town of Felkirche was horror-stricken by seeing a French army of 18,000 men under Massena, come against it. The town council was hastily summoned to decide what should be done. Some members urged immediate surrender, others urged one measure of defence and others something different, but all were desperate. The meeting broke up with nothing done, each member was instructed to be at the following morning. "To-morrow said the old Dean, 'is Easter Sunday. We have been reckoning our own strength, and have found it to be nothing. Let us turn to God. Let us have service as usual and beseech God to deliver us." The Council agreed, and at dawn the bells every steeple rang out the joyous peal that greeted the Easter morn. Massena heard the joy-bells, and asked what had occurred. His officers could not tell him, but the rumor spread that in the night the Austria had come to the relief of the town. In alarm, Massena broke up his camp, and before the bells had ceased ringing, the French army was in full retreat.

The Struggle in the Soudan.

Kassala a Strategic Point in the Life-and-Death Conflict Impending Between Mohammedanism and Civilization on the Egyptian Frontiers.

In all quarters of the civilized world public interest in foreign affairs turns to the Soudan where the struggle between civilization and foul, fanatical oppression seems likely to be fought with desperate ferocity. All accounts agree that the Italian reverses in Abyssinia have inspired the followers of the Mohammedan potentate, the Khalifa Abdullahi, with the hope of establishing his rule over the whole of the country and making it a base for operations against Egypt. The green flag is waving, dervishes are assembling in their thousands and expeditions are being sent out to seize strategic positions. One of the most important of these is Kassala, of which a picture appears on this page. The town lies about two hundred miles due west of Massowah, the Italian possession on the coast of the Red Sea, about half way between that port and Khartoum. It was formerly a large and thriving town, but is now given over to the military garrison and may be reckoned the advanced post of civilization in that region of Africa. It has the advantage of a waterway through the river Gash or Mareb which flows from the mountains on the northern frontier of Abyssinia. Osman Pasha, the Mahdi's old and famous general who now serves the Mahdi's successor, promptly moved against the Italian garrison which holds Kassala when the news spread of the disaster at Adowa. Rumors that the place had fallen into his hands and that the Italians had been compelled to evacuate it have been in circulation since his advance was known, but it is officially stated that up to April 11 the Italian garrison still held the position and expected to hold it. Osman Digna was not the only person to realize the value of Kassala to the Soudan. It was openly stated in the British Parliament that the chief reason for the Egyptian advance from Wady Halfa to Akasheh, was the hope of creating such a diversion as would prevent Kassala from falling into Mohammedan hands. Recent reports indicate that the policy has been successful. The Italian Government has received information that the flying squadrons of dervishes who menaced the town have disappeared and it is believed that the hostility will be directed against the Anglo-Egyptian expedition instead of Kassala. Italy fully appreciates the service England has thus been able to render her and the Italian Prime Minister has publicly stated that the two Governments have arranged to co-operate in future operations on similar lines. The stories of the few men who know the Soudan in its present condition, imply that the two European allies will be hailed there as deliverers rather than invaders. Slatin Pasha, who has been the slave and captive of the Mohammedan tyrant for sixteen years, from the time until he escaped last year, gives horrible accounts of the oppression under which he has seen thousands die. He claims on dynastic grounds the anarchy which followed the withdrawal of Anglo-Egyptian occupation. It appears that the Mahdi who appointed Khalifa Abdullahi his successor also nominated two other Khalifas in succession to Abdullahi. But Abdullahi was anxious to found a dynasty of his own and took measures immediately on his accession, to that end. He invited his own tribe to the headquarters at Omdurman and cleared a quarter of the city for their reception. Favors of all kinds were heaped upon the new arrivals who accepted his invitation, and they were suffered to oppress and maltreat the tribes of the Nile Valley. Grave dissatisfaction was thus aroused, which became acute when the Khalifa fiercely and cruelly suppressed an insurrection against them led by the two sons of the late Mahdi. Since that time the Khalifa's rule has been one long series of war and bloodshed. Suspected tribes have been sent on dangerous expeditions to be decimated by war. Obnoxious individuals have been seized and made away with without the forms of law, or by the Oriental methods of false witnesses and corrupt tribunals, or, if all else fails, by a death sentence pronounced by the Khalifa himself as the mouthpiece of Allah. Tribes openly hostile have been exterminated wholesale, the men killed and the women distributed among the soldiery. Such is Slatin's account of the horrors he witnessed during his captivity, and he declares that all the tribes but that of the Khalifa, who are the oppressors, would rejoice if any strong power would take possession of the Soudan and deliver them from the tyrant. They will need, however, to be convinced that the deliverance will be permanent, and that the European and Egyptian forces will not withdraw after conquest and leave them to the mercy of the brutal Khalifa. "Once satisfied of this," Slatin avers, "the tribes will throw in their lot with the advancing forces and lend their aid in breaking down the power of the now waning Mahdist empire." Against this account, however, which it must be remembered is furnished by a man smarting under the cruel wrongs of a sixteen-year captivity, must be set the well-known fanaticism of the Mohammedan people, who might be expected to be slow to join the forces of Christian powers against a Mohammedan leader. Meanwhile the British position at Akasheh is being strengthened and efforts are being made to complete the line of railway to the outpost, which will facilitate the transport of reinforcements. The railway is one of the relics of the former Egyptian occupation in 1884, but since the withdrawal long sections have been torn up by the Arabs and will have to be relaid. Sarrah, a town fifty miles from Akasheh has also been garrisoned and the two places are being connected by rail. It appears that it is necessary to protect the whole line of railway by strong posts of well-armed men at short intervals, to prevent the dervishes removing the rails. The Khalifa's troops have made an advance from Suarda to Mograkeh and have now about three thousand men there. This brings the advanced posts of the two armies within fifteen miles of each other. Suarda has been heretofore the most northerly point occupied by the Khalifa's forces. It is about forty-five miles from Akasheh, and about one hundred miles from the Egyptian frontier. The difficulty of advancing beyond that point is mainly one of the commissariat department. It is expected that an attack on Akasheh will be made as soon as Osman Digna feels strong enough. It is obvious from the careful preparations that are being made, that the Anglo-Egyptian expedition does not under-estimate the difficulties and dangers of its position.

An Institutional Church.

The Modern Idea of Social and Educational Work adopted in its new Branch by the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn.

THE time is past when the Institutional Church must be regarded as an experiment. It is an experiment only so far as the people who undertake it are lacking in experience. The effort honestly made to render the church helpful to the people in their daily lives, to let it be seen that religion takes account of social and physical needs, seldom or never fails of success. We therefore hail with pleasure the news of such a church on an enlightened basis being organized in Brooklyn. The idea originated in a sermon preached in the First Presbyterian Church two years ago by its esteemed pastor, Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall. Since 1866 the church has supported a Mission in Concord Street which has grown and prospered and has been the means of much good in the neighborhood. Dr. Hall's sermon contained a suggestion that a Parish House should be erected in connection with this Mission in which social and educational work could be carried on. The response to Dr. Hall's appeal was so prompt and generous, that his idea took a new shape. After much thought and discussion it eventually issued in an entirely new church building in place of the old Mission Chapel—one specially designed for the new sphere of work. That building has now been erected and the dedication services were held on April 12th. The building, a picture of which appears on this page, cost between forty and fifty thousand dollars exclusive of its furnishings. It speaks highly for the liberality of the First Church that nearly the whole sum was paid over before the dedication took place. The exterior of the church is an adaptation of English Gothic style of architecture to ecclesiastical purposes. It has an area of 138 by 64 feet and is three stories high. Besides the auditorium which will seat seven hundred persons, and the Sunday School, the roof covers numerous rooms to be applied to the many purposes which the church is intended to advance. A library, reading-room, gymnasium, lecture-room, kindergarten, baths and several club-rooms for the use of the Boys' Club, the Girls' Acorn Club, the Sewing Circle, Cooking School, etc. are all comprised in the one building. Beside these, it is expected that arrangements can be made to include the idea of the Social Settlement in the church. At first, probably, the workers will live in the vicinity but ultimately it is hoped that theological students and other Christian men and women will be accommodated on the premises and will live among the people whom they will try to serve. The Pastor of the new church is Rev. Gaylord S. White, an earnest young minister whose heart is in the kind of work that is contemplated and who has the one ambition of following in the footsteps of his Master in preaching the Gospel to the poor. In speaking of the enterprise to a reporter of the Eagle recently, he said: "We aim to have an open church, an every-day church, on institutional lines; in other words, a people's church working on the principal of self-support. We want to provide a church that will minister to the moral, intellectual and spiritual sides of the earnest seeker after truth, which will have something to attract his attention every day in the week. Of course, we don't mean that it will be all amusement or intellectual education, but we do hope by this broad ministrations to build men up in all that makes for righteousness." Both Dr. Hall and Mr. White strongly emphasize the fact that the church is in no sense a charitable institution. It is designed to meet the needs of people who are not recipients of charity, self-respecting, hard-working people who pay their own way. But it is precisely this class which has of late years been gradually alienated from churches by the apparent indifference of the church to the social problems which so closely concern them. There has been too little sympathy with the people, too little effort to learn how they live, to tender kindly help in difficulties and to aid in the brightening and developing of life. The object of this church is, in a word, to promote brotherly feeling, and bridge over the gulf which separates the classes. Both the city and the First Presbyterian Church are to be congratulated on the launching of such an enterprise and every earnest Christian will sincerely wish it God speed.

DR. C. CUTHBERT HALL.

REV. GAYLORD S. WHITE.

THE NEW CITY PARK CHURCH.

Mrs. Wainwright's Fad.

"IT'S a perfect fad with Pauline Wainwright," said Elise Perkins, "this being so good to old people. For my part, I think young people have rights, too."

"But," said Louise Lovett, "don't you think too that we who are young are often very thoughtless where the old are concerned? I admire Mrs. Wainwright more than I can tell you, the more so since I have lived in the house with her."

"You know, Elise, that I went to the country to board in June, and that I only returned when the leaves were falling. In the small hotel with me there were several families composed of parents and children, and in one or two instances of grandmothers and old maiden aunts as well."

"One of these old aunts, Miss Margaret Stuyvesant, moved my pity. She was so nearly blind that she could neither read nor sew, so deaf that she lost the delicate points in conversation, missed the edge of a jest, and the motive of a story, and so lame that she couldn't walk far, without great fatigue. Her people did not seem to care for her, and when she appeared there were often nudges and frowns or ill-bred giggles on the part of her young nieces, so that she must have felt herself in the way, although perhaps she didn't, as she couldn't see or hear very well. Still, one feels things in the air,—such things as that, at least."

"Shockingly ill-bred, such conduct," said Elsie. "People might behave decently, let them act as they pleased."

"Oh, well, I don't like hypocrisy," went on Louise. "On the whole, it was no worse for Miss Stuyvesant's young folk to act badly, than to feel churlish and impatient. I am coming to Mrs. Wainwright. She was distressed at the way this poor soul was treated, so she set out to make a change. First, she began by showing that she too a real interest in Miss Stuyvesant. She sat down beside her on the porch, and the two ladies were soon deep in conversation. Mrs. Wainwright has not a loud voice, but she has one of those sweet, clear, penetrating voices which are heard. She spoke slowly and distinctly taking trouble, and the old lady heard, and it was wonderful how her face brightened up, and her eyes shone. It seemed that she had been nearly everywhere, and knew a great many things the moment she had an interested listener. Mrs. Wainwright carried her off to drive, and helped her alter a gown which did not sit well around the neck, and altogether, her kind attention changed the whole atmosphere of the place for the lonely elderly woman."

"It must be owned," remarked Elise's mother, who had entered the room, "that 'evil is wrought by want of thought, as well as want of heart.' I do not fancy that Miss Stuyvesant entered in the least into two states of mind, common to their elders. The first is, that until the thing is absolutely forced on them by the attitude and the comments of their juniors, people do not realize their age. We continue to regard ourselves as young, long after the next generation has laid us on the shelf. And these comes, in the next place, a great and pathetic restlessness to old people. They wander about, not knowing what to do with themselves. I am glad that so dear and sweet a woman as Mrs. Wainwright has taken up the fad, if you call it a fad, of kindness to the old."

Just then the door-bell rang, and in walked the beautiful lady of whom we were speaking. She was elegant in dress and charming in manner, and few could resist the magnetism of her rarely eloquent talk and sweet illuminating smile.

"What do you think I've been starting?" she asked, after a few minutes.

We mentioned several probable institutions, but none of them hit the mark. Presently Louise hazarded the observation, quite in fun, that her friend had opened an old ladies' home.

"Mrs. Wainwright laughed. 'I've done just that,' she stated, gravely. 'For the winter at least!'"

"What do you mean?" inquired Elsie.

"Why only this, dear, I have a lovely big house, and no children to fill it with music. God has denied us this joy. My husband and I want to make others happy, and we have thought of adopting a child or two, perhaps we will do so one of these days. In the meantime there are always old ladies whom nobody cares to adopt, and who rebel against the thought of charity. I mean to invite three of these to come and spend a whole winter with me, and I mean to make it a perfectly joyous winter for them, so far as it shall be in my power."

"They are often

A CEYLONESE RICE FARM, CULTIVATED IN TERRACES

very hard to get on with," said our eldest lady present.

"I shall not try to get on with them," said Mrs. Wainwright. "I mean to make them perfectly comfortable, and to let them take their own way."

"I will watch the experiment with interest," said Elsie.

A few days later I called at the Wainwright's. Somehow the house had never seemed so sunny and radiant as it did that morning. I entered the parlor and one of the old lady visitors, a prim little lady dressed in black bombazine, came forward to meet me. I saw at once it was dear old Mademoiselle — our French teacher at boarding school, a lady who had retired from her work, and was living in dignified poverty on her very small savings. She came fluttering forward, as fussy and fidgety as of old, and bade me welcome with both hands extended.

"I have been trying some old melodies," she said. "This is such a sweet-toned piano," and she pointed to a pile of yellow "notes." "And dear Mrs. Wainwright asked Fluff, too, I could not have come without Fluff," pointing to the big yellow cat which blinked and purred before the open fire.

Another old lady, stout and substantial, creaked in, wearing squeaking shoes. In her hand she held a plate of nicely browned cookies, sprinkled with sugar.

"I don't know when I've been able to do a morning's baking before," she said, merrily, offering us the dainty cakes, which were good.

In the far corner of the library I discovered Miss Stuyvesant enthroned in a luxurious chair, reading Thomas a-Kempis. They all looked very happy. And how do you think Mrs. Wainwright felt?

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Ceylon's Terraced Farms.

How Rice is grown in the Beautiful Island—Progress of Missionary Work.

What though the spicy breezes
Blow soft from Ceylon's Isle,
Where every prospect pleases, etc.

Our sang Bishop Heber of that lovely island which is sometimes called the "Gem of the Indian Ocean," or the "Pearl on the Brow of India. Natives of the island have named it "Elungal," which means "The Resplendent." Around the coast the country is flat, and would be uninteresting but for the variety and beauty of its trees and the splendid expanse of fields covered with waving rice plants. In the central portion, however, the scenery is diversified and entrancingly beautiful.

Mountains between seven and eight thousand feet high rear their heads into the clouds, clothed from base to summit with luxuriant tropical vegetation. Streams of water like threads of liquid silver wind their way down the mountain sides and gurgle through the glades where the great tree ferns softly unroll their giant fronds. Lakes flash in the hollows of the hills. The dense jungles are bright with the blossoms of innumerable tropical plants and central part of the island which, by labor of generations, have been cut in terraces. The water is conducted from race to terrace, and by this device which can only be grown in the standing water, can be cultivated upon these innumerable hill-sides. Ceylon is the home of many races, Singhalese, Tamils, Moors, Eurasians, Malays, Europeans, Veddahs. Many of the great religions of the world—Buddhism, Hinduism, Mohammedanism, Devil Worship and Christianity—are represented.

Missionaries of four British Societies of one American Society (the American Board) have Missions in Ceylon. Each Society has its own district and sphere of influence, and no Society interferes with the work of another Society in that district, but all have worked in substantial harmony and in a spirit of brotherly love from the very first. The Missionaries of these Societies unite in sustaining a Union Bible Society, a Union Tract Society, a Union of Y. M. C. A's, a Union Mission Meeting, and Union Evangelistic Meetings held throughout many of the districts which representatives of several of the Societies speak in presence of large hearers upon the same subject and in the full harmony. The missionaries of these Societies are thus presenting a united front before the heathen who know little or nothing of the difference between them, but simply regard them all as Christians. Because of this spirit of harmony and brotherly love, God has been pleased to bless it. There are now over ten thousand Protestant Christian communicants in the Christian churches, and over forty thousand children and youths are receiving instruction in the mission schools on the island.

When one looks over an expanse of fields in Ceylon at the time when the ground is being prepared, and the rice being sown, one is most struck with the innumerable divisions, the perfect work of mud walls a foot in height, dividing each man's little plot of land from that of his neighbor. After a time the water comes down, and often continues to descend for many days; all the rice fields are flooded. The rice plants begin to grow in the standing water; slowly they rise higher and higher, first the blade, then the ear, afterward the full corn in the field. Then if you look over the rice fields you see no divisions, but just one splendid broken waving expanse of vivid green. So, when our Christian life is low and barren, we make much of sectarian differences; but when our Christian life has risen high, and we have come to the point of fruit-bearing for Christ, then, though divisions may exist as a matter of convenience, they are very little seen or felt, and we rejoice in the glorious truth that by whatever name the followers of Christ may be called, those who truly possess the Master's Spirit are "all one in Christ Jesus."

MARGARET W. LEITCH.

Hebrew Mountaineers.

In Daghestan, according to Professor Hahn, of Tiflis, there is a race of Hebrew mountaineers, who number about 200,000, speaking an Iranian tongue, with a slight tincture of Hebrew. It is surmised that in the early years of the Christian era they had already settled in the higher Caucasus, but their own tradition is that their ancestors were driven out of Palestine by Assyrian conquerors, and they value the account of their origin as purging them in the eyes of their Russian lords from complicity in the crucifixion.

The Poor of Naples.

In an account of the ascent of Vesuvius from the pen of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes there is the following reference to the Neapolitan "submerged tenth": "The valley lies first through the poorest suburb of Naples, where we had a vivid experience of 'how the poor live,' for they do literally live in the streets. The wretched, filthy houses are merely holes or dens, to which they retire at night to sleep, like rabbits to a burrow. With that exception, too, meals, work, family intercourse, etc., go on in the open air! As our carriage dashed along, pursued by beggars, and shouted at by the natives, we saw enough to sicken us, and to convince us that the social problem exists in La Bella Napoli as well as in grim, foggy London."

Our illustration shows hill-sides in the

ZEITOUN'S HEROIC BAND.

The Brave and Unconquered Armenian Mountaineers, who Held the Fortress against the Sultan's Armies — Relief Work still Going on.

It has been truthfully said that the one bright page in the dark story of Armenia's sufferings was that which told of the brave and successful defence of Zeitoun against all the attacks of the Sultan's armies. Zeitoun was not conquered or captured, nor can it be said, in the usual military sense, to have surrendered; for the government granted the demands of the defenders, who laid down their arms only on the advice of the European Powers and the Sultan's pledge to those Powers that the conditions of capitulation should be fulfilled. Within the last three weeks, the chiefs who conducted the defence of Zeitoun have reached London. They are Aghassi, Arah, Marziyeh, Nishan and Garabet—all young, educated Christian Armenians who, before the recent troubles, were engaged as teachers, journalists and authors. Zeitoun is fortified town in Cilicia, the fortress being 300 feet higher than the town itself. The people are better educated and have more spirit and independence than the Armenians of the interior and the Black Sea. It has frequently asserted its rights in the face of Turkish menaces and the Sultan's government has learned to respect it. When the peaceful Armenians of Marash at Alabash were attacked and slaughtered, the Zeitounis went to their aid. Then the Sultan sent officials to Zeitoun to disarm the people there—the usual preliminary to a massacre. The people revolted, attacked and captured the fortress, six hundred soldiers surrendering to the victors. The Armenian women went to the fortress, the mosque, and other buildings, and cared them with crosses, putting a cross on the top of the mosque, to show that the whole town had become Christian. The Zeitounis held the fortress for four months. Fighting was continuous. At last there were no fewer than 110,000 Turkish soldiers engaged in the siege, while the defenders only numbered 8,000. The Zeitounis garrisoned the fortress and every point of vantage, and suffered a loss of only 80 killed and 75 wounded, who died because they had no medical aid. The Turks refused to let the Red Cross Society enter the town. The Turks lost 13,000 killed and 3,000 wounded.

Twice the government representatives tried to begin negotiations, but their terms were so extravagant that the people would not listen. Then the representatives of the European Powers and the people chose the of these gentlemen to negotiate. The Sultan, with one or two unimportant exceptions, granted their demands. They promised a Christian kaimakan for the Zeitoun district, chosen by the representatives of the Powers, and establishment their guarantee, the people to appoint their own police and the administration—all to be Christian. They are exempt from arrears of taxation, and from paying taxation for several years to come, until they have recovered from the effects of the siege. The leaders agreed to leave the country, which they did under the escort of a dragoman of the English consul and two cavasses of the Italian consul.

During the week, a sudden and unexpected change in the attitude of the Porte towards the missionaries was reported from Constantinople, which, had the report proved to be well-founded, would have been a deep disappointment to the friends of Armenia. It was said that the Sultan had signed an irade or decree, directing the expulsion of all Christian missionaries in Asiatic Turkey and that, although not yet promulgated, it might be in force at any moment. Such a threat hurried into effect, would put an end to relief work and to all Christian missionary effort in Armenia, for a time at least, and the outlook for the native Christians would again be most ominous. The massacres would inevitably follow all the horrors of the recent massacres would probably be repeated, without a witness to testify against Moslem barbar-ity. Fortunately, the Porte, whatever its original purpose may have been, has seen fit to issue a denial of the wholesale missionary expulsion project, explaining at the same time, however, that any missionaries "who by their attitude try to disturb the order and tranquility of the country," may be sent away from Turkish territory. With the exception of one missionary (Mr. Knapp of Bitlis), who is practically a prisoner at Diarbekir, on charges of "fomenting sedition," the missionaries have not thus far been disturbed, nor has the work of relief distribution been seriously impeded at any point. All the letters sent by missionaries in the field to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD bear out this statement.

During the closing days of the Relief Fund, the response of the friends of Armenia to our final appeal has been prompt and liberal. As already announced in a previous issue, all contributions intended for Armenia should now be sent to Rev. Dr. Creagan, of the American Board, Bible House, New York, by whom the money will be cabled to the American missionaries. There is enough work for these devoted men and women in the relief field to keep them busy during the coming summer, and we trust that means will not be wanting to continue the relief operations.

In her latest report of relief work at Van, just received, Dr. Kimball writes:

During the early months of the winter we clearly foresee that February, March, and April would make the heaviest demands on all departments of Relief Work, and our expectations are fully realized. The people have been literally eating themselves out of house and home. So great have been the crowds, both of the city poor and village applicants, that we have been obliged to treat them en masse, to a great extent. In the case of the villagers, we again treat them in groups through their headmen and priests. The entire group is called up, looked over to get a general idea of the degree of misery represented by them; and their appearance, together with our own knowledge with the condition of their village, is made the standard of our giving. These groups are often very pitiable. One in particular included many women and children who were in such a terrible condition from their long-endured poverty in the village and their cruel suffering from cold and hunger on the way, that we could not help weeping at the sight of their misery.

The villagers from the districts of Khizan, Noreduz, and Noks show the most distress. In Khizan, a district partly in the Bitlis, partly in the Van vilayet, there is a large Kurdish population—fanatical Moslems, headed by a sheikh, the son of the famous Sheikh Jeladin. Last fall the Sheikh instituted a regular campaign against the Christian population with a view to routing out that religion from the borders. This outbreak of fanaticism was avowedly brought to a climax by the visit of a British Vice-Consul to the region. All the Armenians who entered him or in any way had to do with him were either killed or barely escaped by flight and hiding. As a result of this crusade of last fall, practically the whole Christian population has nominally accepted Islam, the churches are turned into mosques, and even the grave-stones, bearing the sign of the cross, have been pulled down and defiled by serving as latrines of the Kurds.

Our plan of action now is to send the villagers back as fast as possible, and to care for them in their own villages wherever there is reasonable safety for life. This object is much desired by the government which looks askance at the crowds of villagers in the city. It promises to co-operate with us in getting them back to their homes by securing safety in the villages.

In our Industrial Bureau, the number of employees has reached 1000, and the demand for work is constant. The monthly product has been 2374 yards of cloth, woolen and cotton; 186 pairs of socks. The Tailoring Department shows 377 garments manufactured, and 127 beds have been made. The value of the Industrial Department becomes more and more evident, both as supplying the greatest amount of help with the least possible outlay, and also as preserving the moral tone of the community.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BAKERY, six in number, supply some 7500 persons with bread. In addition, this department has furnished 142 bushels of wheat, where wheat could be given instead of bread, thus saving the expense of milling and baking. The bakeries are using about sixty bushels of wheat and are running at a daily expense of $125. (L. S. 25.) We are making every effort to cut down the bread list by returning people to their villages. A total of $7,838 was used in February, helping thereby, in work, free bread, clothing and bedding, some 1900 persons.

In a letter from Aintab, (March 12), Rev. Americus Fuller, President of the American College, writes:

The situation has undergone no marked change. An outward appearance of order has been maintained. The amount collected from citizens of Aintab for the relief work from Nov. 15 to March 8th is about $3,652. Within a few days large quantities of clothing have been received from Smyrna and Constantinople. Nearly all of this has been forwarded Marash and Oorfa, where the need is reported as very desperate. No attempt nor pretense has been yet been made of returning the plundered property. Open attempts to constrain Christians to profess Islam seems to have ceased. At Jobin, there were there about sixty houses of Christians, perhaps 500 souls. All have been compelled to accept Islam except one old lady over 110 years of age; she said to those who threatened her, "I am too old to change my faith. I know no one but Christ." They took her Bible and tore it up before her eyes and flung it into the fire, but did her no violence.

I have previously acknowledged your noble gift of $1000 to these poor sufferers. We are expending it chiefly in Oorfa, Gemek and Adiaman, where the necessity is most desperate.

From recent letters and cablegrams from the relief field the following extracts are taken:

Constantinople. We have been very successful in sending the money into the interior thus far and have succeeded in overcoming every difficulty.

Harpoot. We have already assisted some 60,000 persons, after the most careful weeding out of those who can care for themselves; yet the number increases. We can give only a very small sum to each individual, of course, where there is such a multitude.

Erzeroom. We are supplying daily bread rations to nearly 4000. Wheat is given fortnightly to the villages of the Erzeroom Plain. About 7000 are thus helped. We are now assisting 30,000 throughout the province. There is no hope that the present condition of the Armenians will be materially changed until September when the harvest will be garnered.

Marash. Helping 7000 people here and in three neighboring villages. Zeitoun refugees have begun to come to Marash.

In a letter from the Broussa Orphanage, the question of providing for the vast number of orphans, whose parents were victims in the massacres, is brought up by the writer, Gregory Baghdasarian, Principal of the Orphanage. He says:

The orphanage of Broussa, being the only Protestant asylum in these parts of Asia Minor, has already opened its gates to the orphans of this "glorious host of martyrs." Two children, brother and sister, were the first who found refuge under the shelter of this institution. Their father was one who had been cruelly butchered in the late massacres. We expect also a number of orphans from ancient Pontus—perhaps ten or twenty. A letter from Caesarea was received a few days ago. Rev. Dr. Avedis—my school-mate in the seminary of Dr. Hamlin—has been burnt alive in his own house, himself, wife and eldest son. His four children are now left destitute, the youngest being a boy of three to four years. We shall take these orphans into our orphanage. The Armenian martyrs are now crowned by their Lord and Saviour, whom they would not deny. What should be done with the great number of destitute and orphans?

The following contributions were received during the closing days of the Fund. Owing to a pressure on our columns some of the acknowledgments have been unavoidably delayed.

Prev. ack $43,688.53	Dell, Anna	2.00
Adrian, Mary J.	Desantel, J.	2.00
Allen, Elva	Desantel, F. J.	5.00
Allen, Everett	Davis, Amy	1.00
Alman, Chas	Eaton, E. J.	1.00
Anderson, Alex	Eberhard, Mrs H. P.	2.50
Anderson, Mrs J.	Ebert, Rosie	1.00
Andrews	Egeon, W. W.	3.00
Aos, O. J.	Eldred, W. W.	1.00
Archer, Geo	Ellis, Cora E.	1.50
Arms, W. F.	Elting, M. M.	3.00
Atwood, L. W.	Emlee, Mrs W. G.	2.00
Bagley, Mrs A.	Evenson, Edw.	1.00
Banks, Mrs M. J.	Evans, Mrs N. B.	1.00
Barboer, N.	Fall, Reg. W.	1.00
Barclay, Lizzie	Farrar, M.	1.50
Barrett, F. M.	Ferguson, L. S.	1.00
Barnes, Z. F.	Fisher, Mrs O. W.	2.50
Barrickman, M. W.	Fisher, Bertha	2.00
Bea, S. Mrs A. J.	Finney, Mrs G. J.	2.50
Becker & Wicks	Fish, R. Mrs I. W.	1.00
Bennett, Joseph	Flagg, H. H.	1.00
Bensinger, David	Flannery, M. J.	1.00
Bevan, E. J.	Forbes, Laura	1.00
Bishop, J. L.	Frees, Geo M.	1.50
Black, G. C.	Fristoe, Mrs John R.	1.00
Blakeman, Mrs Emma	Failing, Mr & Mrs	2.00
Bloss, Dora A.	Fogle, Mrs Sam'l	1.00
Bonn, Peter	Forst, Miss M. K.	1.00
Bottom, Mrs E.	Gallagher, H. C.	1.00
Brainerd, Mrs H. M.	Gernand, W. I.	2.00
Brandt, Adolph	Gilluly, Mrs John	2.00
Briggs, Mrs M. J.	Gladstone, David	1.00
Briscoe, Elsie B.	Gray, Esther P.	50
Briscoe, Eva L.	Gray, James	1.00
Brown, Mrs A. J.	Grazier, G. G.	50
Brown, M. J.	Grazier, H. C.	1.00
Brown, Millie	Grimm, Mrs J. B.	1.00
Burns, R. K.	Grimm, Silas	3.00
Burnside, Mrs R.	Gunn, Mrs E. S.	3.00
Ball, Mrs A. A.	Guyer, Mrs L.	1.50
Batie, Wm.	Ganong, C. B.	2.00
Baumes, Miss Ada	Geddes, A. C.	50
Beach, M. S.	Geddes, B. F.	50
Beglow, Mrs Maria	Gill, R. D.	1.00
Bills, Jas R.	Hagan, C. A.	4.50
Boyd, Mrs John	Hagan, C.	1.25
Brodhead, Miss Sarah	Haley, J. E.	1.00
Brown, Mrs J. M.	Hall, J. W.	1.00
Calhoun, Sarah A.	Hamilton, John	1.00
Calhoun, J. W.	Hanna, J. C.	5.00
Canfield, Josephine	Harding, John	2.50
Carson, J.	Harper, Jas	20.00
Carter, R.	Harris, Thos.	1.00
Clarke, A. L.	Hassett, Mrs M. H.	50
Cloyd, T. O.	Haynes, D. J. & wife	2.00
Condon, Mary M.	Hegrene, Carl	1.00
Cooper, Almira B.	Henderson, Almida	1.50
Corey, Mrs L. M.	Henderson, Annie	1.50
Cruikshank, Mrs J. L.	Henry, Theresa M.	2.00
Currier, Mrs L.	Higgins, Anna	2.00
Czarowski, John	Higgin, H.	5.00
Campbell, Mrs A. E.	Hill, A. H.	2.00
Canfield, Miss Fannie	Hindman, Mrs N. G.	2.00
Cantor, Mrs D. H.	Hodson, Mrs E.	1.00
Mrs E. H. Nichols	Hogenson, E. K.	1.00
Child, L. A.	Hogsett, Thos W.	2.50
Cole, Alex G.	Hoisner, S. C.	2.00
Collins, Miss N. E.	Hobert, M. M. & Jennie	2.00
Cox, Mrs P. S.	Hopkins, Nellie C.	1.05
Crichton, Dan	Horton, Mrs W. G.	1.00
Davis, Mrs Carrie	Howard, F. E.	1.00
Davis, Austin	Howell, Mrs C. A.	1.00
Davis, Cora	Howser, J. H. & family	2.30
Davis, Edna	Hubbard, Miss Mary	1.00
Davis, Frances E.	Hunt, M. C.	1.00
Davis, Mrs F.	Hunter, Wm.	10.00
Davis, Helen	Hathaway, Mary E.	1.00
Davis, Leah K.	Hays, Mrs C.	5.00
Dean, Mr & Mrs F. H.	Heald, Mrs M.	1.00
Decker, Mrs J. T.	Higgins, Winfield E.	2.00
Decker, Mrs J. T.	Hudson, Mrs J. T.	1.00

Hughes, Mary Lou.	5	Smith, E. G.	5.00
Hughes, A. S.	1.00	Sorenson, Mrs N.	5.00
Hughes, Wm A.	1.00	Soeters, E. D.	1.00
Jamison, Miss	1.00	Sprague, Mrs Eliza A	5.00
Jasper, Miss	1.00	Teller, Mrs B. N.	1.00
Jenkins, Mrs V. F.	2.00	Tennis, Mary B.	2.50
Jennings, Mrs M.	2.00	Thomas, Mrs J. W.	1.00
Jessop, J. B.	2.00	Thompson, Mrs W. S.	1.50
Johnson, John	50	Thompson, Wm.	3.00
Johnson, Kasinus	1.00	Tice, F. N.	2.00
Johnson, Mrs W.	1.00	Tomkins, Susan R.	5.00
Jones, Mrs Eva B.	1.00	Tubb, Mrs H. J.	2.00
Jones, Miss Phoebe	2.50	Turner, Hettie M.	5.00
Jones, Miss Verna	2.50	Turner, Mrs P.	3.00
Judd, Jas.	2.50	Tyson, H.	2.50
Jackson, C. J.	1.00	Tanner, P. E.	2.00
Jackson, Mrs D. C.	1.00	Tennis, E. J.	1.00
James, Mary D.	1.00	Torrey, Mrs M.	1.00
Keepers, Mrs A. E.	1.00	Towers, Mrs J. A.	1.00
Kenney, M. A.	5.00	Underwood, H.	2.50
Keyes, C. F.	2.00	Vanter, Nettie B.	1.00
Kirk, Rufus	2.00	Vollnagel, M.	2.00
Klein, Jacob	5.00	Wade, Mrs A. C. &	2.00
Klinetob, D. G.	1.00	Miss Minnie Briscoe	2.00
Kolb, Miss Viola L.	50	Walker, Mrs	1.50
Krall, L. W.	2.50	Walker, Wm.	1.00
Krumm, L. W.	1.00	Walsh, Mrs A.	2.00
Kazy, A. W.	2.00	Walraven, Mrs W. L.	1.00
Klahr, E. H.	2.00	Ward, S. M.	2.50
Klock, Mrs C.	1.00	Ward, W.	1.50
Lang, Mrs Geo C.	1.00	Warren, John A.	2.00
Larock, Minnie	89	Watkin, Mrs E. Jane	3.00
Leon, Mrs	2.00	Williams, Miss Gene	5.00
Lemon, Thos.	1.00	Watson, Mrs O.	1.00
Lottimer, A.	1.00	Weed, Mrs	1.50
Lovegrove, Edith	20	Wegant, Rodney	1.00
Lowe, Leonard	50	Wemple, Mrs S. C.	1.00
Lunt, A. F.	5.00	Wenner, Emma	30
Luse, H. K.	5.00	Wenner, Fanny	1.50
Metz, Geo.	1.00	Wenner, Lettie	1.00
McClary, S. A.	1.00	Wenner, Louisa C.	30
McIntosh, Wm.	1.00	White, Rev Keet	2.00
McKenney, Mrs C.	1.00	Williams, Annie	2.50
McKinney, C. C.	1.00	Williams, Cleveland	10
McKinnon, Jennie	1.00	Williams, David	1.00
McLaughlin, Geo T.	5.00	Williams, Irene	10
McLennan, Mrs Margaret	3.00	Williams, Roy	1.00
McLennan, Wm	5.00	Williams, Sam'l	5
Mangham, Miss Mary	50	Winter, Anna C.	5.00
Merrill, Mary J.	1.00	Wither, Mildred	50
Mozar, G.	2.50	Wortman, W. H.	100.00
Myers, Mrs A. M.	10	Wright, C. H.	1.00
Myers, D. C.	1.00	Wright, Mrs R. H.	1.00
Myers, J. W.	2.50	Walter, —	2.50
McAnn, R. L.	2.50	Wandersee Frank	1.00
McAnn, Mrs R. L.	2.50	Watkins, Jas	5.00
McIntosh, Mrs John	15.00	Watson, R. H.	1.00
McKinnie, Mrs	2.50	Whitmarsh, Mrs J. E.	20.00
McKinnie, G.	2.50	Williams, Jake	5
Martin, Mr & Mrs G.	1.00	Williams, M.	5
Miner, C. W.	2.50	Williams, Margaret	5
Mixon, Mrs M.	2.00	Williams, Mary	5
Morris, Mrs Mary	1.00	Williams, Mrs T. P.	50
Nail, Jake	50	Young, W. R.	5.00
Nathan, I.	2.50	Youngers, Mrs P.	2.50
Newhall, J. A.	5.00	Youngers, Pearl	10
Nichols, Mrs H. N.	1.00	Youngers, Peter	2.50
Niles, Mrs Hannah	5.00	Zimmerman, Chas	10
Nikrem, P. A.	1.00	Zimmerman, Chris	10
Nikzang, Chris	1.00	Francis, Pine Ridge	2.50
Olson, Andrew	50	Charley, Pine Ridge	2.50
Orndahl, Mrs J.	1.00	Henry, Pine Ridge	2.50
Otis, Mrs G.	2.50	Azile, In smuch, N.Y.	400
Oellig, Margaret	1.00	Fint, C., N. H.	1.00
Osborne, Mrs D. H.	1.00	C. Belchertown	1.00
Parker, Jas	2.50	R. S. E.	50.00
Parsons, Mrs W.	2.50	W. L. S. Jamison City	10
Patterson, Miss	50	J. S. T. Parsons	50
Peach, Mrs A. R.	7.50	H. S. G. & F. A. W. Rus-	1.00
Peck, F. L.	1.00	seville	1.00
Peck, Mrs F. L.	1.00	L. M. P. Mariaville	1.00
Peck, Florence K.	2.50	E. B. C. Menands	1.00
Peck, Grace B.	4.50	F. D. C. Menands	10.00
Peck, John W.	1.00	M. L. Howells Depot	1.00
Peck, Robert L.	2.50	D. B. W. Lindsey	2.00
Perkins, E. B.	1.00	E. J. H. N. Y. City	3.00
Perrine, M. Julia	1.00	H. R. B. W. B. W. B. W.	3.00
Peterson, Kettle	1.00	M. A. D. McMenerville	5.00
Poe, Mrs M.	5.00	B. M. Leavenworth	5.00
Poellott, Mrs Louisa	3.00	W. M. C. N. Y. City	1.00
Poole, Chas	1.00	L. H. B. & family	1.00
Poole, Mrs Mary M.	1.00	Worthington	1.00
Powell, Mrs A.	1.00	W. H. N. Cleveland	2.00
Poyner, Miss M.	2.50	M. M. Nasonville	50
Price, Mrs Sarah	2.00	M. Tilton, N. H.	1.00
Pearson, M. A.	50	M. C. Fishkill on Hud-	5.00
Perry, Miss Mamie	50	James, Mrs A.	1.00
Pfeifers, J.	2.50	E. S. Bklyn	1.00
Pine, Mrs A.	1.00	E. R. Newark	2.00
Reed, Mrs Ellis	50	E. F. Waltham	2.00
Reed, Master Jay P.	1.00	E. F. W. Phila.	2.00
Reinhold, Eli S.	5.00	M. G. W. O. Phila.	1.00
Reynolds, Mrs Jane S.	1.00	L. E. & H. F. Phila.	5.00
Richardson, Mrs C. S.	2.00	H. D. M. Newark	1.00
Ridgely, Rev Wm	1.00	H. S. Canton	3.00
Rodgers, J. W.	1.00	A. C. Boston	5.00
Rodgers, Jane M.	1.00	W. G. L.	20.00
Roe, Mrs J. G.	2.00	M. F. S. Ashtabula	1.00
Rogers, Austin L.	20.00	M. E. C. Bklyn	1.00
Ross, Edna	2.50	S. S. S. Boston	2.00
Ross, Lester	5.00	E. E. H. N. Y. City	5.00
Rueffer, John	1.00	A. H. & H. E. N. Cold	5.00
Rundell, Mrs A.	1.00	Spring	1.00
Rose, Mrs A. H.	2.00	J. R. M. Grant City	2.00
Rose, Mr & Mrs A. P.	5.00	M. W. C. G. Melmore	1.00
Schmucker, Mrs L. F.	3.00	L. L. R.	1.00
Schull, Mrs E.	1.00	L. L. Pengkeeps	2.00
Scott, Thos H.	2.00	L. H. H. R. H. N. Y. City	1.00
Sharp, Emma C.	5.00	C. K. F. Lower South-	2.00
Shepard, W. H.	2.00	ampton	2.00
Shiner, J. A.	2.00	Mrs. Maine	1.00
Simmons, Mrs W. H.	1.00	F. A. B. In His Name	3.50
Sisler, W. H.	2.50	D. A. C. N. Y.	5.00
Sloan, E.	5.00	J. G. M. N. Y. City	10.00
Smith, Mrs Bradford	5.00	Lettie, Hempstead	1.00
Smith, Mrs Ellen	1.00	Sarah, Massillon	5.00
Smith, Emily	1.00	A. B. P. Peekskill	1.00
Smith, Harry	2.50	J. E. W. & M. W. Ridge-	5.00
Smith, Mrs Jackson	2.50	bury	1.00
Snow, D. W.	1.50	E. E. Wilmington	5.00
Snyder, Mrs A. O.	1.00	M. V. N. Y. City	3.00
Soars, Thos	5.00	M. C. W. D.	50
Sorrick, Iola	1.00	R. S. A. Van Home Phila	1.00
Spencer, Mrs S. E.	1.00	F. L. F. F. F. Jersey Cy	5.00
Springfield, J. H.	2.00	I. E. G. Mich	2.50
Stacey, M. E.	5.00	L. C. S.	2.25
Stanwood, Mrs E. P.	5.00	Friend, Neosho	1.00
Stapleton, Mrs F.	5.00	H. H. H. H. H. H.	1.00
Stead, Alfred	3.00	Phila	1.00
Steele, Mrs Jas A.	1.00	Chappawa Lake	1.50
Stetter, Jas	1.00	Phila	1.00
Stettin, Mrs M. E.	5.00	Row	5.00
Stevens, Mr & Mrs M.	1.50	Chattanooga	5.00
Stevenson, Helen	5	Rushville	2.00
Stevenson, Mrs J.	20	So Lyon.	2.00
Stewart, E.	1.00	Asable Forks	1.00
Stewart, Mrs J. H.	1.00	Wickman	1.00
Stewart, Mrs S. M.	1.00	Wickman	1.00
Stover, Paul.	10	Ladora	1.00
Strong, Mrs. & Mrs Clark	3.00	Viola	2.00
Sutherland, Jas.	1.00	of the poor	2.50
Seabastian, W. W.	1.00	London	2.00
Sabat, Mrs W. W.	1.00	Galem	1.00
Sabat, Geo B.	1.00	Grassburg	1.00
Seymour, Mrs E.	3.00	Aspen	1.00
Shanklin, Mrs O.	5.00	Anora	1.00
Shaw, Mrs Eden D.	1.00	Skaneateles.	1.00
		St Paul	1.00

Continued on page 337.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES
LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.
T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers, nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you have should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

War is Doomed.

I ALMOST invariably ask men who have been traveling in the Holy Land what impression it made upon them, and whether it loosened their faith in the Christian religion, or confirmed them in the faith of the Bible, and the universal response is, "I am confirmed in my faith in the Bible from all my travels and observations." At an awful price of blood and suffering the world is becoming acquainted with religions that for ages seemed little more than a myth, and nations that stood away back in the dim corridors of history, come out on the stage to act a bloody part in this nineteenth century. It seems to me that all those who know how to pray should be more and more earnest in petition for the reign of universal peace. Surely men die fast enough without this organized slaughter. The hearses come soon enough through the cemetery gates and the pestilences cut wide enough swath. Let the sword be scabbarded. God did not put the iron under the mountains for purposes of death, but for the forwarding of human industries. God did not put inventiveness in the human brain that it might fashion some new style of rifle or some further reaching swamp angel, but to contrive new spindles to weave and better architecture to shelter, and swifter modes of intercommunication. All wars are barbaric. They may start about a technicality or national misunderstanding, but before the first battle is over the whole scene rolls back into the Dark Ages, and it becomes wholesale butchery, and war is only murder on a large scale. You cannot kill a man in a Christian way.

Oh, what a world this will be to live in when the chief question with all individuals and governments is how to save life rather than how to destroy it, how to make the world happy instead of how to make it miserable, and all men shall put into practice that sublime principle which Christ announced in his Olivet discourse: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men shall do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." That day will come, and we have a right to cheer each other over the anticipation. God says he will conquer this world by righteousness. Will he do it? Can he do it? He has his own omnipotence and all the armies of heaven to fulfil his prophecies. When God says he will be at a certain place he will be there. When God promises a victory he will achieve it. Whether in this decade the right advance or fall back, will not affect the consummation. Hath he said and shall he not do it? Hath he commanded and will he not bring it to pass?

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

Disbursements for Maintenance and Accommodation of 2217 Children at Mont-Lawn During the Summer of 1895.

HOUSE FURNISHINGS AND FITTINGS.

Clafin & Co., H. B., Furnishings.....	$380 78
De Baun, M. W. & H., Building, &c.....	76 13
Ernst Bros., Plumbing, &c.....	105 59
Euvrard, L. J., Watercooler.....	4 50
Hancox, Rev. M. C., Tent and Fittings.....	148 00
Kelly, P. J., Refrigerator.....	60 00
Macy & Co., R. H., Dishes and Linen.....	136 51
Oppenheimer, E., Houseware.....	19 43
Post, J. M., Carpentry &c.....	141 07
Skelton, J., Rent of Tables.....	22 50
Tallman, F. J. N., Hire of Piano.....	10 00
Estes & Sons, Clothing Chests.....	52 00
International Bedstead Co., Beds and Bedding.....	287 00
Wesol, John F., Glazier.....	11 29
Wilson, W. C., Telephone and Fittings.....	20 90
Miscellaneous.....	105 45

$1581.15

CHILDREN'S CLOTHING AND SUPPLIES.

Harrison & Dalley, Dry Goods.....	$120 29
Little Wonder Store, Supplies.....	20 43
Glynn, I., Children's Shoes.....	191 93
Lloyd, Toys, Fireworks, &c.....	66 95
Townsend Bros., Clothing.....	128 94
Miscellaneous Expenses.....	30 00

558.54

LAUNDRY.

N. Y. & C. S. Laundry, Washing Children's Clothes.....	$115 49
Laundry for Care-takers and House.....	158 28

273.77

MEDICAL.

Dr. Lewi, Medical Examination of over 3100 Children, of whom 2217 passed....	$ 81 00
Amer. Bible Society, Rent of Office and Examination Room.....	100 00
Blauvelt, J. D., Drugs, &c.....	21 28
Maynard, Dr., Medical Attendance.....	6 00
Polhemus, Dr., Medical Attendance.....	12 25

220.53

FOOD SUPPLIES.

Baldwin, E. L., Fish.....	$ 14 68
Boston Beef Co., Meat.....	242 13
Brooklyn Pie Co., Pies.....	51 50
Corwin & Co., Butter and Eggs.....	272 74
Duffie & Wells, Produce.....	120 51
Frazer, Mrs John, Bread.....	404 02
Fulton Market Co., Meat and Groceries.....	122 78
Horton, J. M., Ice Cream.....	15 00
Lydecker Bros., Groceries.....	52 40
Morris & Co., J. E., Groceries.....	680 34
Nyack Ice Co., Ice.....	43 26
Randolph & Sippell, Groceries.....	43 16
Sayres, Milton, Meat and Vegetables.....	54 45
Wood, Geo. F., Milk.....	529 12

2646.09

FREIGHT, TRANSPORTATION, AND STABLE.

Blauvelt's Stables, Livery.....	$ 1 50
Blauvelt, J. H., Blacksmith.....	24 95
Christie, A. E. & J. H., Harness and Repairs.....	112 38
De Ronde, J. D., Veterinary Surgeon.....	6 00
Iserman, A., Shoeing Horses.....	25 50
Matthew's Express Co., Freight and Transportation.....	149 59
Raqua, C. A., Veterinary.....	2 00
Towt, H. & W., Grain & Feed.....	109 34
Van Houten, E. G., Livery.....	197 50
Van Tassel & Kearney, Four Horses.....	143 00
Street Car and Steamboat Fares, 2378 Children and Care-takers.....	709 55

1481.31

SALARIES.

Superintendent of Home.....	$153 50
Care-takers.....	728 98
Cook and Helpers.....	172 50
Hostler and Helpers.....	193 70
Gardener.....	45 00
Maids, Dishwashers, &c.....	261 90
Clerks at New York Reception Office.....	102 00

1557.58

RENT AND STORAGE.*

Nominal Rent of Home.....	$ 4 00
Storage During Winter Months.....	100 00

104.00

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

American News Co., Stationery, &c.....	$ 2 06
Bogardus, Photography.....	2 00
Dutcher Bros., Stationery, &c.....	8 86
Gardiner, H., Locksmith.....	1 39
Gaynor & Co., T., Seed.....	2 75
Harring, T. P., Painter.....	18 20
Hartwick, J. E. & J. C., Sanitary Work.....	58 75
Hughes & Co., Geo., Printing.....	37 92
White & Co., W. H., Coal.....	19 25
Miscellaneous Household, and other Petty Accounts.....	245 45

396.63

Assessment per child for a twelve month period, including food, fuel, laundry, shoes, clothing, medicine, and other expenses, including the spring permanent house furnishings and fittings, $4.26.

*The rent of the house at Mont-Lawn, New York City, the landings and extensive grounds, and the furniture and fixtures, are given at a merely nominal rental, this being the good intention of the donors to the cause.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

J. C. Bartley, Dayton, O. Where are the new or recently founded Jewish agricultural colonies in Palestine located?

We believe there is one near Haifa, and several on the plain of Sharon, near Jaffa.

Student, Paterson, N. J. How many instances are there in Scripture of men living over 900 years?

Seven in all, viz: Methuselah, 969 years; Jared, 962; Noah, 950; Adam, 930; Seth, 911; Canaan, 910; and Enos, 905.

Alice Black, Sturgis, Ky. I find in a sermon names of the thieves who were crucified with Christ. Where are their names to be found in the Bible?

They are not in either the Old or New Testaments, but are found in the writings of early fathers, who are supposed to have taken them from some traditional or legendary source. The names are given as Dismas and Gestas.

H. B. Yacoubi, La Belle, Mo. It was gratifying to the Armenian Relief columns in your good paper, the noblest work of this age. I deeply regret that you are to close this work so soon. When you stop your relief work in your many individuals and societies and churches will cease to contribute to this most needy and worthy cause.

The reasons for discontinuing the Fund are briefly these: the country is now comparatively quiet, massacres have ceased, mild weather is at hand, acute hunger is appeased in large cities, the danger of death from famine is averted, and the missionaries are voluntarily narrowing down their work and sending the villagers to their homes. Besides, the Red Cross is now in the field, and will doubtless be abundantly able, with wide experience and large resources, to care for the most urgent cases of suffering. To multiply relief agencies would breed confusion, and involve needless expenditures. The American missionaries will continue to distribute sums sent to Dr. Creagan, Bible House, New York, for relief purposes.

Inquirer, La Crosse, Kans. How can the statement that God did tempt Abraham (Gen. 22:1) be reconciled with the assertion of James (James 1:13) that God tempts no man?

James refers to allurements to sin. Abraham was not tempted in that sense. He was tried and tested. Temptation is a trial or test because when a man is tempted he is lessened in his strength and weakness, hence the corruption in the meanings of the word. It is obvious, however, that the trial may come in different ways. In Abraham's case he was lured to do something that was against nature, and the question was whether he would do what he did not wish to do at the command of God. James, on the other hand, is speaking of a case in which a man is prone to follow his own inclinations and to commit sin. God tempts no man to commit sin, but he does test our faith in him and love him by trials. Job must have been tempted to take his wife's advice and curse God; but his trials, as we know, were tests of his disinterested allegiance not such temptations as James refers to.

A. R., Winston, N. C. What course ought a person to pursue, who years ago was much troubled about her sins, finally grew indifferent, and that the Holy Spirit has left her, and is convinced that she will be lost?

Prayer seems to be the first duty. Let her pray for enlightenment and for strength to the will of God. She will probably find it difficult that she imagines to lead a sinless life. Her sins, if she is really in earnest, will force upon her the conviction of her need of a Saviour. When she realizes that Christ is really the Saviour she needs and that he is able and willing to save her, she will love him and be anxious to live as he would have her live. He taught us to think of God as a Father. How would she expect a father to act toward his children who were estranged from him and who had assured them that he was ready to forgive them on their expressing contrition? She is probably giving too much thought to the examination of her own feelings. Let her thank God for his offer of salvation, make sure that she accepts it, and ask him to make her his own child. He surely do it. He will be found of all who seek him. When she feels sure that God will save as he has promised (which should not be difficult) let her go out and try to save others in helping them she will be helped herself.

Mrs. F. O. Perkins, Lynnfield, Mass., and others contribute to Armenia after April 15 are sent to Dr. Creagan, American Board, Bible House, New York—Mollie F. Ferry. Your affliction is a one and you have our sympathy.—Mrs. M. Hainsport, O. One-tenth of the residue of the after all necessary expenses have been met.—John Blood, pastor of the Christian Church, Westbury, N. Y., writes that a family member (own church), would like to adopt an orphan boy between four and six years old. Persons interested can communicate with him.—S. H. Stale, Vineland, N. J. It was given as comparative chronology and a sense final. The chronology of the Bible is not a part of the text, but is based on Escher's calculation and is not to be regarded as inspired.—A. L. Middlefield Centre, N. Y. The law on age is uniform in all the States, but we believe the courts of parents or guardians in the case of minors are dispensable. Neglect is punishable by fine at the Court's discretion.—Illinois Subscriber, N. Y. is an excellent author. 2. No. 3. We don't know.—The tribe of Texas Indians referred to in a recent article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are located at the Indian village in Polk county, Tex., and are Crockett, as stated.

means all—all innocent hilarities, all innocent amusements. The grace of God comes in with powerful floods of mercy and new impetus to action, and now instead of fifty faculties, there are a thousand all in play and in full motion. Vastly more of a man since he became a Christian than before he becomes a Christian.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Americans in Olympic Games.

LIKE a chapter of ancient history is the cable report of the Olympic contests which commenced near Athens on April 6. Fifteen centuries have passed since these athletic festivals were in their glory. So important were they then at time was reckoned by them. Their origin is lost in the mists of antiquity, but it is known that in the year 884 B.C., when the king of Israel and three hundred years before the Jews were carried captive to Babylon, these games were being held under royal patronage and were the most prominent topics of the time. They were held every fifth year in the plain shown in the upper illustration on this page. There stood the grave of the heathen god Zeus which made the plain sacred ground. There, also, was the wonderful gold and ivory statue of the god by Phidias, the masterpiece of the great artist. For more than a thousand years the festivals were held and to be crowned victor there, was the highest ambition of the youth of Greece. The olive wreath that rewarded the victor was for excelling in all the departments of leaping, running, javelin-throwing, wrestling and throwing the discus or hoit. The victor was acclaimed throughout Greece; statues were erected to his honor, a distinguished place was reserved for him at all public ceremonies, he was exempted from certain taxes and in Athens board and lodging were provided for him at the expense of the State. The games were abolished by the Emperor Theodosius fifteen hundred years ago. Their revival this year after this enormous interval is a matter of world-wide interest, is due to the action of an international athletic committee which at its meeting in Paris last year determined on an international athletic contest and appropriately selected Olympia as the scene. It was found, however, that the present condition of the ancient site precluded its use for the purpose; but not far away was the stadium at Athens which was accessible, and it proved eminently suitable. A wealthy Greek merchant gave a million drachmas, equivalent to $100,000 to clear the stadium of accumulated rubbish and restore its marble walls. The work was quickly and well done, and there the games were held. Over thirty thousand persons from every part of Europe, from America and Australia, witnessed the contests from the seats, while the surrounding hills were black with crowds who, the stadium being open to the sky, could view the scene from the distance. It is gratifying to our national pride to learn that representatives from the United States, students of Princeton and Harvard, and members of the Boston Athletic Association, were successful in several of the contests, excelling competitors of nationalities. Classic traditions were served throughout as far as possible, and the olive crowns awarded to the victors were made of tendrils cut from the olive grove which furnished material for some fifteen centuries ago. The event has been one of deep interest to classical students everywhere, and it appeals strongly to the Christian who remembers how Paul, in his day observant of the festival then in all its glory, drew from it the lesson of spiritual emulation:

Know ye not that they who run in a race, run all for one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain it. They do it to obtain a corruptible crown: we an incorruptible. 1 Cor. 9: 24.

Automatic Protection.

The large number of deaths which have occurred through people who are unaccustomed to the use of gas, blowing it out, as a candle, instead of turning it off, has suggested to a Connecticut man a device to avoid such calamities. When the gas is turned on and lighted, the aperture through which it comes, is so small that there is only an extremely small flame. But the metal of which the burner is made is very sensitive to the heat, and a few minutes after the gas is lighted it expands in such a way as to enlarge the aperture, more gas passes through and the flame is increased. When the gas is turned out and the burner becomes cold, the aperture again contracts to its original size. If the gas is blown out by some inexperienced person, the same effect is produced; the burner becoming cold, allows so small a quantity of gas to escape, that there is not lever that controlled the steam brakes and pull it wide open. He had determined to take the course which afforded the greatest resistance to the approaching danger. The collision came almost instantly. The on-coming mass, dimly seen in the darkness, proved to be two freight cars, laden with heavy oak timber. They had been standing on a side-track at the head of the hill, and some vibration had started them on the down-grade, at a speed which their momentum increased minute by minute. The engineer might have saved himself by jumping, but it would have been at the risk of his passengers' lives. He stood calmly with his hand on the lever awaiting the shock. When it came, the boiler was crushed in and the brave man was scalded to death by the water and steam, but the passengers' lives were saved by his heroic self-sacrifice. It is sad that a man capable of so noble an act should have perished, but it is apparently a law of the universe that the sacrifice by which good comes, is of the best. Eternal life was won for men by the death of Him of whom it was said:

He saved others; himself he cannot save. Matt. 27: 42.

On Fire in a Car.

A tramp had a narrow escape from a terrible death in Jersey City, N. J., on April 4. He climbed into a freight car which was standing in the yard of the Pennsylvania Railroad, hoping to get a free ride when the car started. He lay still until he heard the official lock the doors and felt the car being switched, as he supposed to its place in the train. It was really, however, only being moved to another yard. He grew tired of waiting and fell confidence of a certain class of customers. Two ladies were at the counter and they had the air of being somewhat inexperienced in the art of purchasing household supplies. In fact, the clerk suspected them of intending to smuggle delicacies secretly into their rooms for a surreptitious feast. They examined a row of cracker-tins and one of the ladies made her selection and said she would take a pound of those. The clerk politely drew their attention to some other tins as being better, but the lady said she wanted those she had selected and no others, adding to her companion in a voice intended to reach the clerk's ear also, that there were some people who would arrange other people's business for them if they were allowed to do so. "But you do not want these for yourself, do you?" the clerk asked. "Because—" "I do not wish any impertinent inquiries," said the lady. "I want a pound of those biscuits. Why do you ask?" The clerk smiled and completed his interrupted sentence: "Because, Madam, those are dog biscuits." The lady was deeply humiliated and showed it by her manner, but she learned that it was not always best to have her own way. There are many who are slow to learn that lesson. Some who plead Christ's promise that God will answer prayer and are inclined to utter reproaches when some temporal blessing for which they have earnestly prayed, is withheld, may yet come to see that they were asking for what would gratify the animal part of their nature, but would be injurious to their souls. There is sometimes no worse calamity that could come to a praying man than that God should deal with him as he did with Israel.

He gave them their own desire. (Ps. 78: 29.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Different Sections of the Presbyterian Church in South Africa have made an arrangement to co-operate through a federal council. It is expected that the Dutch Reformed Synod will shortly enter the union and be represented in the Council.

Statistics of Intemperance in France recently published by The Independent, show that the drinking places in the country, which in 1870 were in the proportion of one to every 113 citizens are now one to every eight and four. In Paris the ratio is one for every sixty persons.

The Bible or Parts of the Bible Available for Evangelistic use have now been published in 381 different languages or dialects. Fifty-two of these have been added during the past five years. It is believed that at the beginning of this century the Bible had not been translated into more than thirty-eight languages.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's Meetings at Rochester, N. Y., have been blessed to the conversion of nearly six hundred souls. At the concluding services in Fitzhugh Hall there were enormous gatherings to hear the Evangelist's final words of counsel and farewell. Ten Methodist Churches united in the work and each church benefits by accessions to its membership.

Mr. Roberts of the North China Mission, has obtained the endorsement of Christian mission work in a high magistrature. Kang-mu, Mongolia, who has informed the Mongolians governed by him that the foreigners have the privilege of preaching the Christian religion in Hara Oso and the natives have a right to believe in it. Hitherto the doors of Mongolia have been practically closed to the preaching of the Gospel.

Interesting Services were Held in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, on April 6, when Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, Pastor Emeritus celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination to the ministry. Dr. Cuyler preached in his old pulpit, where for thirty of the years he had proclaimed the Gospel of salvation. One of his hearers was not only from his old church members, but from ministers and private citizens of all denominations.

The International Order of King's Daughters and Sons celebrated its tenth anniversary on April 9 by two great meetings in the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, New York. Miss Kate Bond presided in the absence of Mrs. Bottomo who is travelling in the Holy Land. Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. David Greer, Dr. W. C. Biting and others made addresses congratulating the Order on its phenomenal growth and the excellent work it is doing in many lands. The Order, it was stated, has in the ten years of its existence attained a membership of over four hundred thousand.

Easter Sunday will be Long Remembered in the Presbyterian Church of Lock Haven, Pa. Forty-three persons were admitted to fellowship, of whom forty were admitted on profession of faith. One of these was seventy-five years old and several others were over fifty. The church has been greatly blessed during the past three years of Dr. J. Elliott Wright's pastorate. The spiritual prosperity has, as is usually the case, been accompanied by financial success, the church having been completely cleared of debt.

Mr. D. L. Moody and his Friends at Northfield, Mass., have arranged an extensive programme for the summer. It comprises the "World's Student Conference," June 29 to July 6, with Bishop Hall, Rev. Drs. Cuyler and Chapman, Profs. White and Stryker, Robert E. Speer as speakers; the "Young Women's College Conference," July 6 to July 12, with President M. E. Gates, Rev. R. A. Torrey, Mrs. Waterbury and other leaders; and the "General Conference of Christian Workers," August 3-15, conducted by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peepole of London, Rev. Drs. A. T. Pierson and H. C. Mabie and other prominent men. Mr. Moody hopes to take part in all.

Ancient Olympia.

THE STADION OF ATHENS, THE SCENE OF THE OLYMPIC GAMES

enough to do a person in the room any serious injury. The accounts so far published of this ingenious device, which may save many lives, do not definitely describe the metal. Whatever it may be, it has in it a principle analogous to one in human nature. Experience proves that the light which shines from a Christian life so operates on the nature through which it manifests itself that it is ever able to give forth more light, and only ceases to have the power when it grows cold through lack of use. The Christian sometimes forgets that his duty is to give light to others.

The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord. Prov. 20: 27.

An Engineer's Heroism.

An act of self-sacrificing heroism is reported by the Times-Democrat of New Orleans, La. Harvey A. Adams, it says, was the engineer in the locomotive cab which drew the north-bound passenger train out of the New Orleans depot on the previous night. By midnight it had reached Mobile, and Adams with his customary punctuality maintained the schedule time. The journey was continued without incident as far as Bowling Station, and the train was climbing the steep up-grade, when the engineer was horrified to see what appeared to be the rear end of a freight train rapidly descending the hill toward him. There was no time to think whether there were any means of averting a collision. The fireman who was with him in the cab, saw Adams spring to the asleep. He did not know how long he slept but when he awoke the car was still motionless and he thought he would smoke to pass away the time. He lighted his pipe, but, soon afterward, he again fell asleep. His pipe fell among some loose straw on the bottom of the car and ignited it. In a few minutes it was burning fiercely and had set fire to the bales of merchandise in the car. The man was almost crazed with terror. The doors, as he knew, were locked and there seemed no chance of escape. Happily for him, however, his cries alarmed the watchman who happened to be passing and he was released. He was badly burned and was taken to the hospital where his injuries received medical attention. Men who receive injuries in railroad cars have usually a ground for demanding compensation from the Company, but this case is an exception. The man has no one to blame but himself for his injuries. Critics who speak reproachfully of the future doom of the wicked often forget that theirs is a like case. They carry with them, as this man carried the fire into the car, the means of their own punishment. Experience has proved repeatedly the truth of the declaration: Let favor be shown to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness. In the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly. (Isa 26: 10.)

A Buyer's Mistake.

A New York daily journal reports an incident which occurred in one of the grocery stores of the city, as a specimen of the self-

Trees that Give Meat and Drink

The "Travelers' Palm," the "Milk Tree," the Banana Plant and their Virtues.

NATURE is a beneficent and generous provider of all that is needful for the sustenance of all living things. At this season of the year, when the plants and grasses are beginning to show their tender shoots, and shrub and tree are almost budding, the brown earth is already sending forth her signals of the plenty to come when, warmed by the sun and moistened by the rains, every separate particle of soil will have its part to perform in the divinely-ordained law of production.

Among the trees, there are several that deserve special pre-eminence for the life-sustaining qualities of their fruit, and the numerous uses to which other parts of the plant may be put. Humboldt, the traveler, mentioned a strange tree he saw in South America, and which he called the "cow-tree," because its whitish juice or sap, of a milkish consistency and taste, was freely used by the natives, as we ourselves use the lacteal fluid. The cow-tree, he described as growing out of rocks, and having dry, leathery leaves, but large spongy roots. After heavy rains, the trunk, when pierced, gave out the milky secretion quite copiously, and it was sweet and nourishing. It was customary for the natives to use this milk freely and to give it to their children.

Another wonderful tree is known as the "Travelers' Palm," and is a native of the island of Madagascar. As shown in the photograph on this page, the branches stand out in fan-shape, while the large leaves almost hide the lower part of the trunk from view. This is a most graceful tree, its symmetrical proportions making it an object of admiration to travelers. On the lower side of the branches, a dew collects in the evening in myriads of drops, and these form little streams that run down the stems to the base of each branch, where there is, in every instance, a peculiar cup-like hollow. Here the dew gathers in a little pool, deliciously cool and limpid, and when a thirsty wayfarer comes along, all that is needed is to press the lower part of the sac or reservoir, and hold a cup or jar to catch the tiny crystal rivulet as it trickles over the edge.

Or a very different and even more beneficent character is the banana tree. It has been computed that, if necessary, the whole population of the earth could be supported on the present annual banana product, as it alone of all the fruits possesses every essential for the sustenance of human life. It is the most valuable fruit the earth produces. In Africa it is a staple food, and so also in some parts of the West Indies. In some latitudes the banana grows to a most formidable size, equal to a small tree, while elsewhere it remains a dwarf plant, producing the finest and most delicate bananas. These small fruits, which are never sent north, are preferred on account of their superior flavor. After blossoming, the fruit forms, and during the next three months it is "filling" to ripeness. The plant's life ends with the bearing of a single bunch of bananas and it is cut down. Our banana import trade has been almost wholly developed in the last ten years, and it promises to become an article of greatly increased consumption. While the banana has thus a great value as a food supplier, it has other uses, for excellent cloth can be made from its fibre, and indelible ink, or vinegar from the juice of its skins. But the coconut palm has even a wider field of utility, for every leaf, branch and fibre are utilized. The nut yields oil, milk, and solid food, the rind is made into spoons, cups, bowls, and tables, the bark into twine, cloth and mats, the buds are eaten and the sap gives sugar, while the leaves are used as sails, sacking, baskets and thatch. Even this record of usefulness is eclipsed by the Chinese bamboo, from which a thousand so much as among farmers' wives and daughters. Many of them go from positions in the city, teachers, typewriters, saleswomen, with a regular salary—a good cook can earn her $14 a month. She may marry a young farmer, and with all her life before her decide to be his helpmeet and money-saver. How they work and struggle to pay off the farm, to get the necessary improvements made. But when the fight is partly over, sometimes the young wife has a feeling of envy on Saturday nights, when her husband pays the "hands" who have worked for him, and has not a dollar for her; for she knows that they have been fed while she has served, and that they have slept while she lost hours of slumber with the precious babe in arms.

The Troubles of Youth.

There are many young people whose happiness or unhappiness seems to depend upon the shifting currents of life—the circumstances of a day, the little favors or slights of others, the multitude of influences that play like alternating lights and shadows about us. If everything goes right, these mercurial young spirits are buoyant and happy; but just as surely as the chance shadow flits over, there is gloom in the heart. No deep, abiding source of joy, no treasured up sunshine of hope and trust—this is what makes the happiness of thousands of young people such an uncertain, unsatisfac-

"Mother's Counsel."

"TAKE with you God's own Word, my boy, Follow its teachings true, Bind fast its precepts to thy heart, They'll guide and comfort, too; And tho' you sail o'er billowy deep Or lofty mountains trace, Be it a lamp unto your feet, A light in every place.

"I know that God will hear my plea, Wherever you may rove, He'll follow with his guardian care Until we meet above. Forget not your old mother, boy, When o'er yon sunny sea, But send her back a cheering word, To her t'will comfort be.

"Perchance, you may return to tread These halls once bright with song, Where childish mirth and playful glee, Echoed the whole day long, And find that mother greets you not, As in the days of yore, Weep not, if she has journey'd, too, And reached the Glorious Shore.

Know that her last prayer was for you, Her far-off darling boy, That she might meet again in heaven Him of her hope and joy. Then, turn to God's own precious Word, And on him cast your care, Your soul illum'd with Heaven's light, Will answer mother's prayer.

Topeka, Kans., 1896. MRS. ANNA M. HIGGIN.

How Children Saved a City.

NOT a pretty fable, like that of the "Pied Piper," but a true story, that of the children who saved Hamburg from destruction, will doubtless be new to many of the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

Hamburg was besieged by Wolff, the merchant, returning slowly to his home one morning. Along with the other merchants of the city, he had been helping to defend the wall and for a whole week he had worn his armor day and night. Now he thought bitterly that all his fighting was useless for on the morrow want would force them to open the gates. As he passed through his garden, he noticed that the cherry trees were covered with ripe fruit, large and juicy. A thought struck him. He knew how much the enemy was suffering from this. What would they not give for the fruit that hung unheeded on the trees of his orchard? Might he not, by means of cherries, secure safety for his city?

Without a moment's delay he put his plan into practice for he knew there was no time to be lost if the city was to be saved. He gathered together three hundred of the children of the city, all dressed in white, and loaded them with fruit from his orchard. The gates were thrown open and they set out on their strange errand.

When the leader of the opposing army saw the gates of the city open, and the band of little white-robed children marching out, many of them nearly hid behind the branches which they carried, but he once thought it was some trick by which the townspeople were trying to deceive him while preparing for an attack on his camp. As the children came nearer he remembered his cruel vow, and was on the point of giving orders that they should be put to death. But when he saw the little ones close at hand, so pale and thin from want of food, he thought of his own children at home, and he could hardly keep back his tears. Then, as his thirsty, wounded soldiers tasted the cool, refreshing fruit which the children had brought them, a cheer went up from the camp, and the general knew he was conquered, not by force of arms, but by the power of kindness and pity. When the children returned, the general sent along with them wagons laden with food for the starving people, and the next day signed a treaty of peace with those whom he had vowed to destroy.

For many years afterwards, as the day came round on which this event took place, it was kept as a holiday and called "The Feast of Cherries." Children in white robes marched through the streets, each one bearing a branch with bunches of the luscious fruit.

"THE TRAVELERS' PALM," MADAGASCAR.

A BANANA TREE IN FULL BEARING.

different articles are manufactured by the ingenious Celestials. Such are some of the trees a kind Providence has placed in those regions to supply wants which in other parts of the globe are supplied through different means.

Little Holland Girls.

They are taught to knit when only four or five years old. They begin with two needles, and their mothers teach them how to make pretty wash-rags, lamp mats, and ever so many useful things. When they have learned to use five needles they make wrist-bands and stockings, and every Dutch girl gets from her mother a wonder-ball for the first piece of work done with five needles. And no wonder the girls call it a wonderball! Candies, trinkets, and many pretty things are hidden in a large ball of wool, which is put in a handsome case set with needles. As the girl knits away one thing after another is brought out from this ball of wool, and when the whole is used up they find in the centre a gold piece or a ring or some fine gift.

A Wife's Purse.

It is a mistake to suppose that because all her wants are provided for, a wife has, therefore, little need of money. Her purse should not be the empty one. She is a partner in the business of life, and should enjoy the privilege to a reasonable and proper extent of handling the emoluments. Nowhere is the lack of pocket money felt more than among farmers' wives and daughters. Many of them go from positions in the city, teachers, typewriters, saleswomen, with a regular salary—a good cook can earn her $14 a month. She may marry a young farmer, and with all her life before her decide to be his helpmeet and money-saver. How they work and struggle to pay off the farm, to get the necessary improvements made. But when the fight is partly over, sometimes the young wife has a feeling of envy on Saturday nights, when her husband pays the "hands" who have worked for him, and has not a dollar for her; for she knows that they have been fed while she has served, and that they have slept while she lost hours of slumber with the precious babe in arms.

Well-bred Listeners.

It is an indication of good breeding not to interrupt a guest, even though one be already familiar with the matter the guest is discussing. The same kindly rule applies to most old people who have their pet stories which they delight to relate. There are dear old gentlemen—and old ladies, too—who have favorite stories which they are rather fond of telling. People in their own families, or among their very intimate acquaintance, hear these stories more than once—indeed, they sometimes hear them till they become very familiar. The really well-bred woman or girl listens to the thrice-told tale, the well-worn anecdote, says a pleasant word, smiles, forgets that she has heard it before, and does not allow the dear narrator to fancy that the story is being brought out too often. Good manners at the table are inflexible on this point. You must give pleasure to others, and make up your mind to receive gratification by imparting it.

“Be of Good Cheer.”

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning May 3.
Jan 16: 22, 23.

WHEN the disciples of Germany's great poet-philosopher asked him what, in his opinion, was the prospect of a life after this, he wrote, "I bid you hope." By a long and painful process of reasoning he had reached thus far. It is a very different note that rings in Christ's utterance: "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." There is in it no conception of the trials of life, no false promise of immunity from sorrow; there is rather the emphatic statement that tribulation is inevitable; but over and through the storm and the darkness, resounds the sweet, encouraging voice, bidding us, no hope, but even now be of good cheer. It is the voice of a leader, of a victorious general, who, from his point of vantage, sees that the foe is demoralized, and that victory is assured. He has overcome, and the news is given as stimulus to the rank and file, still struggling in the smoke of battle and liable to lose heart and courage. Hearing such words, would we relax his energies? would we be a traitor? In the midst of the conflict still rages; against one and another warrior the enemy directs his fierce assaults. Constant vigilance is necessary, constant prayer, continuous effort. It is often difficult to hold exposed positions, sometimes there is retreat and it seems as if the battle would be lost. The leaders stumble and fall, and here and there the enemy gets the advantage, but still that commanding voice rings through the air: "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

There are many who need such encouragement. With ease, the inward struggle is fine and bitter. Old habits, hereditary taints, passionate desires of fleshly appetites clamor for indulgence. They are held back for a time and a ear to be dead. After some season of holy delight, they seem to be eradicated, but in this deadening atmosphere of business and social life, spiritual strength becomes enfeebled and the old struggle is renewed. In one form or another, the conflict is waged with greater or less intensity, according to the physical constitution and often there is failure and lamentation over a fall. But the tendency is ever upward and the failures induce greater vigilance. With others, the conflict is outward. Persecution from enemies, sneers and ridicule in the factory, the workshop or the home, assaults of temptation, pressure of poverty, the weariness of recurring sickness, domestic affliction—these come upon individual Christians and cause distress and worry. Voices from below bid them give up the struggle and swim with the stream. It would be so much easier; it would bring so much joy into life. Money is needed and there are opportunities of making it by the sacrifice of principle. The Christian asks himself whether it is incumbent on him to resist the evil—whether they are not wiser than his generation who being in the world are as the world. To all such, Christ's words come. All this is discipline. The image of the Lord is being hewn out of the marble by the process. By these rough experiences the soul is being prepared for the better service and at last it shall enter the great haven amid the plaudits, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

BE STILL, MY HEART.

"I WILL NOT LEAVE YOU COMFORTLESS"—John 14: 19.

EL. NATHAN.

MISS MARY WHITTLE.

1. Be still, my heart, thy Sav-iour knows full well
2. No love but His can fill the va-cant place,
3. And still He weeps with all His own who weep,
4. O wel-come grief, if Christ is griev-ing too,

The bur-den on thee laid;
And soothe the bit-ter pain:
Our great High-Priest a-bove;
And by my grief brought near;

And to thy side He comes, with love to heal
No pow'r but His can send the need-ed grace,
And through their night of woe He still doth keep
And wel-come pain, if He doth send the blow

The wound His love hath made.
To count thy sor-rows gain:
His si-lent watch of love.
To make Him-self more dear.

Close by the sheep, in paths of dark-ness led,
No hand but His can wipe the fall-ing tear,
He feels each sigh, each throb of ach-ing head,
He'll give me strength His path on earth to tread,

He wakes, the Shepherd true;
For He on earth hath wept;
And whis-pers soft and low,
And all my work to do;

"I will not leave you com-fort-less," He said,
No voice but His can at the grave give cheer,
"I will not leave you com-fort-less and sad,"
"I will not leave you com-fort-less," He said,

"I will come un-to you."
For there He once hath slept.
"I will come un-to you."
"I will come un-to you."

Copyright, 1894, by Miss Mary Whittle.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2.
By Permission of the Publishers

The Lord's Day.

WELCOME, sweet day, of days the best,
The time of holy joy and rest,
When to God's house the saints repair
To hear his Word and see his face,
To learn his will and sing his grace,
And vent their hearts in praise and prayer.

This is employment all divine;
My soul, the blest assembly join,
And from the world this day retire:
Go, bow before thy Maker's throne,
Thy risen Saviour's glories own,
And feed thy love, and fan the fire.

Forget the trifles here below,
The shining heap, the gaudy show,

All sensual mirth, and worldly cares;
On wings of strong devotion rise,
Pass every cloud, pass all the skies,
And leave beneath thy feet the stars.

To God direct thy steady flight,
Great fund of bliss, and source of light;
There fix, and there delight thine eyes:
View every shining wonder o'er,
And with transported heart adore,
And feast on fruits of Paradise.

This day was by our Lord ordained,
That thus his servants might be trained
For heavenly work, and heavenly joy;
My soul, be this thy day of rest,
And thus prepare thee to be blest,
Thus all thy holy hours employ!

Saints in Judgment.

Rewards According to Meritorious Service to be Appointed at the Judgment.
BY NATHANIEL STARKEY.

(Continued from page 314.)

IN the judgment we are considering, there is no question of personal salvation. Personally accepted in Christ are all here found, and as members of the household of faith long since passed from death to life, they shall not personally come into condemnation. "Being now justified by his blood they are saved from wrath through him." Concerning their old sins before conversion, and their failures and shortcomings that have since been repented of and confessed, he has said, "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgression, and as a cloud thy sins;" but the question here is one of works, and bad works and bad workmen must here and now be judged, and the wood and stubble building, of which it may be the builders have been unaware themselves, must then to their surprise and consternation be consumed. All who have been building, without God, daubing with untempered mortar, must discover the true nature of their work, which before they would not believe, although the more discerning of their brethren have seen it, and it may be earned their censure for reproving it; but as bad workmen, their bad works must be judged, and condemned, and consumed.

That shame in some sort, and after some manner, will be the experience of some we gather from Luke 21: 36; 1. John 2: 28 and 4: 17. That full reward, partial reward, reward gained respectively, but lost eventually, are among the possibilities of that day we learn from 11. John. What will it be for another man to take our crown (see Rev. 3: 11), we wonder with great amazement; but there it is in the book, and its warning should not go unheeded. For now it must be shown how brother has wronged brother; how it has been that in commercial life Christian men have found their fellow Christians the most difficult to deal with, being the hardest, most covetous, most grasping of any, often descending to mean and paltry ways, such as up-right and honorable worldlings scorn. Our conviction is deep and of long standing, that if some Christian men, could see how, in their dealings with the world and their fellow Christians, their Master—with his eye upon them, looking them through and through—is "crucified afresh, and put to open shame," they would be horror-stricken at their ways. How it has been that believers have formed self-indulgent habits and appetites, allowing such to grow upon them by slow degrees, till the conscience becoming habituated to wrong has ceased to witness against it.

We ask again, How is it to be with such at the judgment-seat of Christ? Does the Scripture throw any light upon the question? It is easy enough to conclude that Matt. 10: 33, has nothing to say to believers, because Christ cannot deny one his blood-bought ones, but we observe that our Lord is at the time speaking expressly to his disciples, to those who are of more value to him than many sparrows. Nor do we apprehend it to be denial involving final dismissal from his presence, such as the words, "I never knew you, depart from me," indicate; but a denial of them as overcomers worthy of reward, a kingdom, and a crown. This we think it will be.

To be Concluded.

IN HIS HANDS

A NEW SERIAL STORY,

WRITTEN EXPRESSLY
BY THE
REV. EDWARD AUGUSTUS RAND

Copyright, 1896.
CHAPTER XVI.
Down at the Front.

COLD, dreary rain was sweeping down as a woman stood in the door of a Virginia house used as a hospital. Somebody had said, "Here comes a regiment just from the North. Look out of the window!" But the woman had gone to the door. "From the North" was equivalent to the magnetic phrase, "from home." Besides, a heavy battle was hourly expected. Indeed, skirmishing had begun. This woman, a nurse, had come from Washington to assist in the sad, serious work of caring for the wounded, a work which had already been inaugurated, as the rooms of the house, converted into hospital wards, would have shown. There was not only a desire to see any regiment which might have come from far away Northern homes, but the nurse had a natural curiosity to see who were coming to join in the fight. Then the responsible work within those close wards had wearied her, and she was glad of any opportunity to go to the door and breathe air that was fresh and cool, though it might be laden with damp.

"Ah," she said, "here they come!" Drawing her handkerchief from her pocket, she began to wave its white folds.

"What regiment is that?" she asked. "What state?" An old soldier loitering at the door, said, "Dunno, marm!"

"Oh, it is my state!" she responded, eagerly. "I wonder if—"

She stopped. She had so much work to occupy her eyes that she could give little time to speech.

There they were, sturdy, stalwart men come from farm and fishing-boat to the strange work of drill and fighting. Three years before that day, if any one gifted with fore-knowledge had told them that they would in so short a time be wearing uniform and marching into battle, they would not have believed it. But patriotic enthusiasm is contagious, and these men had caught the fever of it as thousands like them in the South as well as North had caught it. The word, duty, had sounded in their ears like a trumpet call, and the same word had caused the men in one section to don the gray, as it caused those of the other section to don the blue. The same word had brought Janet down into the hospital ward, too, and had made her strong for service. She had seen so many sad sights and strange faces in this unfamiliar land that the boys from her own State seemed like brothers to her as they marched past.

The regiment was, as said, a new arrival. Its ranks were full. Its men were healthy and strong. Their uniform was fresh. Their banner was bright and stainless. It was a splendid sight to see them march. There was a corner which they turned next the house, and as the long, full ranks swept round that corner, how straight, exact, strong and confident was that line. The woman noticed it.

"How finely they march!" she exclaimed. "That regiment goes like a machine."

Yes, like a machine. It did not seem to be a machine, but a thousand eyes, but there was just one motive power at work, throwing out the two thousand legs together, and holding at just such an angle the thousand muskets.

"Eh!" exclaimed the old soldier. "They won't look as fresh and purty, and march in that order, six months from this time."

"No, nor in a month," said the woman. "And there won't be as many of them—oh, dear! Not so many in two days! Oh, it's sad! But I wonder—"

She was looking again intently, and speech ceased.

"Oh, there they are, I do believe! See! See!" she cried in a moment, her handkerchief fluttering eagerly.

"I don't see nothin'," muttered the veteran, who was jealous of the fresh recruits. The woman did not hear him, but cried eagerly, "Yes, there they are! Hur-rah!"

Then she dropped her hands and shouted again, "Hur-rah! Bravo, Sandy! Bravo, Ned!"

And two soldiers of a company now passing saw the welcome and laughed, and proudly tossed their heads back in recognition of this old friend's welcome to Virginia.

"Ha-ha, Sandy! There she is! See Jenet!" said Ned Davis.

"I see her," said Sandy. "Don't she look handsome?"

Ned made no reply, but his brown eyes flashed toward Janet an admiring recognition.

The woman went back to her weary work by the couches of the sick and wounded. Ned, who had followed Janet to the war, and Sandy, who could not stay at home without Ned, soon disappeared with the regiment. They were going into camp just outside this Virginia village, and there was not much of the daylight left for camp duties.

How grateful was the order to halt. Those ranks so solid and complete one moment, were all loose and dissolving the next, the men scattering in every direction. It was rapidly darkening, and tents must be pitched and supper must be dispatched. The pitching of the tent? Between them, Sandy and Ned carried along a shelter tent. It consisted of two pieces of duck cloth, between five and six feet long, and in width each half shelter was between four and five feet. On three sides of each piece were buttons and button-holes. There were holes for stake-loops at the corners. The two soldiers made a frame for the tent in a very short time.

"Fix bayonets, Ned," cried Sandy.

"All right, Cap'n," shouted Ned.

"Now jab," said Sandy.

"Jab" it was at once. The earth was bayoneted in two places as far apart as the length of a half shelter. Between the trigger-guards of the muskets was stretched a guy-rope. Here was the frame-work of a tent. It was clothed at once.

"There, Cap'n," said Ned, "she's pitched!"

"Now for supper, Ned."

There were trees near by which could have furnished for the tent a framework of saplings if desired. What the grove did provide was fuel for a camp-fire.

"Time for fried hard-tack, Cap'n?" asked Ned.

"We will try for it, Ned."

Oh, how appetizing to a hungry soldier was a supper of biscuit fried in plenty of sizzling pork-fat! The "Cap'n" finally decided there was not time for it. But coffee! What veteran, one who had learned to make coffee "in a jiffy," ever went without his coffee in a halt of any decent length?

"I'll get some water, Cap'n," said Ned. "The boys say there's a spring down in that field beyond the trees."

Ned hurried off, a canteen in each hand. Sandy remained to coax the fire along.

"Where's Ned," the fireman asked when his companion failed seasonably to return. "Fire's in good condition, and if we had that water, we might have coffee quick."

Through the shadows Sandy looked anxiously, expecting every minute to see Ned's swinging gait as he came within the circle of the light of the camp-fire. A half hour passed. Other soldiers had visited the spring and returned. Ned and the two canteens were still absent.

"Don't see where that boy is," mused Sandy. "Oh, there he is!"

Yes, Sandy caught the sound of brush crackling under a quick, energetic tread over in the grove. Then Ned appeared, rushing forward with his two dripping canteens.

"Bout gin you up, Ned," remarked Sandy. "You been digging a well?"

Ned was too intent on something else to regard this question. He had one for Sandy's consideration.

"Say, who'd you think I saw out there? Mos' took my breath away."

"I don't know. Here, I'll put that coffee through while you tell me."

"Well, I'll tell ye. I'll go back to the fust of on't. It is sure as Bible. I cleared them trees and got out into an open field. They all told me the spring was down that way. I was a-rushin' along, when 'Kereful!' called out somebody down in the grass. It was one of the picket-line lyin' in the grass."

"What's the matter?" sez I, and at the same time I sez to myself, 'your voice sounds dreadful nat'ral.' He spoke agin: 'Well, there's no big lot of Southerners down there, but some gorillars, I guess, for one of our men was fired on this afternoon.' I knew from that twasn't one of our camp'n'y, but the voice did sound so nat'ral. I went down to the spring, filled my canteens, and wasn't fired on by no goriller neither."

"When I came back agin, there was the picket a-lyin' in the grass. He sez to me, 'Find that spring?' 'Of course I did. I allers 'tend to git what I go for,' sez I. 'Lucky,' sez he. 'Then says I, 'Seems to me your voice sounds nat'ral.' 'Sez he, 'I should think you was Ned Davis.' 'Zounds,' sez I, 'who be you?' 'You come this way and see.' Yes, he sez, 'I should say 'twas Ned Davis, that he had been to the store to get a quart of 'lasses for P'leen, and was a-goin' home with it.' 'You're gittin' wuss and wuss,' sez I. 'Wall,' sez he, 'Come this way and see who it is.' 'Sandy, I jest ran up to that 'ere picket, scooped down, and who do you think it was?' Sandy looked up from the odorous coffee he was making.

"Give it up, Ned."

"Tobias Newhall!"

"You don't say!"

"I do say it. He axed about you, wanted to know when you came, and where we were ordered; if we were a-goin' to pitch in here."

"I was a-wonderin' where that chap went when he left home. You know he and his brother were prosecuted for their rum business, and he left kind of sudden. Folks said then he was scat of a second prosecution, went to sellin' agin, or his brother did, and they were both mixed up in the business. So you know Tobias cleared out. His friends said he wanted to see the flag through, and all that—and for some time he had been gittin' to see it was his duty to go to the war, and so forth. I didn't know he had really gone. What regiment?"

"From New York, he says. 'Yes, he told me, I felt I ought to be a-join' suthin' for my country.'"

"His country would have done suthin' for him and clapped him in jail for sellin' liquor a second time, if he had been convicted."

"Wall, there he is, on tother side of them trees, stretched out in the grass, a-watchin' for the enemy a-lyin' there, sassy as you please."

"I must go and make him a visit before roll-time, Ned. We'll have supper first."

The two cronies crouched beside the little camp fire and smacked their lips over their coffee and contentedly broke and ate their hard tack.

"You may wash dishes, Ned, and I'll jest hunt up that Tobias. On the other side of them trees."

"Yes, go till ye strike a picket-line in the grass."

"Dish-washing that night could not possibly have been a heavy duty even if Ned had attended to it. As it was, he set at one side the soldiers' scanty stock of tinware, and then stretched out beside the camp fire. "Too much fuss to wash dishes! Roll-call at half-past eight," murmured Ned, "and Sandy must be back then."

Sandy returned as the bugle at half after eight musically sounded "attention." The roll was called, and then came the half hour before "taps," the interim that a dier gives to the last duties of the day, and finally to the hushing of his tongue at the blowing out of his candle at "tap." A very small piece of candle did Sandy and Ned have that night, but while it burned, they arranged their haversacks for pillows, spread out a rubber blanket a protection between them and the damp ground, unrolled the old army blanket they carried by day, as an envelope for the body by night, and also did some very interesting talking.

"What made you gone so long?" asked Ned.

"Oh, there! I was goin' to tell you I hunted up Tobias Newhall—"

"What did he say?"

"Oh, I didn't stay there long. He had a lot to say about servin' his country; so on, but I knew what was under it. Then he sez there was a New York regiment next to ours, and he was quite sure he saw in it an offsur that he used to at home. 'An offsur,' sez I. 'Somebody that used to visit there, yes, an offsur, I can't think of his name,' sez he. 'Was an offsur then, of course.' 'Wall,' sez 'what's his name?' He gin it to me—"

"What was it?" asked Ned.

"I'll come to that part, Ned. So I started off, and if I didn't stumble on him ab the fust thing! Sez I, 'You know a Le nant Melrose?' 'What?' sez he."

"Melrose, Sandy?" interrupted Ned.

"I'll come to it, Ned. You hold on. was standin' by a camp fire when I spoke to him. 'That's my name,' sez he. 'I you used to visit up north a family by name of Morton?' He had been stand with his back to the fire, but he turned a-sudden from it as if he had been scot ed. 'I—did,' he sez, 'know one family that name—'

"You don't mean to say he is he Sandy!"

"Hold on, Ned! 'You remember a fish man you used to go off with—' sez I. broke in and sez, 'You don't mean Sand I sez, 'That's the one, and I'm the Sand Then you ought to have seen him gi my hand and shake it.'"

"Sandy," said Ned, "you mean to s that Winthrop Melrose—"

"That's the name."

"He—he round? I thought he was Southerner."

"He ain't now. He's an offsur in ti regiment next to us."

"You don't say!"

"I had a long talk with him. I thoug he wanted to ask me about Jenet."

"Say, Sandy?" Ned spoke vehement "You 'spose he cares 'bout that g Sandy?"

"I don't know; don't make nery diff ence to me."

But it did to Sandy's companion, something else affected him. He went in an abstracted state of mind. He did seem to hear or see what was transpiri about him. At nine o'clock, the bug sounded clear and echoing.

It was followed by a few taps on a dru With "taps," came silence, came the tinguishing of each bit of candle in the little shelter tents. Silence? Not an a solute stillness. The drowsy Sandy w half conscious that several times Ned call out to him, "Say, Sandy, you 'spos cares anything 'bout that gal?"

"Dunno," murmured Sandy, "bo that gal."

"Sandy, does he know she's here? I you tell him?"

"N—no!" groaned Sandy.

Finally, even Ned was immersed in pi found slumber. The stars kept wat above, and the little camp-fires sputter below. In the camp, the half-asleep se try mechanically paced his rounds, wh outside, the lonely picket listened al looked, listened for the stealthy sound an enemy, looked for the sudden flash some hostile musket.

Janet, in the little hospital, was relie ed, and had an opportunity for rest. Ho much would she have slept though, if s had known that not far away was o Winthrop Melrose, an officer in the Unit States Army, once Janet's friend, lover, t trothed? It would not have affected h mind any more soothingly had she know that near-by was Tobias Newhall, and ha known also that he was connected throug Judson Skeele with matters of exceedi interest to Janet. The same small space quiet sky may cover so much that is turb lent and tragic.

(To be Continued.)

SATAN'S SERVICE.

CHILD once asked in his innocence, "Why does not God kill the devil?" And the simple query of the child suggests a problem that might well exercise the brain of a philosopher. Yes, "Why does he not kill the devil," and so end all temptations and trials? We shall see that question answered for us one day, but, in the meantime, what if, instead of killing him, God should be using him? Will it not be the masterpiece of the divine workman's skill, if the very malignant hostilities of hell are found in heaven to contribute to the sublime purposes of heaven; and if Satan himself may be proved to have helped, all unawares, to create that which he has been making hell and earth to destroy?

How do we judge of Satan's action as depicted in the Book of Job? If Job were a completer, and a more perfect character than his trial than he was before, by whom was that perfecting brought about? Was it only brought about by the vision of God and the voice from the whirlwind? Would it have been brought about by the, but for the antecedent trial and temptation? Job came out of that dread ordeal, as one who had learned to trust God in the dark—"Though he slay me, will I trust in him." He came forth alone whom Satan had in vain endeavored to induce to curse God to his face, or even when his face was hid. And, therefore, the very spite of the foe contributed to his own defeat and to the perfecting of the patience of his victim.

Believe that even now we may thus scour our great foe outwitted by the wisdom of divine love, and learn to believe that, when he comes in like a flood, he only gives us an opportunity of claiming it of God, that he shall lift up a standard against him. Thus his attack carries with it the possibility of our gaining whatever acquisition comes by victory, and his very persecution of us may help to make us men. Thus, indeed, "Out of the eater shall come forth meat, and out of the strong shall come forth sweetness."

And I believe still more firmly that in the last great day of revelation, when the chain shall be drawn and we shall see things as they really are, and understand them as they have been, we shall find that the powers of darkness, in their endeavor to spoil and mar that which God has made so fair, have only supplied a necessary element in its moral beauty. The implacable foe of God and man dared even to attempt to mar that ideal beauty which, displayed on earth, challenged and obtained admiration of heaven. He made the attempt, but it only recoiled upon himself, and, while the assault failed, he whom he assailed became perfected through suffering. The Church is to be perfected after the same manner as her Lord, and if only she, in each of her members, meets temptation as her Lord met his, she too shall be perfected through suffering, and the very machinations of the foe shall render her the liker to her Lord, shall help to stamp his image more indelibly upon her countenance, giving her to know the fellowship of his sufferings, as well as the power of his resurrection. And if this should, in the end, prove to have been the life of life's conflict, surely this proverb will take its place amidst the memories of heaven, "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness."

The Spirit still comes mightily on those whom the spirit of evil assails; if, indeed, they are led of the Spirit as they travel along the highway of life. At the moment when the conflict is raging there may seem a promise of advantage in the terrible strife; the traveler so rudely assailed has nothing for it but a mortal conflict with his pitiless foe. But when the victory is won by a mightier power than his own; when, walking in the spirit, he has been kept safe from fulfilling the lusts of the flesh, memory wanders back to cull the sacred lessons of the fight; he turns aside to gaze upon the carcass of the lion, and then, lo, the honey! He sees it all now. He has been a gainer by that very strife that seemed to threaten him with the loss of all; he is a happier as well as a stronger and a wiser man for his trial. The conflict is over, but the honey is left, "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness!"

From Temptation and Trial, fourteen sermons on the battle and the work of life by Rev. W. Hay M. Allen, M.A., the distinguished mission preacher recently holding noon services at Trinity Church, New York. Pp. 304; price $1.25; published by Thos. Baker, Bible House, New York.

The Character of Enoch.

INTO less than a dozen verses is condensed the whole biography of Enoch, yet no Old Testament character is more impressive. The few strokes which portray his life are laid on by a Master hand, so that the picture stands out vivid and distinct. The "seventh from Adam," the son of Jared, the father of Methuselah, he lived a complete "year of years," was contemporary with portions of the lives of all the patriarchs from Adam to Lamech, the father of Noah, thus linking the commencement of the race with its second beginning. A progenitor of Christ, he was permitted to look far down the centuries and foresee the victorious coming of our Lord with ten thousand of his saints, and then shared in the honor which awaits the saints in Christ's appearing, by being translated that he should not see death.

While our knowledge of his outer career is very meagre, we have something of far more value, a description of his heart life. Although he lived in an age when were already at work the violence, lust and impiety which afterwards made the flood necessary, we read that "Enoch walked with God three hundred years." So fully did this expression characterize him, that it is repeated, "and Enoch walked with God and he was not, for God took him." So intimate was his communion, that one day, while walking with the Divine Friend, he did not return to his earthly abode, but went all the way to the heavenly home, to abide, not for a year of years, but for eternity.

Is this merely an idyl of the olden days? Is this the experience of one, out of our sphere, who has reached heights inaccessible to us, or is there in this brief life-story the portrayal of that which is possible to every one of the Father's children, who will meet the necessary requirements? If this were the record of one who, by his own unaided strength, was a spiritual giant, it would profit us nothing, but only waken discontent. Has then God hung out this signal light, at the very beginning of the world's history, to mock our desires and disappoint our hopes?

At times when we have grown weary stumbling along our self-chosen pathway; when the companionship of the busy, pushing, restless world has left the heart aching and dissatisfied; when the inmost soul has been lacerated by the desertion of trusted friends, the overthrow of cherished plans, the sight of newly made graves, the remembrance of some slip into sin, which brought reproach to Christ's cause and bitter mortification to ourselves, there comes a longing for an abiding sense of the presence of him, who, like a Father, pitieth his children. While the soul is yearning for the peace, the holiness, the power which would result from keeping step with our Divine Lord, there is borne to our ears like a sweet memory chime from the by-gone centuries: "Enoch walked with God," until we cry out, "Oh, that my name were linked with his!"

As we read the biographies of Rutherford, McCheyne, Payson, and a score of the saints, "who sainted not themselves," we cannot believe that the possibility of this fellowship with God is confined to the past, for no better description of their lives can be given than the simple phrase, "they walked with God." Our "God is no respecter of persons," he has not granted to one of his children the favor of his presence, which he is not equally willing to bestow on all. In that wonderful galaxy of worthies which the writer of the Hebrews brings before us, he urges us to follow in their steps, and shows that it was not the natural goodness and greatness of Enoch, and Abraham, and Moses which enabled them to traverse the heavenly road, but all their worthiness lay in that faith which joined them to God. They were men like ourselves, but they permitted God to work mightily in them.

*From Walking with God, by Samuel Bond Randall, a volume that will prove spiritually helpful to readers generally; pp. 121, cloth covers, price 60 cents. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

Eskimo Superstitions.*

NOT many heathen Eskimo remain in Labrador, yet between Ungava and Cape Chidley some are still to be found. They recognize a god (Tongarsuk), a good spirit, and lesser spirits (Tongaks), whom he sends to tell the priests (angekoks) how to heal diseases, and how to tell the weather. The Devil is a vague kind of female spirit, apparently unnamed. These angekoks are really delphic oracles, who make supposititious journeys to the bowels of the earth to consult Tongarsuk. The journey must be in winter, in the dark at night time, and the angekok remains alone in his hut with his head tied between his legs, and his arms behind his back, while his soul is off to heaven or hell. To become an angekok poglit, i. e., fat priest or chief priest, his wandering spirit must be dragged by one toe to the sea by a white bear, and there swallowed by a sea lion and the same white bear. Then it must be spued up and return to his body, which is shut up in a dark house. A drum and other noises are kept up during the ceremony.

They have a vague tradition of a flood, saying that the world upset once, and all but one man were drowned. They prove this by the facts of shells being found high above the sea, and even the remains of a whale on a high mountain. They believe in a future life and a happier one than this, where there is perpetual summer, and they locate it at the bottom of the sea, whence they get their richest possessions, or in the bowels of the earth. Reindeer are there quite common, and their beloved seals are ever ready, swimming in a large boiling kettle.

Nansen tells us that they thought that all inanimate objects had spirits, and that is the reason that they buried with the warrior his boat and weapons, and often figures like dolls, possibly to represent his wives. I found several of these old graves, and two I examined. One, evidently very ancient, was perched on a high central promontory, overlooking the entrances to two bays; perhaps in order that as the harp seals or wild birds passed, the warrior might, even in death, look down upon those who of yore so oft paid tribute to his skill. The body in every grave is simply laid on the surface on its back, in its clothes—in one grave a female skeleton lay alongside a male one. Over it is built a rude structure roofed with large flat stones, so that the view should be unobstructed.

The early Moravian missionaries found it very difficult to convey to the Eskimo the Bible teachings of our Saviour's love and of God as our Father. They had no word for love; neither sheep nor lambs, seed-time nor harvest, silver nor gold were familiar to them, and all the oriental similes of the sacred book were unintelligible. Yet the missionaries' Christ-like lives during one hundred and thirty-three years have accomplished what their words could not express.

*From Vikings of To-day, or Life and Medical Work among the Fishermen of Labrador. By Wilfred T. Grenfell, illustrated, cloth, pp. 240, price $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

Spring

Medicine is only another term for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Its unequalled sales show that the people recognize it as the one true blood purifier. Its grand effects as a Spring Medicine give renewed vigor, new hope, high ambitions, mental strength, steady nerves, good appetite, prevent the "blues," drive away that tired feeling. It "bridges over" a dangerous period of the year, prevents illness, and is nature's true helper and friend. Be sure to get

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Prepared only by C.I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Largest United States Government Food Report. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

Do You Suffer

It is simply astonishing how many people have heart disease and don't know it. Its symptoms are very often mistaken for asthma or some bronchial trouble. If you suffer send for Dr. Franklin Miles' book, entitled,

"New and Startling Facts."

It is FREE by Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., or get it from your druggist. It describes the symptoms fully. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold by all druggists on guarantee first bottle benefits or money refunded.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure

.....Restores Health.....

2 Minutes for Refreshments

THE Handy Tablet requires neither sugar nor spoon to make healthful and refreshing drinks the moment it touches water. By mail, 30 cents.

The HANDY TABLET CO., 1021c S. Front St., Philadelphia, Pa.

ed. postpaid. Address: Rochester, N. Y. 10. 65 Cortland St., New York.

No Boiling

No Bother—No Time Lost.

WHITMAN'S Instantaneous CHOCOLATE is prepared in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Of surpassing quality, purity and flavor. Your dealer has it in 1 pound and 6 pound tins. Stephen F. Whitman & Son, Philadelphia.

GIVEN TO EVERY LADY A New Book on Fancy Work containing 50 handsome illustrations. Among them are: Cushion Pillows, Table Covers, Scarfs, Tray Cloths, Doilies, Celluloid Work, Tapestry Painting and Embroidery, and another book giving directions how to make all kinds of Rugs and Mats, 65 in all. These two books will mail you free if you will send 10c for a 3 months trial subscription to The Home a 24 page paper containing stories, fashions and fancy work illustrated. Send to The Home, 141 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

Stamped Steel Ceilings Decorative, Durable and Best For Church Ceilings of any shape, old or new. Send for Catalogue B. H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry St., New York

REX BRAND Extract of BEEF FLAVOR Sample, 4 cents. Book free. OUDAHY - SO. OMAHA

Requests for Prayer.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on April 12, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Sons and Daughters. J. L., Berne, Ind., that several children now out of Christ might be saved. — "Bereaved Widow."

that her children who are unsaved and estranged from each other, might be brought together in Christ and loving him come to love each other. — "Anon," St. Louis, Mo., that a son who has been wandering away from home for years might be converted and may yet live to atone for the past and relieve his family of the burdens his misconduct has entailed upon them. — "Anxious Mother," Barton, Vt., that her eldest son might give his heart to God and may have strength to resist temptation. — Humbly, Andover, Mass., that a dear son now in the West might be brought to true repentance and may have assurance of salvation and that he might be led to work for Christ. — J. P. E., Chandler's Valley, Pa., for the conversion of children not yet saved. — "Mother," Tallahassee, Fla., that an only son and his wife who are sorrowing over the death of a precious babe might, in their sorrow seek Christ and be converted to him. — J. W. H., Marblehead, Mass., that an only son might renounce the intoxicating cup and turn to God for strength to resist the temptation and might become a true Christian. — Mother, Greenville, S. C., who is nearly heart-broken over the misconduct of her son and his drinking habits and his general evil life, begs earnestly for prayer that God would reclaim him and make him his own child. — I. G., Wartrace, Tenn., that her son and daughter-in-law who are given up to the frivolities of the world might be aroused to seek Christ and his kingdom. — "Father," Brooklyn, N. Y., that his son who seems to have an incurable propensity for vicious ways and a love for the society of evil men and women, who is destitute of all sense of honor and truth, might be reclaimed. God alone has the power to change his nature and the need for it is terribly urgent. Prayer is earnestly sought on his behalf. — Subscriber, Delhi Mills, Mich., that a dear son who is very sick might give his heart to God and might live to serve him. — A. C. W., Middleton, Oreg., that a family of seven sons and daughters, the father of whom is an infidel might be brought by Christ's irresistible power to seek salvation and might become true children of God. — "Believer in Prayer," Seville, O., that three unconverted sons and a daughter might be brought to Christ and receive new hearts and devote themselves to the Lord's service. — H. R. W., Adams, N. Y., that a daughter and her husband, both the children of many prayers, might seek the Lord and give themselves unreservedly to him. — "Anxious Mother," Conway, Ark., that her wandering sons might be found of the Lord and that the many prayers offered through long years might at last be answered in their conversion. — "Anxious Wife and Mother" in North Carolina, for her four children that they might give their hearts to God and that two of them who have made a profession of religion might have the Holy Spirit's power to enable them to lead consistent lives.

For the Conversion of other Relatives. "Believer in Prayer," Sacramento, Cal., that four unconverted brothers might be brought to Christ; also that a sister now in sore affliction might be led by it to seek the consolation afforded by Christ's love. — "Anxious Mother," Brooklyn, N. Y., that her husband who was brought up to attend church and Sunday School, but who has gone astray and has deserted her might be won to Christ and brought to see and do his duty to his family. — C. L. Lane, Ore., that two brothers and a sister might be converted. — A. E. L., Pawnee, Neb., that her dear husband may be led to Christ and become a true son of God. — "Believer in Prayer," Vermont, for the salvation of her husband and that he may overcome his intemperate habits and have grace to resist temptation. — "Reader," Mass., that two brothers might be saved. — "Weary One," Staunton, Va., that an idle brother who has fine talents might give up his present ways and seek the Lord and lead a Christian life. — A. D. M., West Buxton, Me., for the conversion of several nephews and nieces. — Two Sisters, Dellaplaine, N. C., that a brother who is a drunkard might be led to forsake the intoxicating cup, and might seek the Lord with all his heart. — "Anxious Wife and Mother," N. C., that her husband might give up drinking and turn to God. — H. F. M., Seville, O., that her husband, once a member of a church, might return to the Lord, seeking forgiveness for his backsliding and find grace and pardon and restoration to the Lord's favor. — Mother, Delhi, Mich., for four members of a family who are so far from God that they have almost lost their religion.

For the Conversion of Friends. I. G., Wartrace, Tenn., that God's grace may reach a dear afflicted soul who is now nearly eighty years old. — P. M. A., Delaware, O., that a very near and dear friend might be brought into Christ's marvelous light. — Friend, Lyons, Pa., that a friend and brother might turn to the Lord now and find peace and rest in Christ. — "Reader," Himrods, N. Y., for the conversion of two dear friends. — "Reader," Smith Centre, Kan., that a member of a church who finds pleasure in worldly amusements and spends his time in worldly society, may see his inconsistency, and seek the Lord and the holiness which he requires. — S. L. N., N. H., that a young man leading a careless life may have grace to forsake sin and sinful companions and be restored to his family a new creature in Christ. — "Interested Reader," Grafton, Mass., on behalf of a man who has had a painful experience in dealing with nominal Christians, who have so treated him as to cause him to avoid Christians in business transactions and to doubt the truth of religion. May the Lord give him light. — "Believer," Va., that an aged lady and her daughter might be converted.

For the Restoration of Health. E., Montpelier, Vt., asks that prayer might be offered for the removal of an affliction of many years' standing. — "Reader," West Buxton, Me., that a friend now in the hospital in a critical condition might be raised up with new life and health; also that a minister may recover his health and hearing. — Believer, Mass., for the recovery of a brother in poor health. — "Anxious Mother," Conway, Ark., for the recovery of a demented brother who is suffering mentally and physically. — H. W. C., Elgin, Ill., that God would relieve the suffering from a nervous affection. — H. S., Villanow, Ga., for the recovery of health and hearing, so that Sunday School work may be resumed. — J. W. F., La Porte, Ia., that a sick daughter, whom physicians have been unable to cure, might be healed by the Lord. — "Believer," William, Ariz., an invalid for ten years past, that God would grant recovery. — M. B., Bucklin, Mo., who is sorely needed for the comfort of aged parents, and whose work for Christ is now suspended owing to ill health, that God would give recovery and new strength. — E. L. C., Philadelphia, that a dearly loved mother may be restored to health. — "Subscriber," Hamilton, O., that a demented son twenty-three years old might recover health and reason. — "Brother," South Towner, O., for the recovery of a dear brother who has been brought very low by typhoid fever. — W. G. L., Baltimore, Md., that his wife who is in great spiritual depression owing to melancholia, might find joy and peace in her Lord. — "Believer," San Jose, Cal., that a Christian friend may be healed of a serious illness and restored in health to her friends. — L. K. S., Hobart, Ind., who has been ill five months, that God would send recovery. — "Reader," Reed, Va., that God would restore health and that it may be used in his cause. — "One who Believes," Hillsboro, Md., for the recovery of hearing; also that a sick friend who is heavily afflicted might be healed. The following also ask prayers for recovery from sickness: J. W. H., Marblehead, Mass.; Orphan Girl, Nashport, O.; C. B., Marion, N. Y.; W. A., San Francisco.

For Special Blessings. "Believer," Vermont, for daily strength to lead a consistent life, and that help may be granted so that financial difficulties might be successfully overcome. — "Anxious Mother," Brooklyn, N. Y., that a way might be opened for her to earn an honest livelihood for herself and her child, now that he who should attend to that duty has deserted her and left her to her own resources. — J. P. E., Chandler's Valley, Pa., that God would give grace to two women who are trying to lead Christian lives, enabling them to acquire control over their hasty tempers. — "In His Name," Dunham, Canada, for a man who has a high temper, leading him sometimes to be unjust and inconsiderate of others, that God would touch his heart and make him kind and generous to relatives, and that all estrangements may be removed. — W. H. E., Shelby, N. C., that God in his mercy would open the way to earn money to pay honest debts. — J. F. R., Stetson, N. J., for help and success in the disheartening task of seeking employment. — T. P., Boston, Mass., that a dear daughter may have better success than she expects in an approaching examination, if in accordance with the Divine will. — "Believer in Prayer," Baltimore, Md., that a man who served God in the days of his prosperity may have God's guidance and help in his adversity and may be able to earn an honest livelihood. — "Reader," S. D., that a loved one may be speedily restored to the loving hearts who have waited long; also that a faithful pastor might be restored to a needy field of labor. — "Believer," Amice, Ill., that a church nearly broken up by internal troubles may be led to peace and an awakening and a new baptism of the Spirit may come upon it. — "Earnest Seeker," for a deeper conviction of sin and stronger faith in Christ. — "Young Woman," St. Paul, Minn., that a thorn in the flesh which is a constant source of sorrow might be removed if it is the Lord's will.

Young Mothers

of friends, who are so far from God that they have almost lost their religion.

"Reader," Woodlawn, N. Y., that two brothers might find steady employment. — "Reader," Smith Centre, Kan., that a young lady may have the wisdom she needs to decide rightly in a momentous matter. — "Believer," Virginia, for God's help to avert a calamity, which if it come will make an old man homeless and penniless. — E. L. C., Philadelphia, that a man needing employment by which he can support his family, may be able to obtain it; also that one who is on his way to South American Mission fields may be endowed with power from on high. — Lonely, New York City, who longs for friendship with intelligent, book-loving people, but being poor and meanly attired, finds a difficulty in getting acquainted, that God would open the way to a friendship which would make life in the great city less dreary. — The following persons ask prayer that God would send them financial help in crises of various kinds: C. E. H., Chicago; W. G. L., Shane, Md.; "Trusting One," O. S. S., Rochester, Minn. — Weary One, Staunton, Va.

That Thanks be Given for Answers to Prayer. "Believer," Baltimore, Md., the prayers I asked for some time ago in a time of family trouble have been answered and I should be glad that thanks be rendered to God for his loving kindness.

"Believer," San Jose, Cal., please offer thanks for the remarkable answer that has come to your prayers offered at my request for restoration of health and relief from business trouble.

M. C. H., Paterson, N. J., you were kind enough to pray at my request for my husband some time ago. Please thank God who has wonderfully blessed him and me. My husband has given up drinking and is now a truly Christian man and a member of the church. Give thanks to God for me for his goodness.

M. E. J., Portland, Me., it seems to me that God is answering your prayers. The gambling drunkard for whom I asked prayer has been calmer and less determined of late in his evil ways and more amenable to reason. Please go on praying for him.

M. H., Tipton, Iowa. Please give thanks for the answer granted to the prayers you offered recently in response to my request, which I signed "Firm Believer."

HOW TO LIVE WELL ON 25 CENTS A DAY.

By Mrs. Gesine Lemeke, one of the most noted cooks and housekeepers of the day. It contains a complete bill of fare for every day for six weeks, also valuable hints for housekeepers.

This book is for sale by all dealers, or it will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents by J. S. O'GILVIE PUBLISHING COMPANY, 55 Rose St., N. Y. Agents Wanted.

MUSIC SALE To close out our stock we send by mail 70 pieces, full sheet music, vocal and instrumental, all parts complete, all for 20c; or 4 lots, 50c. Money back if not suited. "Only One Girl in the World for Me" and 100 Songs, with music, 5c. C. H. Publishing, 339 Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

20th Edition—Postpaid for 25 cents (or stamps.) THE HUMAN HAIR. Why it Falls Off, Turns Grey, and the Remedy. By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F.R.S., London. G. L. LONG & CO., 103 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. Every one should read this little book. — Athenium

THE CHILDREN'S JUBILEE! A complete and attractive series for Children's day. Sample copy 5c. — H. MEREDITH, Publisher, Chicago.

300 ORDERS IN THREE WEEKS! 100 orders in every 12 calls. $25 to $30 profit every day! 100 orders in 3 1/2 days. Terms free. Order Receipts. JAS. H. EARLE, Publisher, Boston.

Send for Free Specimen Pages of

The Book will contain 224 pages. Published by THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY, CINCINNATI-NEW YORK-CHICAGO.

Our Free Book of Illustration shows the latest patterns in silverware spoons, coffee sets, chafing dishes, tool ware, etc., and gives 200 suggestions presents. Every housewife should see for a copy. Please mention this paper.

Meriden Britannia Co. MERIDEN, Conn.; 208 Fifth Ave., New York

"1847 Rogers Bros." Trade-mark on spoons, knives, and forks.

MONUMENTS

DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate WHITE BRONZE.

(It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.)

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking. Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO., 70-80 Howard Avenue, Bridgeport, Conn.

WANTED.—SALESMEN to introduce REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGES

latest, greatest, most famous book,

"THE EARTH GIRDLED" Samoa, Hawaii, the South Seas, Australia, in Egypt, Palestine, Europe, and all their world. Thrilling experiences among savages, cannibals, and races. Amazing heathen superstitions, startling revelations. 400 original photographs of curious and strange places. $12 a day to salesmen. No capital or experience required. Exclusive territory. Voracious inducements and illustrated circular free. Be quick. Address, Historical Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

$150.00 IN GOLD GIVEN for selling "Story of Spain and Cuba." The International News and Book Co., Baltimore, Md., offer $150.00 to anyone selling in 3 months 175 copies of their new book, "Story of Spain and Cuba." Premium and liberal commission given for any quantity sold. This is one of the greatest selling books. Many agents make from $5.00 to $10.00 a day. Graphic account of the present war and the struggle for liberty is given. 100 beautiful illustrations. $50.00 freight paid and credit given. 50c. out of free if sent for postage. Write them immediately.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School. $20 per 100 copies.

Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People. $20 per 100 copies.

Do not substitute inferior books because of low price. The best are cheapest!

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. 76 East 50th St. New York. 215 Madison Ave., Chicago.

To Preach Christ in Corea.

Fenwick's Second Visit as the Avant-guer of a Band of Missionary Workers.

COREA is to-day one of the most promising fields of Gospel effort the world affords. Some time ago, Rev. Malcolm C. Fenwick, a young American missionary, who had already spent several years in Corea, returned to this country with a view to awakening missionary sympathy, and enlightening our people as to the vast and spiritually necessitous condition of this distant field. Mr. Fenwick was an associate of the late Dr. Hall, whose faithful missionary service until the day of his death of fever, attracted while attending the wounded on the battlefield of Pyeongyang, are already well-known to readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Mr. Fenwick recently returned to Corea, following letters having been sent by him to his journal on the eve of his departure.

Dear Friends: God has kept waiting much longer than I anticipated when I saw you in New York, but just gave me, but six weeks ago, my restless assurance concerning his will. Two weeks later I supplied my mind, and two days ago found on the Pacific Coast ready to start on the S. S. Empress of China. It God has not only permitted me to return again, and supplied all my personal needs, but has sent me $100 toward building a home for workers, with a promise of more and to send out a band of workers in the near future. I hope to use this $100 to build a small native reception room, 8x16, as soon as I get back, on the beautiful lot of orchard already provided. This will enable me to prosecute the work I left out in Wonsan, and be on hand to build a larger native building for the reception of workers as soon as God supplies. There are eleven out of Corea's twelve millions who are in utter ignorance of the Gospel. There are seven of the eight prominent cities, each with a population of from one hundred thousand to three hundred thousand souls, without one witness of Jesus. And out of some sixty missionaries, teachers, and their wives, we had less than twenty active workers to overcome this appalling need. Surely the fault is not our God's, but that of his unwilling children. I shall be glad, and helped I am sure, if I learn that God has burdened any hearts with this need, or that the missionaries are remembered in prayer.

It has just been suggested: 'Why am I happy in going back to Corea? Why is consuming joy?' Ah! beloved it is that I had any monopoly of. A Scotch missionary now laboring in China said to his Master, 'Lord I cannot manage the life of mine, take it and manage it for me.' And his Lord said unto him: 'All right, I will take you at your word. I will make a missionary of you and send you to China. Will you go?' And he answered, 'Yes, Lord! I'll go.' I saw him a short time since on his way back, and his heart seemed to be overflowing with Holy joy. The harvest is very great and very ripe for reaping in Corea. Perhaps the Master would say the same thing to some who read these words, for Corea. That is really the only way the joy may be known. Yours in Christ, MALCOLM C. FENWICK."

It is quite probable that our readers may occasionally hear from Mr. Fenwick from time to time, concerning the progress of his missionary work in Corea.

The Southern Polar Regions.

At the present moment there are three different expeditions, organized by as many different nationalities, preparing to explore the mysteries of the Southern Polar regions. What disclosures may yet come from that comparatively unknown quarter, none can foreshadow. Meteorology expects to come in for its share in the result. The vegetable kingdom has doubtless wonders of its own to reveal to the adventurer in the Antarctic world. It is even surmised that a new race of men may yet be found in a hitherto undiscovered continent. Dr. Cook, the leader-elect of the American expedition, says: "Towns and villages may exist close to the South Pole, inhabited by people of queer stature and color, whose world is bounded by a wall of ice; or, upon the other hand, they may still be in a savage state, waging war upon each other, and giants in stature." All this reasoning is vagueness itself, unsubstantial as a dream of the night, and the only moral to be drawn is to wait for more light from this region of darkness.

PROGRESS OF THE CONGO RAILWAY.

The Congo Railway is opened for sixty miles on the way to Stanley Pool. The scale of cost lessens as the work advances. The future of the line is now looked upon as assured.

REV. MALCOLM C FENWICK
Missionary to Corea.

Comfort in Bicycling

In every part a bicycle must be adjustable so as to fit the varying conditions of human anatomy. No bicycle so fully meets this requirement as the

STANDARD OF THE WORLD

Columbia saddles are the standard of comfort, and the Columbia adjustable handle-bar is the standard of rigid, quick-adjusting completeness.

Columbias in construction and quality are in a class by themselves. $100 to all alike

POPE MANUFACTURING CO., Hartford, Conn.

Many of the Columbia merits are described in the superb Columbia Catalogue. The book also tells of Hartford bicycles, $80, $60, $50, next best to Columbias. Ask the Columbia agent for it, or send two 2-cent stamps to us for postage.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING

CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.

MESHAKE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mallory Steamship Lines.
DELICIOUS TRIPS BY SEA TO TEXAS — GEORGIA — FLORIDA. Tickets to all Water Resorts in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida. Our 44-horse power motor mail free. C. H. MALLORY & CO.
Port of New York

CATARRH. Send name for FREE package, sure cure, sent post paid to you.
G. N. STODDARD 1225 Niagara Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Bicycle Suits for Men

MADE of excellent material, mixed, selected throughout with silk, and are among the most perfect fitting bicycle suits on the market. The bloomers have two hip, two side and two waist pockets and are reinforced. The coat has four patch pockets and the seams are piped. An exceptionally good suit at the very low price of

$3.75

We will send a Booklet, containing samples of materials, to any address upon request.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER.

Dry Goods, PHILADELPHIA.

BABY CARRIAGES Shipped C.O.D.

Anywhere to any one at Wholesale Prices without asking for money. Write for Catalogue. Weigh 15 lbs. from factory. Save dear $15.50 (Carriage for $9.25, 1st quality Large $12.00, 2nd $5.95, 3rd $2.65, 4th $1.00). (New address CASH BUYERS' UNION, 164 West Van Buren Street, B. 13, Chicago, Ill.)

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,

102 Fulton St., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unprejudiced advice and prices. Exchanges. Immense stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 62-page illus. cat. free.

Ideal Spring Beds. Always ready to sleep. Illustrating and describing them, send free. An up-to-date pocket book of your State, section revised, 1895-1896, 100 stamps. Foster Bros. Mfg. Co., 44 West 14th St., New York.

Waverley Bicycles. $85

AMERICA'S FAVORITES.

Are Built in the Largest and Best Equipped Factory on Earth.

Our unequalled facilities enable us to supply better bicycles for less money than other makers can afford to market an inferior production, hence in purchasing a Waverley there is a clear saving of $15.00 or more. A higher grade bicycle, it is impossible to produce. Our catalogue explains all. Send for it.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

SAMPLES FREE

ALFRED PEATS

Prize

WALL PAPER

We will mail you samples free of our Prize Patterns, 1896 Series, together with our guide, "How to Paper, and Economy in Home Decoration." If you will send us a description of the different rooms you have to paper, and what they are used for, we will carefully select the patterns and colorings most suitable. Our new $1.00 Prize Designs are the most artistic and delicately colored papers in the market, and are better made than those of any other manufacturer. Prices

10 cents and up per roll.

The New York World says: "None so beautiful, so perfect, or offered so cheap." The Chicago Tribune says: "They will be in great demand by people of artistic taste." Over 2,000,000 rolls of other papers carried in stock. Prices marked in plain figures on each sample.

3 cents and up per roll.

WE PREPAY THE FREIGHT.

Send to us for samples and you will positively get the latest colorings and designs to select from.

AGENTS WANTED. One agent wanted in each town who can furnish good references, to sell from our large sample books on commission, and to whom we can refer all requests for samples in their vicinity. Experience not necessary. Agent's outfit, complete, $1.00.

Prices and Samples are Our Best Argument.

Write to nearest address.

FREIGHT PREPAID

41-43 W. 14th ST. NEW YORK.
ALFRED PEATS
143-145 WABASH AVE. CHICAGO.

After a Day's Hard Work
Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.
It makes a delicious drink and relieves fatigue and depression. A grateful tonic.

March, April, May are the best months to purify blood and build up the system. Don't neglect this important matter. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla with the advent of spring.

SIX CROWNS.

An Address on the Christian's Regalia and Insignia of Royalty.

By REV. A. S. GUMBART OF BOSTON, MASS.

THE Bible has much to say about crowns. Poetry and history are full of references to crowns. The crown is worn by kings and queens. It is symbolic of honor, power, victory. Some crowns are very valuable. The crown of the King of Portugal is said to be worth six and one-half millions of dollars; a sum so large that we have no idea what it means. The crown of the Czar of Russia is worth about the same. One ruby in this crown being worth thirty thousand dollars. But I want to speak of some of the crowns of which we read in the Bible:

I. The Crown of Jesus.

Every one should know that Jesus Christ is our King. Although Jesus died many years ago, he rose again on the third day and came forth from the grave alive and well, and with a wonderful body; and after forty days he went up through the clouds into heaven, where he now reigns as King. Now, if Jesus is our King, we owe him something. We cannot do with him as we choose. We must love, honor and obey him. Jesus has a right to demand this, and he does demand it. The rebellious, the disloyal cannot hope to please him. As a rule kings do not pay much heed to ordinary boys and girls, but our King Jesus loves the children and wants them to love him, and it is a blessed thing to know that even boys and girls can be of service to him by living Christian lives. I know a whole family of seven who were brought to Jesus by one little boy who was a member of a class in a Brooklyn Sunday School; and the way in which it all happened was very simple. He was so persistent in his desire to have his father and mother attend the preaching service, that they yielded, just to please him. They heard the Gospel and soon after acknowledged Jesus as their King and Saviour. And I could tell of many cases where drunken fathers and godless mothers were brought to know Jesus through some boy or girl.

II. The Crown of Life.

The Bible tells us that all who love Jesus as their Saviour shall receive a crown of life. In the last book of the Bible, the second chapter and tenth verse we have a precious promise: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." This refers to that wonderful and blessed life which we shall have in the world to come. This life is so glorious that Jesus speaks of it as a "crown of life." The life which we shall have in the world to come is different from that which we now have. In this life we suffer hunger and thirst and sickness and pain. Here some boys are blind and crippled; but in the world to come there shall be no poor, no sick, no blind, no crippled. We shall be like Jesus. We shall receive a new and perfect body in which these evils just mentioned shall not be possible. What a blessed life that will be when we shall receive a never-dying body that will never be sick, nor hungry, nor tired! Well, this is the kind of body that Jesus promises to those that love him.

III. The Crown of Glory.

We read, "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Here a different kind of crown is spoken of. Here the use of the term 'crown' is in reference to the victory and honor which shall be given to those who endure hardship and suffering in the service of Christ. I know a poor woman who loves Jesus. She loves to attend the church service and the prayer-meeting; but her husband is a very bad man, and will not permit her to attend these services unless she will give him money with which to buy strong drink; but she refuses to do this on the ground that it would displease Jesus. And so he beats her and abuses her, but she remains faithful to Jesus through it all. I believe this woman will some day receive a crown of glory. If we desire to be faithful to Jesus, it may sometimes be that we shall need to suffer for his sake. If we overcome temptation, or suffer hard things on account of being Christians, or doing Christ's work, we shall receive, in the end, a crown of glory—a crown of joy, of honor, of victory. I know a Jew who professed to love Jesus, but his family told him that if he did not give up Jesus, he would have to leave his home. He was afraid; he had not the courage to endure the suffering of being cast off by his people, and so he gave up Jesus and went back to his family. Do you think this man will receive a crown of victory?

IV. The Crown of Rejoicing.

In his letter to the Thessalonians, Paul speaks of the crown of rejoicing in reference to the souls it would please God to save through his labors, and who would meet him in heaven. Paul was not satisfied to go to heaven without trying to show others the way, and so he told others about Jesus, and how he died to take away our sins, and exhorted them to love Jesus. We, too, may win souls to Jesus in the same way. Late one winter night I was called out to visit a poor washerwoman who was dying; but when I began to tell her about Jesus, she said: "Oh, sir, I know all about him, thank God. My little angel told me about him. She learned about him in your Sunday School." She was only a little girl of ten years, but she won her mother to Jesus. Surely this will be a crown of rejoicing to her when she meets mother in heaven. There are many boys and girls who know nothing about Jesus, and salvation, and heaven, and we may tell them, and God will help us to win them, and when we get to heaven we shall meet them and shall receive a crown of rejoicing, that is, we shall have the joy of knowing that God used us to show them the way.

V. The Crown of Righteousness.

Paul speaks of this crown in his second letter to Timothy:—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." We are taught here that all who live such lives as shall be well-pleasing to Jesus, shall receive this crown of righteousness. This is not only the crown which belongs to right living in the sight of God, but it means also that in that day we ourselves shall be made perfect in righteousness. All sin shall be taken away from us and we shall be pure and holy. We all know how hard it is for us, in this life, to live such pure and holy lives at all times, and how, when we know that we have done wrong, it takes away our peace; but if we shall be faithful here, the time is coming when we shall be like Jesus, and shall sin no more; when we shall speak no bad words, when we shall do no wrong things and think no bad thoughts. Surely such a blessing is worth having.

VI. The Incorruptible Crown.

In the ninth chapter of First Corinthians, and the twenty-fifth verse we read of a corruptible crown. This refers to worldly honor, which soon fades away, but the honor we shall receive from Jesus shall last forever. So the honor of the world, if it has no Christ in it, is a worthless deception. God grant that every one of us may so live that, at last, we shall receive the true crown; the crown of life, the crown of glory, the crown of rejoicing, the crown of righteousness, the incorruptible crown!

The Ministry of Sorrow.

Written for "The Christian Herald."

SORROWS, God's ploughshares sometimes rip and tear,
Deep furrows in the human heart;
How sharp and keen the anguish that we bear!
How bitter is the inner smart!
To see our fond and cherished hopes laid bare,
To wither in the scorching pain;
And yet, the while keep silent!—lest we dare
Against a Ruler wise complain.

Ah! when her trodden soil is torn and rent,
Does this old Mother Earth complain?
Or, does she deem the plough an instrument
Of needless torture or of pain?
Mark how in silence she awaits the care
And toil of husbandry, until
Her mellow soil shall yield a harvest fair,
Garner and storehouse both to fill.

Thus when the heart through vain ambition
Earthward and sordidly to grow, [tends
Then God some cross of deep affliction sends
To show how vain all things below.
The Heavenly Gard'ner harrows and uproots
The strange affections of our hearts,
That they may yield to him the choicest fruits
Of righteousness that he imparts.

New Brunswick, N. J.

—MRS. MARY LUTZ.

What is the reasonable treatment of

Rose Colds, Hay Fever

and similar diseases? To dose the stomach with nauseous drugs to cure the respiratory organs? You may palliate the pain this way, with preparations of opium, or temporarily stimulate yourself with tonics; but for a permanent cure, try nature's way.

Booth's "Hyomei,"

the Australian "Dry-Air" treatment of Asthma, Hay Fever, Catarrh, Bronchitis, etc.,

"CURES BY INHALATION."

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, to any part of the United States, consisting of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber (beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address; my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction?

R. T. BOOTH,

23 East 20th St., New York.

They don't agree

—your pocket-book and your wash-board. One tries to keep your money—tho' other wastes it. You'd better consult your pocket-book, do your washing with Pearline, and put the wash-board out of the house. There's no room or place for it with Pearline (no soap), nor for any of its wearing-out tiresome rubbing. You'll be doing your pocket-book a good turn, and help toward making it fatter and sleeker, if you do all your washing and cleaning with Pearline.

Millions NOW USE Pearline

WEAK LUNGS and CONSUMPTION.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER, of 117 West 45th Street, New York—the oldest Lung specialist of this country—explains in popular lectures the germ nature of consumption, the condition of the throat and lungs that leads to it, and the wonderful success of its treatment by specific germicides discovered by him and applied directly to the lungs by inhalation.

Those having weak lungs or any lung complaint can obtain Dr. Hunter's books and full information, free of charge, by a blessing him as above.

ALL WOOL

SUIT

for $5.95

102-106 West Quincy St.,

Chicago, Ill.

Made in frock or sack suits in the latest styles, equal to any clothing's $12 garments. Higher priced suits equally as cheap. We do not ask you to buy a "blind pig," but will send samples of the leading spring and summer clothes, measures, most blank and tape line free. Agents Wanted. JOHN Z. QUINCY & CO., Chicago, Ill.

JUNE FIRST we will GIVE some of FIFTY DOLLARS YOU MAY GET IT Mothers only write for particulars to The Babette Co., 493 Phila. Bourse, Phila, P

PERFECTION Cake Fully removed without breaking. Perfection Tins equal to any other. Round, square, oblong. 2 round tins 10¢, 10¢, 10¢, 10¢, 10¢. Agents Wanted. Richardson Mfg. Co., 634 N. 1st St., St. Louis, Mo.

WALL-PAPER Samples mailed free. Prices from 2¢ to 8¢ a roll, 3 yds. KAYNER & ALLEN, 932-34 Market St., 418 Arch St., PHILADELPHIA

FREE TO BALD HEADS We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon bald head, stop falling hair and move scalp disease. Address: Altenheim Medical Dispensary, 127 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

WANTED to take orders for our fine Teas, Extracts, Soaps, Toilet articles, etc. Largest commission, lowest premiums given. No capital required. We pay the freight. Samples free. Address at once: CONSUMERS' TEA & SPICE CO., CINCINNATI, O.

HOMESTUDY. A thorough and practical course in bookkeeping, shorthand and penmanship. Home Low rates (at first trial lesson 10¢). Write: BRYANT & STRATTON, 75 College Bldg., Buffalo, N.Y.

STEWART'S DUPLEX SAFETY PINS.

Made in rolled gold, nickel plate, and black. Work as easily in the dark as in the light, and fastens from either side, but cannot slip through. If once used, will use no other. Don't accept the "just as good," insist on the best.

If dealer doesn't keep them, send three 2c. stamps, for sample worth double the money. Only one sample to same address.

Consolidated Safety Pin Co., Box 1, Bloomfield, N. J.

A NEW IDEA. TEN CENTS. Monthly Paper Patterns mailed free. Fashion sheet free. Catalogue 500 designs in 10 stamps. NEW IDEA PATTERNS CO., West Broadway and Leonard Sts., New York.

FREE. Atrial in your home. Cut them out and send for catalogue. Please to send you. Oxford New York. Macmillan's World's Famous Medical Series. Send for your free copy. Write to: OXFORD BOOK CO., 250 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO.

A Fortune in the Fire.

There died lately in London a lady who had for some time past been an invalid and confined to her apartments, but who through a single act of self-denial, several years ago attracted the attention of the literary world. Lady Burton was the widow of Sir Richard Burton, who became distinguished as a military hero, traveler, and author. With him she shared several years among the Arabs, and shared numerous perils and privations. At the time of his death, Sir Richard Burton had completed the manuscript of a work which was regarded by a certain class of literary men as exceedingly valuable but which on account of its immoral character might have blighted thousands of young hearts, had it been published. It was a translation from the Persian and gave evidence of his high scholarship, although it was also a testimony to his lack of Christian principle. His widow offered a fabulous sum for the manuscript, over which he had labored for years, but she made the matter a subject of prayer, and after becoming convinced of its true nature, she without hesitation committed the entire manuscript to the flames—an act for which she deserves to be gratefully remembered by the entire Christian world.

Hung Chang's Daughters.

It is learned on reliable authority that two daughters of Li Hung Chang, the Chinese ex-Premier, were converted to Christianity while attending school in England. Their influence is said to have made their distinguished father very tolerant to the "Western religion," as it is sometimes called in China. It is not improbable that these young women may yet prove to be a tower of strength for the Gospel in their native land. As an evidence of his friendly attitude towards Christianity, Li Hung Chang recently issued the following remarkable proclamation: "Having examined the doctrine of the Christian teachers in every place pertaining to this prefect, we find there have been established free schools where the poor children in China may receive instruction, hospitals where Chinamen may freely receive healing. The missionaries are really good. Not only do they not take the people's possessions; but they do seem to desire men's praises. Be it known, that foreigners here, renting or otherwise setting up halls, do so to save and to help the poor, and that there is not the least underhandedness." For one who has been called a heathen and the foremost statesman in a land of heathens, this is certainly a wonderful and gracious transformation.

Literature for the Prisons.

We are still receiving numerous acknowledgments from Wardens and Chaplains of prisons and reformatories, expressing great gratification at the gift of religious reading matter lately sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to such institutions all over the country. These letters show the very great need of Gospel literature for the prisoners. C. H. Mastin, Chaplain of the Kiley (Neb.), State Industrial School for boys, writes:

"I cannot tell you how greatly we appreciate your gift. The boys are hungry for good wholesome reading. The State makes no provision for current literature. A healthy religious interest is being awakened, and I am anxious to supplement personal work by wholesome religious literature. The cultivation of religious taste is as essentially a part of reformation as correct physical habits. It is with great difficulty I am enabled to partially supply this want. Mr. Woodly generously sent us some pamphlets books or booklets. I shall watch the influence of your paper."

Any readers of this journal, desiring to aid this movement for placing Christian literature in the prisons, can do so by sending such books or papers to any name on the list recently published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the sender prepaying the postage.

Armenian Relief Fund.

(Continued from page 327.)

Friend, West Peabody 3 00	Milo For'n Missy Soc 5 00
" T. Penn. 1 00	EL & C E of Wesley 1 00
" Bainbridge 1 00	Ch. Ont. Can. 25 00
" North Benton 5 00	W M of Hays Chapel 4 25
" Middletown 5 00	Mary Hudson K D 2 25
For his Sake, St. Marys 1 00	Circle 2 25
For Jesus Sake, Toledo 2 00	Armenian Entertainment, B Y P U, Ark 9 01
For Jesus Sake, Manchester 1 00	Phila Class Member 2 00
For Jesus, Fairhaven 5 00	Brooklyn Member 25
I H N Y City 10 00	Sunday P M Member 2 00
" Racine 1 00	J Wood's Bible Class 5 00
" New Albany 60	Ellen Down's SS class 75
" Hay Spring 50	Girls' Class No 6, Baptist S S, Minn 2 50
" Boice 1 00	C E Worker, Oneonta 2 00
" Amery 50	School Children, San Antonio Dist, Cal. 7 50
In Jesus Name, Olneyville 50	Teacher, Salisbury 5 00
In Jesus Name, Kirtland 1 00	R R Man, I H N Y 5 00
Reader, Detroit 1 00	For sale of Christian Herald, Tecumseh. 10
" Paterson 1 00	James 2:15, Chicago 10 00
" Steubenville 5 00	Anon. 1 00
" Keokuk 1 00	Anonymous 3 00
" Ypsilanti 1 00	Inasmuch, Woburn 1 00
" Kalamazoo 1 00	" 2 Sisters' Offering, Yonkers & Owensville 2 00
Sub'r, Washington 20	Easter Off'g, Pepperell 5 00
" Detroit 5 00	Thank " Decaroh 10 00
" Bridgeport 1 00	2 Colored Children, Beloit School 2
" Koskush 5 00	Mother & Daughter, 5 00
" Eastmanville 1 00	Mother & Daughter, 1 00
" Minneapolis 1 00	" Tecumseh 1 00
" Berea 1 00	Mother & Daughter, 3 00
Sym'izer, Cedar Rapids 1 00	Constantine 2 00
" Olyphant 15 00	Watertown sisters 2 00
" Edgewood 2 00	From a factory girl, 1 00
Few Sym'izers, Adams 4 00	Two Ladies of Barton 75
" Alfred Sta 5 00	Sister that loves Jesus, Willapa 5 00
" Timmonsville 1 00	Two Sisters Progress 50
" New Bloomfield 1 00	One who loves Jesus, Jersey City 1 00
" Durango 50	Liter of the Christian Herald, Winchester 5 00
" Jamestown 1 00	Some Young People 5 62
" Indianola 50	Allegheny 5 62
" Machias 10 00	Orphan's Mite 25
" Gobles 1 00	Followers of Christ, Pipersville 3 25
" St Louis 1 00	A Bee Hive, Belcherstown 3 00
" North Platte 15 00	Cash, Tyrone 10
" Lakewood 65	" Tyrone 25
" Olmsted 1 00	" Geneva 10
" Baxter 1 00	" Geneva 10
" Worcester 3 00	Bapt Ch, Kingsbury 5 00
4th Ger Ref'd Ch, NY 36 50	Grace Ref'd Ep Ch, Scranton 43 27
Pres Ch, Ansonia 1 25	Ypsilanti M E S S 12 40
United Evan Ch, Carey 3 34	Mizzap S S 8 81
Highland S S, Kansas 1 40	Salem S S, Md. 2 25
Sugar Creek S S 1 65	Easter Offering, 1st United Brethren SS 5 00
Emanuel Ref'd S S & Y P S C E 11 50	An Invalid, So Valley 25
Union S S, Troy 8 82	Y P S C E, Herron Ave 2 25
SS of 1st Pres Ch, Kan 20 00	Free and Central Bethel M P Chs 10 00
Clark's Valley S S 1 00	C E Soc, Hion 5 00
Y P S C E, 2d Pres, N Y 1 00	Union C E, Cooper 3 85
Onaga Cong Y P S C E 6 00	C E Soc, Friends' Ch 50
Y P S C E, Christ Luth Ch, Pa 4 35	Jr Endeavor Soc of R R St Bapt Ch, Vt. 40
Y P S C E of Trinity United Evan Ch 5 00	Y P S C E, W T U 3 50
Y P S C E of Navasota 9 75	Ladies' Mite Society, Church Creek 3 35
Y P S C E's of Concord Pres and Central Bethel M P Chs 10 00	Jr C E Soc, Cong Ch, Mich 1 10
C E Soc, Hion 5 00	Mother & Daughter, New Hampton 75
Union C E, Cooper 3 85	For Humanity's Sake, I H N Y City 1 00
C E Soc, Friends' Ch 50	A Little Helper, Burrowsville 1 00
Jr Endeavor Soc of R R St Bapt Ch, Vt. 40	Humbly, Andover 1 00
Y P S C E, W T U 3 50	Total $45,192.40 and over 100 others to be acknowledged next week.
C E Soc, Hastings 3 00
Jr C E Soc, Pres Ch, Troy 1 15
N J C E Union 13 00
So Brookfield Prayer Circle, N Y 2 51
I H N Y City 1 00
Y M C A, Fredrickton 9 65
Y P Soc of Bohemian Ref'd Ch 4 50
Ep League, Tecumseh 2 00
Ladies' Aid Society, Blue Mounds 3 00

Ancient Egyptian Skill.

At a recent meeting of the Victoria Institute, London, Rev. Canon Gordlestone read a paper in which he briefly reviewed the present position of science in regard to religion, and dealt in an explanatory manner with all the salient points on either side in which science and Revelation had been to any extent held to be antagonistic, and he gave many instances in which the progress of science, during the thirty years the Victoria Institute had been in existence, had the effect not of increasing, but of diminishing the apparent breach between itself and religion. Canon Gordlestone referred to the evidences that were being discovered of an advanced state of progress in the earliest times. As bearing on this point it may be mentioned that even the industry of glass blowing in our own day is not in advance of that 4,000 years ago, and visitors to the British Museum may now inspect a beautiful embelazment of Thothmes III., who lived 3,400 years ago, and whose conquests, as described by M. Maspero in his papers, contributed to the Victoria's Institute's Transactions, have thrown so much light on the history of those far-off times.

No Gap in the Ranks.

A missionary who had just completed five years' successful missionary work in an important post in Calcutta, writes of her reflections when leaving on furlough. She left by steamer, and noticed as the vessel dropped away from the jetty the place it had occupied was immediately filled with lighters and other boats, so that it was impossible to see a vacant spot where the vessel had so lately been. "This," said the missionary, "is exactly as it is with us. We think we are filling important places, and that our services are absolutely necessary. But soon we go away and our going away seems to leave no gap; things go on just as before." The thought is at first a saddening one; but kind nature sees to it that the intensity of regret does not long disturb us.

REV. DR. PIERSON'S TOUR.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, After Closing his Month's tour in Ireland with a series of services in Londonderry, travelled across to Wales, and spoke at meetings in several of the large towns in association with Mr. C. T. Studd. At last accounts he was preaching at Bristol.

Hast Thou a Care?

HAST thou within a care so deep,
It chases from thine eyelids sleep?
To thy Redeemer take that care
And change anxiety to prayer.
Hast thou a hope with which the heart
Would almost feel it death to part?
Entreat thy God that hope to crown,
Or give thee strength to lay it down.

If you want a sure relief for pains in the back, side, chest, or limbs, use an

Ailcock's Porous Plaster

BEAR IN MIND—Not one of the host of counterfeits and imitations is as good as the genuine.

FREE CATALOGUE

Now is the time to buy a PIANO or ORGAN from the largest manufacturers in the world, who sell their instruments direct to the public at wholesale factory prices. Don't pay a profit to agents and middlemen. Terms to suit all. No money asked in advance. Privilege of testing organ or piano in your own home 30 days. No expense to you if not satisfactory. Warranted 25 years.

Bank references furnished on application; the editor of this paper, any business man of this town, and to the thousands using our instruments in their homes. A book of testimonials sent with every catalogue. As an advertisement we will sell the first Piano in a place for only $160. The first Organ only $25, Stool, Book, &c. FREE. If you want to buy for cash, write us. If you want to buy on instalments, BUT DON'T BUY UNTIL YOU Write Us. BEETHEVEN PIANO & ORGAN CO., P. O. Box 741, WASHINGTON, N. J.

8 Years Cured:
W. L. WEDGER,
Roslindale, Boston, Mass.

7 Years Cured:
J. L. TREVILLYAN,
24 5th St., N.E., Minneapolis, Minn.

8 Years Cured:
MRS. A. P. FOSTER,
Chelsea, Mass.

5 Years Cured:
J. W. GILLESPIE,
Black River, N. Y.

5 Years Cured:
W. L. WELLER,
164 Cherry St., Burlington, Vt.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, in shape, with self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

The old man I fitted 2 years ago wore your truss about 90 days and said he was cured. Saw him last week and although he was 63 years old and a hard worker, he is as sound as when a boy.

I have had splendid result from your truss in quite a number of cases of grown people.

I received my truss the 27th and since I have had it I have taken more comfort with it than any I ever have had. The last day I got it I put it on and moved grass all day and I never noticed that I had it on me.

LEX. BROWN,
TUNN, N. C. July 21, 1895.

About 3 years ago I bought one of your trusses. I wore it about 6 months and it has made a final cure. Was badly ruptured. I would have written to you about this before but wanted to see if my cure was permanent.

O. G. HALLAM,
$1,000 forfeited to you if every testimonial used by us is not genuine. Address

C. H. EGLESTON & CO., 1201 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

WHY PAY TRAILERS? We sell first class goods only, and save you 50 per cent. Valuable present free. Our Special Catalogue, Free.

SHIPPED C.O.D. ON APPROVAL

With privilege of examination. We give Guarantee for 5 Years. No Money in advance. $5 Carriage, $2.50; $12 Carriage, $5.50, and others up to $25 in proportion.

WHY PAY TRAILERS? We sell first class goods only, and save you 50 per cent. Valuable present free. Our Special Catalogue, Free.

A. M. ROTHCHILD & CO., STATE & VAN BUREN STS., CHICAGO

Good merchants find out that it pays to sell Macbeth lamp-chimneys because they make friends.

But look out for the one that is made for your lamp.

Let us send you the Index.

Geo A Macbeth Co
Pittsburgh Pa

How to Disinfect.

We desire to mail you free, a valuable illustrated book prepared at great expense. Simple directions on disinfecting in cases of contagious diseases and in everyday life—sinks, sewers, etc. Send your address.

• • "Sanitas" Co. Ld., 636 West 55th St., N. Y.

to HAY-FEVER

SUFFERERS WE OFFER A CURE THAT STAYS.

Our constitutional treatment not only gives relief, but eradicates the cause of the disease and cures to stay cured. Particulars and blank for free examination on application.

DR. HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

Rose Cold, June Cold, Hay-Fever, Asthma.

All Skin Disorders

from simple Pimples to obstinate Eczema and Tetter can be quickly and permanently cured by the simple application of

HEISKELL'S OINTMENT.

It makes the skin soft, smooth and healthy, producing a clear and brilliant complexion.

50c. per box at Druggists or by mail.

JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & Co., Philadelphia.

MY HUSBAND

Can't see how you do it.

$60 Kenwood Machine for $23.00
$50 Arlington Machine for $19.50
Standard Singers $4.00, $11.00
$15.00, and 27 other styles. All attachments FREE. We pay freightship anywhere on 30 days free trial, in any home without asking one cent in advance. Buy from factory. Save agents large profits. Over 100,000 units. Catalogue and testimonials Free. Write at once. Address, (in full), CASH BUYERS' UNION, 158-164 West Van Buren St., B 15, Chicago, Ills.

THE IMPROVED Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, and it retains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lady attendants & ladies. Examination free. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO., 322-324 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 HARGAINS we will send FREE this elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for 10c. to cover postage, to R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY

Like a Chapel on Wheels.

Evangelist Wilson's Gospel Car, "Rescue," and its Programme of Summer Work.

ONE of the latest adjuncts to effective Gospel work, where much traveling within a circumscribed radius has to be done, is the Gospel Car. From time to time THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has published brief accounts of the various Gospel Cars that have been introduced into service in recent years. One of the most recent is the Gospel Car Rescue, which is shown in the illustration on this page. The Rescue is the result of years of self-denial and effort on the part of Evangelist George H. Wilson, of Matawan, N. J.

EVANGELIST WILSON'S GOSPEL CAR, "RESCUE."

Mr. Wilson, who is a member of the First Baptist Church of Matawan, has for several years past devoted much of his time and means to evangelistic work among colored people in the State of New Jersey, and has been granted much spiritual success. In paying for the construction of the Rescue, he has expended every dollar he possessed, and when the car was placed in commission, Mr. Wilson and his wife were compelled to hire horses to draw it from one locality to another. The car is really a house on wheels, the interior being arranged for the accommodation of the workers. It was built at a cost of $654, the larger part being contributed by Mr. Wilson himself. It is seventeen feet in length, six feet wide outside, and four feet six inches wide within; the ceiling has a maximum height of six feet six inches. It has six windows, three at each side, and double doors at either end, with glass sashes. The interior is neatly finished in Georgia pine. There are in the front of the car cooking accommodations, range, and clothes closets, and in the rear is a folding platform for the speaker when addressing meetings.

Mr. Wilson has already on several occasions addressed large crowds from the Rescue's platform, and he expects to make the coming summer the busiest of his life in evangelistic work. Two horses are needed for the summer campaign, but as the evangelist and his wife have already exhausted their means in building the car, they will be compelled to use hired animals, unless some friend of the work supplies the need. It is estimated that a pair of good draught horses, with harness, would not cost over $140. The work conducted on the Rescue is purely interdenominational and is performed in the spirit as well as in the name of Jesus. A special feature is that it seeks out the lewd and abandoned ones among the colored population. Its conductors strive by every means to implant in the minds of those they meet the love of law, order, decency, and virtue. Much spiritual good has already been accomplished through this humble traveling mission, and Mr. Wilson's work deserves the warmest encouragement at the hands of both white and colored people, for its tendency to improve the morals and better the condition of a class whose rescue and redemption mean much to society.

Faith Greater than Armies.

In the Memorials of John Venning, recently published in London, it is related that Venning spent a large portion of his useful life in St. Petersburg. A German missionary, Saltet, from Basle, Shushi, told Venning of an incident that occurred at Shushi, which was within the bounds of Armenia before its partition, and was strongly fortified, when attached to Persia, by the redoubtable Nadir Pasha, early in the eighteenth century. It is on the north slope of the valley of the Araxes, the peak of Ararat being over one hundred miles distant to the westward. Venning's account says: "After some months' stay in St. Petersburg, Mr. Saltet proceeded to his destination at Shushi, a Persian town ceded to Russia, and there he was richly blessed in gathering a little church of converts. One morning, I think in 1826, the town was struck with dismay on perceiving the hills covered with a body of Persian cavalry, 10,000 in number, under the command of Abbas Mirza, who had thus invaded the country without provocation in a time of peace, when the Russians were unprepared to meet such a force."

"A herald was sent by the Persian Prince, using menaces like those of Rabsakeh, bidding the heretics open their gates, and adding, 'See if your King Jesus can help you, whom we defy?' The few troops in the town were called to arms; all was confusion and dismay. Saltet called his little Christian band together, and said: 'Let us go into our house of prayer, and there lay the Persian's blasphemies before Hezekiah's God.' They went into the sanctuary, and laid the words and menaces of the Mohammedan herald before their own 'King Jesus,' and continued in prayer to him who is a very present help in trouble. Towards the close of the afternoon the Persians fearing the approach of a Russian army (which was not the case), suddenly decamped; and soon not a Persian was to be seen."

The Gospel in China.

Over 1100 missionaries and missionary workers have been sent to China during the past five years. In May, 1890, at a conference representing the 1,290 Protestant missionaries then in the country, a resolution was passed asking the home churches to send a thousand helpers during the next five years. Rev. C. F. Reid, of Shanghai, was appointed with a committee to report the result. His report shows that forty-five societies have sent new workers to China since the conference. Some missionaries not connected with any society have also gone out. Including these, the following are the additions to the staff in the field: Male missionaries, 491; wives of missionaries, 167; single ladies, 505; total in five years, 1153.

Christian Colleges in Turkey.

Missionaries in the Turkish Empire, says the Church at Home and Abroad, have started and developed five colleges for young men, one for young women, besides a large number of seminaries, academies, and training schools of a high grade. They have inaugurated a system of common schools all over the empire of such excellence and influence that every other community, however hostile to Protestant Christianity, has felt compelled, in self-preservation, to establish similar ones.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Paralysis,

partial or complete, locomotor-ataxia, epilepsy, all show a diseased or deficient condition of the brain, once considered incurable. We can show letters from hundreds of well-known physicians, telling of positive cures by

The Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant,

Freligh's Tonic

The phosphorus is what does it. Absolutely pure. Positively harmless. Can be taken for any length of time.

Regular bottle $1.00. 100 doses. All druggists. Sample by mail, 25 cts. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

L. O. Woodruff & Co.,

Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on
Every Bottle.

You Would Buy a Set of these SOUVENIR SPOONS, but you think there must be some catch on account of the small sum asked for them. It is a genuine offer and we do this to dispose of them quickly.

Remember We Refund Your Money

IF YOU FIND THEY ARE NOT AS REPRESENTED. Order to-day. Send in your orders for a set or more AT ONCE as thousands will avail themselves of this great opportunity. "FIRST COME, FIRST SERVED."

FOR ALL SIX.
HOW ARE WE ABLE TO DO IT?

These spoons were made up especially for the World's Fair trade, by ONE OF THE LARGEST MANUFACTURERS IN THE WORLD, and were left on their hands. In order to dispose of them quickly, we make this unheard-of offer, SIX SOUVENIR SPOONS, after dinner coffee size, HEAVY COIN SILVER PLATED, with GOLD PLATED BOWLS, each spoon representing a different building of the World's Fair. The handles are finely chased, showing head of Columbus, and dates 1492-1893 and wording "World's Fair City." They are genuine works of art, making one of the finest souvenir collections ever produced. Sold during the Fair for $9.00; we now offer the balance of the stock at ONLY 99 CENTS. Sent in elegant plated case, properly packed, prepaid to any address. Send Chicago or New York Exchange, Postal Note or Currency. Individual checks not accepted. Money cheerfully refunded if goods are not as represented.

LEONARD MFG. CO., Dept. 58, 152-153 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ills.

P. S.—YOU KNOW this advertisement would not be accepted by the Editor of this paper if it was not Genuine.

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.

For printing cards, marking linen, books, etc. Contains everything shown in cut. Type, Tweezers, Holder, Indelible Ink, Ink Pad, etc. Thoroughly practical for business or household use and a most instructive amusement. Sent with catalogue illustrating over 100 Tricks and Novelties, for 10c in stamps to pay postage and packing on outfit and catalogue. Same outfit with figures 15c. Large outfit for printing two lines 25c.

Brownie Rubber Stamps—A set of 6 grotesque little people with ink pad; price, postpaid, 10c.

G. A. R. series Rubber Stamps, 12 characters. Makes all kinds of Banners, Encampments and other military pictures, 25c. postpaid. Address

ROBERT H. INGERSOLL & BRO.

Dept No. 61, 65 Cortlandt St., New York. Brownies &

WE HAVE NO AGENTS

No. 1634—Surrey Harness, Price $14.50. As good as sells for $20.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. Pratt, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

PLEASURE CARRIAGES, LADIES' PHAETONS, BUGGIES, WAGONS, HARNESS, SADDLES & BICYCLES.

at Factory Prices. All goods guaranteed as represented and sent on approval anywhere. Write at once for our 1896 beautifully illustrated Catalogue showing all the latest styles and new designs in large variety, from a light cart to the most stylish Pleasure Vehicles. Prices in plain figures and Testimonials from every state, sent free to all who mention this paper.

AGENTS: Write now

HEADQUARTERS FOR

DUMPING Horse Carts

Wide and narrow tires. Steel axles. Low rates of freight from our works—Tatamy, Pa., to all points. HOBSON & CO., No. 4 Stone St., New York with the "BEST BEE" are CLEAN. Here's the record: 100 pieces in 1 hour and no ironing. Exclusive sale given to 6000 AGENTS. Write now LAKE ERIE MFG. CO., 114 E. 13 St., Erie, Pa.

CLOTHES WASHED

A SURE CORN CURE

Removes the corn—and the root—without pain or danger—A-CORN Salve, perfectly harmless. Be box.

GIANT CHEMICAL CO., 305 Cherry St., PHILA.

No. 123—Price, with lamps, sunshade apron and fenders, $60.00. As good as sells for $80.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO., W. B. Pratt, Sec'y, ELKHART, IND.

WELL DRESSED ME

wear only merchant tailor made cloth

A Tailor-Mad Suit For $10.00

We'll make to your measure a Fro or Sack Suit of equal to any tailors $14 garment $10. Other Suits and Trousers as cheap. We save 50 per cent buying big lots of woollens direct from the mills, that accounts for it. All goods sent C. O. D., with privilege of examination and try on before paying express agent. We pay express charges. Send for samples of cloth tape line and full particulars. Free

ALL WOOL GOODS

3. LOUIS VEHON, Tailor, 155 W. Jackson St., Chicago

"KOMBI" Camera $39

Sample photos and book FREE. Kombi Camera Co., Chi

THEIR GOD IS THE FIRE.

American Indian Tribes Who Worship the Flame and Know Not the True God.

IN the National Museum at Washington, there has recently arrived a very remarkable collection, illustrating as has never before been done, the extent of the practice of fire-worship on this continent. Not only had a number of the Indian tribes this ancient and heathen form of religion in the past, but even at the present day they have preserved and practiced the ceremonials associated with the old worship. For this purpose they always employ the most primitive method, the rubbing of two sticks together. For example, the Zuni use an agave stick, with sand to help the friction. The sand is used, because this renders the fire-making more difficult and therefore more meritorious in the sight of the gods. One of the objects in this collection referred to is a so-called fire-pump, utilized by the Onondaga at the feast of the White Dog, at which a white dog is sacrificed. This tool utilizes the mechanism of the pump drill, making the point of a stick revolve rapidly in another piece of wood, thus obtaining ignition. The Hindoos have a similar sacred fire drill, by means of which they make fire nine times each day for nine days at a periodical festival. The Hupa Indians of California are remarkably expert fire-makers. With a couple of simple sticks of soft mesquite wood, which they keep very dry, they can produce fire in ten seconds. The Esquimaux of Point Barrow employ for the purpose willow catkins; those of Cumberland Gulf use the white fibre of a cotton, while in some parts of Alaska shredded cedar bark is made to serve. The most remarkable ceremonial of fire worship that survives in this country is practiced by the Navajos. They believe in purification by fire, and to this end they usually wash themselves in it. The feats they perform with it far exceed the most wonderful acts of fire eating and fire handling accomplished by civilized jugglers. In preparation for the festival, a gigantic heap of dry wood is gathered from the desert. At the appointed moment the great pile of inflammable brush is lighted, and in a few moments the whole of it is one blaze. A storm of sparks flies 100 feet or more into the air, and ashes fall about like a shower of snow. The ceremony always takes place at night, and the effect of it is both grand and impressive. Just when the fire is raging at its hottest, a whistle is heard from the outer darkness and a dozen warriors, lithe and lean, dressed in narrow white breechcloths and moccasins simply, and daubed with white earth so as to look like so many living statues, come bounding through the entrance of the corral that closes the flaming heap. Yelping like wolves, they move slowly toward the fire, bringing aloft slender wands tipped with bits of eagle's down. Running around the fire, always to the left, they begin tugging their wands toward the fire, trying to burn off the down from the tips. Going to the intensity of the heat this is difficult to accomplish. One warrior dashes boldly toward the fire and retreats; another, as close to the ground as a frightened lizard, endeavoring to wriggle himself into the fire; others seek to catch on their wands the sparks that fly in the air. At last one by one they all succeed in burning the downy balls from the wands. The test of endurance is very severe, the heat of the fire being so great. The remarkable feats, however, are performed in connection with another dance that follows. This is heralded by a tremendous blowing of horns. The noise grows louder and louder, until suddenly ten or more men run into the corral, each of them carrying two thick bundles of shredded cedar bark. Four times they run around the fire, waving the bundles which are then ignited. Now begins a wild race around the fire, the rapid running causing the bark to throw out long streamers of flame over the hands and arms of the dancers. The latter apply the brands to their own nude bodies, and to the bodies of their comrades in front. A warrior will seize the flaming mass as if it were a sponge and, keeping close to the man he is pursuing, will rub his back with it as he bathes him. The sufferer in turn catches up with the man in front of him and bathes him with flame. From time to time the dancers sponge their own backs with the flaming brands. When a brand is so far consumed that it can be no longer held, it is dropped and the dancer disappears from the corral. The spectators pick up the flaming bunches thus dropped and bathe their own hands in the flame. No satisfactory explanation seems to be obtainable as to the means by which the dancers in this extraordinary performance are able to escape injury.

A Famous Author Dead.

Few authors in any language have enjoyed a wider popularity on the strength of a single book than did Thomas Hughes, who died in England, lately. As the author of the famous book "Tom Brown's School Days," he was known and loved everywhere. He published a number of other volumes, but the work referred to still remains his masterpiece and is held in regard as a classic of public-school life. In it he described life at the famous school at Rugby, under the reign of the noted Dr. Arnold, whose pupil he was, and whose ideas dominated him all his life. The superiority of "Tom Brown" to the mass of similar books which followed in its wake was due to a robust manliness. The tone was wholesome and helpful for young readers.

THE LATE THOMAS HUGHES.

The author, in his school days, was the companion of Matthew Arnold, Clough, and Stanley, whose personality is easily recognizable in "Tom Brown," under the character of Arthur. Hughes carried into his public life the spirit of the doctrine which exalted good works above dogmas. He was amongst the foremost in many movements which aimed at the social well-being of the masses of the people. In 1865 he entered Parliament. His later years were distinguished by unabated zeal for philanthropy, and he was active in many prominent schemes for the practical help of his fellow-men.

Anchored to Our Sins.

Many people who are anxious to advance in the spiritual life, are surprised at the slow progress they make. It is related that two sailors, who had been drinking, took their boat to pull off to their ship. They rowed away, but they made no progress, and presently each began to accuse the other of not working hard enough. Again they went at it, and after another hour's work they still found themselves no further advanced. By this time they had become tolerably sober, and one of them looking over the side, says to the other, "Why, Tom, we haven't pulled the anchor up." And thus it is with those who are anchored to something which they are not conscious of, perhaps, but which impedes all their efforts, even though they do their very best. Love of the world, a besetting sin, and all quite out of sight, like the anchor, may be keeping us fast fixed, and we must find out what it is, and get rid of it, before we can get on.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these and hundreds of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1764 Broadway, New York, is sending out large trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and a return on a postal card, and they will send you a large trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

EVERY READER

OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who has taken advantage of our Special Portrait Offer writes us words of praise. Read the few we print below—they all run in the same strain.

Miss Jennie Smith, Brewster, N. Y. "I received the Crayon Portrait and was much pleased with it. I had no idea it would be so good."

F. O. Robbins, M. D., Portland, Me. "I desire to thank you for your prompt and careful attention to my order, also for the most excellent work displayed thereon, and for the frame, which I consider a great bargain at the price. The picture as it stands would certainly have cost me here in Portland $25.00 at the very least. I cannot see how you can do such fine work so cheaply."

Mrs. Mary George, Plymouth, N. H. "Am much pleased with Portrait. Would like two more of the same kind, for which I enclose Christian Herald Coupons and $2.00."

Mrs. Emily Brown, Kalamazoo, Mich. "The Portrait was received today, and is just splendid. I would not part with it for twice its cost. If in the future I should want another picture, I will send you my order, and use my influence to have my friends do the same."

We have thousands others on file.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF NEW READERS

we will repeat the offer, which we hope all will avail themselves of, after reading the above generous and unsolicited opinions of those who have ordered.

Cut out the Coupon below, mail or send it with a photograph, tin-type or daguerrotype, of the person—dead or living—whose picture you desire enlarged, and a deposit of One Dollar. Within ten days you will receive by express a $15.00 free-hand, life-size Crayon (bust), with Elegant burnished carved Gilt Frame, size 30 x 34, complete like illustration, when you will pay express agent balance due of $4.50, and express charges. We positively guarantee a perfect likeness, and insure satisfaction in every particular. Your original picture returned with finished crayon. Send coupon and deposit to

The Favorite Portrait Studio, (Near Tiffany's)
17 Union Sq., cor. 15th St., New York.

New York, April 22, 1896.

CHRISTIAN HERALD COUPON. Entitling the bearer to one free-hand life-size Crayon Portrait (bust) with an elegant burnished Carved Gilt Frame—size (30 x 34) for $5.50 on deposit of $1.00; balance of $4.50 due when Crayon is delivered.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

This Coupon not good after May 23, 1896.

Cut out this coupon.

3 NOVELTIES HIGH QUALITY LOW PRICE.

ASTER, GIANT COMET WHITE. Immense. THE 3 NOVELTIES
CUPID SWEET PEA. Six seeds. White.
Japanese Imperial Morning Glory. See cut.
Alyssum Little Gem. White. Pansy Parisian Fancy.
Dahlia Double. Very large. 40 colors. New strain.
Bianthus or Japanese. Pink. Petunia—Pyramidal Tree.
Fairy Zinnia. Gems. Poppies—Double. All colors.
Giant Phlox Drummondii. Snow Queen Candytuft.
Lemon Verbena. Fragrant. Sweet Peas. 40 kinds.
Mignonette Giant Tree. Verbena—Mammoth.

16 FULL-SIZE PACKETS OF ALL THE ABOVE FLOWERS FOR 25c.

To anyone sending for 4 of these collections from 4 people, with names and addresses enclosed I will send

FREE 5 BEGONIA BULBS IN 5 COLORS OR 5 BULBS 50 CENTS.

Flowers are 4 inches across. Crimson, Yellow, White, Pink and Blotched. Bloom in pots in the house summer and winter; outside are smothered with bloom all summer. Try to secure 4 orders and get these free.

AGENTS WANTED

Little work, good pay. Catalogue—Directions for Growing, Premium, and Prize Baskets with every order. You can make money selling my seeds.

MISS MARY E. MARTIN, FLORAL PARK, NEW YORK.

CRYSTAL FOUNTAIN GERM-PROOF FILTER

An absolutely perfect sanitary filter. Filtering cylinder of porous rock, cleaned instantly by revolving against automatic rock cleaner—without opening filter. No other filter has or can have this device. Full description and prices of filters in a book that will be mailed free to you. Send postal for it. Also Gravity Filters—in which we use the Crystal Fountain Rock Tube.

The Geo. L. Squier Mfg. Co.,
Filter Dept., 62 1/2 Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A.

15 LARGE PKTS. NEW FLOWER SEEDS FOR ONLY 15 CENTS

To pay postage and packing.

1 pkt New Japanese Imperial Morning Glory (as shown on cut). This grand new variety is truly wonderful; flowers very large, all colors, red, green, marble fringed, white spotted with blue, and a lot of incomparable beauty.

1 pkt Mammoth Fan, 1 pkt Cosmos, 1 pkt Crimson Eye Hibiscus, 1 pkt Chinese Pink, 1 pkt Aster, 1 pkt Gaillardia, 1 pkt Godetia, 1 pkt Larkspur, 1 pkt Giant ette, 1 pkt Sweet Alyssum, 1 pkt Candytuft, 1 pkt Mignonette.

15 large packets choice vegetable seeds. All different kinds 15 cts. 15 bulbs New Gladiolus 15 cts. We will send the three collections for only 35 cts. Remember we refund your money if not as represented.

J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

WHY PAY RETAIL PRICE

When you can buy a custom hand-made oak leather Harness direct from the mfrs. at wholesale price. Send 2c. stamp for illustrated Catalogue, giving full description.

King Harness Co., Mfrs., 42 Church St., Oswego, N. Y.

INCUBATORS, BROODERS, VEGETABLE and CLOVER CUTTERS, BONE and GRAIN MILLS.

A complete line of poultry supplies at lowest prices. Green cut bone will MAKE HENS LAY in Winter and produce fertile eggs for hatching. Send for catalog and valuable information on poultry raising. FREE! INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., 513 1/2 Ohio St., QUINCY, ILL.

SOLD! UNDER A POSITIVE GUARANTEE

to wash as clean as can be done on the washboard and with much more ease. This applies to Terrill's Perfect Washing Machine which will be sent on trial at wholesale price if not satisfactory money refunded. Agents Wanted. For exclusive territory, terms and prices write PORTLAND MFG. CO., Box 68 Portland, Me.

SPRAY PUMPS

21 STYLES. BEST and CHEAPEST.

Catalogue and full treatise on spraying fruit and vegetable crops mailed free. Address

WM. STAHL, QUINCY, ILL.

NEW MAMMOTH POULTRY GUIDE

showing colored plate of chickens in natural colors. Finest book ever published. Almost 100 pages. Tells all about Poultry for Profit or Pleasure. Price only 15c. JOHN BAUSCHER, JR., Box 68 Freeport, Ill.

The Up-to-Date Housekeeper considers not only economy but the health of her family and the daintiness of her table fare. It is she who buys and uses COTTOLENE, a shortening that makes at once better food and better health. Delicate, digestible, appetizing. Endorsed by physicians, approved by cooks. COTTOLENE is sold everywhere, with trade-marks - "Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath on every tin. Made only by

THE N. K. FAIRBANK COMPANY, Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, New Orleans, Montreal.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

COPYRIGHT 1896, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH.

NUMBER 18.

W. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
 Offices:—Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, APRIL 29, 1896.

Price Five Cents.

MONARCHS IN CONFERENCE.

The German Emperor and Empress Entertained in Venice by King Humbert, and in Vienna by Francis Joseph the Austrian Emperor.

PUBLIC interest in Europe has been occupied for some weeks past with the significance of the tour of the Emperor of Germany. Even now that he has returned to his own land, was sufficiently distasteful, and the consciousness that it was achieved through French hostility aggravated the annoyance. But the alliance of Germany with Austria and Italy makes a broad line from north to south, across Europe, bristling with bayonets and it is trebly offensive to the Gallic mind. It is a notification to her that any aggressive movement on her part will be met by three formidable powers, pledged to unite in resistance.

While nothing authentic has yet been made known about a renewal of the alliance, public opinion, outside of France, regards the visits of the Emperor as fested in the reception of the illustrious guest. The king and queen of Italy travelled from Rome to Venice to meet him.

summoned to assist at the conferences which subsequently took place, and when the guests departed after a visit of

THE NORTHERN RAILROAD TERMINUS, VIENNA.

HUMBERT, OF ITALY.

FRANCIS JOSEPH, OF AUSTRIA.

WILLIAM, OF GERMANY.

THE ALLIED MONARCHS.

They went on board the imperial yacht, The Hohenzollern, which anchored in St. Mark's Bay under the protection of a German man-of-war. After a short stay they returned to their Venetian palace, where two days, there was an interchange of honors and courtesies, which indicated mutual gratification. The beautiful old city, whose streets are canals and whose houses are palaces, put on holiday attire in honor of the occasion. Decorations by day illuminations by night testified to the good-will of the people to their guest, and the Emperor was profuse in his expressions of satisfaction at the cordiality of his reception.

From Venice the Emperor and Empress travelled by rail to Vienna, where a welcome equally hearty awaited them. The Emperor Francis Joseph, now in his sixty-sixth year, met them at the railroad station and conducted them to the palace. The Austrian capital gave them enthusiastic greeting, and during their stay grand reviews of troops and elaborate banquets to his allies as an indication of that continued friendship which renders a renewal probable. The utmost cordiality was mani-the Emperor William and the Empress Victoria paid them a visit. Several prominent diplomatists of both were interspersed with lengthy conferences between the two Emperors. The parting was marked, as at Venice, with the conferring of decorations on the statesmen who had taken part in the conferences.

ON THE GRAND CANAL, VENICE, THE MEETING-PLACE OF THE MONARCHS.

statesmen and the public press have not been able to arrive at a positive opinion as to whether the object of his visits was of a hostile or peaceful nature. The Emperor had several interviews with the King of Italy in Venice and afterwards visited Vienna and conferred with the Emperor of Austria. The fact that the period for which the triple alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy was originally organized is approaching its termination, renders these conferences significant. Each journey, for some time past, has been declared that the alliance was on the verge of dissolution. It is, they contend, too burdensome to be maintained and has forced the opinion that a new alliance with England would be better protection for her against an attack from France. Probably this is a case in which the wish is father to the thought. France does not like the triple alliance. The spectacle of united Germany

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE GARDEN OF GOD.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Isaiah 58: 11, "Thou shalt be like a watered garden."

THE Bible is a great poem. We have in it faultless rhythm and bold imagery and startling antithesis and rapturous lyric and sweet pastoral and instructive narrative and devotional psalm; thoughts expressed in style more solemn than that of Montaigne, more bold than that of Milton, more terrible than that of Dante, more natural than that of Wordsworth, more impassioned than that of Pollock, more tender than that of Cowper, more weird than that of Spenser.

This great poem brings all the gems of the earth into its coronet, and it weaves the wisdom of judgment into its garlands, and pours eternal harmonies in its rhythm. Everything this Book touches it makes beautiful, from the plain stones of the summer threshing-floor to the daughters of Nahor filling the trough for the camels; from the fish-pools of Heshbon up to the Psalmist praising God with the diapason of storm and whirlwind, and Job's imagery of Orion, Arcturus, and the Pleiades.

My text leads us into a scene of summer redolence. The world has had a great many beautiful gardens. Charlemagne added to the glory of his reign by decreeing that they be established all through the realm—deciding even the names of the flowers to be planted there. Henry IV., at Montpellier, established gardens of bewitching beauty and luxuriance, gathering into them Alpine, Pyrenean and French plants. One of the sweetest spots on earth was the garden of Shenstone, the poet. His writings have made but little impression on the world; but his garden, "The Leasowes," will be immortal. To the natural advantage of that place was brought the perfection of art. Arbor and terrace and slope and rustic temple and reservoir and urn and fountain here had their crowning. Oak and yew and hazel put forth their richest foliage. There was no life more diligent, no soul more ingenious, than that of Shenstone, and all that diligence and genius he brought to the adornment of that one treasured spot. He gave three hundred pounds for it; he sold it for seventeen thousand. And yet I am to tell you to-day of a richer garden than any I have mentioned. It is the garden spoken of in my text, the garden of the Church, which belongs to Christ. He bought it, he planted it, he owns it, and he shall have it. Walter Scott, in his outlay at Abbotsford, ruined his fortune; and now, in the crimson flowers of those gardens, you can almost think or imagine that you see the blood of that old man's broken heart. The payment of the last one hundred thousand pounds saddened him. But I have to tell you that Christ's life and Christ's death were the outlay of this beautiful garden of the Church, of which my text speaks. Oh, how many sighs and tears and pangs and agonies! Tell me, ye women who saw him hang! Tell me, ye executioners who lifted him and let him down! Tell me, thou sun that didst hide; ye rocks that fell! Christ loved the Church and gave himself for it. If the garden of the Church belongs to Christ, certainly he has a right to walk in it. Come, then, O blessed Jesus, to-day; walk up and down these aisles, and pluck what thou wilt of sweetness for thyself.

The Church, in my text, is appropriately compared to a garden, because it is the place of choice flowers, of select fruits, and of thorough irrigation. That would be a strange garden in which there were no flowers. If nowhere else, they would be along the borders or at the gateway. The homeliest taste will dictate something, if it be only the old-fashioned hollyhock, or dahlia, or daffodil; but if there be larger means, then you will find the Mexican cactus, and blazing azalea, and clustering oleander. Well, now, Christ comes to his garden and he plants there some of the brightest spirits that ever flowered upon the world. Some of them are violets, inconspicuous, but sweet as heaven. You have to search and find them. You do not see them very often, perhaps, but you find where they have been by the brightened face of the invalid, and the sprig of geranium on the stand, and the new window-curtains keeping out the glare of the sunlight. They are, perhaps, more like the ranunculus, creeping sweetly along amid the thorns and briars of life, giving kiss for sting; and many a man who has had in his way some great black rock of trouble, has found that they have covered it all over with flowery jasmine, running in and out amid the crevices. These flowers in Christ's garden are not, like the sunflower, gaudy in the light, but wherever darkness hovers over a soul that needs to be comforted, there they stand, night-blooming cereuses.

But in Christ's garden there are plants that may be better compared to the Mexican cactus—thorns without, loveliness within; men with sharp points of character. They wound almost every one that touches them. They are hard to handle. Men pronounce them nothing but thorns, but Christ loves them notwithstanding all their sharpnesses. Many a man has had a very hard ground to cultivate, and it has only been through severe trial he has raised even the smallest crop of grace. A very harsh minister was talking to a very placid elder, and the placid elder said to the harsh minister, "Doctor, I do wish you would control your temper," "Ah," said the minister to the elder, "I control more temper in five minutes than you do in five years."

It is harder for some men to do right than for other men to do right. The grace that would elevate you to the seventh heaven might not keep your brother from knocking a man down. I had a friend who came to me and said, "I dare not join the Church." I said, "Why?" "Oh," he said, "I have such a violent temper. Yesterday morning I was crossing very early at the Jersey City ferry, and I saw a milkman pour a large quantity of water into the milk-can, and I said to him, 'I think that will do,' and he insulted me, and I knocked him down. Do you think I ought to join the Church?" Nevertheless, that very same man, who was so harsh in his behavior, loved Christ, and could not speak of sacred things without tears of emotion and affection. Thorns without, sweetness within—the best specimen of the Mexican cactus I ever saw.

There are others planted in Christ's garden who are always radiant, always impressive—more like the roses of deep hue that we occasionally find, called "Giants of Battle;" the Martin Luthers, St. Pauls, Chrysostoms, Wickliffes, Latimers, and Samuel Rutherfords. What in other men is a spark, in them is a conflagration. When they sweat, they sweat great drops of blood. When they pray, their prayer takes fire. When they preach, it is a Pentecost. When they fight, it is a Thermopylae. When they die, it is a martyrdom. You find a great many roses in the gardens, but only a few "Giants of Battle." Men say, "Why don't you have more of them in the Church?" I say, "Why don't you have in the world more Humboldts and Wellingtons?" God gives to some ten talents; to another one.

In this garden of the Church which Christ has planted I also find the snowdrops, beautiful, but cold-looking, seemingly another phase of Winter. I mean those Christians who are precise in their tastes, unimpassioned, pure as snowdrops, and as cold. They never shed any tears, they never get excited, they never say anything rashly, they never do anything precipitately. Their pulses never flutter, their nerves never twitch, their indignation never boils over. They live longer than most people, but their life is in a minor key. They never run up to "C" above the staff. In their music of life they have no staccato passages. Christ planted them in the Church, and they must be of some service or they would not be there; snowdrops—always snowdrops.

But I have not told you of the most beautiful flower of all this garden spoken of in the text. If you see a century plant your emotions are started. You say, "Why, this flower has been a hundred years gathering up for one bloom, and it will be a hundred years more before other petals will come out." But I have to tell you of a plant that was gathering up from all eternity, and that nineteen hundred years ago put forth its bloom never to wither. It is the passion-plant of the Cross! Prophets foretold it; Bethlehem shepherds looked upon it in the bud; the rocks shook at its bursting; and the dead got up in their winding-sheets to see its full bloom. It is a crimson flower—blood at the roots, blood on the branches, blood on all the leaves. Its perfume is to fill all the nations. Its breath is heaven. Come, O winds from the north and winds from the south and winds from the east and winds from the west and bear to all the earth the sweet-smelling savor of Christ, my Lord!

His worth if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love him, too.

Again, the Church may be appropriately compared to a garden, because it is a place of fruits. That would be a strange garden which had in it no berries, no plums, or peaches, or apricots. The coarser fruits are planted in the orchard, or they are set out on the sunny hillside; but the choicest fruits are kept in the garden. So in the world outside the Church, Christ has planted a great many beautiful things—patience, charity, generosity, integrity; but he intends the choicest fruits to be in the garden, and if they are not there, then shame on the church.

Religion is not a mere sentimentality. It is a practical, life-giving, healthful fruit—not posies, but apples. "Oh," says somebody, "I don't see what your garden of the Church has yielded." In reply, I ask where did your asylums come from? and your hospitals? and your institutions of mercy? Christ planted every one of them; he planted them in his garden. When Christ gave sight to Bartimeus he laid the corner-stone to every blind asylum that has ever been built. When Christ soothed the demoniac of Galilee he laid the corner-stone of every lunatic asylum that has ever been established. When Christ said to the sick man, "Take up thy bed and walk," he laid the corner-stone of every hospital the world has ever seen. When Christ said, "I was in prison and ye visited me," he laid the corner-stone of every prison-reform association that has ever been organized. The Church of Christ is a glorious garden, and it is full of fruit.

I know there is some poor fruit in it. I know there are some weeds that ought to be thrown over the fence. I know there are some crab-apple trees that ought to be cut down. I know there are some wild grapes that ought to be uprooted; but are you going to destroy the whole garden because of a little gnarled fruit? You will find worm-eaten leaves in Fontainebleau, and insects that sting in the fairy groves of the Champs Elysees. You do not pull down and destroy the whole garden because there are a few specimens of gnarled fruit. I admit there are men and women; let us be just as frank and admit the fact that in the Church who ought not to be there are hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of glorious Christian men and women—holy, blessed, useful, consecrated and triumphant. There is no grander, nobler collection in all the earth than a collection of Christians.

There are Christian men in this house whose religion is not a matter of psalm-singing and church-going. To-morrow morning that religion will keep them true as consistent and consecrated in their worldly occupation as it ever kept them at the communion table. There are women here to-day of a higher type of character than Mary of Bethany. They not only sit at the feet of Christ, but they go into the kitchen to help Martha in her work that she may sit there, too. There is a woman who has a drunkard husband, who has exhibited more faith and patience and courage than Ridley in the fire. He was consumed in twenty minutes. He has been a twenty years' martyr. Yonder is a man who has been fifty years on his back, unable to feed himself, yet calm and peaceful as though he lay on one of the green banks of heaven, watching the oarsmen dip their paddle in the crystal river! Why, it seems to me the moment as if St. Paul threw to us a pomologist's catalogue of the fruits growing in this great garden of Christ—love, joy, peace, patience, charity, brotherly kindness, gentleness, mercy; glorious fruit, enough to fill all the baskets of earth and heaven.

Again, the Church in my text is appropriately called a garden, because it is thoroughly irrigated. No garden could prosper long without plenty of water. I have seen a garden in the midst of a desert, yet blooming and luxuriant. Around us was dearth and barrenness; there were pipes, aqueducts, reaching from this garden up to the mountains, and through those aqueducts the water came streaming down and tossing up into beautiful fountains, until every root and leaf and flower was saturated. That is the Church. The Church is a garden in the midst of a great desert of sin and suffering; but it is well irrigated; for "the eyes are unto the hills from whence cometh our help." From the mountains God's strength there flow down rivers of gladness. "There is a river the stream whereof shall make glad the city of God." Preaching the Gospel is one of the aqueducts. The Bible is another. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are aqueducts. Water to slake the thirst, water to wash the unclean, water tossed high up in the light of the Sun of Righteousness, showing us the rainbow around the throne. Christ was there ever a garden so thoroughly irrigated! You know that the beauty of Versailles and Chatsworth depends very much upon the great supply of water. It came to the latter place, Chatsworth, one day when strangers are not to be admitted but by an inducement which always seemed as potent with an Englishman as an American, I got in, and then the garden went far up above the stairs of stone a shed on the water. I saw it gleaming on the dry pavement, coming down from so to step until it came so near I could hear the musical rush, and all over the high, broad stairs it came foaming, flashing, roaring down, until sunlight and we in gleesome wrestle tumbled at my feet. So it is with the Church of God. Everything comes from above; pardon from above, joy from above, adoption from above, sanctification from above.

Mark! I hear the latch of the garden, and I look to see who is coming. I hear the voice of Christ: "I am come into the garden." I say, "Come in, O Jesus! I have been waiting for thee; walk all through the paths. Look at the flowers; pluck at the fruit; pluck that which thou eat for thyself." Jesus comes into the garden and up to that old man, and touches his, and says, "Almost home, father; not any more aches for thee; I will never leave thee; take courage a little longer and I will steady thy tottering steps, and I will stee thy troubles and give thee rest. Courage, old man." Then Christ goes to another garden path, and he comes to a girl in trouble, and says, "Peace! all is well. I have seen thy tears. I have heard thy prayer. The sun shall not smite thee to-day nor the moon by night. The Lord will preserve thee from all evil; he will preserve thy soul. Courage, O troubled girl!"

When I see Jesus going up another garden path, and I see great excitement along the leaves, and I hasten up that garden path to see what Jesus is doing there, and lo! He is breaking off flowers, strip and clean from the stem, and I say, "Stop, Jesus, don't kill those beautiful flowers." He turns to me and says: "I have come into my garden to gather lilies, and I mean to take these up to a high terrace, for the garden around my palace, and there I will plant them; and in better soil and in better air they shall put forth lighter leaves and sweeter redness, and no frost shall touch them forever." And I looked into his face and said, "Well, in his garden, and he has a right to do what he will with them. Thy will be done!" the best prayer ever man made.

It has seemed as if Jesus Christ took the best; from any of your households the best one is gone. You know that he was too good for this world; he was the gentlest in her ways, the deepest in her affections; and when at last the sickness came, she had no faith in medicines. You knew that the hour of parting had come, and when, through the richness of the Lord Jesus Christ, you surrendered that treasure, you said, "Lord Jesus, take it—it is the best we have; take it. You art worthy!" The others in the household may have been of grosser mold. He was of the finest.

The heaven of your little ones will not fairly begun until you get there. All the kindnesses shown them by immortals will not make them forget you. There they are, the radiant throngs that went from your homes. I throw a kiss to the sweet darlings. They are all well now in the palace. The crippled child has a sound foot now. A little lame child says, "Ma, will I be lame in heaven?" "No, my darling, you won't be lame in heaven." A little sick child says, "Ma, will I be sick in heaven?" "No, my dear, you won't be sick in heaven." A little blind child says, "Ma, will I be blind in heaven?" "No, my dear, you won't be blind in heaven. They are all well there."

I notice that the fine gardens sometimes have high fences around them and you cannot get in. It is so with a king's garden. The only glimpse you ever get of such a garden is when the king rides out in his splendid carriage. It is not so with this garden, this King's garden. I throw wide open the gate and tell you all to come in. Many of you have tried the garden of this world's delight. You have found it has been a chagrin. So it was with Theodore Hook. He made all the world laugh. He makes us laugh now when we read his poems; but he could not make his own heart laugh. While in the midst of his festivities he confronted a looking-glass, and he saw himself and said: "There, that is true. I look just as I am; done up in body, mind, and purse." So it was of Shenstone, of whose garden I told you at the beginning of my sermon. He sat down amid those bowers and said: "I have lost my road to happiness."

O ye weary souls! come into Christ's garden to-day and pluck a little heart-ease. Christ is the only rest and the only pardon for a perturbed spirit. Do you not think your chance has almost come? You men and women who have been waiting year after year for some good opportunity in which to accept Christ, but have postponed it, five, ten, twenty, thirty years—do you not feel as if now your hour of deliverance and pardon and salvation had come? O man, what grudge hast thou against thy poor soul that thou wilt not let it be saved? I feel as if salvation must come to-day in some of your hearts.

Some years ago a vessel struck on the rocks. They had only one lifeboat. In that lifeboat the passengers and crew were getting ashore. The vessel had foundered, and was sinking deeper and deeper, and that one boat could not take the passengers very swiftly. A little girl stood on the deck waiting for her turn to Sympathy for the Slaves.

The Newly Inaugurated Philafrican League Making Rapid Progress—Its Practical Programme.

SLAVE GIRL OF A RICH LADY, DANDA.

Many pamphlets are being sent out daily in response to inquiries for information.

"The man who reads your powerful little pamphlet without having his heart stirred to the boiling point, must be a movement for the emancipation and Christianization of the 100,000,000 of African slaves is recognized by the representative leaders of philanthropic effort in America.

OT a day passes without some new accessions to the list of sympathizers or supporters of the new Philafrican Liberator's League for the emancipation and education of the native slaves in Africa. Mr. Heli Chatelain, the founder of the League, is overwhelmed with letters containing proffers of aid and co-operation in the work.

The writers all commend the organization of a Philafrican Liberator's League, and promise to use their influence to promote its interests. The detailed plan of work proposed by Mr. Chatelain has met with universal approval.

Competent and devoted young men and women are ready to start at short notice on their inspiring mission of giving liberty to the slave, civilization to the savage, Christianity to the heathen. In Darkest Africa, countless acres of virgin, yet fertile, soil await the arrival of the American farmer, who will transform that wilderness into fruitful fields and gardens of tropical luxuriance. Thousands of strong but untutored arms and hands await the American mechanic who will train them in the handicrafts of the more advanced civilization. Thousands of bright and eager, yet undeveloped, intellects await the American teacher who will lead them into the knowledge of the wonderful book-world, of God's great family of nations, of the rights and duties of Christian citizenship.

Owing to the lack of organized and systematic propaganda, our people, though well informed of the wars and rumors of war, of the sporting and exploring trips of ambitious hunters and travelers, have thus far been left in ignorance of the fact that man-hunting is still carried on at a thousand points of the Dark Continent, that the institution of slavery with its debasing practice of buying and selling human beings as chattels is still in full force even in the few spots where European posterity endeavor to check the inhuman business; that the European powers have begun in earnest to suppress the slave-traffic and to abolish slavery itself; that one of the greatest and noblest movements in the history of mankind has stirred Europe for several years, and is growing apace as facts are better known; that millions have been contributed by rich and poor in Europe on behalf of the movement. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have become acquainted with the leading agent in the movement now being organized in America, with the purpose of the Philafrican Liberator's League, and with some of the recent developments of the campaign in Africa. It is hoped that contributions will be sent to the League in sufficient volume to enable it to start the first settlement this year. The donors of the fund to found the initial Colony will be asked to name the settlement, and will have a voice in its management. It has already been suggested to the League to give to some of the first settlements the names of Lincoln, Washington, Henry Clay, William E. Dodge, and others dear to every friend of humanity.

Much of the money contributed in Europe for the emancipation of African slaves comes from the poorest classes by penny-a-week pledges. In our own land, nobody need refrain from giving because he or she can spare but little. Let all show their sympathy for the men, women and children now sighing for liberty.

Pamphlets explaining the plan of work and forms for enrollment in the League will be sent to any address by Heli Chatelain, 511 United Charities Building, New York City. All contributions sent to him or to Dr. Louis Klopsch, Bible House, N. Y. City, will receive due acknowledgment.

Our illustration represents two phases of the legalized system of slavery as still found in Angola. Thousands of natives from the interior are annually bought for sums varying between ten and a hundred dollars for a legal contract of five or ten years. In practice these people are real slaves, and are so called in the native language and in colonial Portuguese. The wistful little girl at the head of this article is an attendant on a rich lady, who wants her slaves to advertise her wealth in the streets. In the larger photograph we see the habitation of a coffee planter of Cazengo, with the employees and slaves who work the plantation.

EMPLOYEES AND SLAVES OF A COFFEE PLANTATION, CAZENGO, AFRICA

get into the boat. The boat came and went, came and went. But her turn did not seem to come. After awhile she could wait no longer, and she leaped on the taffrail and then sprang into the sea, crying to the boatman, "Save me next! Save me next!" Oh, how many have gone ashore into God's mercy, and yet you are clinging to the wreck of sin! Others have accepted the pardon of Christ, but you are in peril. Why not, this moment, make a rush for your immortal rescue, crying until Jesus shall hear you, and heaven and earth ring with the cry, "Save me next! Save me next!" Now is the day of salvation! Now! Now!

This Sabbath is the last for some of you. It is about to sail away for ever. The bell tolls. The planks thunder back in the gangway. She shoves off. She floats out toward the great ocean of eternity. Wave farewell to your last chance for heaven. "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate." Invited to revel in a garden, you die in a desert! May God Almighty, before it is too late, break that infatuation.

walking iceberg," says Dr. Theo. L. Cuyler in a letter to Mr. Chatelain. And he adds: "Africa is not only the coming Continent—it has come—and with its 'open sore' still running. Your plan seems both admirable and feasible."

Rev. Judson Smith, D.D., of the American Board, referring to the relation between missionary enterprise and the proposed work of the Philafrican Liberator's League, declares that both lines of effort "conspire to a glorious harmony, and would find their complete realization in a redeemed and Christian Africa, an object which must be dear to every believing heart." As to the national duty involved, he thinks "it would seem as though any Christian nation could not justify its title to the name, if it were to remain indifferent to this great evil, and inactive in any responsible effort to secure its permanent removal." President J. G. Thurman, of Cornell University, describes the African slave-trade as "the most horrible outrage upon humanity the world now knows," and the educational plan of the Liberator's League as "the most practical way of aiding the armed efforts of the European Powers now engaged in reclaiming Africa."

A score of similar expressions, in letters received by the League, could be cited to prove that the duty of our people to participate in the great international Lessons on Prayer.

Sunday School Lesson for May 10th. Luke 18: 9-17. Golden Text, Luke 18: 13.
By Mrs. M. Baxter.

LESSONS on prayer are closely connected in the Word of God with lessons on faith. We have seen that the exercise of faith is contingent on a right attitude towards God; that we must come to him as servants knowing that when we have done all, we are still unprofitable servants. The critical Pharisees who neither believed in, nor understood, the teaching of the Lord, put to him a question as to when the kingdom of God should come. And they received an answer which responded in no way to their curiosity. They knew the Scriptures, but they read them with blinded eyes; and, ignoring the prophecies of a suffering Saviour, they read with understanding only those prophecies of the Messiah's kingdom which gratified their national pride. Thus it ran counter to all their theology and all their national prejudices, when he said, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation [or outward show]: neither shall they say, Lo here, or lo there! for behold the kingdom of God is within you, or in the midst of you." (Luke 17: 20, 21). Following on this, the Lord spoke to his disciples about "the day when the Son of Man is revealed," and brought forth that truth so intensely important to us in these critical last days, that, at the time of his coming, "one shall be taken and the other shall be left." It is in reference to his coming then, that he speaks the first parable of prayer at this time, to teach that "men ought always to pray and not to faint." And this means not simply to pray, "Come, Lord Jesus," but also, and very specially, to live a life of prayer; a life in which God shall have his part in every transaction of our lives. Thus our Lord speaks a parable by way of illustration. In a certain city there was,—not an uncommon thing—"an unjust judge, which feared not God neither regarded man."

With neither religion nor humanity to influence him, it is easy to understand that when a poor widow, who had no personal claim upon him, beyond the obligations of his office, came to him for judgment, he utterly disregarded her. What was this woman to him? There was nothing to be gained by taking up her case; he would not put himself out of the way for a person of no consequence. A widow, who could neither benefit nor harm him. Such is the heart of a godless self-seeker! And yet

This Woman Prevailed

against him. Her cause was her life, she had nothing else to occupy her; everything depended upon the issue, and therefore she came again and again; no rebuff discouraged her, until the unprincipled judge reasoned with himself, "Though I fear not God, nor regard man, yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me." The woman by her perseverance overcame the unjust and unwilling judge. Our righteous Judge, our holy and loving Father does not need to be overcome. But his children need to be as persevering in their faith in him, as this woman was persevering in her annoying of the unjust judge. Shall not God avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him, which have the habit of praying always and not fainting, which make everything a matter of prayer, and do nothing without his counsel? [The Revised Version adds: "And he is long-suffering over them."] He may seem to delay, but they are his children, he only waits for all to be ripe before he answers them. If they have not learned to wait for him, he must needs "wait that he may be gracious unto them" (Isa. 30: 15-18). But when his hour is come, he will avenge them, not tardily like the unjust judge, who waited till he was worried into it. "Our Father will avenge them speedily." And then to connect this with what has gone before he adds: "Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find the faith in the earth" (R. V.); the faith that he is coming? In the heavenly places, where Christ has made those whom he has raised up with him to sit, among those whose citizenship is in heaven, he certainly will find the faith on the earth; but among those who are at home on the earth, there will not be found the practical faith in his coming that "one shall be taken and another left."

And, as though to connect the next parable with the preceding, we read (R.V.), "And he spake also this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and set all others at naught," [or despised others]. "Two men went up into the temple to pray: the one a Pharisee and the other a publican." The one belonging to the strictest sect among the Jews, recognized as a religious man by all; the other a despised publican, relegated by the Pharisees to the same category with sinners, "publicans and sinners." The Pharisee with all the pompousness of occupying a very large place in his own esteem, and probably thinking that his public devotions were a benefit to his religious inferiors around him, stood, and prayed thus with himself. And he was as satisfied to pray thus, and far more so than if he had first made sure of the presence of God. He was there, and his religiousness; what more did he want? If God were there, he would take too large a place in the self-filled horizon of this worldly religious man. His religion, his world, his interests, his conceptions, all emanated from, and circulated around, the idol to which he was bowing down—himself. He prayed with himself.

Self-Conscious Merit,

A publican came into the temple, and the holy presence of God had come down to crush the publican into nothingness. But the Pharisee was all unconscious of such a Presence; the only use to which he put the publican was as a set off to his own much admired goodness. Thus his prayer ran, "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are." He was a profound believer, not in God, but in his own superiority. He does not address the God of Abraham, nor yet give any name to God, and in his own heart, there was but in reality that was the god he thanked for his superiority. "I am not as other men are." In his own eyes he was the exception to the race, he was keenly alive to the faults of others, he alone was without fault. Around him were extortioners, unjust, adulterers, and all manner of bad people. Here was the "publican," so far beneath him that he did not even deign to qualify him. And then his self-restraint was admirable: "I fast twice in the week; I give tithes of all that I possess." Not a shadow of petition was there in all his prayer: "I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing" (Rev. 3: 17), was the burden of all he had to say. And with all his self-confidence, all his self-satisfaction, the miserable Pharisee would have to awake from his dream when he stood before the "great white throne" (Rev. 20: 11), and find that his name was not written in the Lamb's book of life, and that the idol of self had no power to deliver him from him that sitteth on the throne.

One god—Himself;

And the publican? Standing afar off; ashamed in the presence of the God he had met with and believed in, he would not so much as lift up his eyes unto heaven. Broken, ashamed, confounded, he smote upon his breast, he knew where the trouble was. Self, which the Pharisee worshipped, was known by the publican to be his worst enemy. The man was dealing with God, and God was dealing with him. The two met not at the great white throne, but at the cross. "God be merciful (R.V., margin, God be propitiated) to me a sinner," was his prayer. And he who knew no sin, but who, Son of God that he was, was "made sin for us," echoed the sinner's prayer, and added, "Father, forgive him, by virtue of my blood."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

"I AM NOT AS OTHER MEN."

Lord's directions about prayer, but more about Christ's own prayers. It is from him that we learn that Jesus was praying at his baptism, when the Holy Spirit descended like a dove; that on the Mount of Transfiguration he was praying when the fashion of his countenance was altered; that he was praying all night before he chose and appointed the twelve apostles; and that he offered special prayers for Peter under his approaching trial. In a previous passage about prayer we have the Parable of the man disturbed at midnight by his friend and in this chapter there is another parable of similar purport, teaching that the earnest importunity which will induce even men who act from unworthy motives to grant a petition may be used with much greater hope in approaching a Being who loves his creatures and delights to do them good. Then Christ went on to speak of the state of mind in which a man should come into God's presence. He did so, as the evangelist tells us, with the special design of reproving certain people who thought themselves righteous, a kind of people by no means extinct in our own day. He draws a picture in which two men are contrasted. The first is a Pharisee, a man punctilious in observing the minute observances and the exact letter of the law. He prided himself on his goodness and boasted, as we often hear men boast now, of what he did. He addresses God without any word of relationship, or deference, but almost as he would address another man. It is not, "Our Father," but simply, "God." Then he reminds him of his merits. It is a very pitiful showing. The positive good is only in fasting and tithing. But the Pharisee had an eye for his neighbors' faults and even while he was at prayer, he could look around and take note of the Publican's presence. Here was an example in point. He had not stooped to this man's level of collecting taxes from his own people for a foreign ruler; he had not been guilty of various crimes as other men had. The man did right to be thankful that he had been preserved from such things; Jesus was not blaming him for that. But his was no prayer. He asked for nothing, was apparently not conscious of anything lacking in himself, had no aspiration for anything higher, no desire for service. Like some people among ourselves, he appears to have thought he had attained perfection and that he had need of nothing. In striking contrast is the attitude of the Publican who was conscious of his sin and his need of mercy. This man had clearer view of his true position towards God than had the Pharisee, who was supposed by his religious standing, to be expert in spiritual matters. Of such man there was hope, but there was nothing that could be done for the Pharisee, has always been so, there is no man difficult to convert as a respectable, moral man who does not realize that there are elements of evil in his heart and that needs regeneration. The criminal and the drunkard know this having had it forced upon their notice by their lives; when they go to God for pardon they know the need and they get a blessing that the self-righteous man misses. The same lesson in another form is connected with the parable. It is the man who has the humble and teachable spirit of a child, who learns the truth and grows in knowledge and grace, not the man who is self-sufficient.

He that humbleth himself. Pastor C. H. Spurgeon used to tell the story of a disappointed man. A duke was holding a celebration, the coming of age of his eldest son, or something of that kind, on his estate, and he invited every one in the neighborhood to come to the feast and the merry-making. The park gates would be thrown open at such a time, and even one who came would be welcome. One of the duke's tenants was a gentleman farmer rather proud and haughty, but he wanted to be there. He went, however, to the castle thinking it looked better than to go in through the park-gates like the common ploughmen and laborers. But the ringing and rapping produced no response. The castle was deserted, all the servants being busy preparing the feast in the park. Feeling annoyed at the doors not being opened to him, he went away in a temp and did not share in the rejoicing. He might have entered by the park-gate but his pride prevented. "Now," Mr. Spurgeon used to add, "you say God does not answer your prayers. Perhaps you are not trying in the right way. Suppose you go to the sinners' door. You will be admitted there. You are eligible for that as none are turned away there."

Two men went up into the temple to pray. Prof. Drummond tells a parable to illustrate the way that prayer may be answered without interfering with natural law. A large well equipped steamship is on its way from Liverpool to New York. Among the passengers are a little boy and girl. One day as they are playing on the deck the boy's ball goes overboard. He runs to the Captain and begs him to stop the ship that he may recover the ball. "Oh, no, my little man," says the Captain, "I cannot stop the ship with all these people in it just to get a rubber ball." The boy goes away grumbling and confides to his play fellow that he believes the Captain will not stop the ship, because he could not. The machinery, he thinks, was fixed in Liverpool somehow so as to run till it ran down, and it is impossible for the Captain to do anything however much he asked. The next day, the little girl drops her doll through a great hole, and she thinks it is gone overboard. So she says I will ask the Captain to stop the ship to get my dolly. The boy says, "It is no use; he cannot do anything. I've tried him." But the little girl goes to the Captain with her appeal and he finds out where the doll was dropped. "You stay here," he says "and we will see what can be done." He sends one of the sailors below who finds the doll in the hold and brings it up, and it is restored while the ship goes right on. The girl is delighted and the boy amazed. The next day there is a cry of "Man overboard!" Immediately the bell rings in the engine room, the great ship is brought to a stop and the life is rescued. Then she steams on till she reaches New York. There the Captain buys for the boy a better ball than the one he had lost. So three prayers are answered. The girl gets her doll without stopping the ship; the boy gets a better ball by waiting; and yet for a sufficient reason the ship was stopped by a part of the machinery itself, not an afterthought, but something put into the ship for just such emergencies when it was made.

SILHOUETTES FROM LIFE

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BY Margaret E. Sangster.

The Prayer of Faith.

I WAS an all-day meeting, with different women leading the hours. The Mothers' and Sons' hour was conducted by Mrs. Sarah Lettenhurd, a saintly matron, whose sweet persuasive accents penetrated to every part of the great crowded church, though she did not seem to raise her voice.

Mrs. Lettenhurd was talking about faith, and she quoted in the course of her remarks a verse from one of Faber's poems:

Our hearts were but more simple
We would take him at his word,
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

"Friend," she said earnestly, "What we need is a strong literal faith. We need to lift up our heads and expect a blessing, to pray as our children pray, when they come to us for bread, and ask, as we give it them. Half our prayers omit the Lord, because we don't think he will or can grant them. Half our faith fails because we don't obey, as well as believe, I want you to obey blindly, as if you had sealed orders, and I want you to believe exactly, word for word, what the Lord says, when his voice speaks. You hear him calling across the heavenly spaces to you in the world's desert ways: 'Seek and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you.'"

The dear lady ceased and sat down, and another sister stood up and prayed. You know that tender reverent hush in a meeting when you grow awed and conscious of the presence of the Holy Spirit, when souls answer one another, and a thrill goes from seat to seat. It was so, when the pleading prayer went on. You could hear a pin drop. There was not the rustle of a gown, not the flutter of so much as a feather. All was silence, smitten through as by a sword, by one clear, anxious insistent voice calling on God, as expecting to be heard.

I have never been able to explain the thing, but in the very middle of that plover, I had an impulse to lift my head, raise my eyes, and look about me. I scolded myself when she does the same thing in church, it is so shockingly irreverent. All the same, I had to do it.

I looked up. The sea of heads was bread, each on the pew in front of it. Not a person moved. Five seats to the left of me sat a little woman nicely dressed, with a spring bonnet full of apple blossoms, a ruffled and fluffed cape. Not a person in want, evidently, but as I looked at her a voice said in my soul, in clear-syllabled words:

"Give that woman twenty dollars."

All I listened and I answered:

"Yes, Lord, I will, but let me not lose this hour and its blessing."

And again, as clearly as if audibly spoken in my ear, returned the message:

"Give that woman twenty dollars."

I cannot at all explain how I knew which woman in that hushed throng was meant. I simply did know, and had no manner of doubt that my knowledge was accurate. As the prayer ended, and the congregation joined in singing,

My faith looks up to thee
Thou Lamb of Calvary.

The lady in question quietly rose and left the church. I as quietly rose at once and followed her. But when I arrived at the outer door of the building, she was not in sight. I looked up the street and down. The pretty woman with the apple-blossom hat and the fluffy cape had melted out of sight as if the ground had opened and swallowed her.

"Well," said I, preparing to go back into the meeting, "I was deceived by my imagination. She is gone, and I cannot find her."

As I turned to retrace my steps up the aisle, it was as if an invisible hand tugged at my sleeve, and again I heard the words, "You are to give her twenty dollars."

The curious thing about the precise sum named was that at the beginning of the year I had made a vow that all the gold pieces which fell into my hands, whether larger or smaller, were to be dedicated strictly to the Lord's use. Like the first things of the Hebrew's flock, and the finest of his harvestings, they were to go to his altar for a thank-offering. So, whether a half eagle or a quarter eagle, or a tiny gold dollar drifted into my purse, it was not mine any longer, but the dear, Lord's, and one way another, I had now twenty dollars in gold belonging to my bank account with heaven.

"I have been directed to give you Twenty Dollars."

I turned, obeying the inner leading, and walking toward the nearest avenue, I saw my lady standing with a perplexed and irresolute look at a crossing. A blockade of trolley cars and carriages kept her there, till I could reach her side. As I came close enough I saw that her eyes were very sorrowful, and her lips were moving slightly as if in prayer. I spoke to her.

"Friend," I said, "I don't know why, or what you are to do with it, but I have been directed to give you twenty dollars, and here it is."

She did not belong to the Salvation Army. Neither did I. At least neither of us had joined such an organization, nor did we wear a badge, or any sort of uniform. But both of us belonged in truth to that great host, everywhere on earth, who march and labor and fight as the Captain bids us, and whose sign of conquering power is "In His Name." The instant she turned I knew this, and as she answered me I recognized a sister.

"Thank you," she said. "I was just praying for twenty dollars. Don't you know me, Mrs. —?"

Then she told me of her connection with a certain Home in which I, too, was interested, and like Christian and Hopeful in The Pilgrim's Progress, we went on together. My new acquaintance proved to be a perfectly responsible person, engaged in definite benevolent work, and anxious at the moment for a certain young man, who was recovering slowly from a low fever.

"Come with me," she said, "and, my dear, you'll see what use the Lord had to-day for your bits of shining gold."

We stepped on a trolley car, and were whirled along thickly populated streets till the houses grew fewer and we found green fields. At last we stopped at a corner in a sparsely settled region, and went to a little house standing by itself. A thin, patient-looking woman answered our ring.

"How is Tim to-day?" said my companion.

"Indeed, ma'am, no better," was the mother's plaintive reply. "Doctor keeps on ordering change of air, change of air. Sullivan county for a fortnight, or a trip to Richmond by sea. But, goodness knows, we can't raise the money to send our boy away, even if we had relatives for him to go to, not to save our lives, or his either." The mother furtively wiped away a tear. My friend was about to speak, when there came a very cheering interruption:

"Oh! but mother," exclaimed a sweet, young voice, and its owner, a girl with the face of an angel, appeared, smiling and confident behind the pale mother. "God will open the way. Why, I've prayed to him, and Tim's prayed, and dear Miss Eleanor here has prayed, and you know the promise is, 'Where two or three of you ask anything in my name, it shall be given you!'"

The mother would have spoken, but Miss Eleanor anticipated her. "Yes, Kitty," she cried, "we have prayed, and God has answered. He has sent the money just as he sent the ravens to feed Elisha. This dear lady has been his messenger, and here is just enough to let Tim have the little sea trip, or go to the mountains. Kitty, God sent it straight. Don't you remember our lesson last Sunday, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' Your brother will get well, dear, soon."

I hear people talk learnedly about telepathy and science, and mental sympathy. I let them talk. All I know is that I act under orders, and when I obey God sends me signs. The older I grow, the more truly and fervently I repeat that sentence in the creed which always thrills me with its solemn music, "I believe in the Holy Ghost."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A BRAVE PERSIAN CHRISTIAN.

Missionaries relate that a woman living at Oroomiah, Persia, forded a river on ice a number of times, with her child on her back, that she might hear the missionary in another village tell the wonderful story of Christ Jesus the Saviour of men.

JAPAN'S GREAT SOLDIER.

Field-Marshal Yamagata's Visit to the United States.

FIELD-MARSHAL YAMAGATA.

UNQUESTIONABLY the most famous Asiatic military genius of the present day is Field-Marshal Yoritomo Yamagata, the brilliant commander who led the Mikado's troops to a succession of victories in the recent war against China. Yamagata is a strategist of the highest order—being equally great in planning and in carrying his plans into execution. As Von Moltke, years before the breaking out of hostilities between France and Germany, mapped out a complete plan of campaign, providing for every contingency, so Marquis Yamagata, foreseeing the extreme probability of trouble between China and Japan, had planned, years in advance of the declaration of war, every movement of an aggressive campaign. He had devoted over ten years to military preparations, and to securing the fullest information concerning China's resources and her elements of strength and weakness, the result of his labors being that the great problem of the humiliation of the Mongol Empire—something heretofore deemed almost impossible even by the civilized Western world—was already solved in advance, and all that was needed was to proceed to a demonstration. How Yamagata's plan of campaign was carried through successfully at every point, is now a matter of history.

Sometimes ago the illustrious Field-Marshal and his suite set out from Tokyo on a tour of the globe. It was to be a tour without display; they were to travel as private gentlemen. But the great soldier's fame everywhere preceded him, and his progress across the American Continent eastward was punctuated by fetes, receptions and enthusiastic demonstrations. At New York he was accorded a reception and doubtless would have been tendered a public banquet, had his stay been of sufficient duration to admit of such a testimonial. During his brief stay—almost a flying visit—he repeatedly expressed his delight with the United States and the American people, and his appreciation of the great resources of the former and the ability of the latter to make the best use of these resources.

Field-Marshal Yamagata, whose portrait appears on this page, is tall and slender, and dresses very plainly in dark clothing of European make. He is a most methodical person in all his affairs. He is unfortunately an invalid, never having fully recovered from the illness which caused him to retire from the command of the army after having won the great battle of Wuhu. He is fifty-seven years of age and a widower, his wife (An American-born lady), having died ten years ago. The present is his second visit to this country, the first having been made in 1889. He is not a man of specially striking presence and would nowhere be taken for the brilliant soldier he really is, but his face reveals a quiet strength of character and great sagacity and penetration. At home he is a prime favorite and the Mikado, no less than his people, love to honor the man who more than any other has been the creator of the "new Japan."

THE METHODIST QUADRENNIAL CONFERENCE.

That Body Assembles in Cleveland Next Week—To Discuss Woman's Representation, the Abolition of the Time Limit, Increase of the List of Bishops, and Equalization of Lay and Clerical Representation.

WHEN the Quadrennial Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America assembles at Cleveland, the first Monday in May it will not only be the most largely attended, but the most important General Conference ever held by that denomination. Matters of the highest interest and most serious import will be discussed, and it is not improbable that a strong effort may be made to reach a conclusion regarding some of the famous "vexed questions" that have caused a wide divergence of opinion within the church in recent years.

The Conference represents nearly three million members of the M. E. Church and will continue in session almost a full month. Bishop Bowman, as the Senior Bishop, will preside at the opening session, and the other Bishops in turn, in the order of seniority. To these grand quadrennial assemblies are referred all important matters relating to the denomination which cannot be determined in the local conferences, thus constituting them ecclesiastical courts of appeals. About 350 ministerial delegates and 200 laymen will be in attendance on this occasion, representing 121 Annual Conferences, seven Mission Conferences and 12 Missions. These various bodies together have over 17,000 ministers, 14,000 local preachers and over 2,750,000 members distributed among 25,300 churches, the buildings being valued at about $108,000,000. The denomination has also 30,000 Sunday Schools, with 2,600,000 scholars and 345,000 officers and teachers.

From a well-informed source, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD learns that the programme of the General Conference will include the consideration of the following:

First: The proposition to remove the time limit for preachers. The limit is now five years, and it is proposed by the friends of the new plan to abolish it altogether. There are few changes that would so radically affect the character of the Methodist Church as the removal of the time limit. Should this prevail, the appointments will then be made from year to year, capable of indefinite extension by annual renewals. It is hardly necessary to say that the anti-time limit following in the Conference will be a strong one.

Second: The proposition to admit women as lay delegates to the General Conference. This proposition has been discussed and defeated quadrennially for a number of years, but its outlook is not at all unpromising this year. The women will have some strong champions, as in former years, and it is understood that several of the Bishops, including Fitzgerald and Hurst, and Rev. Drs. Flood and J. W. Hamilton, entertain and will advocate liberal views on the subject. The strongest opposition to the proposed innovation will probably come from New York delegates, the grounds of opposition being that it is against Bible teaching. On the other hand, the Western delegates will claim that as women are members of the M. E. Church they are entitled to exercise all the rights and privileges of members. This matter of woman's representation has been debated in State and General Conferences until at last it is claimed that something like an expression of the general sense of the Methodist Church, as a whole, may be expected at the coming Conference. In the minor Conferences, two amendments (known as the Hamilton Amendment and the Baltimore Amendment) have been under fire, the first annual giving representation to women, the second to exclude it, the result being that, last year, a sufficient majority of the Conferences placed themselves on record as in favor of the new movement. The total vote stood 683 to 6 and 404 against.

Third: To make the lay representation equal to the clerical. These New York has six ministerial delegates and two lay. To these would be added four more lay delegates, and so on, throughout the entire list of States. Under the present arrangement the churches pay all the expenses of the delegates, and it is even now a very heavy draft on their collections. To increase the number of lay delegates would add greatly to the present burdens of the churches. This proposition will doubtless be discussed energetically in Conference.

Fourth: The proposition to add to the list of bishops by the election of probably five new bishops, the present number being eighteen. Many well-known names have been suggested as candidates for this high honor, among them being of Dr. James M. Buckley, editor of the New York Christian Advocate. Dr. Buckley's editorial ability is of so high a standard that his retirement would be a distinct loss to religious journalism. This proposition also embraces the provision that one of the new bishops may be a colored brother, and this suggestion becomes all the more interesting when it is understood that, in the exercise of the privileges pertaining to the office, the colored bishop may be called upon to preside over Conferences. The salary of a bishop is $4000 a year and traveling expenses. Portraits of the present body of bishops appear on the next page.

Fifth: The proposition to add further to the list by the election of two or more "missionary bishops." At present the only "missionary bishops" on the roster are Taylor of Africa, and Thoburn of India. The new additions would include a bishop for China, one for Japan, one for South America, and probably one of the Pacific Islands.

Sixth: The choice of Agents for the Book Concern in New York City. It is probable that Mr. Eaton will be reelected, and perhaps Rev. Dr. A. J. Palmer, at present Pastor of St. Paul M. E. Church of this city, associated with him in themanagement of the business.

Through the courtesy of Rev. J. R. Creighton of Milwaukee, Wis., we are enabled to present a drawing of the new Armory Hall, Cleveland, where the Conference will assemble. The hall is not yet quite finished, but it is believed that it will be in proper condition before the delegates meet. It is a spacious building, with facilities for accommodating a large gathering. In the centre of the hall six hundred or more delegates can be seated comfortably. There is a large gallery, and on either side of the hall is a row of private boxes, fifty-two in number altogether. Immediately in the rear of the delegates are the seats for the audience, which, together with the reserved seats and the balcony accommodations, will be ample for the attendance expected. On the stage or platform which runs almost the full width of the hall, will be seated the bishops, the fraternal delegates, etc., with the presiding bishop in front. Immediately back of the platform are four rows of seats, behind which will be the choir. Mr. Creighton is now preparing for the Entertainment Committee a souvenir containing the portraits of all the delegates to the Conference with sketches of their careers. It will also give the story of what Methodism is doing for the world.

The C. E. International Convention.

The Fifteenth International Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society will be held in Washington July 8-13. The meetings are to be held in three large tents, and there will be denominational rallies and prayer meetings in twenty-two churches. Monday, July 13, the last day of the Convention, will be devoted to the celebration of the first anniversary of the World's C. E. Union.

How They Helped Armenia.

Friends of the Cause, who Put their whole Heart into the Relief Work.

WHEN the Lord's work is in consecrated hands, it does not suffer from lack of enthusiasm and vigor, and this has been splendidly demonstrated by the manner in which the cause of Armenian relief has been pushed by Christian churches of various denominations, Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues, Y.M.C.A.s., Bible Classes, Sunday Schools, business firms and private individuals. Indeed, while all our contributing friends have helped the Fund generously, there are some who have done such signal service as might well stir a multitude to the love and admiration of good deeds. Foremost in this charitable work of aiding the persecuted Armenians, and feeding, sheltering, and clothing the homeless exiles—widows and orphans of the martyrs who fell in the recent massacres—has been the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union, whose Secretary and Treasurer, Miss Ida B. Stephens, of Hackettstown, N. J., has forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD $826.47. "With the money," she writes, "go many prayers that, if it be God's will the persecutions may soon cease." Rev. D. M. Stearns, Church of the Atonement, Germantown, Pa., sent $748.70, the combined offerings of his Union Bible Classes, who have already made for themselves a shining record in various fields of Christian work at home and abroad. The Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Churches of Wisconsin, through Rev. T. D. Roberts, Randolph, Wis., have generously contributed $324.53. Mr. Thomas Calderwood of Lyons, la., made a munificent gift of $200 to the cause. Mrs. David Cousin of Houston, Tex., contributed a like sum, with a heartfelt prayer for the sufferers. Mr. W. H. Wortman, of the firm of Wortman & Ward, founders, etc., London, Ont., sent $195.00 to aid the relief work. Mr. H. H. Mott, Grafton, N. D., forwarded $253.50, as the combined offering of himself and a number of others, whose hearts had been moved to sympathy. He writes of these gifts, "every penny of this is self-denial money. . . . May the Lord so overrule the affairs of nations that the land of martyrs may be speedily delivered out of the hand of the oppressor." Through Wesley Van Wart, Mayor of Frederick, N. B., came the contributions of the Y. M. C. A. and a number of citizens, amounting to the handsome total of $131.65. The Women of New Brunswick, $200. L. C. C., Highland Park, $100. A Christian lady of Roxbury, Mass., who wished to be known simply as Della Vennell, sent a check for $145. From Mrs. A. H. McKelvy of Warren, Pa., who had personally and lovingly laid the cause of the Armenian Christians before a number of the churches there, came a gift, $147.98, with the fervent expression, "Surely the love of Christ constraineth men." Mrs. C. C. Evans, Lancaster, Pa., A. A. and C. L. Dikeman, an unknown donor, who sends neither name nor address, another who sings "In the name of Hissos Nazareetees (Jesus of Nazareth), Mr. Samuel Huston Marble Cliff, O., two friends who sig Jennie and Carrie Emma B. Stork, Germantown, Pa., Mrs. E. D. Brackett, Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society Westminster Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Mo., J. E. W., White Pigeon, Miss E. M. Stevens, a lady of Surrey England, now traveling in this country Mrs. Alexander J. Bruen of Lakewood N. J., Miss Clara S. Craven of Clarkboro, and Frederick H. Rindge of San Monica, Cal., have each sent $100 with the most heartfelt expressions of sympathy for the sufferers in Armenia. To the roll of honor many other names of generous donors might be added, for where have given so nobly it is difficult to discriminate. Each and all have the inward satisfaction of knowing that their consecrated gifts have not only reached in time but in the hands of the American Board missionaries have been the means of doing incalculable good and saving thousands lives.

ARMORY HALL, CLEVELAND, O., WHERE THE M. E. CONFERENCE WILL MEET.

The following contributions were received during the closing days of the Fund. Owing to a pressure on our columns some of the acknowledgments have been unavoidably delayed:

Correct'd amount brought forward.....$45,235.78	Whipple, Mrs. E. J.	2
Reid, Mrs. & daughter 300	Whipple, J. S.	2
Reynolds, Mrs. E. S. 500	White, T. I.	5
Reynolds, Mrs. M. J. 100	White, B. R.	5
Richardson, P. C. 500	White, J. P. & wife 5	5
Roberts, Mrs. Geo. 200	Whitford, Mrs. E. W.	5
Ritchie, Cyrus 100	Whitford, Myrtle A.	5
Robbins, Mr. & Mrs. M. 500	Whitney, John S.	10
Roberts, Mrs. Liza 100	Whitney, Mrs. Will	10
Robertson, Alvin 200	Wilcox, Mrs. J.	5
Robertson, Mr. H. C. 50	Wilcox, Mrs. R. A.	5
Robertson, Mr. J. Q. 50	Willard, E. C.	5
Robertson, Mrs. J. Q. 50	Williams, D. E.	5
Robertson, Wm. 200	Williams, Miss E.	5
Roby, R. H. & family 150	Wilson, John S.	10
Rodgers, J. S. 100	Winch, Helen M.	1
Rogers, J. J. 200	Winch, Wesley M.	1
Rowe, H. T. & A. 100	Wood, Mrs. E. col-	1
Royer, J. Q. 100	lected by	1
Rundle, Sr. Jas. 50	Wood, M. R.	2
Russell, Diana and	Woods, Hannah M.	1
Rebecca Turill 200	Wright, J. W.	1
Sager, Mrs. W. H. 200	Yates, Jim	1
Salmon, Mrs. Mary 150	Yonde, Mrs. A. E.	1
Sandager, P. E. 100	Young, Mrs. A. E.	1
Sandersfield, J. B. 500	Ann P. West Liberty	1
Sanford, S. M. 200	Alma, Hugh	1
Sangeand, John 100	Will & Freddie Conway	1
Schneider, Mrs. Wm. 200	Zelia, Baltimore	2
Smith, Mrs. Edith K. 200	Oconee, Athens	10
Seearis, Mrs. L. K. 100	In memory of Grace	1
See, Mrs. Ellen 200	Lindhurst	1
Seedorf, M. 500	"Words in memory	1
Seigmiller, Lucy 100	of our 3 girls"	5
Shepard, W. H. 250	Snowdown, Capten	1
Shipman, Mrs. J. C. 300	Village	2
Shoemaker, Jennie 100	M. B. H. Winchester	1
Shuman, A. 100	M. & Mrs. W. M. Pitts-	1
Shumway, B. 100	Dun	1
Shumway, Lillie 50	M. A. W. Deposit	2
Simonsen, Mrs. 200	A. D. M. W. Balto Co.	1
Simpson, Mrs. M. R. 100	C. P. Balto Co.	1
Slawson, Mrs. H. H. 500	E. A. W. V. Mushpang	1
Sloan, H. 200	E. A. R. Thorndike	3
Smith, Misses 500	N. A. B. Chiltonville	2
Smith, Mrs. 100	N. S. G. New Haven	5
Smith, Mr. Annas 100	N. E. W. Fitchburg	1
Smith, Miss Blanche 25	M. & G. S. New Bedford	2
Smith, Mrs. D. W. 100	E. M. N.	1
Smith, Mrs. E. 200	Mrs. F. A. O. Boston	2
Smith, Mrs. Emma 100	M. C. B. Jersey City	1
Smith, Mrs. L. F. 200	A. W. F. Phila	2
Smith, Lola 150	S. J. K. Brookfield	1
Smith, Miss Mae 25	A. D. M. W. New Vill.	1
Smith, Mrs. A. 50	A. J. P. Phila	1
Smith, Pearl 15	Mrs. H. Deepwater	1
Smith, Mrs. Sylvia 90	J. L. P. Highland	31
Snyder, C. & A. 100	L. C. C. Highland Park	10
Sparks, Mrs. R. E. 500	Mr. & Mrs. H. Lakeland	10
Spence, Mrs. W. W. 1000	Mr. & Mrs. C. A. Danby	5
Spencer, G. F. 500	M. B. L. Jacksonville	1
Stapleton, Mrs. E. 100	Mrs. A. W. E. Oxford	31
Steele, J. W. 1000	J. Q. A. Hawkeye	31
Steele, E. 100	A. New Brunswick	51
Stensby, Alex. 100	Mrs. D. R. Mill Creek	1
Sterling, Pearl 500	Mrs. M. J. Z. Neshannock	1
Stevenson, Mrs. Sue 100	Falls	10
Stewart, Lulu 100	L. K. Jacksonville	51
Stewart, Dr. Morse 500	A. Y. Iowa	21
Stewart, Mrs. S. E. 100	A. E. E. Eaton Rapids	1
Stone, Annie L. 100	R. R. Jersey City	11
Stowell, W. L. 200	M. C. S.	1
Stone, Mr. O. N. 50	R. St. Joseph	101
Stone, Mrs. S. E. 100	H. L. R. Chaplain	11
Stoner, M. A. 25	Z. Kingston	11
Stowe, Mrs. Clark 100	H. D. W. Holland	11
Strahan, Mary 100	P. U. E. Hartford	21
Strickler, I. S. 25	N. A. C. Hamlet	1
Strickland, Mrs. Lizzie 200	O. T. D. E. Montpelier	1
Swabb, Mrs. G. 1000	C. T. Alabama	21
Swanson, Theodore 50	F. B. Guilford	11
Thomas, Mrs. E. E. 100	F. G. N. Batavia	51
Thompson, B. A. & wife 100	Mrs. J. A. C. Fenton	15
Thompson, C. G. 200	R. S. S. Baltimore	51
Thompson, Mrs. Eliza 100	A. W. L. Hartshorne	51
Thompson, Mrs. J. A. 100	R. R. Jersey City	11
Thordalson, Thomas 100	W. H. E. Shelby	10
Thorpe, Mrs. Diana 100	Mrs. J. W. M. St. Louis	51
Tierlin, Mrs. A. R. 50	W. H. A. Avon Park	11
Tilden, Roxana 200	Mrs. E. N. P. Bklyn	10
Tobias, L. C. 500	A. R. A. No Hancock	3
Tufts, J. K. 200	M. C. B. Pittsburg	10
Tyzer, G. R. 200	S. A. G. Belleville	10
Upham, Frank 100	A. E. N. Y. City	10
Van Buren, Mrs. E. 1000	A. E. N. Y. City	10
Van Horner, Susan 200	G. W. W. Elmira	15
Van Hook, H. M. 25	J. A. M. P. Florence	10
Verrill, C. L. 50	Mrs. O. V. Kalamazoo	10
Vo. D. Edmer 50	J. G. Adrian	10
Waggoner, J. M. 100	Mrs. L. E. M.	751
Wales, Mrs. M. E. 250	F. E. J. Charleston	10
Walker, Mrs. J. A. 100	Mrs. F. E. Lebanon	21
Walker, Mrs. J. N. 100	M. M. B. Bklyn	101
Walker, Mrs. L. C. 500	C. C. Hallowell	10
Wall, Mrs. Dr. 100	M. B. B. Jackson	10
Wamsher, Mrs. H. 50	E. P. E. Fayetteville	10
Wamsher, Jasper 25	M. E. S. Canidia	20
Wamsher, Joseph 25	J. M. V. Legon	20
Warner, Mrs. P. E. 100	F. A. C. S. S. S.	10
Warner, Mrs. M. D. 500	L. E. Fever Falls	10
Warner, J. K. 100	Waters, Martha B.	100
Waters, Martha B. 100	and over 100 others to be	100
Wehr, Oswella B. 50	acknowledged next week.	100

BISHOPS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF AMERICA. (See preceding page.)

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, payable in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the publisher. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letters when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. For each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canada, and Mexico, foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers not to make good omissions caused by faulty remittances.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State or country should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post Office at New York, as Second-Class Matter.

Not Worse but Better.

THERE is a widespread impression among good people that scenes of violence and murder and outrage are on the increase. My impression is that this comes from the vigilance of the newspaper press; not more crime but more crime quickly reported. The devil of destruction is a very old devil, and he is to be seen at every great fire where there is anything to steal, and at every shipwreck where there is anything valuable floating ashore, and at every railroad accident where there are overcoats and watches to be purloined. On a small scale I saw it in my college days when in our literary society of New York University we had an exquisite and costly bust of Shakespeare, and one morning we found a hole bored into the lips of the marble and a cigar inserted. There has not for the last century been a fine picture in your art galleries, or a graceful statue in your parks, or a fine fresco on your wall, or a richly-bound volume in your library, but would have been despoiled if the hand of ruffianism could have got at it without peril of incarceration. Call it what you will, Communism, or Socialism, or Devilism, it has been abroad for ages. Sometimes it shows itself by throwing vitriol into a beautiful face, sometimes by wilfully scaring a horse with a bicycle, sometimes by crashing its cart into a fine carriage, sometimes by loosening the railroad track near a bridge over a deep chasm. The philosophy of the whole business is that there is a large number of people who, either through their laziness or their crime, own nothing, and are mad at those who, through industry and wit of their own or of their ancestors, are in possession of large resources. The honest laboring classes have never anything to do with such murderous enterprise. There has never been one instance where an honest, industrious man had any engagement in such villainous schemes. It is the villainous classes, who would not work if they had plenty of work offered them at large wages. Many of these people, by the destruction of law and order they would be advantaged, and the parting of the ship of state would allow them as wreckers to carry off some of the ship. I do not let good people get into a panic as though some new thing had happened to the nation. I have heard a great many fearful prognostications as to what was coming. Never in my memory, or in yours, has there been as good order in England or America as there is to-day. Think of the old firemen's riots in Philadelphia. Think of the theatrical riot that threatened to tear down New York, and the military had to fire into the mob because the friends of Macready and Forrest differed about which was the better actor. The evils now abroad are bad enough, but they will not be repressed by a panicky discussion which exaggerates them above all their perfidious predecessors.

Weather Nonsense.

WE have recently had another period of the impotency of human prophecy. For a long while we were told that on a certain day the land would be racked with tempest, and lo! that day turned out to be the mildest and most genial day of the whole season. Because by study of the laws of weather man may come to a good guess concerning the conditions of atmosphere two or three days ahead, we have now pretenders who profess to rifle omnipotence of its secrets for two months approximate.

The valuable premising that advantages the shipping and puts the world on healthy guard is discredited by the wild gamblers in weather. It will never be well for the world to know very long ahead what will happen. Part of the best discipline of life is the disappointment that comes from the unexpected changes of climate. So our faith in God is cultured, and so we are made sympathetic with those who cannot escape exposure, however much they anticipate it. And so we are made willing at last to exchange a world of tempest for a world of calm. Air without any chill. Sky without any cloud. Eternal spring-tide without any winter. I make protest against the prophets of meteorological pretension who create infidelity in regard to reasonable and well-founded prediction. The only reliable prophecy for a long while ahead is that which is founded on Scriptural data. Hurricane and euroclydon are to be laid away in watery graves, and a time of balmy atmosphere is to come in which there shall be paradise regained. The intense heats will be lifted from the tropics, and the intense cold lifted from the Arctic, and the uncertainty lifted from the temperate. All this is foretold, sometimes under one phraseology, and sometimes under another. Twelve manner of fruits, and every month a production. Gardens swathing the earth with deep color of full-blown rose. That settled weather of unbroken loveliness is coming as surely as the Bible is veracious, and God who makes the seasons can control them. About that weather it is safe a hundred or a thousand years before to make announcement.

The Next Coming.

THE world started with a theocracy, the personal reign of God on earth. Why not close with a theocracy, the personal reign of Christ on earth? There is not a form of government that satisfies the people. Multitudes are tired of monarchies, and tired of limited monarchies, and tired of despotisms, and tired of republics. It may be that the dissatisfactions will increase, and after man's failure at government, the eternal God in the presence of Christ may step down to catch up the reigns of authority that human hands have not been strong enough to manage. While I have not studied the theory long enough to adopt it, I see it would be a glorious thing if Christ would come and set up a universal throne, and all sin and oppression and war would cease, and the world would take a happiness such as it has never dreamed of. Just think what a place this world would be if complete justice and righteousness reigned in all cities and in all lands! I do not know what your habit is, but my habit is getting more and more to see in all secular events a divine significance, and I find nearly all worldly events pointing in one direction—a glorious consummation when this world shall be the Lord's, either by the presence of Jesus Christ taking government and ruling and reigning on earth, or by the power of the Holy Ghost achieving the same result. For that august arrival may we all be ready—our lamps burning, if it be in the night; our shouts of welcome ready, if it be in the day. If Christ ever does come to reign on earth personally, I think it will be on this continent; for if on Europe or Asia he descended it would be among this nation or that nation; but on this continent all nations are gathered, and it would be a reception on the part of all kingdoms, and all monarchies, and all republics. What a place to set up his kingdom! midway between the Alleghany and the Rocky; and Asia would send to him its contribution from the one side, and Europe would send to him its contribution from the other side—and a universal kingdom. Mr. Orton, a little while before his death, presented to me a telegraphic chart which surprised me amazingly. But much has gone on since that time to make the map a still more wonderful exhibition, showing that the time is hastening on when some one will be able to put his finger upon the knob of one telegraphic instrument and thrill all nations with the one touch. But however Christ may come, and whenever he may come, and wherever he may come, let us all be ready.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

L. Martin, Knoxville, Tenn. How should contributions for Armenia now be sent, so that they may reach the proper quarter?

Address all contributions for Armenian relief to Rev. C. C. Creagan, American Board, Bible House, New York, by whom they will be cabled to the field.

E. R., Newfield, Pa., writes:

I never feel like indulging in sumptuous living when so many in Armenia are hungry. We take a slice of bread, toast it a nice light brown, and spread very little butter. Eaten warm, with a cup of "cambric tea," it makes a palatable supper—no sauce, no cake. Try it, all you who are in sympathy with the hungry. "Cambric tea," is a very little milk in a cup of boiling water.

F. Wemple, Scranton, Pa. What are the facts concerning the proposed resettlement of the Jews in Palestine?

The only modern scheme or project of the sort is one devised by Holman Hunt, the English artist. He suggested that a Syndicate of leading Jews raise $500,000,000 and approach the Sultan, with the consent of the Powers, offering to purchase Turkey's rights in Palestine. It is hardly believed that Turkey would listen to such a proposition.

F. L. H., Milton, Oreg. Who was the first emperor or king crowned by the Pope of Rome? Was it not Phocas?

There is nothing in the published history of the reign of Phocas, Emperor of the East (602 to 610), to show that he was crowned by any of the Popes. On the other hand, it is recorded of him that, "without assuming the office of a prince he renounced the profession of a soldier," thus intimating the absence of any ceremonial like a public coronation. In 752 A. D., Boniface, Apostolic Vicar, representing Pope Gregory III., anointed and crowned Pepin as King of the Franks. This was the beginning of the temporal dominion of the Popes.

"Reader," New York. 1. Is there any way of finding out with what kind of wine Christ used when on earth? 2. What kind of wine is used in administering the Lord's Supper in the churches?

1. There is no evidence as to the kind Christ used. It was probably the ordinary kind of the time and country. The people do not appear to have been a race among whom drunkenness prevailed to anything like the extent that it does among ourselves. The fact, however, that Christ was reproached for not abstaining (Matt. 11: 19), appears to indicate that even then, John the Baptist was not an exceptional instance of total abstinence. You may be quite sure that abstinence in our day is quite consistent with Christianity and may be defended on the principles Christ inculcated. 2. Some churches use unfermented wine, but we do not know what proportion of them.

W. H., Franklin, S. Dak. How and by whom was the Bible translated? Is there any reason to suppose that any part of the translation is inaccurate?

The early translators had comparatively few facilities, while modern translators have had the advantage of an acquaintance with many ancient MSS. and inscriptions that have been discovered in recent years, and some of which shed light on the Scripture narrative. Consequently, every successive translation has resulted in certain changes and modifications, but mainly in the mere form of the language, and in no single instance have the essentials of the Book been affected by the changes. The Bibles of Luther, Wickliffe, Graftenberg, Tyndale, Cranmer, Coverdale, and Parker were in form and substance identical with our own "King James Version," which appeared in 1611, being the result of the combined labors of over fifty distinguished theological scholars. The latest revision (by American and English revisers) has proved the Authorized Version to have been correct in all essentials. The difference between the two is the occasional variation of an unimportant phrase, the word being, of course, the most reliable of these respects, as it holds more closely to the meaning of the originals. European and American scholarship has learned much concerning the original Scriptures since the King James Version.

G. W. G., Tarkio, Mo. Why does the time of celebrating Easter vary in different years?

It is associated with the Jewish Passover which is regulated by the moon. Easter Sunday is the first Sunday after the full moon which occurs after the equinox. To the Jewish Christians, the festivals were in correlation, and when they saw the Jews celebrating Passover, their thoughts went to Passover time when Christ suffered. No date on the calendar was so closely identified with Christ's death as was the Passover.

Mrs. W. G. W., Buckner, Ark. Where did Jud and Gary labor as missionaries? When they begin their work? Will you give an account of their work?

William Carey, the famous Baptist missionary, labored in India from 1793 to 1834. His other work he translated the Gospel into twenty-three different languages. Adoniram Judson labored for Christ in Burma from 1813 till 1845. Both were mighty men of God and were the founders of the greatest missions of half a century.

Student, Milwaukee, Wis. How did the pre-Names of our week days originate?

They are mostly named after ancient Scandinavian and Roman deities. Monday is, literally, Moon-day; Tuesday, the day of Thiu, of war; Wednesday is the day of Wodin, the chief Scandinavian divinity; Thursday is the day of Thor, or Donar, god of thunder; Friday is the day of Fre, the Scandinavian Juno, and Saturday is day of Saturn.

R. Standt, Myerstown, Pa. 1. Is anything known of the later years of the life of Mary, the mother of Jesus, after Christ's death and ascension? Was James the Less the same as James brother of John?

1. Many legends, some of which date back to the fifth century are told purporting to scribe Mary's later life. They are not, however, worthy of credence and even Catholic authorities have pronounced them apocryphal. The chief of these legends has it that she lived twenty-two years after the ascension. No living, however, of a reliable character is known. 2. James the Less, was the son of Alphaeus and his title was probably given on account of his being younger or shorter in stature than James, the son of Zebedee, John's brother.

C. Clark, Scranton, Pa. A minister recently told that it was now generally believed that Christ was in India during the period between his ascension and the commencement of his ministry. A book had been published proving it. You know what basis there is for the statement?

A book was certainly published in France about two years ago advancing the theory you mention. It was called "The Unknown Life of Jesus Christ." The author, a Russian traveler, said that while journeying in Tibet, he had spent some time in a Lama monastery at Hamis, and had there seen a life of "Issa," the Mohammedan name for Christ. The chief Lama, he said, had translated portions of the work, and these he incorporated in his book. The statement attracted wide attention, and has been made the subject of investigation. Prof. J. A. Douglas has visited the monastery at Hamis, and now publishes refutation of the whole story. The Russian was never sheltered at the monastery, never talked with the chief Lama, and was never told of a life of Issa, and the Lama emphatically declares that no such book is, or ever has been, in the monastery, and he never heard such a book, and as he is well acquainted with Buddhist literature, is certain that no such book is in existence. The Russian's statement is thus categorically contradicted.

Subscriber, Iola, Wis. Yes, it is our duty to give, even where forgiveness is not asked or repented shown. We must truly forgive, if we ourselves be forgiven by our heavenly Father. Gracie, Burlington, N. S. Send your full name, address and premium list will be forwarded. J. L. M., Flushing, N. Y. Yale, New Haven a Princeton at Princeton, N. J.—M. A. Martin, Melbourne, Fla. It is a compound of many languages and in its present form was the growth of centuries. F. Metc., Naperville, Ill. The scheme to give the Armenians to America is impracticable many reasons, but chiefly because it would require millions of dollars to carry out.—Mrs. Stenut Wakeman, O. We know of none at present.—Mrs. L. Wilson, Brockbridge. None whatever have no alternative, now exists.—Mrs. C. Asher, Brandon, Pa. The reasons have been stated repeatedly in these columns.—J. S., Philadelphia Pa. Yes, they would undoubtedly be pleased to receive them. Be sure to prepay expressage.—Mrs. J. M. Fleming, Clovis, Fresno Co., Cal. can do good second-hand Gospel literature to advance her mission work.—A. R. G., Vail, N. J. They are a type of the resurrection, or the coming of life, death and life, therefore, used at that time.—Mrs. L. D. M., Stockwell, Ind. You will find it Luke 11: 46.—Mrs. L. S. T., Mart, Tex. Method.—Mrs. E. R. W. The lines are from a poem "Montgomery," an old British author.—Mrs. L. H. Hamilton, Ont. No, such an idea would be fatalism. 2. As soon as a child gives evidence of understanding, a Yes, there are many things understood now that will doubtless be made clear hereafter. If natural phenomena seem mysterious and inexplicable, how much more spiritual things.—Mrs. Elmer E. T., Hudson, Mass. Already repeatedly explained.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

King Menelik at Home.

SINCE the Italian defeat at Adowa there has been a general desire to know more about the Abyssinian king who was able so decisively to repel the European invaders of his dominions. To some extent this curiosity has been gratified by M. Gaston

AN ABYSSINIAN COIN.

Verheyen, a Frenchman connected with a commercial company trading with Red Sea ports, who two years ago visited King Menelik's capital and spent some months there, arranging for an extension of business relations. The Frenchman was cordially welcomed by the king and saw a great deal of him and of the Empress Tayou, during his stay. He reports them as living in a luxurious palace furnished in European style, with thick soft carpets, gilded curtains, mirrors, gilt chandeliers or modern articles of furniture. Menelik, according to this account, is a man in the middle life, but retaining all the energy of his youth. He has a pleasant, good-natured face, very dark complexion, and strong limbs and hands. He wears a peculiar costume comprising a number of skirts and a tunic worn over a man's garb of European style, and on state occasions assumes a massive gold crown, so heavy that a man of ordinary strength would be unable to dislocate his neck by wearing it. His wife, Tayou, was once a beauty and is still attractive in appearance. She has a reputation of Europeans in general and especially of Italians. She recognizes, however, the value of their services in the development of the country and encourages her husband to have them about him as advisers. One of these, a Swiss engineer, has lately been making the king acquainted with the destructive powers of dynamite. The royal pair take a deep interest in all the details of social and political progress, and have a regular court with officials corresponding to those of European courts. They will travel long distances at any season of the year in order to be present at the opening of a new bridge or public building, or the inauguration of some local improvement. The review of troops, or inspection of artillery practice is a favorite occupation with them. They call themselves Christians, but their church is allied to the Coptic Church, and their worship is accompanied by strange ceremonies. Priests chant the Psalms of David at their services, accompanying them with a wild dance to the beating of copper cymbals. The Frenchman, like other travelers who have visited Abyssinia, was surprised to find several clear traces of Semitic origin among the people, both in rites and in beliefs. They dislike the name of Abyssinians, and insist that they are Ethiopians, and are the people referred to by that name in the Bible. As they lay claim to that name, it may be hoped that the prediction regarding them will be fulfilled:

"Ethiopia shall haste to stretch out her hands unto God." Ps. 68: 31.

Elm's Descendants.

An interesting ceremony was witnessed on April 10 on the Campus of the Pennsylvania University. It was the planting of a tree by a descendant of the old elm tree under which William Penn made his treaty with the Indians in 1682. The original tree which on that November day more than two hundred years ago, spread its branches over the founder of the colony and his red-skinned friends, was blown down in 1810. But the family who owned the land on the banks of the Delaware River from which the tree grew, found that a shoot from the old tree had taken root. They removed it to their farm at Bay Ridge, N. Y., where it grew for some time. Subsequently the family removed to Wilkesbarre, Pa., and not liking to leave the tree so rich in its associations, they had it carefully dug up and reverently transplanted to the grounds around their new home. It was from this tree that the shoot was taken, which Governor Hastings planted a few days ago on the University Campus. There can be little doubt that it will grow up to be a tree like the famous one associated with Penn. Experience proves that we can have greater confidence in the offspring of a tree resembling the parent stock than we can have in the perpetuation of a good man's traits in his descendants. The promise is still to be fulfilled:

"As the days of a tree are the days of my people." Isa. 65: 22.

A Self-Answered Prayer.

From a traveler in the Transvaal comes a singular story, which he declares was given to him by a Boer with every assurance of its absolute truth. In the early days of the Transvaal before it and drive in the direction of the camp, "hartebeest" in abundance. The Boers praised God for the answer to prayer and the man gained a reputation for piety which he still retains. His device served its purpose, but the impiety of it is obvious. The principle of it is, however, very common, but the singularity of this case is that it is the converse of the usual course. This man ascribed to God the glory for the success which was really the result of his own scheming, while the ordinary way is to appropriate to self the credit of success and attribute to God the afflictions which are the natural consequences of wrongdoing:

"He saith By the strength of my hand I have done it and by my wisdom; for I am prudent." (Isa. 10: 13.)

A Swindler's Scheme.

The extraordinary effrontery of a prisoner is described in a New Jersey journal.

KING MENELIK AND QUEEN.

It appears that for some time past, the police have had suspicions that a man who frequented a saloon in Jersey City was engaged in what is known as the green-goods business. There was an obvious difficulty in getting evidence against him as the people he swindled could not expose him without revealing their own criminal purposes. Recently, however, the police obtained one of his

THE ARTILLERY HEADQUARTERS OF ABYSSINIA.

became a republic, there was a famine and a party was organized to hunt for big game. For several days there was no success. The Veldt seemed deserted. Then one of the party announced that, like the patriarchs of old, he would appeal to the Lord for help. With one attendant he left the party at sunset retired into the bush and was not again seen for twenty-four hours. When he returned, he announced that he had prayed and within three days, game in abundance would pass the place of the camp. The party remained, and two days later were delighted to see a troop of "hartebeest" approaching. They made a great haul and returned to their homes laden with meat. The man of prayer became famous and is still more famous now, for he holds high office in the Transvaal. His companion on that night excursion avers, however, that the appearance of the game was not an answer to prayer. The man did not go into the bush to pray, but made all speed to the Kaffir kraals. By threats and cajolery he so worked on the fears of the Kaffirs, who had already had some experience of the fighting quality of the Boers, that they undertook to collect circulars in which, in guarded language, he offered to sell counterfeit bills at very low rates. A detective in the guise of a pretended purchaser succeeded in detecting him and he was lodged in jail. He appeared to be penitent and well-behaved, but a few days ago, suspicion was again excited against him. It was noticed that his mail had suddenly and largely increased. Letters poured in for him in such numbers as seldom come to a man who is awaiting trial on a serious charge. An investigation was made and it was found that he had caused the insertion in a newspaper of an advertisement for agents who could do a lucrative business in their own homes through the mails. Answers were to be sent to him enclosing a postage stamp for further information. The address he gave was simply the street address of the prison, so that people unacquainted with the locality were unaware that they were writing to a prisoner. The bait was completely successful and the man reaped a harvest of postage stamps which was the object he had in view. The incident shows how utterly punishment fails to reform an evil nature. One would have thought that even if he had fallen back into evil ways afterwards, the man would have abstained while undergoing punishment from the crime which had brought him into trouble. The same determination in evil is seen still which the prophet deplored in his day:

"Thou hast stricken them but they have not grieved: thou has consumed them but they have refused to receive correction." (Jer. 5: 3.)

BRIEF NOTES.

At the Recent State Convention of Christian Endeavor Societies of Michigan, forty members offered themselves as volunteers for the missionary field.

Mr. Morris K. Jesup of New York is the new President of the American Sunday School Union. The death of the late ex-Judge William Strong rendered an election necessary.

The Women's Christian Temperance Unions of Southern California will hold their convention at Pomona May 5-8. A great gathering is expected. Mr. John G. Woolley has promised to attend and address the meetings.

Rev. F. B. Meyer is Expected to Visit this country again this summer. He has had several invitations, one of which is from Mr. Moody, and another from the Christian Endeavor Trustees, who want him to speak at the annual Convention.

In Norway there are 189 Young Men's Christian Associations, with a membership of 10,000. Seventeen of the Associations own their own buildings, and General Secretaries are employed at Christiania, Bergen, Moso, Stavanger and Baklandet.

Mrs. M. Baxter has been Conducting an evangelistic work in Switzerland during the past month. She has held meetings at Geneva, Lausanne, Arenal, Neuchatel, Gruzelen and other towns, giving addresses in French and English. A great blessing has resulted from her labors.

Christian Endeavor has Scored two Victories in California. At San Diego the united protests of the Christian Endeavor Societies have succeeded in stopping street-paving on Sunday, and at San Francisco they have induced the authorities to enforce the law closing the saloons on the Lord's Day.

Rev. E. E. Davidson has been Conducting successful evangelistic meetings at Mount Morris, N. Y. An extraordinary interest has been manifested, large numbers coming from the surrounding towns to attend the services. Upward of four hundred persons made profession of faith during the meetings.

A Newspaper Published in Jerusalem, Printed in the Hebrew language, states that Dr. Bless, Supervisor of the Palestine Exploration Fund, has lately discovered, near Mount Zion, the exact course of the city walls of Jerusalem built before and during the Roman era; also a number of vases and mosaics of high historical value.

A New Temperance Organization has been formed at Maidstone, England, which is spreading to other towns. Its object is to unite Christian people to oppose the admission of men who are engaged in the liquor traffic to office and membership in the churches. Mr. E. Tennyson Smith, the leader of the movement, is delivering stirring addresses calling upon the Church to clear its skirts of all responsibility for the liquor business.

A Manifesto Issued by the Authorities of the Mormon Church notifies all persons holding office in the Church, that they must not accept nomination for political office in the new State without previously obtaining the consent of the Church. Moses Thatcher, the Mormon "Apostle," who had omitted this formality before accepting the nomination for United States Senator, has been sentenced to deposition for his offence.

The National Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held at St. Louis instead of San Francisco, but three conferences will be held on the Pacific Coast, at which Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard will speak. The British Association will hold its annual convention in London in June. A number of delegates, including Miss Willard and Miss Anna A. Gordon will represent the United States.

The Presbytery of Philadelphia, Having Received notice from Dr. A. T. Pierson of his baptism by immersion at Croydon, Eng., has revoked the letter previously given to him in which he is described as a minister of the Presbytery in good standing. The Presbytery also passed a resolution directing the Stated Clerk to inform Dr. Pierson that "the Presbytery is clearly of the opinion that a change of denomination is demanded by his immersion, and by all the proprieties of the situation. That we therefore advise Dr. Pierson promptly to seek admission into some denomination more in sympathy with his convictions on baptism."

The Chautauqua Programme just Issued is of an unusually attractive character. Among the preachers are Rev. Geo. A. Gordon, of Boston; Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, of Chicago; Pres. E. Benjamin Andrews, of Brown; Rev. Chas. Aked, of Liverpool, England; Prof. George Adam Smith, of Scotland, and Bishop John H. Vincent. Among those already secured for lecture courses are: Profs. F. G. Peabody and John Williams White, of Harvard; Prof. Homer B. Sprague, of New York; Dr. Joseph Agar Beet, of Richmond, England; Dr. George Adam Smith, of Glasgow; Pres. E. Benjamin Andrews, of Brown; Prof. Charles Sprague Smith, of New York; Pres. W. R. Harper, of the University of Chicago; Dr. J. M. Buckley, of New York, and Mr. Leon H. Vincent, of Philadelphia.

Commander Ballington Booth and Mrs. Booth have issued a statement of the reasons which have brought about the unhappy division in the Salvation Army. They say that the chief cause was the attitude taken by Gen. Booth during and after his visit to the United States. He misunderstood the country and the people, objected to the display of the national flag, showed great hostility of feeling and sentiment toward American habits and methods, insisted upon the British name, refused to accept regulations made in England, controlled the Army in this country in the minutest detail, declined to accept any suggestion of a division of the country, and insisted upon annexing certain portions of Salvation Army districts in the United States to Canadian headquarters.

Spring in Sunny Italy.

The Season when the Peasant-Farmer Follows His Ox-Team at the Plough—Scenes from Rural Life.

ITALY, within the last decade, has become a land of more than usual interest to Americans for many reasons, the principal being that by far the greatest volume of immigration to our shores comes from that sunny kingdom. Our official statisticians tell us that since the beginning of March of this year, 16,000 Italian immigrants have reached the port of New York alone, being 9,320 more than in the same month last year. During the first three months, over 47,000 Italians came to live on our free soil—almost twice the number of the corresponding period of 1895. Within five years 292,010 sons and daughters of Italy have left their native land for these shores—a movement so vast (and threatening to attain still grander dimensions) that King Humbert's government is naturally anxious to find some pretext for putting a stop to it.

What is the reason that these Italians,—who have probably the most picturesque country in Europe, if not in the whole world, as their home—are so eager to cross the ocean and cast in their fortunes with Columbia's sons and daughters? There are many reasons. Italians have lost neither their courage nor their patriotism, but they are sick of seeing their brothers butchered in the useless colonial war now being carried on in Abyssinia, and which is regarded by the Italian people as a wicked waste of blood and treasure for the sake of political aggrandizement. They are weary of a steadily-increasing system of taxation that has reduced the lot of the laborer to something hardly better than slavery, and which permits not even the poorest in Humbert's dominions to escape. To the Italians, other than those interested in upholding the pomp of royalty, the glitter and tinsel of a court have been indulged at the cost of their country's prosperity. Italy's brilliant parade as a member of the trio of great European Powers, together with the maintenance of a huge standing army and a costly navy, have meant ruin for the agriculturist and the mechanic, as well as to all classes engaged in peaceful business pursuits.

These are some of the many reasons why the Italians are here, like the vast flocks of spring-birds that head from the south when winter is ended, and seem to darken the sky with their dense flight. The new arrivals will soon settle down to the duties of Americans. They will soon recall, with amusement, the quaint old ox-ploughs, the slow-trudging, heavy teams and the rough field-work of the farm, some idea of which is conveyed in the photograph on this page. Yet, despite the all-prevalent poverty, there is a great deal that is picturesque and attractive in Italian rural life. It is only in the country that one sees the old-style Italian costumes, the dress that has marked the national taste for centuries. In Tuscany, the queer-looking straw hats; in Naples, the Phrygian cap; in Rome, the striking costumes of cloak, wide-brimmed hat and knee-breeches—all these are rapidly disappearing, being replaced by modern European dress, such as the people of London or Paris, or even New York, might wear without attracting attention.

Italian farmers usually find life a severe problem. Although living in what is emphatically an agricultural country, the conditions are such that agriculture is one of the least profitable of pursuits. A more lucrative employment is that of vine-growing, orange or lemon culture, or vegetable gardening, and there are no better market-gardens in Europe than those to be found in the outskirts of some of the larger Italian cities. Many of the immigrants who are now coming here are skilled agriculturists and gardeners. They will, however, be greatly astonished at the ingenious modern implements used by the American agriculturist, for in their own land the old Roman plough, as it is found described in Virgil, may still be seen in use in various parts of the country, while in not a few places all the implements of husbandry might have been copied from some of the sculptures in the most ancient Roman monuments. Heavy ploughs (such as that in the illustration), are found in the Veneto drawn by as many as six pairs of oxen—and all this to cut a furrow less than nine inches deep. The Podolian cattle, white with enormous horns, are used for draft, while the smaller Alpine cattle are kept for dairy purposes. Men's and women's work on the farm lasts from daylight till long after dark and there is little opportunity for social relaxation. At festive seasons, however, which are frequent in Italy, there is general merrymaking and they are poor and miserable indeed who cannot unbend during those pleasant days and share the general enjoyment.

SPRINGTIME IN ITALY—FOLLOWING THE OX-PLOUGH.

The Hostess' Personality.

Whatever the other attractions, writes Mrs. Agnes H. Morton, the ultimate fact is that when people assemble socially they meet to talk. In popular definition "sociable" means "conversation," and "unsociable" means "silence." The success of any social gathering will be largely decided by the prevailing spirit of the conversation. And in this, more than in any other feature of the occasion, the personality of the hostess should appear. No matter how many gifted conversationalists there may be present, she should not permit an outsider to create the atmosphere of her house. Even the most diffident woman, who glides unobtrusively through a throng elsewhere should courageously assert herself when the responsibility of entertaining rests upon her.

The Cradle a School.

Even in the cradle, education begins, for it is the first school-house. Everything about the cradle is educative; and, what is more, this primal education is radical and determinative. It gives shape to the mind; the impressions there made are deep and abiding; they are not easily rubbed out by all the later rough usage of the world. In the nature of the case the mother is the first teacher, whose lessons almost inevitably abide through fair weather and foul. How important then that these early teachings be correct!

"The most important part of education," says Plato, "is right training in the nursery." The soul of the child in his play should be trained to that sort of excellence in which, when he grows to manhood, he will have to be perfected. He should be elevated by an inclined plane rather than vertically; the former is usually easy, while the latter is always difficult, sometimes impossible. The cradle song is often the inspiration of the whole life.

Years that Sit Lightly.

It is not every man or woman who can lightly carry the burden of the years. While still young, in some unexpressed way (probably the natural feeling of the immortal being), they always expect to be young. Whether their expectation is realized depends almost altogether upon themselves. They think no more about it, however, till the first gray hair comes like an admonishing ghost upon the scene. At seventeen they were of the opinion that the first thing in the world was beauty. But at thirty-five they find it is better to be young than to be beautiful. And it very often happens that the girl who was quite beautiful, with vivid color, and sparkling eyes, and tender flesh and dim-

A Boy and His Mother.

CAN a boy get away from the prayers of his mother, Or sink to a depth that her love cannot reach? Can the billows of time pile so high on his other, That he can't see her form on the white, shining beach? Can the dark clouds of sin fold so close about him, That the light of her faith does not shine in his way? Can he feel all the friends of this world so near and doubt him, While his mother has faith, love, and truth to still pray? Ah, no! not a boy can escape from the prayers of his mother. Ascending each day from her bedside to bed, He will still hear the tones of her voice in his head, When the dear form is laid neath the floor-strewn sod. Then pray, mothers, pray while the boy is breathing, And pray if Death's angel has sung in his ear, That God in his mercy the boy is receiving. For the sake of the prayers you have said him here.

—ANNIE ARMOUR

The Birds Back with us Again.

THERE would seem to be some continuity of feeling between children and birds; certain it is that the young people are the first to mourn the departure of songsters at the approach of frost, and the first also to greet them back on the return of spring. All the song-birds are welcome again, and the woodlands are vocal with their chorals. First comes the blue-bird, which is the herald of spring. "I know of no sound in nature that takes a more direct route to the heart than that tender warble," writes Ella Gilbert Jones in Advance. "And when a choirlet passes for an enchanting moment over one's head and fills that pause with a rondeau, as if blue wavelets of sound were lapping the white beach of memory. Forgone springtimes show their sweet child-faces, and the very graves give up their dead. Many birds have a wider vocabulary, of one only did Lanier write:

A wise bluebird Puts in his little, heavenly word.

It is the exquisite quality of his song which renders it a delight, yet the despair of poets. Four syllables embrace it; no word of man has rendered them, with each hearing they grow less translatable. Yet the children seem to understand and enjoy them, possibly because they are nearer to nature and nature's God than some of their elders.

What it Means to Stoop.

While an erect attitude, in person and character, is admirable, yet there are times when it is wise to unbend, and when to preserve the erectness uncompromisingly would imply a lack of some of the essential qualities that go to make success. Of course, this stooping has no reference to the relaxing of the moralities. It is probably best explained by an anecdote: Benjamin Franklin, when a young man, visited Rev. Dr. Cotton Mather. At the close of the interview the doctor showed him out of the house by a back way. As he proceeded along a narrow passage he led to the lad, "Stoop! stoop?" Not immediately comprehending the meaning of the advice, he took another step, and brought his head rather violently against a beam that projected over the passage. "Stoop, lad," said Dr. Mather, "you are young and the world is before you; learn to stoop as you go through it, and you will save yourself many a hard thump." It is an easy lesson to learn—this science of stooping wisely and gracefully at the right time and in the right way. When you have to deal with a man in a passion, who fulms and foams and uses bitter words, tell him you long to stand up straight, tell him he is wrong and unreasonable, and fight the matter out boldly. But it is of no use; it is the veriest folly to argue with an angry man, and by far the wisest course is to stoop. It is no more a disgrace to do so than it is to bow before a passing tornado, or bend before a sudden gust of wind. Stoop—as gracefully as you can—when the storm has begun to subside, whisper the kindly word that turns away the gusts of sudden wrath.

Enconomize Your Time

The old maxim that "time is money," is fully realized by successful men of business, but there are many who, while they would not dream of being spendthrift with their coin, think nothing of squandering valuable time. The habit of indecision is a great time-waster, and young people especially should strive to avoid it. There is no one factor of success stronger than that of having acquired good habits of work. Having once formed these, we are left free to look beyond the mere details of the work and to see how best we may accomplish that which we have undertaken. It is like playing the piano. At first we have to study the music and the keys, and each note we strike requires a separate and distinct effort of the will, but in a little while we begin to read the music readily, and as our fingers wander over the keys we are not conscious of guiding or directing them. And this is the way we should learn to do our work, whatever it may be. The details of it should never trouble us, but they should become as a second nature, while calling forth our very best effort to secure satisfactory results.

Service in the Home.

Questions on the Christian Endeavor
Topic for the Week Beginning May 10.
Pages 12: 9-18.

HOME life seems often to get less of the Christian's attention than it should have. The devout spirit, the high aspirations after holiness sometimes become inert in the family circle. The light is rather for the benefit of those at a distance than those who are nearer its rays. Even the members of the same church and the children in the Sunday School class have a different conception of the Christian character than the father and mother, the brother and sisters. Yet it is in the home that the test of sincerity and thoroughness is applied. There are so many opportunities here for the exercise of the Christian spirit, that to find them is a fault that has no compensation in exact orthodoxy of belief, or in public service. Fretfulness, impatience, selfishness, indifference to the welfare and comfort of members of the same family, are faults which are inexcusable. They all come from the relaxation of the physical strain consequent on frequent public meetings and the excitement of intense emotions. There is a possibility of religious dissipation, which is hurtful in its way as other kinds of dissipation are. It leads to an unwholesome craving for excitement and an artificiality which are foreign to the quiet, deep consecration of heart and life. The soul which droops and pines save and the impetus of public gatherings, good music, and impassioned oratory, is dangerous near a condition in which the godliness becomes extinct. One of the first signs of such a condition is neglect of home duties and repugnance to the humble services of the household. A right conception of Christian life is that which is not confined to outward observance, but is in the heart, like a strong spring in a machine, enabling it to perform its function wherever it may be placed. The Apostle gives a lesson in the passage associated with the Topic, of the characteristics which should be seen in the Christian wherever he may be, whether in business, the boarding-house, or the home. The love that is genuine and is not assumed as a cloak: the abhorrence of evil in all its forms, whether of duplicity, untruthfulness, selfishness, or censoriousness; the readiness to yield honors, to take a humble place, and have no ambition but for usefulness and helpfulness; industry, cheerfulness, patience, prayerfulness, benevolence, magnanimity, sympathy, humility, peaceableness—this is a comprehensive list which covers the whole life and being. It is useless to think of acquiring all these characteristics. They are not to be gained by an effort such as will ensure for the learning of a language, or the rule of social politeness. They are no success manners, but go deep down into the principles. They are a part of the outward manifestation of the power of Christ dwelling in the heart. With that uniting force there, the character will bear the fruits as a tree bears its fruit. Out of the heart proceeds all the evil of life and character; out of the heart must come the good. When the heart is changed, when it is moved by that strange, mysterious power that in some unknown way Christ manifests there, these graces spring spontaneously and need only to have an unobstructed course. With such characteristics in each member of a family, the home might become the vestibule of heaven. Even one member of a family possessing them, may do much to transfer family life. The Christian who thus becomes a light in the household is doing the best but Christlike service which cannot fail to be rewarded.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

FALL INTO LINE.

WM. H. GARDNER. CHAS. K. LANGLEY.

1. O - ver hill and loft - y mount - ain, Hear the gos - pel trum - pet call.
2. Gird - ing on the roy - al ar - mor, Wave the glo - rious ban - ner high!
3. Sound a - gain the sil - ver trum - pet; Sound a - loud the bat - tle cry!

Lis - ten to the strains in - spir - ing. 'Tis a mes - sage for us all.
While for truth and right con - tend - ing, An - gels watch you from the sky.
"All for Je - sus, all for Je - sus!" We shall con - quer though we die.

Chorus.
Fall in - to line for the con - flict, Fall in - to line for the con - flict.
fall in - to line, fall in - to line, fall in - to line,

Ral - ly at the trumpet's call ral - ly, ral - ly. Ral - ly Christian sol - diers all.
Ral - ly ral - ly at the trumpet's call, ral - ly ral - ly

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.
From HIGHEST PRAISE for SABBATH SCHOOLS.
By Permission of the Publishers

Under the Banner.

A Hymn for the Lord's Supper.

HE brought me to the banquet,
Else had I never come;
He taught my heart to praise him,
Else had my lips been dumb.
With patient quest he sought me—
The sheep that went astray;
With his own blood he bought me—
A price none else could pay.

"Is it for me, sweet Saviour,
This feast of love divine?
For me these precious emblems,—
The broken Bread, the Wine?
With faith so poor and feeble,
With love so faint and cold,
May I approach thy table?
May I communion hold?"

So questioned I. For answer,
He bade me look above:
And lo! displayed above me
The banner of his love.
Inscribed upon that banner
My welcome I may trace;
Oh! how it doth unravel
The mystery of grace!

And now, no more I tremble,
No more my faith is weak;
He surely will interpret
The joy I cannot speak.
And since he spreads the Table,
And doth the feast prepare
For all his chosen people,
I, too, may venture there.

Deaf.

(Written after reading in "The Christian Herald" the article about the Deaf Mutes' Convention.)

THE God who said, "Let there be light,"
And splendors burst to view,
Said not "within a world so bright,
Let there be silence, too."
He said it not to sky or plain,
Therefore we hear the breeze,
The glad some patter of the rain,
The thunder's harmonies.

The merry matin of the birds,
The water's rippling fall,
Our senseless ear had never heard,
Had silence compassed all.
Child laughter ne'er had thrilled the heart,
No name of mother been,
A vital sound with magic art,
The wayward ones to win.

God gave us power to hear the sound,
When vibrant in the ear,
And memory with clasp profound,
To store love's accents dear.
Yet here and there a tongue is tied,
An ear receives no sound,
Music hath ne'er electrified
That pathless void profound.

Yet not a void. No! no! for see
The face and eye aglow,
The windows of the soul are free.
For doves to come and go,
And many an olive branch they bear,
And many a myrtle leaf.
God grant they also may prepare
For harvest home a sheaf.

Then may the music of His tone
First break their silent thrall,
And they shall know as they are known,
And comprehend it all.

Greene, R. I. —EMILIE M. BROWN.

Saints in Judgment.

Rewards According to Meritorious Service to be Appointed at the Judgment.

BY NATHANIEL STARKEY.

(Continued from page 331)

CHRISTIAN faults and shortcomings take on a serious aspect in the light of the facts we have presented. Their consequences stretch out into the unseen world. There is, so far as I have been able to see, no Scriptural basis for the Romish doctrine of Purgatory, but I am convinced by a careful study of the passages I have quoted and others, too numerous to quote, that the worldly and inconsistent Christian does not enter on the enjoyment of the eternal rest in the same way as does the consecrated believer.

There is, and it seems reasonable that there must be, a difference based on attainment as well as on services rendered. This classification, I believe, will take place at the judgment we have been considering. It will resemble the examination that takes place in a good, well-managed school on the arrival of new scholars. The certificates they bring with them of good conduct and of the percentages gained in the school they have been attending, are noted, but a few well-directed questions are put and the Principal places them in the grade to which in his opinion they belong. Very much in the same way, I think, the position of the Christian in God's many mansions will be decided. Thank God, there is no need for any real Christian to dread that he may hear the words so often heard from the lips of the Principals of our public schools, "There is no room!" There will be a place for every one who has believed on Christ and has been united to him by a living faith. What that place shall be will be decided at this judgment.

I imagine that these positions are all connected with service of some kind. The Infinite Being who controls the whole universe, must have an endless variety of commissions to be performed. Some of these may be of the most humble kind, but then it will be realized that any kind of service for him, is honorable. Others will involve responsibility and proportionate honor. But in all, I think we may infer from what we see around us here, the duties to be done will be assigned, not only with regard to the capacity and merits of the servant, but with regard to his development and education. If this view of the future is correct, or approximately so, it is evident that even with the idea of punishment excluded, the servants of God may be of innumerable grades and rewards may be of endless variety.

At this judgment of the saints, I can imagine an infinite number of surprises. There are first who will be last; and last who will be first. As all are ministering spirits, they may be sent on missions which will open up to their minds wonderful views into the divine mode of government. Some great man who with all his good qualities and large gifts may have shrunk in this world from contact with the poor and uneducated, may be commissioned to carry some Lazarus to Abraham's bosom. Some eloquent preacher on whose words great audiences hung, may have had some defect in his character, known only to God, which is to be eradicated by aiding some lowly Sunday School teacher in teaching a class of children. A Christian, who in a moment of weakness fell as David did in the matter of Uriah, may be commissioned to strengthen the faith of some tempted believer, or to whisper to some fallen one words of encouragement to return to God. So, there may be discipline and the dross being purged from gold, until promotion comes and in the near presence of God perfection is attained.

CHAPTER XVII. A SIBYLLINE CONFESSOR.

JANET was back in Washington, involved in all the details of hospital life, so shifting and yet so alike in general character. Life seemed to be one long, continuous hospital ward.

As far as she could see, there were two endless, whitened walls, two rows of white cots on which stretched the sick and wounded. Between those two rows, she was either halting to attend to the need of some sufferer, or else passing along in the hurried effort to reach some duty beyond. But how varied were the cases she met, how changing their wants! She was wondering if she were the Janet Morton whose life had been so secluded in a northern village, if out of the old quiet temperament and stable ways, her soul had not slipped, and gone into these surroundings of exciting pain, and inside of a being whose spirit and methods were so unlike those of the old life. How had it come about? She could only say she had put herself into the Hands that direct and shape all trusting lives. She had tried to take God's way, tried to meet God's opportunities. She believed it must be well. She saw very sensibly her imperfections, and felt that while her finished work had bounds and that she could readily see from one to the other, her unfinished work had no such limits. It appalled her to look, and she dared not look long upon the field she could not occupy with her personal care. She met all kinds of people in the hospitals. Some were very rough and animal-like, who had gone into the war from mercenary motives or from a reckless interest in what was bloody and sensational. Others were very refined, gentle in their ways, of intelligent thought and speech. There were the despondent and the cheerful, the docile and the self-sufficient, the trusting and the suspicious, the generous and the mean. Then there were those of varied religious training, and although Janet was only nurse and not chaplain, yet she knew how many humble little doors to a patient's heart the nurse alone knows about, and if she have tact and the Lord's anointing, she can open those doors, enter, and in the saying of quiet little words give balm and medicine to the sick of soul. And if Janet had put herself into his hands, would he not furnish her for the work—no, his work? Would not the same Providence that called out Abraham from his father's house, that went before him and traced his path, be God and Guide, Leader and Life to this trusting one today, though only a hospital-nurse?

"I think so," said Janet confidently, and that assurance was as bread to her hungry heart.

One day, there had been a battle, and word had reached the hospital to be ready to receive its share of the wounded.

"It is a very indefinite quantity, Miss Morton," said the doctor, Frank Percival, "but we will set up as many beds as we can. I know I can fill up as you to oversee it."

He had already learned that his nurse with quiet, undemonstrative ways, could be relied upon in any emergency, and this was an emergency! Such an accession as the hospital received to the numbers! Such a crippled, bandaged, mutilated lot as came hobbling or dragging into the hospital, wounded in a leg or in an arm, and then there were the more serious cases occupying stretchers borne by muscular bearers. One by one, they all found beds, and the work of the hospital went on more busily than ever.

"Is Ned among them?" Janet wondered.

She had not seen them since the day of their arrival at the front.

"No, they are not here!" she exclaimed with relief, when she had gone through the list of arrivals, searching from cot to cot. There was one other she looked for, wondering if after years of separation, she would recognize him. It had come to her through the messages sent home by Ned and Sandy, and then reconveyed to her by Mrs. Blakey and Paulina, that Winthrop Melrose was in the Federal army and that Sandy had seen him. Oh, how Janet's heart fluttered when she read this! It beat like a bird bruising itself against the bars of its cage till she pressed her hand upon her breast to keep down the pain. She could seem to see again those eyes that looked afar, whose peculiar power John Morton had felt and acknowledged. She had never passed a company proudly tramping in the capital avenue, or a solitary soldier on the sidewalk, or any of the newly occupied cots in the hospital, without looking twice to see if she might not possibly catch a glimpse of the eyes tender and thrilling that looked from afar. But she never beheld the face in which they were set so deep and oh how steadfast and true they were!

"He must be true, must be mine!" she said, pressing back the pain that would dart through her heart.

Did she now see this face in the hospital among the wounded lately arriving?

"No, I do not see him!" she said. At first, she was sorry. Hers would have been the exquisite pleasure of personally ministering to his wants. Then she indignantly thrust this away.

"That is supremely selfish, to be willing," she said, "to have our friends in pain that we may be near them."

Her noble nature would have put under foot the sentiment craving gratification at such a cost. But Janet did see among the new cases a face that interested her, not pleasantly, and yet somehow compelling attention.

"Whose disagreeable face is that?" she said. "He seems to know me. I, too, have seen him somewhere."

Yes, his eyes followed her, and once, she thought, he moved his head in recognition, but she could not speak positively about this. What made her think she was mistaken, was the fact that the eyes of the man seemed to avoid her while seeking her.

"Don't know who it is!" she concluded. "And yet if that big, heavy beard were removed and his hair cut, and—why, it does seem as if I had seen him before, but where?"

She could not answer, only there followed her everywhere these eyes that kept searching for her and yet kept looking away from her. The man had not been one of her patients. She only noticed him as she went through his ward. She saw, too, that his face seemed to grow whiter and thinner each time she saw it.

"Death's mark is on him," thought Janet, "and who is he?"

One day, his nurse came to Janet. "Miss Morton," she said, "there's a man in my ward who wants to see you. He says he knows you. I have seen him looking at you when you passed."

"Oh, that man?"

"I think you must have noticed 'that man,' as you call him. Guess you are right."

"He wants to see me?"

"Yes."

"Well, I will come."

When Janet went to his bed she saw the same look as on previous days, at first a seeking for her and then a trying to avoid her. She noticed, too, how much weaker he looked, how hollow-eyed, while his dark, heavy beard contrasted strangely with his face, so thin and white.

"Did you want to see me?" asked Janet. He moved his head in assent.

"Something is on my mind," he said, "and if you were a priest, I think I would like to confess it to you."

"How natural that voice sounds, and yet there are tones unnatural," thought Janet. "I wonder who it is!"

"Why," she asked, "did you think you would like to confess to me?"

"A priest, they say, has some kind of power, and is sort of used to it," he replied in a broken, husky voice. "Now, I wasn't brought up that way at all. I am a real Yankee, but—but that's the way I feel."

"God has the power to forgive."

(Continued on next page.)

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Absolutely Pure.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 Wall St., N. Y.

1896 High Grade Bicycles

Shipped anywhere C. O. D. at lowest wholesale prices.
$100 "Oakwood" $57.50
$85 "Arlington" $45.00
$65 " " $37.50
$20 Bicycle $10.75

Latest models, fully guaranteed; pneumatic tires; weight 17½ to 30 lbs. All styles and prices. Large illustrated catalogue free. Cash Buyers' Union, 162 W. Van Buren St. B-18 Chicago

BARLEY CRYSTALS

New Diuretic, Relaxant, Tonic Cereal; also Gluten Dyspepsia Food, and Diabetes Food. Pamphlet and Cooking Samples Free. Unavailable in America? Europe? Ask Dealers, or Write Farwell & Kibben, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

Ideal Spring Beds. Our Buckle-White Spring is a workmaster's work. It is constructed and overlying them, with a fine, up-to-date pocket spring of extra State steel, and covered with a soft, plushy material. Farwell & Kibben, Watertown, N. Y., U.S.A.

Waverley Bicycles.

AMERICA'S FAVORITES.

Are Built in the Largest and Best Equipped Factory on Earth.

Our unequalled facilities enable us to supply better bicycles for less money than other makers can afford to market an inferior production, hence in purchasing a Waverley there is a clear saving of $15.00 or more. A higher grade bicycle, it is impossible to produce. Our catalogue explains all. Send for it.

INDIANA BICYCLE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

400,000 Pounds of Nickel Steel

That is the amount of this wonderful metal, drawn into tubing in our own mills, that has gone into Columbia Bicycles in the past year and a half. Its use is what makes Columbias so strong and light. No such material in other machines. Reserved exclusively for $100 Columbias in construction and quality are in a class to all alike. by themselves.

Columbia Bicycle
Standard of the World

Pope Manufacturing Co. HARTFORD, CONN.

CRIPPLES
Men, Ladies and Childrens Hand- and Foot Power-TRICYCLES
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.
FAY MFG. CO., 80 Pine St. Elyria, O.

The Berkshire Hill Sanatorium,

An Institution for the Scientific Treatment of

Cancer

Tumors, and all forms of Malignant Growth WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE

We have never failed to effect a permanent cure where we have had a reasonable opportunity. Book and circulars giving description of Sanatorium, Treatment, Terms, and References, free.

DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, North Adams, Mass.

THE IMPROVED Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night and day, maintains the rupture under the hardest exercise or severe cold and warms effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lady and child sizes. Examination free. Sent by registered mail.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO. 822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

K&K BRAND Extract of BEEF FLAVOR
Sample, 4 cents. Book free. OGDEN - SO. OMAHA

Health

Built on the solid foundation of pure, healthy blood is real and lasting. With rich red blood you will have no sickness.

When you allow your blood to become thin, depleted and impure, you will become tired, worn out, lose your appetite and strength, and disease will soon have you in its grasp.

Purity, vitality and enrich your blood, and keep it pure by taking

Hood's Sarsaparilla

The One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1. Be sure to get Hood's and only HOOD'S.

Hood's Pills

In His Hands.

(Continued from preceding page.)

"I s'pose so!" he said, wearily; Janet queried, "Who—who is this?" "The priest is kind of used to it," he said and again wearily. "He is still more used to it. Tell your God. He is always ready to receive me, I know that," rather impatiently I say this, as if too weak for any argument, or for a simply opposing statement. "I s'pose I must tell it to man, too. You don't know me?" "No, something about you seems natural to me sure I can't say who it is," I s'pose I have let my beard grow—that is a feller's looks—and then I am sick, yes, death-sick, that's it. Of course you don't know me, but I knew the first time I set my eyes on you. I am Tobias Newhall, of your town." He rose in his bed as he spoke. "That!" Tobias Newhall? "Spoke with astonishment that was offered. Instinctively she shrank back from that bed. She had never liked the man who had once ventured to like her. Old days when Winthrop Melrose, her suitor, Tobias Newhall attempted to play the role, and because repulsed, he intended to make Melrose suffer for it. The threat passed away without a fulfillment, it was thought by Janet, but she did not know how responsible Tobias was for the slanderous stories that Judson Skeele had circulated; and now she was in Tobias on this hospital couch. "My pocket-book," he said abruptly. "Don't know where it is," she replied, looking from him. "Where does it go?" "What for?" "To get-it quick!" he gasped, and became cough violently. She feared to have him attempt to speak further, so convulsed in his form, but he insisted, shaking his head authoritatively. Janet obeyed. She lay in his hands his pocket-book, wondering why it was she obeyed so readily a man she disliked so much. "At—you open it, Janet. My strength in it." How she disliked to hear him say "Janet." As for the pocket-book, she opened it and saw in addition to a small quantity of money, a folded fragment of newspaper. Bewildered by his extreme manner, embarrassed by her thoughts of the past, she simply held the pocket-book open, but did not touch the contents. "At—brown—paper!" he gasped. "What!" "Snow opened it and saw a bit of white paper. It contained one word, "Morton." "Janet," he said, "I have reason—to believe—that in your aunt's will—it read the daughter of Judson Skeele-Morton, and the 'Morton' was cut off, leaving it in the Skeele's daughter—" "What! what!" she gasped in astonishment. "Why, don't you see?" His speech was less broken, so intense was the effort of will holding every organ to work. "You, not Lavina Skeele, ought to be in that big house. You are the daughter. That is the 'long and short of it.'" He closed his eyes now, exhausted by his effort. He opened them again. He was struggling to say something else. He succeeded. "The other heir, John Morton's child, the Ethel at Skipper Dan's." "That he shut his eyes. Janet's thoughts were in a whirl. She knew not what to say, but started to make some reply, "Well—" "Face so thin, white, and exhausted, as if forbiddingly. "I does not want me to speak," "Don't Janet." "It a lawyer!" he murmured hoarsely. "Do it quick." "Stook hurried counsel of Dr. Percival, who had always taken a friendly interest in Janet. "I say, Miss Morton, a soldier turns up in the hospital who makes a statement about some property, and he wants a lawyer?" "The man probably wants to make an affidavit, as they say. Let me recommend you to a lawyer. I know a good one. Better still, I will send a messenger to bring him as soon as possible."

When the lawyer arrived, the affidavit of Tobias Newhall was made in due form, and the little paper-witness against Judson Skeele was delivered into the lawyer's hands.

"I want to put this matter now in the care of a lawyer at your home, who will work the matter up and see that justice is done you. Whom would you name?"

"Edward Manning."

"Very well. I will write to him. Do you know where that John Morton's child is?"

"Not where she is now. She was, it seems, in my native town, and came to my house and visited her father in his sickness there, but he did not know it was she, neither did I."

"Strange, strange!"

"I tried to hunt the child up in New York on my way here, having promised to do so, but I could find no trace of her."

"Well, Miss Morton, we will set a good lawyer to hunting the child up. It will be brought about. By the way, Miss Morton, I can hardly say that the man appears penitent for his sin. When I had finished with him, he blurted out, "There, I am even, with Judson Skeele and his daughter, too." He had a grudge against them, I suppose."

"I have heard it said that this Tobias Newhall expected Judson Skeele would help him beyond the danger of prosecution for liquor-selling, and did not—"

"And ought not, for it is a contemptible business, but that was not his motive probably. But the daughter spoken about, who was she?"

"Oh, I have heard it said that this Newhall wanted to marry the daughter, and—"

"Could not, and is now revenged. I see."

As for Judson Skeele's motive in refusing to shield Tobias Newhall from prosecution, it was not because he despised the business of Tobias, but he did not care to risk any money in the matter. Besides, he wanted for his own sake to get Tobias out of town, and to make him an exile the quickest way was to leave him without financial help. Tobias therefore went into exile. To cover up his foot-marks with something that might look like an excuse, to convert his exile into an honor, he went into the army.

While Janet and the lawyer were in conference, Tobias upon his bed was at intervals opening his eyes, staring wildly for a moment, then exclaiming, "Got even with Judson Skeele—and that—that—Lavina. I hate 'em." In another moment the eyelids would fall again."

It was a sad spectacle. Tobias had evidently done right at last, not to please God, or for the sake of justice, but from spite.

(To be Continued.)

Mallory Steamship Lines.
DELIGHTFUL TRIPS BY SEA TO TEXAS—GEORGIA—FLORIDA. Tickets to all Winter Resorts in Texas, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, California, Mexico, Georgia, Florida. Our 64-page Prospectus mailed free. C. H. MALLORY & CO., Pier 20, E. R., New York.

THE CHILDREN'S JUBILEE!
A complete and attractive series for Children's day. Sample copy 5c. I. H. MEREDITH, Publisher, Chicago. 940 W. Madison St. Norristown, Pa.

Send for Free Specimen Pages of

The Book will contain 224 pages.
Published by
THE JOHN CHURCH COMPANY,
CINCINNATI-NEW YORK-CHICAGO.

CHAUTAUQUA
The Famous Summer City
Ideal conditions for family life.
An inspiring spot for ministers,
Sunday-school teachers and other
Bible students.
Distinguished preachers, lecturers, and teachers from England and the United States. Rational recreation of all kinds. Cost of living at the minimum in first-class hotel and many cottages. Address
W. A. DUNCAN, Sec., Syracuse, N. Y.

WANTED.—SALESMEN to introduce
REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE'S
latest, greatest, most famous book,
"THE EARTH GIRDLED."
Samoa, Hawaii, the South Seas, Australia, India, Egypt, Palestine, Europe, and all their wonders. Thrilling experiences among savages, cannibals and wild races. Amazing heathen superstitions, startling revelations. 400 original photographs of curious races and strange places. $12 a day to salesmen. No capital or experience required, exclusive territory. Extraordinary inducements and illustrated circulars free. Be quick. Address,
Historical Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHILDREN'S DAY
Services for the Sabbath School
Complete with bright, cheery
New Carols, Recitations and Scripture Reading. Enclose 15c for samples of our 3 latest. JERUSALEM by Gabriel. A sacred oratorio-cantata for Adults, 30c. Geo. W. Roscoe & Co., CHICAGO, 940 West Madison Street, NEW YORK, 44 East 23rd Street.

SONGS FOR SPRING TIME.
Highest Praise, for the Sabbath School.
$30 per 100 copies.
Christian Endeavor Hymns, for Young People.
$30 per 100 copies.
Do not substitute inferior books because of lower price. The best are cheapest!!
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
74 East 9th St. New York. 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago

$150.00 IN GOLD GIVEN
for selling "Story of Spain and Cuba."
The International News and Book Co., Baltimore, Md., offer $150.00 to anyone selling in 3 months 175 copies of their new book, "Story of Spain and Cuba." Premiums and liberal commission given for any quantity sold. This is one of the greatest selling books out. Many agents make from $5.00 to $10.00 a day. A graphic account of the present war and the struggle for liberty is given. 100 beautiful illustrations, 500 pp. Freight paid and credit given. 50c. outfit free if 10c. is sent for postage. Write them immediately.

ONLY 10 CENTS.
Stamping Outfit, 91 patterns, online designs 5c. conventional designs 6c. patterns for painting & embroidery 8 & 10 in. high 2 alphabets, 1 a large forget-me-not pattern, and many others very desirable. All this and a 3 months' subscription to The Home, a 16-page story paper, with fashions and fancy work illustrated. Sent for only 10c. The Home, 141 Milk St Boston, Mass.

Every purpose that a pencil serves is best served by—
DIXON'S
American Graphite
PENCILS.
If dealer does not keep them, send 16 cts. for pencils worth double the money. Jcs. Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

THE LARGEST ESTABLISHMENT MANUFACTURING CHURCH BELLS CHIMES & PEALS
In the World.
PUREST BELL METAL (COPPER AND TIN).
Send for Price and Catalogue.
MESHAKE BELL FOUNDRY, BALTIMORE, MD.

A Hymn and Tune Book for ALL OCCASIONS.
"Many Voices,"
Edited by Rev. LEWIS W. MUDGE, D. D.
With and without Tunes and Responsive Readings.
"Not till we received a copy of 'Many Voices' did we in our search for a hymn book find a hymnal that was as complete and happy in its combination of the new and old hymns. In it we have found just what we want for all departments of our church work. If we had no other book, I am sure we would find it what would satisfy the needs of the prayer meeting, the Sunday school, as well as the regular Sunday service of the church."
Rev. JAMES S. ROOT,
Pres. Church, Rochester, N. Y.
SOME RECENT ADOPTIONS.—First Congregational, Litchfield, Ct. Windsor Avenue Congregational, Hartford Ct. First Congregational, Berea, Ohio. Union Chapel, Cottage City, Mass. Second Congregational, Beloit, Wis. Stranger's Church, Memphis, Tenn. Emanuel Presbyterian, Rochester, N. Y. First Presbyterian, Elizabeth, N. J.
Returnable copies sent for examination free to pastors and committees. Price, $60 per hundred.
A. S. BARNES & CO., 156 Fifth Ave., N. Y.

MONUMENTS.
DON'T buy Marble or Granite until you investigate
WHITE BRONZE.
It is much more artistic and enduring, and much less expensive.

NO Moss-Growing. NO Cracking.
Cleaning. Crumbling.
Prices to suit all. Work delivered everywhere. Write for designs and information. Costs nothing to investigate.
THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.,
70-80 Howard Avenue. Bridgeport, Conn.
$19.50 OUR PRICE.
OTHERS ASK UP TO $75.00.
To introduce our New Drop Cabinet High Arm Imperial Sewing Machine, we will for 30 days ship C. O. D. on receipt of $3.00. We will give 10 year guarantee and 30 days Free Trial. Our plan—one profit, maker to consumer. Saves 50 per cent. of agents or dealers prices. We want local reporters everywhere, and pay good money. Order sample machine and secure position; catalogue free. Address at once.
A. M. ROTHSCHILD & CO., STATE & VAN BUREN STS., CHICAGO

Stamped Steel Ceilings
Most Durable and Decorative.
Suitable for all buildings. Numerous designs.
H. S. NORTHROP, 33 Cherry Street, New York

PRINTING OUTFIT 10c.
Sets any name in one minute; prints 500 cards an hour. You can make money with it. A host of novelty type, also Indelible Ink, Type Holder, Pads and Pencils. Best Line Market worth $1.00. Mailed for 10c. stamps for postage on outfit and catalogue of 1000 bargains. Same outfit with figures 15c. Outfit for printing 25c. postpaid.
Ingersoll & Bro., Dept. No. 114 65 Cortlandt St., New York.
BLYMNER BELL
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWELLS, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR PATENT ALLOYS BELLS WEAT.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.
300 ORDERS in Three Weeks! 100 orders in every 12 calls. $8 to $10 profit every day. 130 orders in 3-4 days. Terms free. Outfit 30 cents. JAS. H. EARLE, Publisher, Boston.

Requests for Prayer.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on April 19, in accordance with the requests of many persons, among whom the following ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Sons and Daughters.—"Believer," Cooperstown, N. Y., writes that the son and daughter-in-law of an aged widow have caused her heavy losses through their misconduct, and asks prayer that they may be brought to repentance and made through Christ new creatures in him.—E. M. S., Halsey, N. Y., that two sons and a daughter who is away from home, might all be turned from darkness to light.—C. W., Indiana, that a dear son who is a victim of opium and other drugs, might be delivered by the power of Christ, and be made a true Christian, and be enabled to do his duty to his family.—G. B., Windham, Conn., for a beloved son who has made a profession of religion, but who is now with his family living in utter indifference to all spiritual things.—"Distressed Widow," New York, that his sixteen-year-old daughter, who sorely misses a good mother's influence, might be brought to Christ and kept by his power from the evil that surrounds her. The temptations of a dancing class are pressing upon her, and therefore urgent prayer is asked that she may be converted before her purity is sullied.—"Anxious Mother," Stout Mills, W. Va., that a beloved child may give his youth to God and grow up to be a useful man.—M. B. H., Winchendon, Mass., for the conversion of a son who is very much in need of a change of heart.—"Sorrowing Father," Brooklyn, N. Y., that his son who is weak and easily led astray, might be kept from evil associates, and turn to the Lord for strength to resist evil.

For the Conversion of other Relatives.—"Believer in Prayer," Perrytown, Can., that God would in his mercy deliver her husband from the power of his love of drink and change his heart and make him a true Christian.—H. E. K., Peterson, Ia., that God would touch the hearts of two brothers and a nephew and make them his own sons.—"Believer," Philadelphia, Pa., that the Holy Spirit's power might influence the hearts of father, mother, brothers and sisters who are all unconcerned about their eternal welfare, arousing them to seek salvation through Christ.—"Reader," Nimshaw, Cal., for the conversion of her beloved husband.—"Reader," Geneva, Va., for the conversion of two brothers and that God would shield them from temptation.—"Sister in Christ," Elwood, Neb., that her dear father now an old man over three score and ten, but yet unsaved, might be brought to Christ even at this eleventh hour. He may die very soon and his soul be lost, but he is not concerned.

For the Conversion of Friends. E. Bourneville, Ga., that God would convert three girls, intimate friends of her daughter, whose influence is liable to do harm if they remain unchanged.—"Anxious One," Patten, Me., that one who is very dear, but who does not believe the Bible nor in Christ, might be brought to know the Saviour and love and trust him.—"Subscriber," West Fairfield, Pa., that a dear friend who has been intemperate, but is now earnestly striving to reform, might be led to look to Christ for strength and trust him for the salvation of his soul.—M. E. W., Colorado, for the salvation of many wicked, careless neighbors who spend their time in the saloon and in reading cheap novels, and who appear to have no concern for the future.—"Reader," Brooklyn, E. D., that a man who has made profession of faith, but whose love for strong drink has caused him to fall very low, may be helped in his struggle to overcome his appetite and may be delivered from his bondage through Christ's power.

For the Restoration of Health.—"Reader," Charles City, Ia., that an afflicted mother might recover her health and have grace given her to live near to God.—A. C. S., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., that health may be given in answer to many prayers.—E. H., Carterville, Mo., that the daughter of a widow, one of the bread-winners of the family, might be restored to health and be enabled to resume her labor.—"Loving Christian," Sotoket, Conn., that a dear one who has partially lost her eyesight, might be saved from total blindness, and, if it be God's will, might be restored to her former condition.—"Believer," Kansas, that an elderly lady afflicted in body and mind might recover, and be spared for years of usefulness.—"Believer," er," that God would restore the sense of hearing to a friend who has been under the care of many doctors without benefit.—G. E. F., Port Royal, Va., that God would grant complete restoration of health, and that a great dread may be relieved.—"Reader," Spangle, Wash., that God in his mercy would restore the use of the right hand which has become helpless.—"Distressed Parents," Tacoma, Wash., that a beloved daughter whom physicians seem unable to cure might be healed of the Lord whose power is infinite.

For Special Blessings. M. E. C., Sonoma Co., Cal., begs for prayer that God would care for the interests of his people in that valley, and so influence the people that a site for a church might be obtained, and a united effort for the evangelization of the neighborhood be carried on.—"In His Name," St. Louis, Mo., that in entering on a new sphere of labor in a new locality God will give wisdom and success.—A. P. B., Fort Worth, Tex., that God will hear the many prayers offered to him for the relief of a successful Mission School from its burden of debt.—A. C. S., Poughkeepsie, N. Y., that a grievous burden which has pressed on a persevering man for three years past, may be lifted, that prosperity so earnestly sought may be vouchsafed, and that he may be enabled to meet honorably all his obligations.—A. R. M., Sibley, Ga., that an effort to dispose of some property may be successful, and may turn to the benefit of God's cause.—"Sister and Daughter," Woodbourne, Pa., that God would grant a blessed outpouring of his Spirit in the neighborhood.—Young Wife, Brooklyn, N. Y., who discovers that she was deceived in the character of the man she has married and is overwhelmed with sorrow that he is a libertine and not the pure Christian he professed to be, asks prayer that she may have grace to do her duty and be kept from loathing the man as well as his life.—Girl Graduate, New York, for the Holy Spirit to cleanse her heart of its impurity and that the evil desires which will intrude in spite of her efforts and prayers may be eradicated.—W. M. G., Good Will, Md., that the prayers of his church may be answered.—M. A. C., Oxford, N. Y., that the Holy Spirit may use the special effort now being made by revival services to the conversion of many souls.—"Subscriber," Anaheim, Cal., who is in great distress and spiritual darkness that all doubt and fear may be removed and full assurance may be given.—E. M. S., Washington, Me., that in some right way money might be obtained to discharge the debts which are a source of worry.—T. M. W., Liberty, N. Y., who is engaged in Evangelistic work, that God would make his way straight before his face and give him grace to walk in it.

The best lamp - chimney word in the world is "Macbeth," whether English or French or Flemish or Dutch. But get the shape that is made for your lamp, "pearl top" or "pearl glass." Let us send you the Index.

Geo A Macbeth Co

Pittsburgh Pa

White Shirts

—unlaundered, for men and boys, at 63 Cents
Our justly celebrated "Great Wonder"

White Shirt, at this price, is one of the greatest offerings ever made. It is made of excellent white muslin and has an all-linen bosom, fits accurately and launders perfectly. Send size of collar worn. The price 63 cents—includes cost of mailing. Money refunded, if desired.

Strawbridge & Clothier,

DRY GOODS. PHILADELPHIA.

A NEW IDEA.

Paper Patterns mailed TEN Cts. Monthly. First one sent free. Catalogue 500 designs in 50 stamps. NEW YORK PATTERNS CO., West Broadway and Leonard Sts., New York.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN Cincinnati.
ATLANTIC BRADLEY
BROOKLYN New York.
JEWETT
ULSTER
UNION
SOUTHERN Chicago.
SHIPMAN
COLLIER
MISSOURI St. Louis.
RED SEAL
SOUTHERN
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO. Philadelphia.
MOHLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

WHAT IS BRIGHTER, more attractive, than the homestead painted white, with green blinds? It may not suit the critic, but we like it and it will please the owner. Painted with and Pure Linseed Oil, it will look fresh as clean longer than anything else; if properly applied, it will not scale, chip, or chalk off, but forms a perfect base for subsequent painting; is therefore economical.

Pure White Lead

To be sure of getting Pure White Lead, examine the brand (see its genuine brands). Any shade of color desired can be easily obtained using NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s brands of Pure White Lead and Tinting Colors.

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing samples of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades for application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York

THE ONLY FAULT found with the Shawknit Half-Hose

IS FOUND BY THE DEALER THAT SAYS "THEY WEAR TOO LONG." THEIR UNEQUALLED DURABILITY IS NOT DUE TO GOOD MATERIAL AND WORKMANSHIP ONLY, BUT ALSO TO PERFECTION OF FIT.

None genuine unless stamped Shawknit on the toe

Send for Descriptive Price-List.

SHAW STOCKING CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.

ALSO

Amolin Powder

(A new coal tar product.)

The Only A New Remedy

odorless, healthful, harmless and positive deodorant for Dress Shields, etc.
soothing, healing, antiseptic for scalding, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants or Adults.

Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all retail counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

WALL-PAPER

Samples mailed free from the largest concern in U. S. Prices 50% lower than others. PAPERS from 2¢. to 83¢ a Roll—8 Yards. DEALERS can have large books by express with TRADE DISCOUNTS.

A MILLION ROLLS—An Unlimited Variety. 932-934 Market St. 418 Arch St. PHILADELPHIA.

KAYSER & ALLMAN

FREE TO BALD HEADS. We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp dandruff. Address: Altemheim Medical Dispensary, 127 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

Cleanliness is nae pride, dirt's nae honesty. Common sense dictates the use of

FIRST CLASS VASSAR COLLEGE

THEY ARE ALL TAUGHT TO USE

BROWN'S FRENCH DRESSING

It is the most reliable dressing upon the market and more of Brown's French Dressing is sold throughout the world than any other name.

Ask your dealer for it, and accept no substitute; take only

Brown's French Dressing

KNICKERBOCKER

No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, etc. By mail $1.00 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address: KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO., EASTON, PENN.

SIDE COMBS

These side combs are over two inches long by one inch wide, triple silvered, now very fashionable. Sample Pair by mail TWO CENTS. ADDRESS LYNN & CO., 48 BOND ST., NEW YORK

WHITMAN'S INSTANTANEOUS CHOCOLATE. Pure, Delicious. Fill with boiling water, and it's made. Stephen F. Whitman & Co., Philadelphia.

SAPOLIO

FORSTOR DIAZ IN PRISON.

A DISPATCH from Havana brings the intelligence that Alberto Jesus Diaz, the well-known Baptist preacher and evangelist, and his brother, Victoriano Diaz, have been arrested on a charge of being in their possession compromising papers referring to the insurrection. Evan-

REV. ALBERTO J. DIAZ.

Diaz is an American citizen, and for several years has been the Superintendent of the Missions of the Southern Baptist Convention in Cuba. The American Consul General has been requested to make a full investigation of the circumstances attending the arrest.

Diaz, who is well known in this country, and especially in the South, was at the time a Captain in the Cuban army. When about to be captured by the Spaniards, he jumped into the sea and was picked up by a vessel and carried to New York. He has had remarkable success in preaching in Cuba. He is a native of Havana and was educated and took a university course there and adopted the profession of medicine. The story of his conversion, which occurred while he lay in a sick room, suffering from pneumonia—is a most interesting one.

While he was ill, a lady in the house went to his sick chamber to see him. She could not speak Spanish, but she seemed so kind and she read out of a book and read with him. Diaz could not understand what she had read, but he appreciated her good will, and as a matter of course he intimated to her that he would like to look at her little book. It proved to be the New Testament. Up to that time Diaz had never seen the Book. He read it on, and at the end of his study he fell on his knees and prayed the prayer of the blind man: "Jesus of Nazareth, have mercy on me." Much of his time after this was spent in prayer and study of the Word. He resolved to consecrate his life to the work of carrying the Gospel to his fellow-countrymen in Cuba and soon entered on the career of an evangelist. After several years of progressive labor he organized a Baptist Church and has received into fellowship several thousand persons within the last five or six years. His church has a number of missionary stations on the island and nearly thirty missionary workers. Once before, he was thrown into a Spanish prison and afterwards had the gratification of baptizing both his jailer and the mayor of the town where his incarceration took place.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Insomnia

shows trouble with the brain, indicating the need of a Brain Tonic, especially one containing phosphorus.

Freligh's Tonic

A Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant

acts differently from opiates and bromides; gives food to the brain; tones up the nervous system to the normal pitch. Nature intended man to sleep.

Prescribed and endorsed by forty thousand physicians. Sample by mail, 25 cts.; regular bottle, $1.00, 100 doses. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, full directions, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,
Manufacturing Chemists.
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

SING a song of six-pence,
A pocket full of rye;
Cooky's hair no longer
Figures in the pie.

Her tresses from the puddings,
Thank fortune, too, are miss'd.
She wears the CUPID Hair-Pin
now—
We're safe—

it's in the TWIST.

By the makers
of the famous DeLong
Hook and Eye.

Richardson & DeLong Bros.,
Philadelphia.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its uses are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Chas. of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he lay down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, behind him are five of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in this wonderful curative power, the Kola Importers, 174 Broadway, New York, is sending out free to all cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a trial bottle of cure by mail free. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Each April, May are the best months to purify the blood and build up the system. Don't neglect this important matter. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla with the advent of spring.

COUGH DISEASES commence with a Cough, Cold or sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate and sure relief.

WHY PAY RETAIL PRICE

When you can buy a custom hand-made oak leather Harness direct from the maker at wholesale price. Send 2c. stamp for illustrated Catalogue, giving full description.

R. H. TARRH, Mfrs., 42 Church St., Oswego, N. Y.
Send name for FREE package, sure cure, sent post paid to you.

G. STODDARD, 1223 Niagara street, Buffalo, N. Y.

FENCING

For HOGS, POULTRY, and all fence purposes.

McMULLEN'S

Thousands of Miles in Use.

Always gives satisfaction. Sold by dealers. Freight paid. Take no other. Catalogue free.

McMULLEN WOVEN WIRE FENCE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS FOR DUMPING Horse Carts

Wide and narrow tires. Steel axles. Low rates of freight from our works, Tatamy, Pa., to all points.

HOBBSON & CO.,
No. 4 Stone St., New York

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums.

New scientific invention: different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Office: 223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
(1122 Broadway, New York.)

If you want a sure relief for pains in the back, side, chest, or limbs, use an

Alcock's Porous Plaster

BEAR IN MIND—Not one of the host of counterfeits and imitations is as good as the genuine.

DON'T BUY

A Carriage, Buggy, Phaeton or vehicle of any description without first getting our illustrated catalogue and price list (sent free). We sell only work manufactured in our factory.

GUARANTEED THOROUGHLY RELIABLE
at prices within reach of all. Capacity, 10,000 jobs per year.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE MFG. CO. Box 377 L. Columbus, O.

PIANOS! ORGANS! FREE!

TEST TRIAL FOR 30 DAYS IN YOUR OWN HOME. NO MONEY REQUIRED

PIANOS-ORGANS FROM $25.00 UP
Including a Complete Musical Outfit. CASH or EASY PAYMENTS.

NEW SOUVENIR CATALOGUE
A work of art illustrated in 10 colors. Worth its weight in gold. We pay charges on it and send it FREE, all you have to do is ask for it to-day please. Remember this is the old established house of CORNISH & CO., the only firm in the world selling exclusively from factory to family direct. A single instrument at wholesale price. We save you from $25.00 to $250.00. Write at once to

CORNISH & CO., Estab. 30 years, Washington, N. J.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS

and a "Chautauqua" Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .

- 100 Bars Sweet Home Soap.
- 9 Packages Boraxine.
- 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
- 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
- Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . . . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00; IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE.—It is a pleasure to be able to state that the Larkin Soap Company is perfectly reliable. We can speak intelligently regarding the firm, as for two years past we have used their combination box, together with the Chautauqua desk or chair as a premium, offering it with the Advocate. We have sent them a large number of orders, and we do not recall a single instance in which the purchaser complained. On the contrary many have freely and fully expressed their satisfaction regarding the contents of the box and the finish and quality of the premiums.—Not in Christian Advocate, Syracuse, N. Y.

WEAK LUNGS and CONSUMPTION.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER, of 117 West 45th Street, New York—the oldest Lung specialist of this country—explains in popular lectures the germ nature of consumption; the condition of the throat and lungs that leads to it, and the wonderful success of its treatment by specific germicides discovered by him and applied directly to the lungs by inhalation.

Those having weak lungs or any lung complaint can obtain Dr. Hunter's books and full information, free of charge, by addressing him as above.

SPRAY YOUR FRUIT

Lawn, Windows, &c., with the improved "DAISY" SPRAYER. Very durable, popular, and sure to please. 150,000 sold in 10 years. Has rubber hose, brass valve, throws constant stream 50 ft. No. 1, $1.65; heavy tin, No. 2, $2.25—iron (non-rust), No. 3, $3.00—all heavy brass. Express prepaid. Latest recipes for insect poisons. AGENTS WANTED. Catalogue free.

W. M. JOHNSON & CO., 11 Eagle St., Canton, O.

HOMESTUDY

A practical and complete Business College Course given by MAIL at student's HOME. Low rates and perfect satisfaction. Trial lesson 10 cents. Catalogue free.

BBYANT & STRATTON, 75 College Bldg., Buffalo, N. Y.

Your Dinner

can be cooked all at one time on one burner of any kind of stove, if you use the

Peerless Steam Cooker

Prevents steam and odors. Whistle-blows when cooking is over. More water. Catalogue free. The agents' bonanza. Agents wanted.

PEERLESS COOKER CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

$3 A DAY SURE

Send us your address and we will show you how to make $3 a day, absolutely sure, we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully, remember we guarantee a clear profit of $3 for every day's work, absolutely sure, write at once.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., BOX 155, DETROIT, MICH.

FREE

As a sample of our 1000 BARGAINS we will send FREE the elegant Fountain Pen, warranted a perfect writer, and the immense Illus. Bargain Catalogue, for C. to cover postage, on

R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 CORTLAND ST., N. Y. CITY.

FREE

Cut this out and send to-day for free catalogue. $2.75 buys natural finish Baby Carriage with plated steel wheels, axle, springs, one piece seat and handle. 3 years guarantee. Carriages sent on 10 days FREE TRIAL. DEL FROM FACTORY & SAVE DEALERS' PROFITS.

OXFORD WHEEL CO., 340 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

WANTED AGENTS

To sell Sash Locks & Door Holders. Sample Sash Lock free by mail for 2c. stamp. Best sellers ever invented. Best weights $12 a day. Write quick. BROWARD & CO., Box 33, Philadelphia.

REGISTERED.

S. W. SMITH, Cochranville, Chester Co., Pa.

BERKSHIRE, Chester White, Jersey Red & Poland China Pigs. Jersey, Guernsey & Holstein Cattle. Thoroughbred Sheep, Fancy Poultry, Hunting and House Dogs. Catalogue.

ALLIANCE CARRIAGE CO., N. Court St., Cincinnati, O.

A STARTLING OFFER!!

All Our Previous Offers Eclipsed!

bargain ever offered by a reliable house. Six of the handsomest full size heavy triple-plate silver souvenir teaspoons ever made and only Ninety-nine cents, prepaid by mail.

The stock of famous coffee spoons is NEARLY EXHAUSTED. We are now offering the balance, OUR TEASPOONS, much larger and finer than the coffee spoons and we say without reserve or hesitation that no such opportunity as this ever before existed. They must be sold! We cannot afford to carry them longer. After you see these spoons you will readily understand why we held them back until the coffee spoons were disposed of.

ONLY
99¢

• FOR ALL SIX •

FORMERLY SOLD FOR 9.00

THINK OF IT

You will pay the same times the price for ordinary teaspoons with plain bowls—here you get the prettiest patterns and GOLD-PLATED BOWLS—the entire bowl inside and outside plated with gold, and each bowl representing a different World's Fair Building. Money cannot buy them elsewhere. They are the identical stock sold on the World's Fair Grounds for $9.00 a set, but you can now have the set of six for only—99c., about one-tenth their original price.

This is the first souvenir collection ever produced of the World's Fair. Every family and every individual ought to have a set as a SOUVENIR or as a beautiful collection.

spoons for extraordinary occasions, or for a BIRTHDAY or WEDDING gift, or as a set for EVERY-DAY-USE. You may never have another chance to get such exquisite silverware at such a remarkably low price. The thousands and thousands of subscribers to religious papers who bought our After-dinner Coffee Spoons will read this offer with delight. THEY KNOW THAT ANY OFFER WE MAKE IS A GENUINE BARGAIN and cannot be duplicated anywhere. There are twelve different buildings:

SET No. 2—Comprises the Manufacturers, Horticultural, Woman's, Fisheries, Machinery Hall and Transportation building.

SET No. 3—Includes the Administration, Art, Agricultural, Electrical, Mining and Government buildings.

In your order please be explicit and say whether you want set Number 2 or Number 3. The set is put up in a very nice box, handsomely lined with plush, and is sent by mail securely packed and PREPAID.

Send us 99c by Post Office or Express Money Order or registered letter only, as we do not accept personal checks.

Our references are the First National Bank, Chicago; the Mercantile Agencies, and all the Express Companies. If the spoons are not exactly as represented you can have your money back. You know our advt. would not be in this paper if the offer were not genuine.

We still have some of the After-Dinner Coffee spoons on hand.

Address in full LEONARD MFG. CO., Dep't B, 152 and 153 Michigan Ave., Chicago

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

COPYRIGHT 1896. BY LOUIS K. SCH.

NUMBER 19.

R. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
 Offices:—Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, MAY 6, 1896.

Price Five Cents.

A WORLD-WIDE PHILANTHROPIST.

Life of Baron De Hirsch, who Devoted Millions of Dollars to the Benefit of the Poor and the Outcast of His Race in Many Lands.

ONE of the most remarkable men of our time passed away when, on April 21st, Baron de Hirsch suddenly breathed his last. He was remarkable both in his achievements and in his benevolence. A Jew, with all the characteristics of his race, he showed extraordinary genius in the accumulation of wealth and a passionate love for his race, he distributed his money with a lavish freedom that has rarely if ever been paralleled. He had no sympathy with the Jewish faith, did not hold the Jewish creed, nor share in the hopes and aspirations of the Jewish heart, but he loved the Jewish people and spared neither labor nor wealth in his efforts to relieve their need and to promote their welfare. He was a philanthropist of the most munificent kind and his magnificent gifts have made his name famous throughout the world. Dr. Gottheil of New York, who knew much of the dead Baron's work, said in the tribute he paid to his memory: The world was apt to forget how many Jews were poor and to think that a Jew must necessarily be rich because he was a Jew. Baron de Hirsch had a better knowledge. He told the world that he gave of his bounty with such unselfishness to the Jews because they had the least chance in the world. They are the most oppressed and the most depressed race and Baron de Hirsch felt that he was bound to that race by ties that made exclusiveness a crime.

The vast sums that he devoted to philanthropic effort have not been equalled, but there is reason to believe that the generally accepted estimate of fifty million dollars is low rather than above the mark. "No one knows," says one writer, who had exceptional opportunities of seeing his benefactions, "the thousands of things that Baron and his wife were constantly doing to lighten the misery and sorrows of the poor. The Baroness made personal tours of the slums and poorest quarters of every large city in Europe, and having a thorough knowledge of German, English, French, Russian, Spanish, and Italian, was able to talk with the people and to put out and carry into operation the best and safest remedial measures. 'We will vote our money,' the Baron used to say, 'to these poor creatures simply because all the rest of the world is continually turning a cold shoulder to them.' All that he did, too, was done with superb system and an accuracy of judgment and an attention to detail that astonished all who witnessed it." To the United States, Baron de Hirsch always turned with a warm esteem, and the land above all others in which his race was fairly treated. In the time of the Russian persecution, when the Jewish refugees from that land were seeking a home here, Baron de Hirsch came nobly to the relief of his people who were confronted with the task which the Jew, wherever he is, feels it incumbent upon him to undertake—that of caring for his brother in his need. The Baron, knowing how heavy the task must be at that time, placed two and a-half million dollars in the hands of trustees, to be applied as they deemed best for the benefit of his people. It is the interest on this capital sum which supports the institutions in this country with which Baron Hirsch's name is associated.

The late Baron was a Bavarian by birth. Though some doubt has been raised both as to date and place, most authorities agree that he was born in Munich in 1833. His father was a wealthy merchant in warded for this and similar services by the order of nobility which, with his large fortune, descended to his son. The youth was sent at the age of thirteen to Brussels to be educated. Various circumstances combined to make the four years he spent brilliant abilities secured him a highly confidential position in the house, and he won the hand of the daughter of the senior partner. The fortune Miss Bischoffsheim brought him, added to the wealth inherited from his father, gave the young man the

BUILDING A MODEL COTTAGE IN A TRADE SCHOOL.

there a wretched time. Young Hirsch learned little, and to start in the financial world that he needed, and his own genius did the rest. His brilliant master-stroke was the acquisition of the ruins of Dumoucau's Bank which collapsed in 1866. In a few years after Hirsch obtained control of the assets he restored the bank to its former credit and power as the chief financial institution of the Belgian capital. With this came a concession for a railroad connecting Constantinople with Buda Pesth. Hirsch had two partners in this undertaking, and although they had the choice of the sections and left to him the one that seemed the least promising of the three, he was the only one of the trio who made money out of the enterprise. His profit on that one business alone, is said to have been four million dollars. From that time forward the brilliant financier appeared to turn everything he touched to gold as if he had the fabled power of the old mythology. His power on the money-markets grew by immense strides until it came near that of the Rothschilds.

He showed early in his career that he had no respect for money for its own sake. He could make it easily and in vast sums, but its accumulation had little charm for him. Its value in his eyes consisted in what might be done with it, not in the miserly aspect of hoarding. He was liberal beyond parallel in the assistance he rendered to needy princes and aristocrats. One notorious spendthrift of royal blood is reported to have received money from Hirsch to the amount of seven and a half million the cattle business, who, like his more famous son, had a genius for money-making. He succeeded so well that when in 1869, the King of Bavaria was in financial straits, the cattle-dealer was able to furnish him with the funds he needed. He was returned to the end of his life had little of what is ordinarily understood as education. At the end of the Brussels episode he was sent to London as a clerk in the great banking house of Bischoffsheim and Goldschmidt. Hirsch never became a partner in that firm, but his

(Continued on page 301.)

THE LATE BARON DE HIRSCH—SCENES IN HIS NEW YORK TECHNICAL SCHOOL

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

DIVISION OF SPOILS.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Isaiah 53: 12, "He shall divide the spoil with the strong."

IN the Coliseum at Rome, where persecutors used to let out the half-starved lions to eat up Christians, there is now planted the figure of a cross.

And I rejoice to know that the upright piece of wood nailed to a transverse piece has become the symbol not more of suffering than of victory. It is of Christ the conqueror that my text speaks. As a kingly warrior, having subdued an empire, might divide the palaces and mansions and cities and valleys and mountains among his officers, so Christ is going to divide up all the earth and all the heavens among his people, and you and I will have to take our share if we are strong in faith and strong in our Christian loyalty, for my text declares it: "He shall divide the spoil with the strong."

The capture of this round planet for Christ is not so much of a job as you might imagine, when the Church takes off its coat and rolls up its sleeves for the work, as it will. There are sixteen hundred millions of people now in the world, and four hundred and fifty millions are Christians. Subtract four hundred and fifty millions who are Christians from the sixteen hundred millions, and there are eleven hundred and fifty millions left. Divide the eleven hundred and fifty millions who are not Christians by the four hundred and fifty millions who are Christians, and you will find that we shall have to average less than three souls each, brought by us into the kingdom of God, to have the whole world redeemed. Certainly, with the Church rising up to its full duty, no Christian will be willing to bring less than three souls into the kingdom of God. I hope, and pray Almighty God, that I may bring more than three. I know evangelists who have already brought fifty thousand each for the kingdom of God. There are two hundred thousand people whose one and only and absorbing business in the world is to save souls. When you take these things into consideration, and that the Christians will have to average the bringing of only three souls each into the kingdom of our Lord, all impossibility vanishes from this omnipotent crusade. Why, I know a Sabbath School teacher who for many years has been engaged in training the young, and she has had five different classes, and they averaged seven to a class, and they were all saved. I know a woman who is thirty-five, as near as I can calculate. So that she brought her three into the kingdom of God and had thirty-two to spare. My grandmother prayed her children into the kingdom of Christ, and her grandchildren, and her great-grandchildren, and her great-grandchildren, and her great-grandchildren, and her great-grandchildren, and so she brought her three into the kingdom of God and had more than three hundred to spare. Besides that, through the telephone and the telegraph, this whole world, within a few years, will be brought within the reach of the Gospel. And that, omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience are presiding in this matter of the world's betterment, and that takes the question of the world's salvation out of the impossibilities into the possibilities, and then out of the possibilities into the probabilities, and then out of the probabilities into the certainties. The building of the Union Pacific Railroad from ocean to ocean was a greater undertaking than the girdling of the earth with the Gospel; for one enterprise depended upon the human arm, while the other depends upon almightiness.

Do I really mean all the earth will surrender to Christ? Yes. How about the uninviting portions? Will Greenland be evangelized? The possibility is that after a few more hundred brave lives are dashed out among the icebergs, that great refrigerator, the Polar region, will be given up to the walrus and bear, and that the inhabitants will come down by invitation into tolerable climates, or those climates may soften; and, as it has been positively demonstrated that the Arctic region was once a blooming garden and a fruitful field, those regions may change climate and again be a blooming garden and a fruitful field. It is proved beyond controversy, by German and American scientists, that the Arctic regions were the first portions of this world inhabitable; the world hot beyond human endurance, those regions were, of course, the first to be cool enough for human foot and human lung. It was positively proved that the Arctic region was a tropical climate. Prof. Heer, of Zurich, says the remains of flowers have been found in the Arctic region, showing it was like Mexico for climate, and it is found that the Arctic was the mother region from which all the flowers descended. Prof. Wallace says the remains of all styles of animal life are found in the Arctic regions, including those animals that can live only in warm climates. Now that Arctic region, which has been demonstrated by flora and fauna and geological argument to have been as full of vegetation and life as our Florida, may be turned back to its original bloom and glory, or it will be shut up as a museum of crystals for curiosity-seekers once in awhile to visit. But Arctic and Antarctic, in some shape, will belong to the Redeemer's realm.

What about other unproductive or repulsive regions? All the deserts will be irrigated, the waters will be forced up to the great American desert between here and the Pacific by machinery now known or yet to be invented, and, as Great Salt Lake City has no rain and could not raise an apple or a bushel of wheat in a hundred years without artificial help, but is now through such means one great garden, so all the unproductive parts of all the continents will be turned into harvest fields and orchards. A half-dozen De Lesseps will furnish the world with all the canals needed, and will change the course of rivers and open new lakes, and the great Sahara Desert will be cut up into farms with an astounding yield of bushels to the acre. The marsh will be drained of its waters and cured of its malaria. I saw what was for many years called the Black Swamp of Ohio, its chief crop chills and fevers, but now, by the tiles put into the ground to carry off the surplus moisture, transformed into the richest and healthiest of regions. The God who wastes nothing, I think, means that this world, from pole to pole, has come to perfection of foliage and fruitage. For that reason he keeps the earth running through space, though so many fires are blazing down in its timbers and so many meteoric terrors have threatened to dash it to pieces. As soon as the earth is completed Christ will divide it up among the good. The reason he does not divide it now is because it is not done. A kind-father will not divide the apple among his children until the apple is ripe. In fulfillment of the New Testament promise, "The meek shall inherit the earth," and the promise of the Old Testament, "He shall divide the spoil with the strong," the world will be apportioned to those worthy to possess it.

It is not so now. In this country, capable of holding, feeding, clothing, and sheltering twelve hundred million people, and where we have only sixty million inhabitants, we have two millions who cannot get honest work, and with their families an aggregation of five millions that are on the verge of starvation. Something wrong, most certainly. In some way, there will be a new apportionment. Many of the millionaire estates will crack to pieces on the dissipations of grand-children, and then dissolve into the possession of the masses who now have an insufficiency.

What, you say, will become of the expensive and elaborate buildings now devoted to debasing amusements? They will become schools, art-galleries, museums, gymnasiums and churches. The world is already getting disgusted with many of these amusements, and no wonder. What an importation of unclean theatrical stuff we have within the last few years had brought to our shores! And professors of religion patronizing such things! Having sold out to the devil, why don't you deliver the goods and go over to him publicly, body, mind and soul, and withdraw your name from Christian churches, and say: "Know all the world by these presents that I am a patron of uncleanness and a child of hell!" Sworn to be the Lord's, you are perjurers.

If you think these offenses are to go on for ever, you do not know who the Lord is. God will not wait for the Day of Judgment. All these palaces of sin will become palaces of righteousness. They will come into the possession of those strong for virtue and strong for God. "He shall divide the spoil with the strong."

China and Africa, the two richest portions of the earth by reason of metals, and rare woods, and inexhaustible productiveness, are not yet divided up among the good because they are not ready to be divided. Wait until all the doors that Livingstone opened in Africa shall be entered, and Bishop Taylor, with his band of self-supporting missionaries, have done their work, and the Ashantees and Senegambians shall know Christ as well as you know him, and there shall be on the banks of the Nile and the Niger a higher civilization than is now to be found on the banks of the Potomac or the Hudson, then Christ will divide up that continent among his friends. Wait until China, which is half as large as all Europe, shall have developed her capacities for rice and tea and sugar among edibles; and her amethyst and sapphire and topaz and opal and jasper and porphyry, among precious stones; and her rosewood and ebony and camphor and varnish trees, among precious woods; and turned up from her depths a half-dozen Pennsylvanias of coal and iron, and twenty Nevadas of silver, and fifty Californias of gold, and her five hundred million of people shall be evangelized; then the Lord will divide it up among the good.

If my text be not a deception, but the eternal truth, then the time is coming when all the farms will be owned by Christian farmers, and all the commerce controlled by Christian merchants, and all the authority held by Christian officials, and all the ships commanded by Christian captains, and all the universities under the instruction of Christian professors; Christian kings, Christian presidents, Christian governors, Christian mayors, Christian common council. Yet, what a scattering out! what an upturning! what a demolition! what a resurrection must precede this new apportionment!

I do not underrate the enemy. Julius Cæsar got his greatest victories by estimating the vastness of his foes, and prepared his men for their greatest triumph by saying: "To-morrow King Juba will be here with thirty thousand horses, one hundred thousand skirmishers and one hundred elephants." I do not underestimate the vast forces of Sin and Death; but you know who commands us? Jehovah-jireh. And the reserve corps behind are all the armies of heaven and earth, with hurricane and thunderbolt. The work of the world's redemption is going on every minute. Never so many saved men and glorious women on the earth of right as to-day. Never so many people as now. Diogenes has been spoken of as a wise man because he went with a lantern at noonday, saying he was looking for an honest man. If he had turned his lantern toward himself he might have covered a crank. Honest men by the thousand! Through the International Series of Sunday School lessons the next generation all through Christendom is going to be wiser than any generation since the world stood. The kingdoms coming. God can do it. No house with a chamois cloth ever polished as a teaspoon with more ease than Christ will rub off from this world the tarnish, and brighten it up till it glows like heaven, and then the glorious apportionment! My text is reinforced by a score of other texts, when it says of Christ: "He shall divide the spoil with the strong."

"But," you say, "that this is pleasant to think of for others, but before that I shall have passed up into another existence, and I shall get no advantage from that new apportionment." Ah, you have only driven me to the other more exciting and transporting consideration, and that is, that Christ is going to divide up heaven in the same way. There are old estates in the celestial world that have been in possession of the inhabitants for thousands of years, and they shall remain as they are. There are old family mansions heaven filled with whole generations kindred, and they shall never be driven out. Many of the victors from earth have already got their palaces, and they pointed out to those newly arrived. So after our getting there we will ask to be shown the Apostolic residences, and where does Paul live, and John; and shown the patriarchal residences, and show say: "Where does Abraham live, or Jacob?" and shown the martyr residences and say: "Where does John Huss live, and Ridley?" We will want to see the boulevards where the chariots of conquerors roll. I will want to see the gardens where the princes walk. We will want to see Music Row, where Handel and Haydn and Mozart and Charles Wesley and Thomas Hastings and Bradbury have the homes, out of their windows, ever anon, rolling some snatch of an earthly oratorio or hymn transported with the composer. We will want to see Reviv Terrace, where Whitefield and Nettleton and Payson and Rowland Hill and Charles Finney and other giants of soul-repair are resting from their almost supernatural labors, their doors thronged with converts just arrived, coming to report themselves.

But brilliant as the sunset, and like the leaves for number, are the celestial homes yet to be awarded, when Christ to you and millions of others, shall divide the spoil. What do you want there? You shall have it. An orchard? There it is twelve manner of fruits, and fruit every month. Do you want river scenery? Take our choice on the banks of the river, in anger, wider, deeper roll than Danube or Amazon or Mississippi if mingled in one, and emptying into the sea of glass, mingled with fire. Do you want your kindred back again? Go out and meet your father and mother without the staff or the stoup, and your children in a dance of immortal life. Do you want a throne? Select it from the million burnished elevations. Do you want a crown? Pick it out of that mountain of diamonded coronets. Do you want your old church friends of earth around you? Begin to hum an old revival tune and they will flock from all quarters to revel with you in sacred reminiscence. All the earth for those who are here on earth at the time of continental and planetary distribution, and all the heavens for those who are there.

That heavenly distribution of spoils will be a surprise to many. Here enters heaven the soul of a man who took up a great deal of room in the church on earth but sacrificed little, and among his good works selfishness was evident. He just crowds through the shining gate, but it's a very tight squeeze, so that the doorkeeper has to pull hard to get him in; and this man expects half of heaven for his share of trophies, and he would like a monopoly of all its splendor, and to purchase lots in the suburbs, so that he could get advantage of the growth of the city. Well, little by little he gets grace of heart, just enough to let him through, and to him is given a second-hand crown, which one of the saints wore at the start, but exchanged for a brighter one as he went on from glory to glory. And he is put in an old house once occupied by an angel who was hurried out of heaven at the time of Satan's rebellion.

Right after him comes a soul that makes great stir among the celestials, and the angels rush to the scene, each bringing to her a dazzling coronet. Who is she? Over that realm on earth was she queen? In that great Dusseldorf festival was she the empress? Neither. She was an invalid who never left her room for twenty years; but she was strong in prayer, and she layed down revival after revival and pentecost after pentecost, upon the church, and with her pale hands she knit many mittens or tippet for the poor, and with her contrivances she added joy to many a holiday festival, and now with those thin hands so strong for kindness, and with those white lips so strong for supplication, she has won coronation and enthronement and jubilee.

What a day it will be! This entire assemblage would rise to its feet if you could realize it, the day in which Christ shall, in fulfillment of my text, divide the oil. It was a great day when Aurelian, the Roman Emperor, came back from his victories. In the front of the procession were wild beasts from all lands, sixteen hundred gladiators richly clad, wagon-loads of crowns and trophies presented by conquered cities; among the captives Syrians, Egyptians, Goths, Vandals, Sarmatians, Franks; and Zenobia, the beautiful captive queen, on foot in chains of gold that slave had to help her carry, and jewels under the weight of which she almost fainted. Rome in all her history never knew anything more magnificent. But how much greater the day when our Conqueror, Jesus, shall ride under the triumphal arch of heaven; His captives, not on foot, but in chariots, all the kingdoms of earth and heaven in procession; the armies celestial on white horses. Rumbling artillery of thunderbolts never again to be numbered. Kingdoms in line, centuries in line, saintly, cherubic, seraphic, archangel-splendors in line; and Christ seated on the great rolling Hosanna, made out of all allelujahs of all worlds, shall cry Halt the procession. And not forgetting even the humblest in all the reach of his omnipotence, he shall rise, and then and there, his work done and his glory commended, proceed, amid an ecstasy such as neither mortal nor immortal ever imagined, to divide the spoil.

Training Little Chinese Lads.

The Work of the Presbyterian Mission in New York—The Boy who wanted to "Fly to Heaven."

LL put this five cents in the Sunday School collection next Sunday, and this one into the mite box for the school in China, and this will be enough for me." So said a little six-year old Chinese boy to his mamma not long ago, exhibiting as he spoke a third coin of the same value as the others, dividing according to his own mind the money that had come into his possession on his birthday.

This child who leads the van in the service of giving was the older of two little sons in a Christian family. The younger son, a sturdy little man of four years, not swayed, as was his brother, by the idea of always preserving a dignified appearance, was given to frequent exhibitions of innocent mischief and fun, which, added to excellent traits of character won for him hosts of friends. The kindergarten, the place of his special delight, was to him the "monkey-shine school," and his favorite song the one in which the motion of flying birds is imitated.

Last November diphtheria, the children's dread foe, fastened its hold upon this little fellow, and from the first intense suffering was his portion. Tossing from side to side of his little bed one afternoon he suddenly became quiet, and after awhile said, "Mamma, I want to fly away to Jesus." "Why, my dear?" came from the blanched lips of the mother, not yet schooled to the thought even of the separation that seemed inevitable. "Because, He would make me well." A few more hours of suffering and the child's desire was realized. The Master took him to himself.

The father of these boys, Rev. Huie Kin, while pursuing a theological course in Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, was called eleven years ago by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions to inaugurate in New York an evangelistic movement among his own countrymen, in connection with Sunday School work already established. Under his management the effort has already proved most successful. Many have been led to Christ and are to-day worthy members of the church. Others have returned to China to identify themselves with missionary enterprises there, and still others are in their native land standing for the work of Christ, although not openly professing to be his followers. As the work progressed it became evident that regular and systematic instruction in the English language must be provided for the young men and boys so eagerly desiring it. Accordingly three years ago, a day school was started, and an American teacher placed in charge. Many have availed themselves of the opportunity thus afforded, and some have also joined with the American friends in the financial support of the work.

Mr. Huie is now visiting his aged parents in China, and finds in his native and adjoining districts, twenty fathers and guardians who entreat him to receive into his school their little sons and wards, the youngest of the boys being ten years of age and the oldest fourteen. The Board approves his bringing these children here, the United States law providing for their admission. Their natural guardians bind themselves to keep them in school the required term, and declare themselves ready to pay the full cost of transportation, tuition, board, and clothing, leaving a comparatively small amount necessary to be raised to provide suitable quarters for them.

The question naturally arises, why not send a teacher to them instead of bringing them to this country at such great expense? One result of the recent war is the awakening of the present generation to a realization of the necessity of adopting Western methods. Missionaries who have seen much service in China rejoice over the change of public sentiment there, and affirm that removing the young from the heathen influences surrounding them at home, facilitates the result counted on by all interested or engaged in mission work.

To provide a plain, substantial home for these little strangers is the Mission's present emergency. Coming as they do from rural districts, it is desirable to secure accommodations for them in the country, for the summer months at least, where they may learn what is really necessary. It is desired to procure a farm-house within two or three hours' ride of New York, for this purpose. Bedding, table-linen, towels, and furniture are all needed for such an undertaking. Miss Carrie G. McFarland, 36 East Tenth street, New York, who has been appointed by the Board to receive funds for the support of the school work under Mr. Huie's care, will give any further information that may be desired.

An Aged Saint Called Home.

Mrs. Sarah L. Palmer, Nonagenarian and Founder of the Famous Tuesday Meetings in New York, Passes Away.

WHEN the spirit of an aged Christian, having long sojourned in its frail tabernacle of clay, is at last released, and goes upward, triumphant, to God, there is cause for rejoicing rather than sorrow. Such a release was that of the venerable Mrs. S. A. Lankford Palmer, who passed from earth on Saturday, April 25th last. During the greater part of her ninety years of life, Mrs. Palmer had been an ardent and faithful worker for the Master and her labors had been richly blessed. She was known and greatly beloved in many parts of the Union and her name and memory will long be held dear by thousands, to many of whom she was made the means of opening up such refreshing glimpses of the higher spiritual life as they had never before experienced.

Mrs. Palmer's name will be more especially remembered in connection with the "Tuesday Meetings" in New York, which for many years have been a weekly season of grace and strengthening to many souls. Of these meetings, she was the founder and for nearly three-score years, the active and zealous conductor. She strove to induce all those who came, to seek the privileges which they believed God had promised to all of his children who would give themselves wholly and unreservedly to his leading.

Both Mrs. Lankford and Mrs. Palmer, her sister, had been converted in early life. They were the daughters of Mr. Henry Worrall, an Englishman who was received into church membership by John Wesley himself, and whose member's card bore the signature of the celebrated divine. Mr. Worrall came to America and settled in New York, where his two daughters were born. Their early love for each other was very tender and it continued after both were married, and down to the day when the younger sister was called from her earthly labors. By that time Mrs. Lankford had also lost her partner in life, and their common loss drew the bereaved husband and the desolate widow together. Finally Mrs. Lankford consented to fill the place her sister's death had left vacant, and in 1876 she became Dr. Palmer's wife.

The Tuesday meeting soon became a regular institution, and its influence was widely felt. It was originally the offspring of two meetings of which Mrs. Lankford was leader. One of these was held Monday afternoons in Allen Street Methodist Episcopal Church, and the other Wednesday afternoons in Mulberry Street Methodist Episcopal Church. They were the ordinary Methodist class-meetings, but the leader's influence was sufficient to give them a character of their own. She had entered more fully than most Christians into the doctrines of the higher life and was strongly moved to bring others to seek the blessing for themselves. The class-meetings became so thoroughly identified with these doctrines, and were besides so much a duplication of labor, that it was thought wise to discontinue them and hold one meeting apart from the churches. The meeting was accordingly fixed for Tuesday afternoon, at 54 Rivington street, where the Lankford and Palmer families had their common home. The first meeting was held on the second Tuesday of February, 1836, when about forty ladies attended. The exercises were simple, but very solemn, and several testified that their souls had caught views there of Christ, as their all-powerful Deliverer, such as they had never before experienced. Other meetings were held with similar results. Mrs. Lankford was profoundly, humbly thankful, rejoicing in the evident token of God's approval.

THE LATE MRS. S. A. LANKFORD PALMER.

Soon after, in answer to most earnest appeals in prayer by Mrs. Lankford, her sister experienced the same happy assurance of being wholly delivered from the power of sin, and Dr. Palmer also became an earnest advocate of the same doctrine. His accession soon led to the Tuesday meetings being opened to men, and many earnest seekers after the "second blessing," availed themselves of the opportunity. Almost from the beginning the attendance was remarkable. Christians of every denomination came, and abundant blessings were realized in answer to earnest and believing prayer. The meetings are still continued, and every year, at Ocean Grove, there is an additional meeting for the sojourners at that famous religious resort.

Many years have now passed since Dr. Palmer's death, and his widow, up to the very last, continued her active devotion to the work, being very seldom absent from her place in the meetings, which were held in her commodious home, No 316 East 15th Street, New York. Many souls have there entered into new life. Even while prostrated by her last sickness—the result of extreme old age—Mrs. Palmer could hear in her bed-chamber on an upper floor, the voices of prayer and praise and testimony ascending from the rooms below, where the gathering was held. She has now gone whither many who worshipped in the past years, and who found Jesus there, have preceded her. To those thousands who knew and loved her, and who still remain, her voice and venerable presence will be treasured as a sweet memory, while her pure influence and grand example will long continue to encourage and stimulate other Christians in the struggle for the higher and more fully consecrated spiritual life.

Parable of the Pounds.

Sunday School Lesson for May 17. Luke 19 : 11-27. Golden Text, Luke 16 : 10. By Mrs.
M. Baxter.

H that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much, and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much" (Luke 16: 10). Our Lord spoke these words in relation to a stewardship, the issue of which had its bearing on the future, and he added, still addressing his disciples, "If, therefore, ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another's, who will give you that which your own?"

Nothing is Our Own

in this life ; we are here only on probation, the Lord only is the Portion of his people. "The Lord is my Portion, saith my soul, therefore will I hope in him" (Lam. 3: 24). All else we have in him and for him. We are stewards of our very life, for it has been both created and redeemed by him. "Ye are not your own" (1. Cor. 6 : 19), is a lesson much taught in Scripture, and yet understood by the very few ; but it is the clue to all real Christ life.

In our lesson for to-day, the question of the Lord's coming arises. Jesus and his disciples are on their way up to Jerusalem. He had already told them that the kingdom of God was within or in the midst of them (Luke 8: 21), and they had not understood.

Their hearts were set on a kingdom which cometh with observation, they wanted glory in the present, and they vainly hoped that Jesus would minister to this desire. "How glorious," they would think within themselves, "to have this mighty but gentle Man for our King, to have every one on the face of the earth astounded by the miracles which he works." Our enemies have laughed us to scorn, now we shall have a deservedly popular prince reigning upon the throne of his father David, and God's ancient people shall take the lead among the nations of the earth, as they have a right to expect, from the prophets. Here is the man who should hinder him from establishing

His Kingdom?"

Alas! they little knew how unprepared were the people of Israel for such a King, and how impossible it was for Christ to reign over a kingdom when sin had not been judged and put away! Daniel had indeed seen that the coming of Messiah the Prince meant "to finish transgression, and to make an end of sin, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness," and that then only could the Most Holy be anointed (Dan. 9:24). But the Jews of our Lord's time, even those who believed in him, could not understand that his everlasting kingdom could not come in upon an insecure foundation, where corruption and impurity existed. They looked only at that which is seen and temporal, and ignored the unseen and eternal (II. Cor. 5:18).

"He said, therefore, a certain nobleman sell a kingdom and to return, and he called pounds and said unto them, "Trade ye here with till I come." R. V., or "Occupy till I come." But the citizens hated him, and sent an ambassage after him, saying,
"Why wilt thou leave the most fruitful us." Here was the real state of things.
dom, but the vassals of his present territory were in a state of revolt. He must absent himself to receive a kingdom of his greater dimensions and far greater glory. He must lead captivity captive and overcome death itself. He must receive gifts for men (Eph. 4: 3) by virtue of which man might be united to him and made partaker of his nature (II. Pet. 1: 4). Meanwhile he must leave in trust servants who should be in charge for him. They must be true in the midst of the revolt around them, they will be unpopular, barely tolerated, but they must make gain of all the opposition they might meet with, and turn everything to good account. They are put in trust with his goods, nothing is their own. To each of them he commits a certain responsibility which is individual. This is just the position of Christ's own true followers in the present day.

Then he comes again, and his servants are called. It is the "judgment seat of Christ," and investigation is made as to how much each one has gained by trading. The first comes and says, "Lord, thy pound has gained ten pounds." "Thy pound," not my diligence. And the Lord answers him, "Well done, thou good servant, because thou wast found faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." The kingdom, the outward kingdom of Christ on earth is coming. His saints shall reign with him in proportion to their faithfulness here on earth, in the midst of a world which will not know or receive Christ as King. What kind of reign this may be, and how saints in glorified bodies (I. Cor. 15: 52; Phil. 3: 21) shall rule over mortal man; whether they shall live again on earth, but without being subject to the conditions of mortality, or whether, as in Jacob's ladder, they shall ascend and descend, is not clearly revealed to us. That which most imports to us is to see the condition of faithfulness now to which reigning with Christ in his kingdom is promised as the reward when he comes again, and his people receive the things done in the body (II. Cor. 5: 10). Another servant whose pound had only produced five pounds had rule only over five cities assigned to him. Each one who is faithful is dealt with according to his measure.

But there are unfaithful as well as faithful servants, and we hear the judgment of one of these. He also had received his pound; he had preserved it carefully, but had put it to no account; it had never come into circulation; it was simply kept for himself, "laid up in a napkin." How many are there among professing Christians whose pound is thus laid up in a napkin! Souls have not been brought to Christ by their pound; the standard of Christianity in their family and household has not been raised by their pound; nobody has seen it, nobody has felt its power. Their light, instead of lighting all that are in the house, has been hidden under a bushel, and has become darkness. They have been well received by the rebels who are in revolt against the King; the world knows them and claims them as its own. In heart they are "of the world"

John 15: 19, although they expect to be able to count on the blood of Christ for salvation. They present themselves among the servants when the Lord returns, but when he requires an explanation of their fruitless service, their very defence proves to be their guilt and condemnation.

"Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knowest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow." Are these the thoughts of God which fill the hearts of some who would pass for servants of the Lord? It cannot be. Hence God has said, "I will have mercy on him that is poor and lowly; but there is no eternal life in such perverted liberality."—Matt. xxiii. "Thou thought est wickedly that I was even such an one as thyself (Ps. 50: 21); but thou hast not been consistent even to these thy thoughts." "Wherefore then didst thou not put out my money to interest, that at my coming I shall have received mine own with usury" (R. V.). And he said unto those that stood by, "Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds." He who does not value above all price the privilege of service, but who meanly counts on his pound, the trust he has neglected, to claim some relationship to Christ when he shall appear, will see the faithful ones, those who overcome (Rev. 2: 3), taken away, and he will be left behind to have his part with the enemies of the King who shall be in revolt during the time of the great tribulation which may be near at hand. It is a searching lesson for us all.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

"BEHOLD HERE IS THY POUND."

class of hearers which comprised his disciples and followers, were aware that in Jerusalem, to which they were going, there would be a crisis. Thus, both classes were looking forward to this feast, the one as the time when this young Teacher would be finally silenced, and the other as the time when he would be seated on the throne of his ancestors and acknowledged King of Israel. This Parable was a reproach to both. He was the nobleman going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. The picture was not a strange one to them. Archelaus had been on just such a journey to Rome, to obtain from Augustus the kingdom inherited from his father. The nobleman's absence would divide the people into three classes, and it is here that its application to our own times is in force. It was to a far country that he was going, so his return would not be immediate. The time of his absence must not be spent by his followers on the one hand in idly waiting and looking for him; nor on the other hand must they forget that he was coming. Both errors were afterward common, and they are common now. Peter rebuked one (II. Peter 3: 4); Paul rebuked the other (II. Thess. 2: 2). The three classes, one of which is subdivided in the Parable, are: The servants who worked earnestly and faithfully; the servant who was idle and non-committal; and the subjects, who were not servants and who tried to prevent his obtaining the kingdom. To the servants, a charge was intrusted. In this, the Parable resembles that of the Talents (Matt. 25: 14-30), but it differs from it in the fact that the capital intrusted to them in the Talents was apportioned according to each man's several ability, while in this instance the same sum was given to each. We may therefore conclude that the pound was simply the Gospel message, which is the same for rich and poor, cultured and ignorant. This is committed to them to see what they will do with it. As Dr. Bruce says, "their work is not really money-making, but character-making." Their Lord would see whether they are prudent, energetic, and faithful. If they show these traits they will be put to high er work than money-making. This pour-representing the Gospel message, is cap-ble of immense development. Their chacter may grow into a rich harvest of vi-tues and graces, and it may be used to fluence many other people. When the Lord comes and reckons with them, o-has worked so well that there is a tenfold increase. He receives praise as well as reward. A second has a fivefold increase.

He receives reward only, having failed to do all he might have done. A third has done nothing. He has done no harm, and appears to be self-satisfied on that account.
There are many such people—good mormen, who boast of their pure lives and their irreproachable character, but by holing aloof from religion, make no use of the power Christ came to place at the dispos-of men, for the elevation of their own character and the redemption of their fellows. The punishment for that offence the withdrawal of the opportunity. No more will they have at command that priceless blessing which alone of all the good things men have had, is able to lift them out of the mire and make them Go-like. As for the enemies who were oppoand avowed in their opposition, they a-to be destroyed at his coming.

Delivered them ten pounds. One pound each. Supposed to have been the Att Mina, which was worth one hundred drachmæ or denarii, the word translated pence in the Gospels. The equivalent of the pound is estimated at sixteen dollars. It was a very modest capital, but sufficient for the purpose of showing what the servants could do. Prof. Isaac Hall states that he has seen traders in the Orient: bazaars, whose entire stock could be bought for five dollars, but who yet contrive to do such a business with the small stock as to support their families.

I have kept laid up. Religion is of no value as mere head knowledge. It is intended to be active in the life. A man may have the most correct and orthodox opinions, and know all about the Bible and Christian doctrine, and yet be a very bad man, if his knowledge does not influence his conduct. A country woman consulted a city physician, who, after diagnosing her case, gave her a prescription. Her own doctor in the country used to give her a bottle of medicine or a box of pills, and she did not understand what she was to do with the prescription. When she went again to the physician she told him that his prescription had done her no good. He asked to see the medicine she had left. She told him she had no medicine, but had been carrying the prescription around with her, expecting it would operate as a charm.

Well, thou good servant. The reward was far beyond the service, but it was not intended as a reward so much as a responsibility. The servant had shown by his service that he was capable of fulfilling the higher duties required of him. There are many people who like Balaam want to die the death of the righteous and to have their reward, but do not like to perform the service which proves their fitness for it. An eccentric preacher, addressing an audience of miners, described two mines in one of which there was very little done and the wages were low. He represented himself as working in that mine, but on Saturday going to the other mine for wages, because the wages paid there were much higher. But the manager said to him, "You have been working in the other mine, that is the place for you to be paid. Why do you come here?" The laborer replies, "Because the wages here are better than at the other mine." The manager answers "Yes, but we pay here only those who work here." Those who work for the devil must look to him for their wages.

Lord, he hath ten pounds. That was a reason according to them why he should not have more. It was really the best reason why he should have more, as he has proved that he was able to turn money to good use. A man gives to two servants a bushel of grain each. At the end of a few years he calls for it. One servant shows him fields of waving grain, the product of that bushel. The other shows him the sack of grain still standing in the barn. It has been taken care of; not a grain has been lost, but it has not increased as it might have done. It would be useless to intrust such a man with seed. A Sunday School teacher who uses the little knowledge he may have and makes the best of it is a more profitable servant than a learned theologian who teaches no one.

The Gospel in the Prisons.

Universal Need of the Bible and other Good Literature in our Penal Institutions — Prison Evangelism in Texas.

IN THE whole field of evangelistic effort, at the present time, there is nowhere a greater need of workers than the prisons. Many penal institutions are almost without of the erection of a larger jail, Mr. McNabb appeared before the Commissioners and pleaded for a new and more commodious structure in the name of humanity, the present one being too small. He also asked for a chapel in the jail for worship. A new jail is being now erected, but the chapel was not granted. The new building will be better arranged for services than the old one. The Bible is placed under the corner-stone of the new jail that it might rest on God's Word that saves, even in prison.

Thousands of men and women, who probably have seldom heard the Gospel preached, and who never would have been reached otherwise, have heard it within these prison walls. Many are coming forth with the firm resolve to lead upright lives. One man who was converted was given a Bible to read in his cell. Some of his cell-mates seized it and burned it up, because it had changed him to a Bible-reading, praying man. When he came out he joined the Salvation Army, and has since led an exemplary life.

At each service, a number of the prisoners kneel and ask for prayers, promising to live for God afterward. They often join in the singing. Services are held upstairs with the whites from 3:30 to 4:30 P. M., and downstairs with the negroes from 4:30 to 5 P. M. All classes of prisoners welcome the services and say they are the better for them. The need of an Industrial Home is much felt, to employ friendless prisoners when released, until they can se-

Caswell is the Infirmary or Hospital organist and he is also physical director of the Y.M.C.A., and much devoted to the Master's work. Mr. Matthis is the assistant secretary of the Y.M.C.A. The hospital services are held on Sunday morning at 9:30 A.M. The room where our scene is taken is what is known as the Section Ward being one of the largest wards on the ground floor. The Section men from the different railroads who come to the hospital sick or injured are usually assigned to this ward. There are some twenty-five or thirty beds in this ward and often nearly all of them are occupied, as the territory the men come from embraces thousands of miles and includes four or five railroads all centering in Houston. They come from all portions of the State and have the Gospel preached to them every Sunday they remain in the hospital. This mission work at the hospital was begun some four or five years ago, when the hospital was only about one-half its present size and from a service to three or four men it has now grown to large numbers. The committee also keeps the hospital patients well supplied with good Christian literature which is largely furnished by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers who have liberally responded to calls made through its columns.

The entire work, both prison and hospital, is undenominational. Mr. McNabb is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, Mr. Bradburn of the M.E. Church South, Mr. Caswell of the First Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Matthis is a Congregationalist. The services consist of music, singing, and short Bible talks, all aiming to bring souls into the kingdom and to comfort the sick. Fifteen minutes, or not more than twenty, are allowed the leader and from five to ten minutes for other talks. In addition to this regular hospital work, the Catholic Hospital (St. Joseph's) is visited by the individual members of the Committee who go to the bedsides of the poor sick (who are cared for by the County), ministering to them in various ways as well as furnishing them with good literature at times. Many a friendless man has been cheered up and given dollars, and other aristocratic gamblers were indebted to the Jewish millionaire for the means of maintaining their position. It is said that Baron Hirsch hoped through their influence to obtain admission to the highest society. But if he ever had that ambition, it was not gratified. He was not fitted for it by birth or education, and to the last he retained, in spite of his wealth and associations, the manner and the spirit of the counting-house. Besides this, he was a Jew, and would never conceal his Jewish race and sympathies. A characteristic incident showing this trait of his character is related by a correspondent of the New York Sun:

A World-wide Philanthropist.

It appears that a certain club in Paris rejected every Jew who was proposed for membership, and among them Baron Hirsch. One day, however, the club was in consternation. Its managers learned that Hirsch had become the owner of the building it occupied, and could evict them from their home. They offered to elect Hirsch to membership if he would leave them undisturbed. He refused, and insisted that reparation be made to his race, not to himself. If the club would elect a certain Jew, an enemy of the Baron, they might keep their house, and they yielded.

It was, however, in a more substantial way than by the resentment of slights that Baron de Hirsch identified himself with his race. His ambition was to make the poorest Jews of Europe self-supporting and self-respecting. To this end he devised many schemes, one of which was the Jewish Colonization Company, to the capital stock of which he gave ten million dollars. One of its colonies was established in the Argentine Republic, but this proved a failure. A second was organized at Woodbine, N. J., and here there are over five thousand acres of land, partly in farms and partly covered with factories, on which about nine hundred Jews from Eastern Europe have been settled.

Baron Hirsch is probably best known in this country by the help he has given to the technical education of his people.

With the trust fund of two and a half million dollars, previously referred to, schools have been opened in New York where the arts and sciences are taught to Jewish boys and immigrants free of charge. Here the newly arrived Russian, or Roumanian, or Polish Hebrew is received, and is not only taught the English language, and other branches of education, not forgetting the Constitution and the principles of government, but is trained to mechanical work. Six courses are open to his choice: Carpentry, plumbing, wood-turning, printing, house and sign painting, and machinery, have each their location and their respective teacher. The whole is under the general superintendence of Mr. J. Ernest G. Yalden, to whose kindness we are indebted for the photographs of two of the departments, as well as the portrait of the late Baron, which have been reproduced on the first page.

One personal touch of pathetic interest ought not to be overlooked in the story of this philanthropic life. Although the late Baron was strongly drawn to this work of intelligent helpfulness soon after his early financial successes, it was a crushing sorrow that led to its multiplication and extension. He had only one child, a beloved son, Lucien, who died in 1888 just as life was opening up before him in his manhood. The stricken father had no further care for business. It pleased him to think that he was in some way his son's executor when he gave to the Jews of Eastern Europe the money that would have been his son's had the young man lived. He retired from active life soon after his son's death and his gifts from that time largely increased and continued to do so until the close of his life. It is satisfactory to know that these benefactions have been to a large extent investments, which are in the hands of trustees, who will use the income as a permanent fund to carry on the work. Thus, the philanthropist's good deeds will live after him in the institutions that bear his name, and will not end with his life.

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSTON, TEX., JAIL MISSION

Rev. Mr. Bradburn, Mr. Tomey, Mr. McNabb, Miss Bradburn.

ance of religious life, and even a greater number are so destitute of all that tends to awaken in the prisoner the desire for better things, that it is little wonder if the criminal, after being released, returns to his old haunts and associations, and gradually drifts back to the life of crime, that maelstrom which inevitably draws him behind the bars in the end. Evangelistic work and good literature are sorely needed in nearly all of our prisons. Mr. Dwight L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, in calling attention to this fact through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some time ago, gave utterance to a truth which finds abundant corroboration in many quarters. No stronger evidence is needed than the letters from prison chaplains and superintendents all over the country, extracts from which appeared in these columns lately, expressing the great need of Christian literature for the prisons and conveying thanks for the portions sent.

In many cities of the Union, Gospel work is now being carried on in the prisons by consecrated volunteers—godly men and women who devote much of their time and means to spiritual effort for the reclamation of the law-breakers. In Boston, Philadelphia, New York, and a few other prominent cities, prison work has become a leading feature of Christian activity. To-day we are enabled to trace before our readers the story of a most interesting Gospel work that has been conducted for the past seven years by the Jail Mission of Houston, Tex. This Mission had a very modest origin. Feeling called to a work of this character for the Master, John A. McNabb, a young business man of Houston, in 1889, began to labor among the inmates of the Harris county jail. For several years he was alone in the field, and then certain of the local pastors, the W. C. T. U., Salvation Army Corps and other workers, gave occasional assistance. A Committee was organized last year by Mr. McNabb, consisting of Rev. Wm. Bradburn, Mr. Wm. Tomey, and Miss Camille Bradburn (the last-named as organist and singer), to visit and conduct services in the prison. An audience was always waiting and the workers were always welcomed. They have the full freedom of the jail, and are left alone with the prisoners during the services. The jailers show them every courtesy. While the County Commissioners were considering the advisability cure honest work and support themselves.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES IN THE PRISON HOSPITAL, HOUSTON, TEXAS.

The lives of the committee of workers are consecrated to soul-saving. Rev. Mr. Bradburn is an earnest pleader for Christ's cause, as is also Mr. Tomey, who seeks earnestly to bring the sinner to God. Miss Bradburn's sweet singing draws the prisoners closer to the cell bars to hear the Gospel in song. Several friends of the Committee have presented them with a beautiful organ, expressly for this jail work, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have supplied them with good literature for several years past. They have full faith in the power of the Gospel to turn the hearts of the criminal, and will never cease pleading Jesus' love for them.

In the larger of the illustrations on this page, the workers are shown conducting a service in the Prison Hospital. Mr. McNabb is seen reading the Scriptures; to his right is Rev. Mr. Blackburn. The other two young men are Mr. Matthis and Mr. Caswell also of the committee. Mr.

new courage by these faithful workers, who never neglect an opportunity to point the criminal or the suffering to the Cross and to eternal life.

They Did What They Could.

It is related that a cobbler in Belgium, when asked what share he took in the mission work, answered: "I am no speaker and cannot help in the meetings, so I settled with a friend on a plan of our own. We go from house to house on Sunday afternoons, and begin talking. I then question my friend about his conversion, and he answers me. I go about drawing him out, and in this way we do something for the cause."

A poor woman of Peru who cannot read a word herself, has stitched together various tracts and she has had read to her till she knows them by heart. She goes to many houses with the tracts, talking about Christ, and has made several converts.

Keziah's Prayer.

KEZZY! Keziah! everybody's waiting. Please come down at once!"

The call from the foot of the stairs was urgent. Keziah reluctantly closed the Greek Testament, slipped on her hat and jacket, locked her little desk, and flew down to join the other girls of her class, for the Sunday School class to which she belonged had arranged a Saturday afternoon excursion to the woods, where the nuts were ripe, and the bright yellow and red maples made the world beautiful, as if armies with banners were filling it with pomp and circumstance.

Keziah's father was the minister and he had taught his bonny eldest daughter how to read Greek, so that when she prepared her weekly lesson, she possessed an advantage over the rest, even over her teacher. One finds the knowledge of any language besides one's own, ancient or modern, I prefer not to say living or dead, for I can never think of Latin and Greek as dead, a very great assistance in studying the Word of God. It is as if you brought another candle, or a blazing lamp to illuminate the text.

Keziah Brown was a busy girl. Besides helping her father in the parish work, she taught school five days in the week, and last night her quarter's salary had been paid her. It was fifty dollars, all in gold. You may imagine she felt rich, almost like a millionaire. Many a millionaire has less delight in his great wealth, than Keziah found in her small stipend, for you see, she had earned it, and it meant a great deal to her; and also, she had a number of things to do with it—kind, loving things for father and the children. Very little of Keziah's money was spent exclusively on her own simple wants.

They had a lovely nutting frolic, and it was late when they returned. Saturday evening brought many little tasks, before the week could be considered finished up and set aside, and Keziah went to bed at half-past ten, very weary, but happy and contented.

On to-morrow, Sunday morning, there would be Communion, and also a collection. Keziah meant to give the Lord's tenth from her salary to this collection. When she was entirely ready for church, gloves on, hat on, Bible laid out, handkerchief taken from her bureau drawer, she unlocked her desk, to get her money.

There was no money there. Keziah remembered exactly where she had placed the roll of gold. It was not like a wad of bills that could be easily mislaid, it was yellow shining gold. And it was gone!

No time to search for it now! Impossible to tell father of the loss, just as he was going to church with his sermon on his mind. Equally impossible to suspect anyone in the home; all beneath that roof were honest as the day, and to be relied on. Impossible to stay at home, miss the sacred service, and the Lord's Supper while searching for the lost treasure. Keziah could have cried, but she remained calm and instead of crying, called upon the Lord. Kneeling by her bed, she prayed for guidance and comfort.

"Oh! Lord, God Almighty," Keziah prayed, "I have lost my money, my months' salary. I don't know what to do without it. I haven't time to look for it, and what's the use of looking, for I surely did put it in the left-hand corner of my writing-desk. Dear Lord, enable me to forget all about it all this day, and help me to enjoy this service, as if the money had not been lost. For Christ's sake. Amen."

If you ever had the misfortune to lose a sum of money, or if you had your pocket picked, you know very well that this was no small thing that Keziah asked. It was indeed a large petition. But not too large for the Lord. He heard and answered graciously inclining his ear to his lowly young hand-maiden, as a King to a devoted courtier. Keziah has told me that the whole day long she was delivered from every thought of wrong concerning her missing gold.

And the next morning she found it. Where do you suppose it was? Just where she had put it when she tucked her Greek Testament in her hurry to go out with the girls behind the sofa pillow on the lounge. There, comfortably resting, was the money which she had fancied secure in her desk, but which had been carelessly left in a corner of the sofa all the while.

MÖHAMMEDAN PILGRIMAGE TO THE TOMB OF NEBI MOOSA.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Archæology and the Bible.

The student of the Old Testament, writes Prof. Price of the Theological Department of the Chicago University, finds in archæology many contributions of surpassing interest. We are now certain that writing was not invented in the time of David and Solomon; that it had been in use many years before Joshua inscribed the commandments in clay upon the altar at Shechem; that Moses was reared in a literary court, surrounded by an educated priesthood who were in possession of remarkable literary products of an older time; and that, in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries B.C., Asia and Africa carried on extensive literary correspondence by means of the cuneiform writing of Babylonia. We know also that Egypt has left us writings from at least the fourth dynasty—a date more than 4000 years B.C. The illiterate argument has gone to pieces in the face of such facts. Literature has flourished in the earth for more than six thousand years. Writing was not unknown among civilized peoples after 3000 B.C. Only a blindfold critic could now assert that Israel was not able to produce such literature as the Old Testament contains until very late in history or that David wrote no psalms, because that age could not have produced such masterpieces as are attributed to him. The indications are that we must very soon reverse our attitude, and see how far back we can locate the composition of the Old Testament books, rather than how far down in the Maccabean period.

An overruling Providence has kept these treasures safely hidden away until this time. He has allowed the enemies of his Word to advance just so far, when a new volley from the tombs drives them back; another advance, and a mummy of forty centuries terrifies them by his visage.

"The Tomb of Nebi Moosa!"

Annual Pilgrimage of Mohammedans to the Legendary Tomb of Moses.

MOSLEM arrogance and superstition were never more clearly set forth than in the following letter, received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from a correspondent in Jerusalem:

"March 26 was a memorable day among the Moslems, being the day of the annual pilgrimage to 'the tomb of Nebi Moosa,' which, translated, means literally the tomb of Moses the Prophet. It is well-known that the place where the great law-giver was buried has been hidden from the Israelites and the world in general, and it was meant that it should always be so; but to the true followers of Mo-of the Christians if need be. The spot selected is about twenty miles east of Jerusalem, on the hills of Judea, opposite the Dead Sea and Mount Nebo. On the place there stand now a mosque and a minaret. A man is permanently stationed there in charge of these shrines, to whom they give the name 'kiam' equivalent to dervish. The Moslem devotees, at a fixed time, come to the place in great numbers. They solemnly pray there for a fortnight; in intervals of devotion they spend the time in racing, dancing, feasting, and other kinds of enjoyment. There is a good deal of hospitality and feasting, and the people contribute liberally to the shrines. Even the hard savings of poor people, who have been trying for months before to save money are quickly wasted at 'Nebi Moosa.'

"Early in the afternoon, the streets leading to St. Stephen's Gate, Jerusalem, were lined with soldiers on both sides, and the roofs of houses as well as the windows were covered with spectators. English and American tourists had an early lunch that day so as to be able to see the procession in good time. The infantry, with bayonets in hand, marched through the streets with great pomp, the officers with drawn swords. Banners had already been borne before them to the number of nearly fifty. On these banners were words from the Koran and on the 'banner of the prophet' was written the famous paragraph 'There is no God, but God, and Mohammed is the Apostle of God.' On another banner was: 'Deliverance through God, and a victory in a hand,' etc. The people, with sword and shields in hand, were shouting and dancing before the banners with much enthusiasm and excitement, shouting and singing their monotonous religious songs with much energy. They advanced slowly but steadily, the soldiers on both sides marching with them and trying to prevent overcrowding, which they could not do easily owing to the narrowness of the streets, but the moment they came out of the gate, and had more space and room, they began to play with the swords, keeping up their shouting, and the artillery firing cannon meanwhile.

"On both sides of the road the hills were quite covered with people, the women with gaudy, fantastic dresses and many with white veils drawn over their faces. There were many, however, who set aside this etiquette and preferred to view the procession through no veil. The ladies were dressed with all the colors of the rainbow, thus appearing in the distance like so many wild-flowers. The walls of Jerusalem were quite crowded with spectators, and some of them even ventured to climb up the towers. From the streets leading to St. Stephen's gate to the furthest end of Gethsemane, the hills and the 'Hosannah road' were lined with men and women, the number being computed at not less than twenty thousand people. Cavalymen were in the middle, mounted on fiery horses, and others with banners before and banners behind, while those that had already preceded were far in the distance on their way to 'Nebi Moosa,' the wild shoutings and exultations of the Moslems still audible even at that distance. Pilgrims were still pouring into the city in a thick, continuous stream from the end of the Hosannah road which is above the village of Siloam. Owing to the road being a little more spacious than the narrower streets of Jerusalem, they could march with more freedom and rapidly.

"Some tourists came to see the alleged burial-place, driving in carriages or mounted on horses, mules and donkeys, while a good number were on foot; but they kept aside to avoid overcrowding. To judge from the enthusiasm with which the procession was conducted, the prophet Moosa had a share of the Moslem's devotion quite worthy of the old Mohammedan tradition. No accident took place during the entire celebration."

ammed nothing is hidden, and even this great mystery has been revealed to them, although it had been undivulged for several thousand years. The alleged revelation was made by an angel to a few dervishes, the celestial beings indicating the very spot where Moses was buried. This has now become a part of the orthodox belief of the Moslems, although there are many who regard it as merely a shrewd movement on the part of the leaders of the Mohammedan faith to create a diversion at Easter time. At that particular season, a vast number of Christians of all denominations, pour into Jerusalem, to be present at the commemoration of the Saviour's death. Observing this, it occurred to the Moslems that there was no reason why they should not have a similar commemoration of the death of some prophet of their own, and as it was not an easy task to find the tomb of Mohammed, they fell back on Moses! As to the spot to be selected, it was purely a matter of policy and convenience. A famous poet has written of the obsequies of the great Hebrew prophet:

This was the grandest funeral
That ever passed on earth—
An Freeman heard the trumpeting,
Or saw the train go forth,
And no man drew the sepulchral
Shroud away from it;
For the hand of God upturned the sod,
And laid the dead man there.

But to the Moslems, whom nothing can baffle, such secrecy was unavailing. They decided to find the grave and, as they now declare, they did find it. Of course, nobody could say that this was the real spot where Moses was buried; but on the other hand, none could positively aver that it was not the spot. Hence the story of the dervishes has settled one of the most difficult problems in history.

"The time of the 'commemoration' was purposely made to agree with Easter, so that there should always be a counterforce of Mohammedanism to oppose that to the Ottoman Rule has Afflicted the Globe for Hundreds of Years—A Despotism whose Doom is Rapidly Approaching.

The Ottomans had now become the scourge of Europe. Under Mahommed I. and Murad II., wars, revolts, and incursions were incessant. All the provinces of a Minor were brought under Turkish domination and the tide of blood and slaughter flowed to the full. Mohammed II. accomplished the complete subjugation of

FAMOUS DESPOTS OF THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE

OSMAN I., Founder of the Empire
SERAPIM III. Augustus

A333 : A372
 M. 45 IV.

OSCHAN,

SELIM I.

OSCAR II
AND MELITA

Ibrahim I., Murad's successor, was another victim of the stranger, who in those days seems to have been an unusually active official. In Sultan Mohammed IV's reign, the outrages on Christians became intolerable. With his vast armies, he struck Europe with terror and during the siege of Vienna, large numbers of Christian men and women in the suburbs were frightfully maltreated and slain.

They were thus disposed of, and the women, their provisions being exhausted, and the women, finding their dreadful fate if they fell into the hands of the Turks, threw their children down into the rocky abyss below, then clasping each other by the hand commenced to sing and danced one by one over the cliff, thus rapidly following their little ones into death. One Turk, who was not of the tribe, but of the village of Parga, and who had been sent to the city to buy provisions, was passing by the cliff at the time, and saw the women as they were falling. He was so shocked and horrified that he ran to the city and told the authorities what he had seen. The authorities then sent a detachment of soldiers to the cliff, and they found the women and children who had been thrown down. The soldiers then carried the bodies to the city and buried them in a secret place.

deceitful, more than any of his predecessors. The awful crimes committed in Asia Minor within the last two and a-half years are the climax of a long history of oppression and slaughter,—a national career marked by every description of violence and outrage. More to-day than ever is the Ottoman the enemy of mankind and of the Christian religion. The indescribable horrors of Abdul Hamid's reign prove him and his Moslem subjects both in ferocity and barbarian cruelty to be the most malignant and persistent scourge of mediæval or modern times. The whole world will welcome the day when the nations rise in their might and drive the Turks out of Europe, to a quarter of the globe where they will be powerless for harm and no longer a stumbling block to civilization and a menace to Christianity.

A Transformed Land.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it: and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

The Irresistible Indiana.

4 Fresh Water Lake in the Ocean.
A scientific traveler recently returned from the South Pacific, publishes in the Geographical Journal a description of an

OUR MOST FORMIDABLE WAR-SHIP, "INDIANA," IN NEW YORK BAY

A delicate surgical operation was performed a few days ago in a Brooklyn hospital. A child was brought there, by the advice of a local physician, to be examined with the view of ascertaining if its mental condition could be improved by an operation. The child was a girl baby about a year and a half old. It had the dull, unobservant, vacant look which indicates idiocy. The surgeons at the hospital examined the child's head and found that the skull was abnormally thick and the head prematurely ossified. The brain was so tightly compressed that it had no room to grow and develop. The doctors concluded that the only way to relieve the pressure was by the operation known as Craniotomy. The parents consented and the operation was performed. The skull was trephined at the right side of the forehead, and a cut made along the side of the skull four inches in length. From this point another cut was made forward and downward. The pressure of the brain appeared to be relieved at once. When the child came from under the influence of the

One of the most remarkable labor difficulties of the time is reported from New Jersey. It is a strike in the County Almshouse at Snake Hill near Jersey City. There has recently been a change of quarters, much to the advantage of the inmates. A new building was erected for the insane patients, who were transferred to it from the almshouse. The part of the building the lunatics had occupied was thoroughly renovated and was to be given to the male paupers of whom there are about two hundred in the institution. It was expected that they would be gratified by the change, as their old quarters were somewhat dilapidated. As soon as the

A Corrected Programme of the Northfield meetings for the summer has been received from Mr. Moody. Its leading features are as follows: June 14, Commencement Sermon by Mr. D. L. Moody to the Graduating Class; June 15, Conference of Delegates to the International Sunday School Convention; June 16, July 5, World's Student Conference; June 17, Sept. 1, Y. M. C. A. Encampment. Tents accommodating four persons supplied at $5.00 each. Young men bringing their own camp have location trees. July 1-2, Young Women's Conference; July 30 to Aug. 16, General Conference of Christian Workers. Rev. F. B. Meyer is expected to remain through the month of August giving frequent lectures. It is hoped that Frederick Webb-Peploe will also be able to attend.

Life in the Transvaal.

Peace-loving, but Patriotic Boers and their Fondness of a Simple, Pastoral Life—The Energetic Uitlanders.

IN the clash of rival interests which is now going on in South Africa, the little Transvaal Republic seems destined to suffer, in some degree. It is now over sixty years since the Boer farmers of the Cape Colony made their "grand trek" or general exodus across the Vaal to a territory which was at that time under the rule of the Zulu chief, Moselekatze. They had gone thither with their lumbering ox-wagons, their wives and children and chattels, because they disliked the policy England was at that time pursuing toward the natives. The "trekkers" found the Transvaal country full of warlike bands, whom they had to fight, just as our own American pioneers at every stage of their progress westward had to face the red men. Sorrow fell upon the Boer homes when Dingaan, the brother and successor of Chaka, the greatest of the Zulu chiefs, almost annihilated a whole division of the "trekkers." Even when they believed all their troubles ended, the march of British empire, in the occupation of Natal, drove the Boers across the Drakenburg, one band settling in the Orange Free State and the other in the Transvaal. Through stress and storm, battle and trial, the little republic had to pass before it was finally established, and it is not to be wondered at that the grave-faced, taciturn Boers love it and are ready to fight again as stoutly for its integrity as they did at Majuba Hill and elsewhere in the war of 1880-81.

The Transvaal is rich in the precious metals. Gold fields were found in 1867, but the Boers, probably profiting by the experience of other parts of Africa, discouraged the opening up of the fields and the influx of a large mining population. Ten years ago, fresh discoveries of rich auriferous deposits were made, the richest being in the Middleburg province, and this was followed by an influx of English-speaking people so great that it threatened to swamp the Boer population. President Paul Kruger, the present Executive (famously called "Oom Paul" by his countrymen), has steadily resisted foreign influence and foreign interference. With his people he preferred to lead a quiet, uneventful life, unharrassed by the cares incident to the development of great mining enterprises. They did not want their pretty, rural towns of Johannesburg and Pretoria to be invaded, their shady, residential streets transformed into noisy thoroughfares, and their days and nights filled with the roar of commerce. There is something of the Puritan in these stern-browed Boers, and their grave-faced, matronly-looking wives, and it was perhaps natural that they should have opposed, with all the energies they possessed, the growth of those influences which, they foresaw, would ultimately absorb their country and transform its character.

The Transvaal is no longer the wild, unbroken wilderness, with great stretches of pasture beside the streams, it was when the Boers first came there. It is a country of rare agricultural qualities, which have been skillfully developed by Dutch energy and industry. Our illustrations show two scenes in the Transvaal that are not of infrequent occurrence. It is not an easy thing to drive a heavy wagon across country and a break-down is to be expected. Such has been the fate of the gold prospector's vehicle shown in the photograph. In the second picture the prospector is seen critically examining a heap of the dirt he has taken from the slope beyond, for the purpose of detecting signs of gold. Should such signs be present in his test in sufficient quantities, the whole surroundings would quickly become a scene of bustle and activity, and hundreds would rush to the spot to dig for the precious metal.

Botany in the Home.

Though all cannot be scientists, there is hardly an excuse, nowadays, for any one

A BREAKDOWN ON THE WAY.

Incident of a journey to the Transvaal gold fields.

being wholly ignorant of the popular sciences. Do you understand botany? If not, get a hand-book on the subject. Have the children gather some leaves, and from them explain the structure of veins, teach the names of the forms and some of the names of trees and plants represented. If thoroughly done, you will get through with leaves the first summer, but the little ones will in that time be more thorough than the big brother or sister who takes a common high school course in the same branch, but who takes it all in the same length of time. The blossom could come the next season, but this would finish the course perhaps, for roots and stems and family distinctions would work in themselves. There are few parents who do not have knowledge that would be helpful to the boy or girl some time. Many parents have not the time to give a stated hour daily to this work, though many who think this is so in their case could plan for this time. It will afford far more pleasure than you can imagine.

House Cleaning and Happiness.

The season of universal house cleaning is at hand—a time when wives and servants are burdened with work to a greater extent than during any other part of the year. On this subject, Mrs. Meade C. Williams gives some good hints to mothers. She writes: "The mother is often careful and troubled about many things. The cellar, the attic, the closets, the clothes, the walls, the carpets, the moths, the mice, all need the ubiquitous eye of the queen of the home. If she deliberately shuts out these things for a little while every day and shuts herself in with Christ, and looks up to him for strength in her weakness, for wisdom in her ignorance of the proper proportion of things, for patience with her unstrung, overwrought nerves, for gladness in her perplexity, for anchorage in the shipwreck of plans and hopes, for a stay when everything else seems to perish in the using, for help in house-cleaning time, she will get it. In spite of dust and dirt she will be mistress of her herself. She will conquer animate and inanimate nature which seems as utterly depraved in the spring, as human nature does at all seasons. She will as truly reflect heaven in her eye as the dew-drop does the sun."

A Very Youthful Christian.

In the April number of The Home Missionary, Mrs. Joseph Ward, of Yankton, S. D., tells the touching story of a little lad of five, Robbie —, who, although, hardly more than an infant, had already given his heart to Christ, and took a genuine pleasure in serving the Master. Such was his self-denial that a large proportion of the pennies he received from time to time was voluntarily devoted to the Lord's work, through missions and otherwise. Church was a delight to the child and he hailed the approach of every Sunday, when he could go to worship. Stricken with a mortal disease, the little fellow lay in a stupor. Saturday night came. A sunset sky of brightness and glory foretold the Sabbath peace. Robbie, who had grown rapidly worse, roused up; but it was the flaring up of the flame before the "light of the home" went out. "Mamma, what day is this?" he asked. His broken-hearted mother, hardly able to control her voice, spoke in the old, soothing mother-tones: "It is Saturday, dear Robbie." Then, with a beautiful smile and a great content, he whispered, as his mother bent low to hear, "To-morrow, Sabbath day, go to my church." As the Sabbath bell was ringing little Robbie was dressed in his "Sunday suit," but no eager little feet would take him again along the well-worn path to the earthly temple of God—for he had gone to that city of which "the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple." The father himself bore the little coffin to its resting-place among the cotton-woods.

A PROSPECTOR LOOKING FOR SIGNS OF GOLD

In an Empress' Boudoir.

So much is written nowadays regarding the splendor of royalty and its surroundings, that it is refreshing to learn, through an accurate German writer, that there is one royal personage at least whose life is not encumbered with useless show. Such a one is the Empress of Germany. The narrator says: "We are all on tiptoe to see its elegance; but we shall be disappointed if we are expecting luxurious furnishings. The walls are covered with a cotton tapestry, to be sure, and there are some very valuable pieces of furniture here; but there is a simplicity about the whole which is in strange contrast with an American's ideas of royal magnificence. Works of art abound, books are not wanting, paintings by the masters cover the walls, there is furniture enough and is good enough; but there is no hint of luxurious living or vain show. You are now oppressed by the elegance of the furnishings as one may be in the homes of the wealthy Americans."

The Birds in Spring.

A WHIRR of wings o'er clovered meadow
The gleam of a harness and crown,
And low on the swaying maple
A bobolink settles down.
A chime as if from bells of silver
Over the clover soft doth float,
E'er yet the rapturous song-burst
Outpours from the feathered throat.

A whirr of wings, a gleam of yellow,
Faint-heard notes, and into the throng
Of clover heads gently nodding,
Drops softly the bird and song.
As Wordsworth saw in dreamy wakings
Daffodils nodding in seas of gold,
For me the hills and meadows will ever
The chime of bobolinks hold.

Country Air.

"THANK God for a good, long, fresh breath in the country," writes I. Talmage. "For the first time in years we feel rested. Last evening sped along the skirt of the wood. With the odor of red clover-tops, and breath of the woods, and the company with us in the carriage, and the moonlight—it was nothing less than enchantment. There is something in the country air put one in blandest mood. We are peace with all the world. We would hurt a spider. We could take our bitter foe and give him a camp-stool on the piazza. We would not blame him for not liking us if he liked our strawberries. I would walk with him arm in arm through water-melon patch and peach-orchard. I should be persuaded that if we could write good sermons and vivacious lectures we can nevertheless raise great pumpkin and long orange-carrots, and drumhead cabbage. We would take him in our carriage, go at consistent, minister gait, never racing with anyone, if there were danger of our being beaten. We hereby proclaim peace forever with any man who likes our hens."

"Amidst such scenes to autumn! Congregation would be advantaged by it, for a few weeks of every year, they would allow the pastors a little farm-life. sharp hoe will hack pieces all your dyspepsia. A pruning-knife will cut the excrescences of your disposition. The dash of the shower that wets you to the skin will cool your spirits. Daily swinging of the axe will tone up your nerves. Trampling down the hay as it is tossed into the mow will tread into forgetfulness your little perplexities. In the wake of the plough you may pick up strength with which to battle public iniquity. Neighbors looking over the fence may think we are only weeding cantaloupes, or splitting rails, or husking corn, when we are rebuilding our strength, enkindling our spirits, quickening our brain, purifying our theology and blessing our souls."

"The aroma of the garden almost bewilders my senses. Flowers seem to me the dividing-line between the physical and the spiritual. The stamen of the honeysuckle is the alabaster pillar at which the terrestrial and the celestial part meet. Out of the cup of the water-lily earth and heaven drink. May the blessing of larkspur and sweet-william fall upon all the dwellers of country and town! Let there be someone to set a tuft of mignonette by every sick man's pillow, and plant a fuchsia in every working-man's yard, and place a geranium in every sewing-girl's window, and twine a cypress about every poor man's grave."

The Reward of Service.

ions on the Christian Endeavor
for the Week Beginning May 17.
25: 31-46.

NE of the most significant features of the description given in the passage connected with the topic, is the surprise of the people on both sides at the praise and the reproach: "Ye did it unto me." Christ

sees himself as having been hungry, and in prison, and men knew it not.
He ministered to him,
showing that it was he;
had done nothing for him. The reply of those who rejected him appears to show that they had known of him, they would have known it. The warning ought to prevent any such surprise.
It states that Christ will be in the world in a guise not recognizable. He is careless, never, to give a clue to the path he will take. He sees himself with his people in them; the union of those that their need is his suffering, his. The portion is done to the people because they are his people;
act of kindness done to him, a loving service done in expectation of a reward, duty performed by one who recognized the brotherhood, a common affection, forgotten by him who
But it is not forgotten Christ. The deed was an act of character which was loved and noted. They are blessed of the Lord, and for them a kingdom was prepared before the founding of the world. As a father watches his children and notices the traits of character they display when under his observation, his eye is on men, and he knows that they do. The father of a wealthy man to adopt a child, going one day to a Foundling home and watching the children, their studies and attention. No hint of what about to do was given,
he was silently observant.
He left his play to help a crippled girl who had lost a simple, kindness to do, and was done with ostentation. The father noticed it, and at his next visit his attention was on that boy. In the ground and in the school, to the lad, he watched and saw that his kindness to the cripple was no isolated, precious act, but was a spontaneous motion of his heart. That was the kindness he wanted. He took the crippled child, educated him, brought him up as his own. This is no imagery, but a fact. The father is now a millionaire, and yet all, not to his kindness to the crippled child, but to the character that prompted him to the kindness. The father due to one who was in the kingdom Christ-like. It is the who have his spirit and live in him. Not all who are saved will have this dominion. There are some who are in a fiery fire, who scarcely enter in. In the spirit of Christ is stifled under the worldliness and selfishness. It is in them, but it has no activity, and the world and the world are little the better for their being Christians. For them the kingdom is prepared. Some humble souls will have, where they can mature and become Christ-like in them are the words of welcome.

The meekness of character, the orderly that was unwavering, is not for that reward. It is activity, the which evokes the blessing.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

WALKING IN THE SUNSHINE.

W. ROBERT LINDSAY.

"AND HE SAITH UNTO THEM, FOLLOW ME."—Matt. 4: 19.

IRA D. SANKEY.

1. Walk - ing in the sun - shine, beau - ti - ful and bright, In the ros - y morn - ing, or the
2. In the brightest sun - shine, or the dark - est gloom, In the love - ly spring - time, or the
3. In the gold - en sun - shine, or the shadows deep, When the storm is rag - ing, when it dew - y night; Stead - i - ly ad - vanc - ing, onward day by day, Fol - low Je - sus all the way.

summers bloom; Hear the Sav - iour calling, hast - en to o - bey, Fol - low Je - sus all the way.
sinks to sleep; Trust - ing in His mer - cy till the closing day, Fol - low Je - sus all the way.

CHORUS.

Fol - low, we will fol - low Je - sus; Fol - low, fol - low day by day;
Fol - low, fol - low, Fol - low, fol - low,

On - ward where - so - e'er He leads us, We will fol - low Je - sus all the way.
Onward, onward,

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

FROM GOSPEL CHOIR NO. 2.

By Permission of the Publishers.

Christian Work.

Suggested by an Editorial in "The Christian Herald" of April 15.

[F] just one soul were brought to Christ; just one;

By any effort I have made, or work have done, 'Twere worth a life of earnest toil or sorrow.

To wake to the glad some light of such a morrow: Just one soul saved to Christ, from evil's blight.

And that soul, bringing to the light Still other souls: fathers, mothers, children win.

Each to the end of time, leading souls to Him: It makes one's heart to yearn, and eyes grow dim.

To think of saving just one soul for Him.

Homer, N. Y.

—CHARLES A. FORD.

Resignation.

[BLESSED] Christ, the yearning and repining.

All, all is past; [silver lining, Gold-fringed death's robe, grief's cloud hath

At last, are last.

As the lone dove, unto the ark door flying, To Thee I flew;

As the lost lamb, amidst the desert crying, Thy voice I knew.

Sweet is Thy love, I feel its gentle soothing, In thee I rest; [smoothing.

Dear were earth's loves, each rugged pathway But thine is best.

Thus would I trust Thee, as each joy or sorrow From Thee I take; Till, in the light of Thine eternal morrow, My soul shall wake.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

Ready to Meet Christ.

How the Christian May be Prepared for the Coming of the Lord.

BY PASTOR ADOLPH STOCKMAVER.

OW shall we attain to a true readiness for the Lord's coming? How shall we be so made ready that the coming of Jesus Christ is no subject of fear, but of loving anticipation,—that we hear the voice of the Bridegroom, "I come quickly," with deepest joy, and join in the response of the Bride, "Even so; come, Lord Jesus," from the deepest depths of our heart?

In the very first place, we must acknowledge that the preparation for Christ's coming is the Lord's work. The preparation of the Bridal Church began at Golgotha. There blood and water flowed from the pierced side of Jesus, as John confirms with a special testimony; both the blood of reconciliation, which purchased souls to be the Lord's own possession, and the water of life which quickens them, are an outflow of his life, which he laid down for the world, that he might give it into the hearts of those who open to him by faith.

God's Spirit, the Bride's Representative, gathers, by the Gospel, the Bridal Church out of the existing churches, which, as one author has expressed it, are not the temple of the Lord, but only the quarry whence the living stones are taken,—the building-place, where they are in course of preparation, that they may be inserted afterwards in the glorious temple which the Lord will erect at his coming. The Church will not only be gathered out by the Spirit of God, but be purified through the judgment which "must begin at the house of God" (1. Pet. 4: 17), and be also endowed with the true bridal ornaments—with "the patience and faith of the saints" (Rev. 13: 10), with the gifts and powers of apostolic times (Joel 2: 23, 29). And as with the Church in her entirety, so with the individual members thereof; the preparation of each for the Lord's coming is set forth as a special work of grace, which he will accomplish with his own, from the beginning of their election to the highest point of glory. All is in accordance with a plan which the Lord has specially set before himself for each soul, whom he lovingly seeks and woos, until he obtains her consent that he shall, by his loving care and gracious leading, set her more completely free from all that binds her to the inner and outer world, and bring her more deeply into the fellowship of his holy life and love. Sometimes, indeed, the way must go through deeps of temptation, where by fire he purifies souls from the hidden dross of self-life, and forms within them his own holy image; or it may lead into the thick of the battle, out of which he lets them go with the honors of victory, although it is he alone who has caused them to triumph; it is in the furnace of affliction that quietly submissive souls are "chosen" for future glory.

What is required on our part for true readiness for the Lord's coming? The chief requirement to be pointed out is a deeper entering into the fellowship of Jesus' life, on the ground of faith, and love.

The Bridal Church stands on the ground of the faith through which she has laid hold of redemption in Christ, and attained the adoption of children before God. To be more deeply rooted in Christ, the Rock of salvation, on the ground of this faith, is the indispensable requirement.

*From his article in the Annals of the Prophetic News. Edited by Rev. M. Baxter.

Requests for Prayer.

AT the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on April 26, in accordance with the requests of many persons, among whom the following ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives.

"Mother," Baltimore, Md., on behalf of her son that he may give his heart to God and work for him.
—E. M. S., Washington, Me., that her husband may be brought to Christ and become an active, earnest Christian.
—E. M. S., Halsey, N. Y., for the conversion of her husband, who is addicted to drink and other evil things, and whose conduct is causing much distress.
—"Constant Reader," Streator, Ill., for the conversion of her husband, and for two others, who are old men, but still in the bondage of sin.
—C., Bayonne, N. J., that a dear son for whose conversion his father and mother have long prayed might be saved and become a worker in Christ's cause.
—M. E., Bornesville, Ga., that a dear boy fourteen years old who is a church-member, might experience the real power of Christ's grace and become fully consecrated to him.
—"Believer," Clafin, Kans., for the conversion of several brothers and a sister who are all out of the Kingdom of Christ.
—A. F. A., St. Augustine, Fla., that God would bring the wanderer back to the fold and fulfil the promise so often pleaded at his footstool.
—M. K. B., St. Helen's, Cal., that a widowed niece might enter fully into the joy and peace of Christ and that her son, a good, dutiful boy, may gladden his mother's heart by yielding himself to Christ.
—"Believer," Ind., for her husband, now estranged from her, that he may be brought to Christ and have a new heart and love his family again.

For the Conversion of Friends.

"Christian Reader," Ga., for the conversion of two friends who are sceptical, and who, if they were ever truly converted to God, would have a wide and powerful influence for good. Pray that the Holy Spirit would remove their doubts and give them the child-like spirit which is needed for their entrance to the kingdom.
—"Reader," Jacksonville, Ill., for a dear friend who has grown careless about attending the Lord's house and observing his day, that God would draw him nearer to himself and open his eyes to the danger of his position, and cause him to seek Christ with all his heart.
—"Trusting," W. Va., that many friends in the neighborhood, who are making no profession of religion, and are apparently indifferent to spiritual things, might be aroused to a sense of their need and might seek salvation through Christ.
—"Humiliated," New York, that one greatly beloved and trusted, who has drawn a false inference from the trust reposed in him, might go to God for pardon for the sin he is intent on committing, and may be saved from the dominion of his evil passions and learn to love the things of Christ more than the things of the world and the flesh.
—"Reader," Brooklyn, N. Y., for one who says he cannot pray for himself, that an infatuation which he admits can lead only to sorrow and mortification, may be taken out of his heart, and that he may go to Christ for a clean heart and be saved from himself and sin.

For the Restoration of Health.

"Constant Reader," on behalf of a sick brother, that the means now being used may be blessed to his complete recovery.
—L. L., Maine, for a believer in Jesus, now very low, that God would in mercy grant new health and strength.
—"Anxious Husband," Trenton, N. J., that his beloved wife now under the care of a specialist may be healed and restored to her little family.
—"Believer in Prayer," Caledonia, N. S., that God in his great mercy would save the life of a dear father who has been brought very low; also that an afflicted grandfather might be raised up.
—"Subscriber," Buffalo, N. Y., that healing mercies be granted if it is the will of God, and if not, that patience and resignation may be wrought by the power of God.
—R. M. O., Bragville, Me., for the recovery of a very dear friend who is suffering from throat and lung trouble.
—J. D. S., Gower, Mo., that a disease involving much suffering and depression may be healed.
—"Firm Believer," Greenville, N. C., that an only daughter who has lost her hearing might recover it.
—C. M. B., Philadelphia, Pa., for the removal of a painful and disfiguring disease.
—W. J. B., Chicago, Ill., that a beloved infant who has suffered much since its birth, might be healed and her life be spared.
—E. E. B., Canterbury, N. B., that a dear friend suffering from an acute nervous disease might regain her health and her former cheerfulness.
—M. S., Philadelphia, Pa., that the nervous suffering produced by a nervous affliction may be relieved; also that a dear sister who has borne great pain now for thirteen years, and who cannot walk, might be healed of the Lord.

For Special Blessings.

B. E. C., Kansas, that God would send suitable weather, for the people of this month, that the many people who are looking forward to the coming of the Lord may be filled with joy and thankfulness.
—"In His Name," Ohio, that one who has lost her confidence and fears she cannot be saved, may be led into the light and peace of Christ.

E. J., Haigler, Neb., that a financial trouble now pressing on a man and his wife may be lifted, and they may not lose what rightfully belongs to them.
—"In Trust," Chicago, Ill., that God in his love would enable a dear one to obtain employment which he has long and vainly sought.
—C. E., Florida, that a man burdened with many cares may be helped to support his family, may obtain regular employment, and that one who is alone in the world and penniless may find friends and a good home.
—"Believer," Virginia, that the terrible trouble and unhappiness now existing in the home may be removed and that God will give light and patience and peace.
—"Troubled One," who is in sickness and poverty and deserted of her husband, that in some way a means of livelihood may be found, and she may have health to support herself.
—"Reader," Nimshaw, Cal., for better financial conditions, that the gifts to the cause of Christ now long in arrears, may be resumed.
—H. E. K., Peterson, Iowa, for God's guidance in a momentous matter in which light has long been vainly sought in reaching a right decision.
—"Elderly Lady," Marshall, Mich., for more grace to be resigned and faithful in trial and sorrow.
—"Lonely," New York, that the request offered last week may be heard, and that in some way he may find congenial, intelligent friends, however poor they may be, with whom he can converse and receive and give sympathy and good will.
—E. M., New York, that the way may be opened for her to earn a livelihood for herself and her child, and that her faith in Christ may be increased.
—"Stranger," that God would give the grace and faith necessary in trying circumstances.
—K. T., Saron, Tex., that he may be enabled to recover possession of his child, who has been taken from him by persons who are liable to corrupt her.
—N. F., St. Albans, Vt., for guidance in an extremely difficult path, and for faith and strength and wisdom to do the right.

That Thanks be Given for Answers to Prayer.

M. E. A., Kiowa, Kans.: "Please join me in thanking God for the restoration of health, and especially for the use of my arm. Your prayers offered at my earnest request have been answered. I thank you for them, and ask you to thank God for answering them."
—"His Child," Milo, Me.: "That thanks be rendered to God for the great blessing which has come in answer to the prayers you offered at my request."
—"Constant Reader," Montclair, N. J.: "I should be glad if you would praise God on my behalf. The prayers you offered for me that I might obtain employment at a time when I was in a sore strait, were answered the very next day after they were offered. I thank God for his goodness, and would be pleased to have you do so, too, as you were kind enough to pray for me."

Have you Eaten too Much? Take Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

People impose on the stomach sometimes, giving it more than it can do. Horsford's helps to digest the food, and puts the stomach into a strong and healthy condition.

New Cure Kidney & Bladder Diseases

If you are a sufferer from kidney or bladder diseases, pain in back, or rheumatism, you should send for the new botanic discovery Alkavis, which will be sent to you by mail postpaid, by the Church Kidney Cure Company, 411 Fourth Avenue, New York. Alkavis is certainly a wonderful remedy, and you should try it as it is offered to you free.

To impart strength, purify the blood and to give a feeling of health and vigor throughout the system, there is nothing equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. Take only Hood's hair spring.

For Cures, Acidity and Throat Disorders, Alkavis is the best. It is an effective remedy. Sold only in boxes.

Dr. Miles'

Nervine

Restores Health.

It's a nerve and tissue food. First, it soothes the irritated, overworked nerves and then it supplies them with just the food they need. It cures insomnia, nervous prostration and general debility when all else fails.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., ELKHART, IND.

ALL DRUGGISTS BOOK ON HEART AND NERVES FREE

Mistress and Mai

both have their part in the savings that come from Pearl. Suppose you're the mistress. There's the economy of it—saving of time, etc., and actual money that's saved doing away with that st washed. Suppose you're the maid. There's the saving labor; the absence of rubbing; the hardest part of the housework made easier and pleasanter.

But suppose you are mistress and maid, both in one, do your own work. Then there is certainly twice as much reason why you should do every bit of your washing and cleaning with Pearline.

Millions NOW USE Pearline

Sneezing, sniffing and nagging

Hay Fever and Rose Colds are more easily prevented than cured—yield to Booth's "HYOMEI," the Australian "Dry-Air" treatment of Asthma, Fever, Catarrh, Bronchitis, etc., which

"CURES BY INHALATION"

Kattskill Bay, East Lake George, N. Y., July 31, 1905.
Inclosed please find $1.00 for two extra bottles of Hyomei. I am entirely cured of Hay Fever but I do not like to be without your remedy.
MRS. R. A. LINENDOLL, Mayflower Cottage

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, destroys the germs which cause disease in respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and after meeting the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete in Sealed Case (see cut), by Mail, $1.00, to any part of the United States; consisting of pocket inhaler made of deodorized hard rubber (beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, full directions for using. If you are still sceptical, send your address; my pamphlet will prove that Hyomei does cure.

Are you open to conviction?

R. T. BOOTH, 23 East 20th St., New York

Waverley Bicycles

have grown more rapidly in popular favor than any others because they are sold at a fair price and

NEVER FAIL

We have always built thoroughly good bicycles of the finest material and with the most approved form of mechanical construction. They are light, graceful, strong, easy running, highly finished, fully guaranteed and the peer of any bicycle in the world

$85 ONE FAIR PRICE TO ALL $85

INDIANA BICYCLE CO. INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Eastern Wholesale Branch, 339 B'way, N.Y. Catalogue free by mail

— 388 Ladies' Waist —

Sizes 32-34-36-38-40-42. Quantity of material for a medium size 3 1/4 yards, 44 inch goods.

A PAPER PATTERN

Like this cut mailed for 10¢. Fit guaranteed. Catalogue 50¢. Signs 5¢. Fashion Sheets FREE. THE NEW IDEA PATTERN CO. West Broadway and Leonard St., N.Y.

SAMPLES OF

FREE COLI

WALL PAPER.

Send for samples and see our dainty colors signs for 3¢. Lowest prices. A. F. AMARI, 245 Market St., Phila. Agents Wanted in every town. Large sample books.

TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS,

102 Fulton St., New York, sell all makes under half price. Don't buy before writing them for unapproach advice and prices. Exchanges. Immediate stock for selection. Shipped for trial. Guaranteed first-class. Largest house in the world. Dealers supplied. 62-page illus. cat. free.

FREE You save 5 per cent if you buy a HIGH GRADE GEFRO. Shipped direct from factory. Don't pay agents' and dealers' profit. Oxford Mfg. Co. 605 Wabash Ave. Chicago.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

VOLUME 19.

EV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., Editor.
Offices:—Bible House, New York City.

NEW YORK, MAY 13, 1896.

NUMBER 20.

Price Five Cents.

THE RUSSIAN CORONATION.

Nicholas to be Anointed and Crowned in "Holy Moscow" with Imposing Ceremonies this Month—A Superb Spectacle at the Kremlin.

THE sacred city of Moscow, Russia's ancient capital, will be the scene of a grand and festive display of religious ceremonies, receptions, fetes, parades, and military reviews will be the prominent features. For many months, the whole Russian people, civil and official, have been enthusiastically preparing for the coming event. That all classes, without distinction, seem to have entered into the patriotic spirit of the great occasion speaks eloquently for the popularity of the young ruler whose brow is now to be placed in the imperial diadem of the Romanoffs. From every quarter of the century has had few spectacles equal in splendor and magnificence to the approaching Russian coronation. It will be a strange commingling of the barbaric and the modern civilization. From the 21st day of May until the 7th of June rare opportunities within his reach, which, wisely used, might result in making his reign one of the most illustrious and beneficent in modern history.

Many weeks before the date fixed for the coronation, the crown, sceptre, and other portions of the regalia are forwarded from St. Petersburg, the capital, to the sacred city on the Moskva river, in charge of one of the favorite military corps attached to the palace. Formerly, this transportation was accomplished in a procession of un-corps will assemble in Moscow, and all will be in a bustle of preparation. Of course, the strictest military precautions will be taken for guarding the procession along the route, but even with all the rigid formalities observed, the sight will be a memorable one. Four or five days before the coronation, the entry will take place, and the cavalcade will doubtless be several miles in extent, and guarded on either side by rows of military, as it passes through the gayly decorated streets on its way to the Kremlin. On the occasion of the last coronation procession in 1883 (when the ill-starred Alexander III. was crowned), the Moscow police guard led the advance; next came the Emperor's Cosack escort, a company of surrounded by a brilliant staff, all on horseback. Following these were the royal coaches, the first containing the Empress and one of her children, and the others conveying numerous princes and princesses, grand duchesses and honorable dames. Then more troops and masses of brilliant uniforms, the whole walled in by shouting, enthusiastic crowds, and moving to the clanging of bells and the booming of cannon.

Unless all signs fail, the display at the coronation of Nicholas will greatly eclipse that of his father thirteen years ago. Not only will the military pageant be on a grander scale, but the spectacle at the famous old palace of the Kremlin will be magnificent. Half a million lanterns will make the building and surroundings as bright as day, and 14,000 electric lights will make the tower conspicuous and dazzling. On Coronation day, the Emperor and Empress, with their suite, will visit the Cathedral of the Assumption and partake of communion according to the rites of the Russo-Greek Church. The Czarina will be magnificently appareled, and covered with costly jewels, among them a necklet of huge diamonds with pendants of even larger size. The crown to be worn by the Czar is the one made for Catherine II., and is in the form of a mitre in silver, surmounted by a diamond cross in which is a priceless ruby, set round with pearls and diamonds. The sceptre belonged to that unhappy Paul, who was murdered by night by his

THE CZAR AND CZARINA OF RUSSIA, TO BE CROWNED AT MOSCOW, MAY 26.

THE FAMOUS PETROVSKY PALACE.

THE GREAT PALACE AND TREASURY OF THE KREMLIN.

globe, where the sons and daughters of Russia are found, eyes are turned toward the ancient city, in anticipation of the coming event, and Russian hearts are hopeful that the young Emperor may realize the wildly gilt-and-black state coaches, with great formality, and it still retains much of its old-time pomp and ostentation. The coronation is to take place on May 26. Two weeks before that time, the diplomatic mounted Arabs, followed by glittering chasseurs and footmen, and next a long line of splendid state carriages, each drawn by six horses. More cavalry—the Imperial Guard—and then came the Emperor, ministers, and contains the famous Orloff diamond, so named after the favorite of Queen, Catherine II. The globe is of solid gold, and adorned with diamonds and brilliant stones. (Continued on page 377.)

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

BEFORE THEY ADJOURN.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Psalm 105: 22, "And teach his senators wisdom."

SENATORS in this text stand for law-makers. Joseph was the Lord Treasurer of the Egyptian government, and among other great things which he did, according to my text, was to teach his senators wisdom; and if any men on earth ought to be endowed with wisdom, it is senators, whether they stand in congresses, parliaments, or reichstags, or assemblies, or legislatures. By their decisions nations go up or down. Law-makers are sometimes so tempted by prejudices, by sectional preferences, by opportunity of personal advancement, and sometimes what is best to do is so doubtful that they ought to be prayed for and encouraged in every possible way, instead of severely criticised and blamed and excoriated, as is much of the time the case. Our public men are so often the target to be shot at, merely because they obtain eminence which other men wanted but could not reach, that more injustices are hurled at our national legislature than the people of the United States can possibly imagine. The wholesale belying of our public men is simply damnable. By residence in Washington I have come to find out that many of our public men are persistently misrepresented, and some of the best of them, the purest in their lives and most faithful in the discharge of their duties, are the worst defamed. Some day I want to preach a sermon from the text in II. Peter: "They are not afraid to speak evil of dignities. Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord. But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not." So constant and malignant is this work of depreciation and scandalization in regard to our public men that all over the land there are those who suppose that the city of Washington is the centre of all corruption, while, what with its parks, and its equestrian statuary, and its wide streets, and its architectural symmetries, and its lovely homes, it is not only the most beautiful city under the sun, but has the highest style of citizenship. I have seen but one intoxicated man in the more than six months of my residence, and I do not think any man can give similar testimony of any other city on the American continent.

The gavels of our two houses of national legislature will soon fall, and adjournment of two bodies of men as talented, as upright, and as patriotic as ever graced the capitol, will take place. The two, or three, great men of the country, who have been the dignity, the fraternity, the eloquence, the fidelity which have characterized those two bodies during all the long months of important and anxious deliberation. We put a halo around great men of the past because they were so rare in their time. Our Senate and House of Representatives have five such men where once they had one. But it will not be until after they are dead that they will get appreciated. The world finds it safer to praise the dead than the living, because the departed, having a heavy pile of marble above them, may not rise to become rivals. But, before the gavels of adjournment drop and the doors of Capitol Hill shut, there are one or two things that ought to be done, and let us pray God that they may be accomplished. More forcibly than ever before, Congress has been implored to acknowledge God in our Constitution. The Methodist Church, a church that is always doing glorious things, has in its recent Wilmington conference requested our Congress to amend the immortal document, which has been the foundation and wall and dome of our United States government, by inserting the words, "Trusting in Almighty God." If that amendment is made, it will not only please all the good people of the country, but will please the heavens. It was only an oversight or a mental accident that the fathers who made the Constitution did not insert a divinely worshipful sentence. They all, so far as they amounted to anything, believed in "God, the Father Almighty, the Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son." The Constitution would have been a failure had it not been for the Divine interference. The members of the convention could agree on nothing until, in response to Benjamin Franklin's request that the meetings be opened by prayer, the Lord God was called on to interfere and help, and then the way was cleared, and all the States signed the document; a historical fact that all the rat-terriers of modern infidelity cannot bark out of existence! I know that there was an exception to the fact that the prominent men of those times were good men. Tom Paine, a libertine and a sot, did not believe in anything good until he was dying, and then he shrieked out for God's mercy. And Ethan Allen, from one of whose descendants I have received within a few days a confirmation of the incident I mentioned in a recent sermon, as saying to his dying daughter that she had better take her mother's Christian religion than his own infidelity. The article sent me says: "The story has been denied by some of the Allen family, but the Bronson family, some of whom were with the dying girl, affirm that it is substantially true. In such a matter one confirmation is worth more than many denials." So says the article sent me. There is no doubt that Ethan Allen was the vulgar sort of an infidel, for, sitting in a Presbyterian Church, his admirers say he struck the pew in front of him and swore out loud, so as to disturb the meeting, and no gentleman would do that. I do not wonder that some of his descendants are ashamed of him; but of course they could not help it, and are not to blame. But all the decent men of the Revolution believed in God, and our American Congress, now assembled, will only echo the sentiments of the fathers when they enthrone the name of God in the Constitution. We have now more reason for inserting that acknowledgment of Divinity than our fathers had. Since then the continent has been peopled and great cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific built, and all in peace, showing that there must have been supernatural supervision. Since then the War of 1812, and ours the victory! Since then great financial prostrations, out of which we came to greater prosperity than anything that preceded. Since then sanguinary 1862, 1863, 1864 and 1865, and notwithstanding the fact that all the foreign despots were planning for our demolition, we are a united people, and to-morrow you will find in both houses of Congress the men who fought for the North and the South, now sitting side by side, armed with no weapon except the pen, with which they write home to their constituents who want to be appointed postmasters. The man who cannot see God in our American history is as blind of soul as he would be blind of body if he could not at twelve o'clock of an unclouded noon see the sun in the heavens. As a matter of gratitude to Almighty God, gentlemen of the American Congress, be pleased to insert the four words suggested by the Methodist Conference! Not only because of the kindness of God to this nation in the past should such a reverential insertion be made, but because of the fact that we are going to want Divine interposition still further in our national history. This gold and silver question will never be settled until God settles it. This question of tariff and free trade will never be settled until God settles it. This question between the East and the West, which is getting hotter and hotter, and looks toward a Republic of the Pacific, will not be settled until God settles it. We needed God in the one hundred and twenty years of our past national life, and we will need him still more in the next one hundred and twenty years. Lift up your heads, ye everlasting gates of our glorious Constitution, and let the King of Glory come in! Make one line of that immortal document radiant with Omnipotence! Spell at least one word with Thrones! At the beginning, or at the close, or in the centre, recognize him from whom as a nation we have received all the blessing of the past and upon whom we are dependent for the future. Print that word "God," or "Lord," or "Eternal Father," or "Ruler of Nations," somewhere between the first word and the last. The Great Expounder of the Constitution sleeps at Marshfield, Massachusetts, the Atlantic Ocean still humming near his pillow of dust its prolonged lullaby; but is there not some one now living, who, in the white marble palace of the nation on yonder hill, not ten minutes away, will become the Irradiator of the Constitution by causing to be added the most tremendous word of our English vocabulary, the name of that Being before whom all nations must bow or go into defeat and annihilation,—"God?"

Again, before the approaching adjournment of our American Congress, it ought to be decidedly and forever settled that no appropriations be made to sectarian schools, and that the courtship between church and state in this country be forever broken up. That question already seems temporarily settled. I wish it might be completely and forever settled. All schools and all institutions, as well as all denominations, should stand on the same level before American law. Emperor Alexander of Russia, at his Peterhof Palace, asked me how many denominations of religion there were in America, and I recited their names as well as I could. Then he asked me the difference between them, and there I broke down. But when I told him that no religious denomination in America had any privileges above the others, he could hardly understand it. The Greek Church first in Russia. The Lutheran Church first in Germany. The Episcopal Church first in England. The Catholic Church first in Rome. Mohammedanism first in Constantinople. The Emperor wondered how it was possible that all the denominations in America could stand on the same platform. But so it is, and so let it ever be. Let there be no preference, no partiality, no attempt to help one sect an inch higher than another. Washington and Jefferson and all the early Presidents and all great statesmen of the past, have lifted their voice against any such tendency. A school or an institution cannot stand without the prop of national approbation, then let that school or that institution go down. On the other side of sea the world has had plenty of illustration of church and state united. Let have none of the hypocrisy and demoralization born of that relation on this side the Atlantic. Let that denomination come out ahead that does the most for the cause of God and humanity. Men, institutions and religions getting what they achieve by their own right arm of usefulness, not by the favoritism of government. You regard the welfare and perpetuity of our institutions, keep politics out of religion.

But now, that I am speaking of national affairs from a religious standpoint, I think myself of the fact that two of our gavels will soon lift and fall, the one St. Louis and the other at Chicago, and before those national conventions adjourn I ask that they acknowledge God in their platforms. The men who construct the platforms are here this morning or will read these words. Let no political party think it can do its duty unless it acknowledges that God who built this continent and revealed it at the right time to the discoverer, and who has reared here a prosperity which has been given to no other people. "Oh!", says some one, "there are people in this country who do not believe in a God, and it would be an insult to them." Well, there are people in this country who do not believe in common decency, or common honesty, or any kind of government, preferring anarchy. Every platform is an insult to them. You ought not to regard a man who does not believe in God any more than you should regard a man who refuses to believe in common decency. Your pocket-book is not a safe moment in the presence of an atheist. God is the only source of good government. Why not, then, say so, and let the Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions in your national conventions take a pen full of ink and with bold hand write the document with one significant "Whereas:" acknowledging the goodness of God in the past, and begging his kindness and protection for the future. Why, my friends, this country belongs to God, and we ought in every possible way to acknowledge it. From the moment that, on an October morning in 1492, Columbus looked over the side of the ship and saw the carved staff which made him think it was near an inhabited country, and saw also a thorn and a cluster of berries (symbols of our history ever since, the piercing sorrows and cluster of national joys), until this hour our country has been bounded on the north, south, east and west by the goodness of God. The Huguenots too possession of the Carolinas, in the name of God. William Penn settled Philadelphia, in the name of God. The Hollanders took possession of New York in the name of God. The Pilgrim Fathers settled New England, in the name of God. Preceding the first gun of Bunker Hill, a the voice of prayer all heads uncovered in the War of 1812, an officer came to General Andrew Jackson and said: "There is an unusual noise in the camp; it ought to be stopped." General Jackson said, "What is the noise?" The officer said, "It is the voice of prayer and praise." Then the General said, "God forbid that prayer and praise should be an unusual noise in the encampment. You had better go and join them." Prayer at Valley Forge. Prayer at Monmouth. Prayer at Atlanta. Prayer at South Mountain. Prayer at Gettysburg. "Oh!" says some infidel, "the Northern people prayed on one side and the Southern people prayed on the other side, and so it did not amount to anything." And I have heard good Christian people confounded with the infidel statement, when it is as plain to me as my right hand. Yes; the Northern people prayed in er way, and the Southern people prayed in another way, and God answered in his own way, giving to the North the re-establishment of the government, and giving to the South larger opportunities, larger than she had ever anticipated, the blessing of her rivers in great manufacturing interests, until the Mobile and the Mississippi and the Chattahoochee are Southern Merrimacs, and the unrolling of great Southern mines of coal and iron, of which the world knew nothing, and opening before her opportunities of wealth which will give ninety-nine per cent. more affluence than she ever possessed; and instead of the black hands of American slaves, there are the more industrious black hands of the coal and iron mines of the South, which are achieving for her glorious and unimagined wealth.

There are times of white blossoms where stand the white tents.
There are ploughs in the track where the war chariots went.
There are songs where they lifted up Rachel's lament.

Oh, you are a stupid man if you do not understand how God answered Abraham Lincoln's prayer in the White House, and Pinewall Jackson's prayer in the saddle, and answered all the prayers of all the churchmen on both sides of Mason and Dixon's Line. God's country all the way: God's country now. Put his name in your pronouncements. Put his name in your ensigns. Put his name on your city and state and national enterprises. Put his name in your hearts. We cannot sleep well the last sleep, until we are assured that the God of our American institutions in the past will be the God of our American institutions in the days that are to come. Oh, when all the rivers that empty into Atlantic and Pacific seas shall fill on factory bands; when all the great mines of gold and silver and iron and coal shall be laid bare for the nation; when the swamp shall be reclaimed, and the jungle cleared, and the last American settler Edenized, and from sea to sea the continent shall be occupied by more than eleven hundred million souls, may it be and that moral and religious influences are multiplied in more rapid ratio than the population. And then there shall be our doxologies coming from North and South and East and West, four doxologies filling toward each other, and meeting in the continent, with such dash of holy joy as they shall mount to the Throne,—

And Heaven's high arch resound again
With peace on earth, good will to men.

I take a step further, and say that before the gavels of our Senate and House of Representatives and our political conventions pound adjournment, there ought to be passed a law or adopted a plank of intelligent helpfulness for the great foreign populations which are coming among us. It is too late now to discuss whether we should better let them come. They are here. They are coming this moment through the arrows. They are this moment taking the first full inhalation of the free air of America. And they will continue to come as long as this country is the best place to receive them. You might as well pass a law prohibiting summer bees from alighting on the field of blossoming buckwheat; you might as well prohibit the stags of the mountain from coming down to the deer-ark, as to prohibit the hunger-bitten nations of Europe from coming to this land of bread,—as to prohibit the people of England, Ireland, Scotland, Italy, Norway, Sweden and Germany, working themselves to death on small wages on the other side the sea, from coming to this land where there are the largest compensations under the sun. Why did God spread out the prairies of the Dakotas and roll the precious ore into Colorado? It was that all the earth might come, and plough, and come, and dig. Just as long as the centrifugal force of foreign despotisms throw them off, just so long will the centripetal force of American institutions draw them here. And that is what is going to make this the mightiest nation on the earth. Intermarriage of nationalities! Not circle intermarrying circle, and nation intermarrying nation. But it is going to be Italian and Norwegian, Russian and Celt, Scotch and French, English and American. The American of a hundred years from now is to be different from the American of to-day. German brain, Irish wit, French civility, Scotch firmness, English loyalty, Italian aesthetics packed into one man, and he an American! It is this intermarriage of nationalities that is going to make the American nation the greatest nation of the ages. But what are we doing for the moral and intellectual culture of the five hundred thousand foreigners who came in one year, and the six hundred thousand who came in another year, and the eight hundred thousand who came in another year, and the one million who are coming into our various American ports? What are we doing for them? Many of them have no acquaintance with our laws. Now, I say, let the Government of the United States, so commanded by one political party or both political parties, give to every immigrant who lands here a volume, in good type and well bound for long usage,—a volume containing the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and a chapter on the spirit of our Government. Let there be such a book on the shelf of every free library in America. While the American Bible Society puts into the right hand of every immigrant a copy of the Holy Scriptures, let the government of the United States, commanded by some political party, put into the left hand of every immigrant a volume instructing him in the duties of good citizenship. There are thousands of foreigners in this land who need to learn that the ballot-box is not a foot-stool but a throne,—not something to put your foot on, but something to bow before.

But whether members of the national legislature or delegates to one of the national conventions, or private citizens, let us cultivate Christian patriotism. Oh, how good God has been to us as a nation! Just open the map of the continent and see how it is shaped for immeasurable prosperities. Navigable rivers, more in number and greater than of any other land, rolling down on all sides into the sea, prophesying large manufactories and easy commerce. Look at the great ranges of mountains, timbered with wealth on the top and sides, and metaled with wealth underneath. One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of coal! One hundred and eighty thousand square miles of iron! The iron to pry out the coal. The coal to forge and smelt the iron. The land so contoured that extreme weather hardly ever lasts more than three days,—extreme heat or extreme cold. Climate for the most part bracing and favorable for brawn and brain. The people of the United States are happier than any people on earth. It is the testimony of every man that has traveled abroad. For the poor more sympathy! For the industrious more opportunity! Oh, how good God was to our fathers, and how good God has been to us and our children! To him—Blessed be his glorious name!

To him of Cross and triumph be consecrated the United States of America!

There are three great reasons why you and I should do our best for this country—three great reasons: Our fathers' graves, our cradle, our children's birthright. When I say your fathers' graves, your pulses run quickly. Whether they sleep in city cemetery or country graveyard, their dust is very precious to you. I think they lived well and that they died right. Never submit to have any government over their tombs other than that government under which they lived and died. And then this country is our cradle. It may have rocked us very roughly, but it was a good cradle to be rocked in. Oh, how much we owe to it! Our boyhood and girlhood, it was spent in this blessed country. I never have any patience with a man who talks against this country. Glorious place to be born in, and a glorious place to live in. It has been our cradle. Aye! It is to be our children's birthright. You and I will soon be through. We will perhaps see a few more spring blossoms, and we will perhaps see a few more summer harvests, and we will perhaps gather a few more autumnal fruits; but we are to hand this government to our children as it was handed to us,—a free land, a happy land, a Christian land. They are not to be trampled by despotism. They are not to be frightened by anarchy. We must hand this government to them over the ballot-box, over the school desk, over the church altar, as we have received it, and charge them solemnly to put their life between it and any keen stroke that would destroy it.

THE GERMAN "EVANGELICAL LEAGUE" BUILDINGS, EAST AFRICA.

And thou, Lord God Almighty! We put, with a thousand-armed prayer, into thy protection this nation. Remember our fathers' bleeding feet at Valley Forge. Remember Marion and Kosciusko. Remember the cold, and the hunger, and the long march, and the fever hospital. Remember the fearful charge at Bunker Hill. Remember Lexington, and Yorktown, and King's Mountain, and Gettysburg. Remember Perry's battle on the lake, and Hampton Roads, where the Cumberland went down. Remember Washington's prayer by the camp-fire. Remember Plymouth Rock, and the landing amid the savages. Remember Independence Hall, and how much it cost our fathers to sign their names. Remember all the blood and tears of three wars—1776, 1812, 1862. And more than all, remember the groan that was mightier than all other groans, and the thirst that stung worse than all other thirsts, and the death that was ghastlier than all other deaths, the Mount on which Jesus died to make all men happy and free. For the sake of all this human and Divine sacrifice, O God! protect this nation! And whosoever would blot it out, and whosoever would strike it down, and whosoever would turn his back, let him be accursed!

Go home to-day in high hopes of the future. The Eternal God is on the side of this nation. Our brightest days are yet to come.

He hath sounded forth the trumpet that will never be silent.
He is sitting out the hearts of men before the Judgment Seat.
Be swift my soul to answer him, be jubilant my feet; Our God is marching on.

Slavery's Chains Broken.

What the Germans are doing in East Africa
—The Liberators' League.

HE Evangelical African League of Germany has begun the foundation of a settlement of liberated slaves in German East Africa. The chosen site is in mountainous Usambara, often called the Switzerland of East Africa. There the League has acquired a square mile of territory in a salubrious and well-watered section of forest and meadow land. Missionaries of the neighboring German mission-stations have long scoured the country in search of the best sites and recommended two or three suitable places. The League has decided to begin some distance east of Wuga, the capital of Usambara, in the high valley of the Mkolo, a small tributary of the Luengera, which is itself an affluent of the Pangani. For those who have no detailed map of German East Africa, it will suffice to know that Usambara is about half-way between Zanzibar and Kilimanjaro. This salubrious and fertile highland will soon be connected with the coast by a railroad. A section, between the coast-town Tanga and an inland point of the Pangani river, is already in operation.

In a recent circular, the League says that it is still impossible to determine when slave-trade and slavery will disappear from German East Africa. Even now, after the power of the Arab slave-raiders has been broken, the trading caravans continue to bring down slaves who are used as carriers of the caravans from the interior to the coast. In spite of all decrees and the watchfulness of gun-boats, numerous slaves are still annually shipped from the German coast to the British possessions of Pemba and Zanzibar, where the demand for slave-labor on the plantations is as great as ever. The misery caused by the invasion of locusts and by epidemic which has destroyed most of the cattle, sheep, and goats, is appalling. Whole families have died out. Villages have disappeared, the inhabitants having scattered to find some food in the roots and wild fruits of the forests that may have escaped the voracious locusts. Reports from a region south of Lake Victoria state that there a woman or a girl can be bought for two sweet potatoes; in most places a goat has become a high price for a slave. Scenes of cannibalism are a natural result of such a condition.

A missionary of Magera, Uzegeha, reported last year that in a village of fifty inhabitants near Mpuapua, forty-six had died of starvation. In another village he found that of seventeen adults, nine had died in one week. A woman came to him to ask for a piece of cloth to wrap around the body of her husband, who had just died. He asked: "What did he die from?" The answer was, "from hunger." The same day a baby was brought to him which had been taken from the breast of its starved mother, where it had lain two days without food. In the caravan of Sewa Hadji, 137 persons died from starvation along the road. A Lutheran mission paper reports from Usagara that an entire caravan of 800 persons who had left the interior for the coast in search of food, had died on the way.

Thousands of people die annually in Africa from different plagues without our Christian world knowing anything about it. And even when some faint echo of those great woes reaches us, it is too late to help, or the greatest sufferers are beyond reach. As the net-work of mission stations and government posts and freedmen's settlements spreads over the Dark Continent, it becomes more and more possible to get at facts and to prepare agencies which will effectually alleviate some of that untold suffering. It is the special purpose of the Pl. African Liberators' League to supplement the work of existing mission agencies in Africa by developing what the greatest student of missionary methods, Dr. Warneck, has called the "humanitarian mission" of the church. It is hoped that many of the CHRISTIAN HERALD readers will avail themselves of their opportunity, and hasten the foundation of the first American refuge for the slaves of "peeled and trodden down" Africa. Contributions may be sent to Heli Chatelain, 511 United Charities Building, New York, or to the proprietor of this journal.

Jesus in the Temple.

Sunday School Lesson for May 24. Luke 20: 9-19. Golden Text, Luke 20: 17. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

HE last days of our Lord on earth were characteristic of his whole life and ministry. When he had seen that the time was come that he should be received up, he had set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem (Luke 9: 51). The moment of temporary triumph when, riding upon an ass's colt, he had entered the city amid the acclamations of the multitude, was past, but his deep love for the souls he died to save could not thus pass away. These last days, while the chief priests and scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him, he quietly went on teaching the people and preaching the Gospel almost to the last. It was therefore he was sent, he lived only to do his Father's will, and no shadow of his coming sufferings hindered his present ministry. The approaching feast of the Passover was fast filling Jerusalem, the news of the resurrection of Lazarus, which indisputable proof that it was of his divinity, had angered to the very utmost both the spiritual and temporal rulers, and had at the same time spread abroad the fame of Jesus, and brought numbers from all parts to hear him in the temple. Thus, while of the people were plotting his destruction, and he knew that shortly they would have their way, our beloved Lord was giving forth words which were of priceless value and of endless duration; words which should not pass away when the heavens and the earth flee from the face of him that sitteth on the great white throne. The blind and the lame had come to him in the temple, and he had healed them. He had driven out the buyers and sellers (Matt. 21: 12, 14), and the temporal and spiritual rulers who were at their wit's end as they saw this Man exercising an influence and an authority which they did not know how to obtain, came to him with a question which they thought was, at any rate, a safe one, "By what authority doest thou these things, and who is he that gave thee this authority?"

The Leaders

Those who would question Jesus, without being put to confusion, must first learn to know him, and to receive him as the Christ. The rulers thought only of man's authority; all their thoughts were circumscribed by earth and the things of earth. He simply asked them a question in return, a simple question which any peasant in Galilee or in Judea would have answered: "The baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men?" The people knew, even King Herod knew; everyone knew that John was a man sent from God. But men who have set themselves against the Lord and against his Christ are in their own duplicity; they have put fetters on themselves and dare not say when they are asked, "What shall I do?" "I will send unto them my beloved Son, it may be they will reverence him when they see him." Christ's claim to be the Son of God was no unknown thing to the rulers of the people; they had just said among themselves that if they yielded the point that John's mission was divine, they must needs believe in him; and if they took the very broad hint in the parable that God's beloved Son was now standing before them, they must give up all and acknowledge him. Could they afford it? The Lord continued his parable, and told how the husbandmen plotted together, saying, "This is the heir, come let us kill him and the inheritance will be ours. What? did Jesus know that they were plotting his death. Who gave this Man his wondrous insight into the future? Did he see into the very secrets of their hearts? How could these men endure to have their secret purposes thus brought to light? When he asked the question and answered it, what should the Lord of the vineyard do unto such a set of husbandmen, that he should destroy them and give the vineyard to others, they said, "God forbid;" for they understood—they sinned with open eyes. And he who looked volumes when he looked on the recreant Peter, beheld them and said, quoting from Ps. 118: 22, "What is this then that is written, The stone which the builders rejected is become the headstone of the corner? Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken." It was a moment of crisis; now, if never before, they did understand, but would they yield? If not, the stone must fall on them, and "grind them to powder." They might slay the Son of man, but that test stone would not be easily got rid of; Jesus should rise again.

Self-Made Prisoners

Yes, the people understood. Jesus had been the friend of the people, and John was the friend of the people. The common people had no such position to lose by believing on Jesus as these men who sought to keep up a reputation for piety, while they really knew not God. They decided to give no answer. And when man gives no answer to the questions of the Saviour he also gives them no answer. But by way of parable Jesus left these rulers

A Last Warning.

He told them of a certain man that planted a vineyard, and let it out to husbandmen. It is evident that the agreement between the proprietor and the husbandmen was that at the season the owner should receive of the fruits of the ground, of which they also should have their due share. But when the time came that he sent a servant to demand his rights, the husbandmen disputed them, beat the messenger, and sent him away empty. The same or a worse fate befell a second servant; a third was wounded, and the owner of the vineyard, in the far country to which he had travelled, received no satisfaction; the husbandmen simply ignored him. From the very beginning of the parable, the rulers "perceived that he was speaking this parable against them. The rulers of Israel, from the time of Samuel, took the place which God once had, for he had been their King, until they required a king that they might be like the nations. And now they were in trust for him, and yet when it came to the point of receiving a prophet who would bring them back to God, they would rather slay the prophet than be brought near to God; and so prophet after prophet had been ill-used and slain. No one among them mourned over the martyrdom of John the Baptist. And now the Lord of the vineyard said, "What shall I do? I will send unto them my beloved Son, it may be they will reverence him when they see him." Christ's claim to be the Son of God was no unknown thing to the rulers of the people; they had just said among themselves that if they yielded the point that John's mission was divine, they must needs believe in him; and if they took the very broad hint in the parable that God's beloved Son was now standing before them, they must give up all and acknowledge him. Could they afford it? The Lord continued his parable, and told how the husbandmen plotted together, saying, "This is the heir, come let us kill him and the inheritance will be ours. What? did Jesus know that they were plotting his death. Who gave this Man his wondrous insight into the future? Did he see into the very secrets of their hearts? How could these men endure to have their secret purposes thus brought to light? When he asked the question and answered it, what should the Lord of the vineyard do unto such a set of husbandmen, that he should destroy them and give the vineyard to others, they said, "God forbid;" for they understood—they sinned with open eyes. And he who looked volumes when he looked on the recreant Peter, beheld them and said, quoting from Ps. 118: 22, "What is this then that is written, The stone which the builders rejected is become the headstone of the corner? Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken." It was a moment of crisis; now, if never before, they did understand, but would they yield? If not, the stone must fall on them, and "grind them to powder." They might slay the Son of man, but that test stone would not be easily got rid of; Jesus should rise again.

In vain the chief priests and scribes sought to lay hands on him: "They feared the people." they must go carefully to work. But there was a hindrance which they ignored, and which belonged to a region beyond them. His hour was not yet come; and no man could touch him until his Father should permit. So they had recourse to stratagem; they sent forth spies, which should personate religious enquirers, who were troubled in conscience about the tribute-money gathered for the Roman conqueror. The Jews were to set over them only one of their brethren; was it not against this law to give tribute to a stranger? Christ spoke always in the words of Scripture: He might quote this command from Deuteronomy; could they not catch him on this point, and get him indicted for speaking against the Roman Government? Poor souls! How little they knew of the ceaseless contact of the Man Christ Jesus with his Father, who guided him from above in all things!

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

ORIENTAL VINEYARD AND TOWER.

HE end of Christ's earthly ministry was near at hand when the words were spoken which form the subject of the lesson. During three years Christ had preached and taught through the land. Now he had come to the metropolis and was face to face with the leaders of the nation. He knew perfectly well what his fate would be. They meant to get rid of him. Instead of listening to his call to righteousness, they would turn upon him and put him to death. They find him teaching in the Temple and begin to question him in the supercilious tone of the recognized authority dealing with an ignorant upstart. To them, thus hostile and contemptuous, he tells this parable of the vineyard.

Like all his parables it dealt with customs with which his hearers were familiar. A man who owned a vineyard did not cultivate it himself, but rented it to tenants. In some cases they paid him a stipulated rental for it. In others the rent was a proportion of the harvest, generally two-thirds or three-fourths, the tenants during the year being paid wages and being supplied with seed and implements. In any case the owner of the vineyard was entitled to some return from his property. But these men repudiated his claim and did it with glaring effrontery. They not only refused to pay, but ill-treated the owner's servants, whom he sent to collect the rent. Finally he sends his son whose claims must surely be recognized. But the men are hardened, and see in the son's arrival an opportunity to get absolute possession, and they kill him. The meaning of the parable was obvious. Isaiah had used an illustration almost identical (Isa. 5: 1-7). God had planted the Jewish nation that he might obtain from it the fruits of righteousness, but they had not been rendered. The people lived for themselves and ignored him. When God sent his servants to remind them of their duties, they had ill-used them. Against Moses himself, they had rebelled. Elijah, Isaiah, Jeremiah and Zechariah, had all suffered at their hands. Christ intimates that he, too, the Son, higher of rank than the servants, was about to die as their victim. They were at the very moment plotting death, and the picture revealed to them, vivid shape the hideous iniquity of their course. Their exclamation, "God forbid," showed that the meaning of the parable and its application were perceived. spirit is, and always has been, commended to do evil and then to deprecate punishment, is the usual way. But the punishment is inevitable. Two courses are open to every soul in all times. Possess God's word, having religious training; opportunities of service, a man may live for God, serving him and using him as he was intended to use it; or he may ignore God, give no return for all his benefits and live only for himself and his pleasure and gratification. The latter was the course of the wicked husbandmen, and it is the course of every one who wilfully shuts his eyes to the duties he ought to perform.

The stone which the builders rejected. I Robinson quotes an ancient tradition from the rabbis, to which Christ may have referred. It was that at the building of Solomon's temple, when the huge stones squared and fitted at the quarry, each in its particular place, were brought to the temple and silently placed in position without sound of axe or hammer, one stone was so different from the others that the workmen did not know what to do with it. Beautiful indeed, it was, carved with figures of exquisite loveliness and grace but it had no fellow; it fitted nowhere and at last the impatient and perplexed workmen flung it aside. It lay neglected in the valley, dust and dirt accumulating upon it, all the time the Temple was building. When the Temple was finished, the king came to look at the wondrous edifice of marble and gold. He went to the Eastern tower, as if expecting to see something specially interesting. But he was disappointed. He turned in indignation to the chief architect and accused him of neglect. The tower was unfinished. "How this?" he asked. "Why have you not put in place the beautiful stone I designed for the head of this corner?" Then the workmen remembered the rejected stone. They cleared it of its defilement and raised it to its conspicuous place, where it fitted exactly. It was the one finishing touch needed to complete the structure.

The inheritance may be ours. People who temporarily hold a possession in trust for the rightful owner, or who administer an office for an absent official are always under the temptation to forget that they are merely deputies. The present dynasty of Egypt had its origin in such a situation. Mehemet Ali was appointed governor of Egypt by the Turkish Sultan Mahmoud II. He wanted to become independent, and the Sultan, in trying to enforce his authority was so badly beaten by Mehemet that, but for the interference of other powers, Mehemet would have driven him from Constantinople. Mehemet was prevented achieving that triumph, but he retained Egypt, and his descendants have sat on the throne ever since.

They beat him also. It was a dangerous duty to go to those husbandmen as a representative of the owner of the vineyard and remind them that the vineyard was not theirs and that they ought to pay the rent for it. Yet, remembering what was the doom of the husbandmen the servant was doing them a kindness and was a true friend to them in urging them to do right. God has sent many such servants into the world since he sent his beloved Son, and some of them have been beaten and some killed. One such man who was killed for his plain speaking in Wales, many years ago told this story. He said that in a certain besieged town there was a law that the first man who proposed to surrender should be put to death. But people were perishing by famine and sword, and everyone knew that surrender was the right course, but no one dare propose it. At last one public-spirited citizen went into the marketplace with a halter around his neck and said: "Deal with me as you will; I propose surrender. I know the penalty of my proposal, but I make it for the sake of my fellow-citizens. I will die gladly if my death will save their lives." The Welsh preacher, having told this story, said he was in the same position. He knew he was liable to be killed, but he would utter his warning for the sake of men in danger of eternal death. It was a noble act, but it cost him his life. He was executed as a common felon.

Brought Thousands to Christ.

Remarkable Career of Richard Weaver, the Miner-Evangelist, who Lately Passed Away in England—His Death-Bed.

TO multitudes in England the name of Richard Weaver, the miner-evangelist, is a household word. Year after year for a whole generation he has preached Jesus in every nook and corner of the United Kingdom, and his tremendous earnestness together with his native eloquence, have stirred great gatherings as few other men could have done. This faithful servant of the Master, who passed away recently at his home in Cheshire, England, was born in this country in 1827. His father was a reckless profligate, but his mother was a sincere Christian. As might be surmised, his youth was a stormy one. Referring to those days, Mr. Weaver afterward wrote: "I could tell some sad tales of sorrow that I witnessed when quite a child. Many a time have I clung to my mother, and cried to my drunken father, 'Don't kill my mother!' Yes; I think of the days of my childhood, when the praying mother has been down on her knees asking God to help her in her distress. My eldest brother was always kind to her. The Lord reward him! But we others were a burden to her night and day. She told her Father in heaven all her sorrows and our sins. It was from her lips that I learned the first hymn I ever knew:

THE LATE RICHARD WEAVER.

Happy the child whose tender years
Receive instruction well;
Who shuns the sinner's path, and fears
The road that leads to hell.

"How her face beamed with joy when she took me to a friend's house and put me to stand on a chair to say that hymn. The soft kiss from her lips on my cheek, and a short prayer breathed to God, 'The Lord bless my boy!' I shall never forget."

Like all the lads of that part of England, Weaver, while still a mere boy, was sent to labor in the coal-pits. There he learned all manner of sin and blasphemy, swearing, drinking, and attending dances, and prize-fights. A wonderful escape from death, about this time, had the effect of awakening his conscience, but no lasting impression was produced. Nightly carousals continued, and one evening he was carried home hurt and disfigured, and covered with dirt and blood. When his mother had washed away the blood and soil from his head and neck, she knelt down beside him and prayed long and fervently that God would save her boy. Even while she prayed, the lad cursed, swearing that he would murder her if she did not "leave off praying and preaching to him." He went up to bed, but she followed him and knelt again by his bedside in prayer. He shook her roughly, but she prayed on.

This life of dissipation continued, and tormented by conscience he once was on the verge of suicide when the recollection of his mother's prayers stayed his hand. At last, the prayers were answered by his conversion, and the aged mother's joy was unbounded. This was in 1852. Richard Weaver then began to testify for Christ before men, and so continued almost till the day of his death. His career as an Evangelist was marked by the inbringing of great multitudes to the Christian fold.

In England, Scotland, and Wales, he preached in every town of considerable size and held protracted revivals in the larger cities. Nothing could be finer or more effective than the dramatic force of this rude orator, when appealing to the hearts and consciences of his hearers. His pulpit and platform efforts were illustrated and emphasized with an abundance of anecdotes, drawn from real life and much of it from a miner's experience. The terrors of the flooded mine, the cave-in, the broken rope, the falling cage, were all drawn with startling realism, and the audience would be thrilled with the vivid picture of peril and subsequent rescue, while the speaker pointed out the spiritual peril of the lost sinner and the means of rescue supplied by the Gospel.

As the veteran Evangelist lay dying, and when supposed to be beyond the power of speech, one of his family prayed with him. To their surprise, he spoke out with wonderful strength and voice, testifying to God's goodness and his own perfect trust. The following are some of the messages from his lips: Many times he shouted, "Victory through the blood of the Lamb;" "The peace of God which passeth all understanding." Being asked if he could see, he replied, "Yes, the Lord is my light." "If you sing," he said, "at my funeral, let it be:

In evil long I took delight,
Unawed by shame and fear;
Till a new object met my sight,
And stopped my wild career.

"If you put anything on my tombstone, let it be, 'A great sinner saved by great grace.'" Continuing, he said: "I wish the doctor would tell me when the chariot is coming. By-and-by I shall drink at the fountain. Oh! what a blessing to have Christ! I go to my Father and your Father.

On Christ, the solid Rock, I stand.
All other ground is sinking sand!

"Come, Lord Jesus, and take me to thyself. Living or dying, I belong to Christ. All's right. All's well." Turning to his sons he said, "Stick to Christ; stick to the Cross. Many young men imitate great preachers. One talent used for Christ is worth a thousand imitations."

THE KREMLIN, FROM THE MOSKVA-REKOA BRIDGE.

Then he continued: "What a grand thing Christ is! Christ is all in all to me. I can do nothing; I can only trust now. My prize is in view. Easter Sunday with the Lord!"

In these last moments he often spoke of "Home!" His last audible words were, "There's a light in the valley." His face grew heavenly in expression and on Easter Sunday morning his soul passed upward to God.

"Thy Will be Done."

HELP me, dear Lord, each day to say,
"Thy will be done,"
No matter how it seems to me,
If dark or bright the day may be;
It must be right, ordained by Thee.

Teach me, dear Lord, with truth to say
"Thy will be done,"
Though rough my pathway looks to me,
'Tis best, 'tis all marked out by Thee,
And Thou knowest why it thus must be.

Dear Lord, teach me with love to say:
"Thy will be done,"
It seems to help me on my way,
No matter where I go or stay,
I'll say it each and every day,
"Thy will be done."

—B. V.

The Russian Coronation.

(Continued from first page.)

liants, and a sapphire, worth alone a fortune. The Czar will also wear the collar of St. Andrew, valued at 100,000 roubles, in which are five pink diamonds. This last is only worn at coronations.

In the cathedral, at the last coronation, were two thrones, set at one side of the platform and around these and in the tribune behind them, were grouped the most distinguished nobles in the Empire, the Czar and Czarina being in the centre and beside the thrones. Doubtless the same solemn and imposing ceremonial will take place at the new coronation. Russia's youthful-looking ruler and his fair, girlish bride will enter the old, time-worn cathedral and place themselves in front of the thrones, while the crowns, the seal, sword, sceptre, and globe, lie beside them on a table. They will be robed in the royal ermine, and the ends of their mantles will be upheld by members of the nobility around them. After the recitation by the Emperor of the Confession of faith, which the Metropolitan will step forward to hear, the prayers will be read, the Emperor having a prominent part in the utterances throughout. These ended, the crowns will be brought forward and the Emperor will himself lift the royal crown of all the Russias from its velvet resting-place and place it on his own head, while the Metropolitan pronounces a benediction. The Emperor will then grasp the sceptre in his right hand, the globe with his left, and seat himself upon the throne. At this stage of the ceremonial the Empress will approach the throne and kneeling upon a cushion will be crowned with a smaller crown by the Czar himself, the diadem being securely adjusted by the Czarina's ladies. At the last coronation the Czar placed his own crown for a single moment upon the brows of his consort, before laying the smaller crown there. For has arranged to distribute a large sum among the poor this year. The Coronation of Alexander III. cost nearly $20,000,000.

Nicholas II., the young ruler of the vast Russian empire, was born in 1868. Personally, he has not much of the Romanoff about him, for the princes of that famous family have been noted for their great stature and imposing mien, whereas Nicholas is small and delicate-looking. It is rumored that he will render his coronation memorable by granting freedom of worship throughout Russia. This would probably be the most remarkable event in Russian history since the emancipation of the serfs.

THE CATHEDRAL OF OSTANKINO, MOSCOW.

The Czarina, to whom he was married two years ago at the Winter Palace, St. Petersburg, was formerly Princess Alix of Hesse. She is one of Queen Victoria's numerous grandchildren, and the daughter of the popular Princess Alice, who died when Alix was a child. She is credited with possessing all the qualities of a brilliant, good-hearted, sympathetic woman, with many accomplishments, and she has already won the hearts of the impulsive Russian people. Moscow, the scene of the approaching coronation ceremonies, has a history which reaches back to the very earliest Russian annals. Nearly six hundred years ago the Kremlin fortress was built in the centre of the city on the left bank of the river, as a defence, and later it was enclosed by stone and proved a mighty bulwark against the attacks of the Lithuanians and Mongols. The Kremlin was occupied by the French in 1812, and when Napoleon was compelled to evacuate Moscow, he tried in vain to destroy certain parts of the grand old pile of buildings but failed. In recent years it has been restored and greatly improved and beautified. To the Russians, the associations surrounding the grim and ancient fortress, its palaces and cathedrals, are sacred. There their kings and emperors have been anointed and crowned, and there is the recognized centre of Russian learning and Russian orthodoxy. In the Kremlin, one of the very oldest buildings is the Cathedral of the Assumption, founded in 1326, in which the coronation will take place. Besides, there are the famous Michael Cathedral, the Church of the Annunciation, the tower of Ivan Veliki, and the gigantic "Kolokol" ("king of bells"), believed to be the greatest bell in the world. There are also within the walls palaces, armories, an arsenal, and the Senate chamber, and the whole is overlooked by eighteen fortified towers, and approached by five gates.

Photographic views of Moscow and the Kremlin appear on this and the first page. The portraits of the Czar and Czarina are from the most recent photographs taken of the two principal actors in the great spectacle soon to take place there. One cloud alone casts a shadow over the approaching event. It is the continued serious illness of the Czarewitch, Prince George, whose consumptive ailment threatens a fatal termination. In the event of his death, the coronation will be confined to the religious ceremonial, and all the festivities for which Moscow is now preparing will be omitted.

SHE WAS CALLED IN CHILDHOOD.

Miss Alice M. Otto, Once a Superintendent of One of Rev. George W. Sharp's Sunday Schools, Now a Successful Missionary in Japan.

In the course of his long experience as a Sunday School Missionary in the Southwest, Rev. George W. Sharp, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD missionary, has witnessed many changes. Not only has he seen the wilderness transformed, so that it literally blossomed like a garden, and the wicked, waste places morally changed by the introduction of Sunday Schools, and churches, but he has watched those who once were children grow up to a useful Christian manhood and womanhood.

It is always grateful to see the fruit of one's labors, and when Mr. Sharp, a few days ago, received a letter which informed him of a successful missionary work in Japan being conducted by Miss Alice M. Otto, he recalled with pleasure the fact that Miss Otto had been one of his best Sunday School workers, and was Superintendent of one of the schools at the time of her departure for her new field of labor. Concerning her, Mr. Sharp writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as follows:

"She was formerly a Superintendent of one of my Sunday Schools, and is now a Missionary of the M. E. Church in Japan. In the enclosed photograph, Miss Otto is seen on the left hand of the Japanese group. After she became a public school teacher, she was accustomed to open school with the reading of a portion of Scripture, and devotional exercise of song or prayer. In one district there was opposition to this from unbelievers, one or more of them being on the Board of Trustees. The alternative was presented to her either to abandon opening the school thus or give up the school, and she unhesitatingly chose the latter.

"Last Sunday I was at a country school house on Sloan's Point, a bluff rising high above the Chariton river. I organized a school there in 1881, and Miss Otto was made Superintendent. She was quite young for the position, but was very successful. Her father gave her and two younger children an equal quantity of onion seed and ground for cultivation. When the onions were sold in the autumn, she realized $10 from the sale of her crop, and the younger children $5 each from theirs, each one of the three having had the same amount of seed and ground. She went to town and made necessary purchases with $5 of her money. Returning home her mother reminded her that it might have been well to have spent more of the money for herself than she did, and asked what she had done with the other five dollars. She answered:

"When I planted my onion seed, I promised the Lord, if he would prosper me, I would use half of what I made for him. So I gave five dollars to Brother Sharp to pay for supplies to keep up our Sunday School."

"Supplies are often obtained by schools in the spring for three or six months, and thus she provided for the continuation of the school during the fall and winter. Making allowance for the better cultivation she was able to bestow on her ground than the two younger children on theirs, though twice as much as she had, yet as her yield was equal to both of theirs, it is evident that God did prosper her in sowing for him. She superintended that Sunday School about eight years, when she came to Kirksville, Mo., to complete her education, after which she taught in public schools about five years, laboring as she could in Sunday School and other Christian work. Her conversion had been clear and she grew in grace and usefulness with her scholastic education and experience.

"When a child of only six years she had said to her mother, 'Ma, I'm going to be a missionary.' All her preparation had been completed when she took leave of the loved ones of her home Sept. 10, 1894, under the auspices of the Methodist Church, being sent by the Women's Foreign Missionary Society (Des Moines branch), to Japan. She sailed from Vancouver, Can., Sept. 17, and landed at Yokohama after a voyage of three weeks. The first year after her arrival she was principal of the Women's school in Yonezawa. The photo-shows her seated to the left; the other women are native teachers. After the first year, she was given charge of evangelistic work at Hiroaki where her duties are exceedingly important, and greatly blessed in the salvation of souls. She conducts women's meetings, children's meetings, a Sunday School class, assists in revivals in the church, etc.

"The School which was organized fifteen years ago at Sloan's Point was then obscure. Many persons have been converted there. Her experience as its Superintendent for eight years has borne fruit indeed.

"The first new School I organized this Spring started with a poor prospect. There was a lack of interest in the neighborhood. This was overcome by prayer and persistent effort. After planting the school on Sunday morning, I preached in the afternoon. This service was designed to awaken a more general interest in the community for the Sunday School, and to lead the unsaved to seek the blessed Jesus. Nearly all the unconverted promised to do so. A young lady, a teacher in week-day schools, was particularly concerned about her soul. She came across the room to tell me she was convicted of sin, and asked me to pray that she might be converted. I told her of the promises and gave her an instructive Gospel booklet. Two days ago the superintendent called to see me, and with a heart brimful of joy reported the growing interest of the school, and the increased attendance of parents and children. "On the Sunday above referred to, after the two services at the country school-house, a ride of about six miles, in which I passed through a light shower of rain, brought me to a small village about six o'clock, P.M. I had organized-

ALICE M. OTTO AND HER JAPANESE CLASS.

Miss Otto was formerly a teacher under "The Christian Herald" Sunday School Missionary.

ed a school there several years ago. It has been greatly blessed, conversions have been numerous, among them some very hard cases. By request I addressed the people and organized a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. That service closed a little before the hour for preaching. The pastor had met me when I organized a Sunday School in another county in a desperately wicked locality. He has entered the ministry since then, and is a very devoted and useful man. He now insisted that I should preach, which I did. Christians were prayerful, the singing was devotional, the Holy Spirit blessed His truth, and at the close of the sermon I saw not one person in the well-filled house who did not stand up in testimony of his or her purpose to serve God.

GEO. W. SHARP."

Rev. Mr. Sharp's work as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday School missionary in the Southwest is supported by voluntary contribution. Contributions will be gladly received from those of our friends who are disposed to give the work their moral and material aid. Such contributions should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Master's Door was Shut.

A traveler was in Syria, at a time when a road was given by some great man of the village, in connection with some public occasion. The door of the great man's house stood wide open and all were welcome. At the time set there was a movement about the door, but the host called out that there were some who might have mistaken the hour. Half an hour afterward, concluding that all had come who intended coming, the order was given to close the doors, and the guests sat down to their meal. Curious to ascertain how far the custom to which Jesus alluded in Luke 13: 25 still obtained, he applied to the servant who stood before the door, telling him that he was a stranger and begging to be admitted. But the servants were inexorable. "We have our master's orders," said the servant. "No one is to be admitted now; a half-hour's grace was given and that was sufficient." "We pleaded and argued in vain," said the traveler, "the door was not opened; we were shut out in the darkness."

Persia's Dead Shah.

Nasr-Ed-Deen, the Assassinated Ruler, was a Despot but not a Barbarian—His Reign Reviewed—His Successor.

NTelligence has been brought by the cable of the death of the Shah of Persia, by the hand of an assassin, who shot him as he was entering the court of the shrine of Shah Abdul Azim in Teheran, the capital, on May 1. The perpetrator of the crime is said to be a revolutionary fanatic, named Mollah Reza, from Kerman. He was instantly arrested and the government is now endeavoring to find out his accomplices, as it is believed that the murder was the result of a deep-laid political plot. The Shah expired two hours after the shooting occurred.

Nasr-ed-Deen was a notable ruler in many respects. A hereditary other potentate would scarcely have been overlooked. While in England, he was quartered in Buckingham Palace. After the Shah and his suite had gone, the hangings, furniture, and even the plaster walls, and flooring of the rooms had been destroyed, and the interiors entirely renovated before they were again used, filthy were the habits and surroundings of this "King of kings" and "Asylum of the Universe"—two of the Shah's high-sounding titles.

NASR-ED-DEEN, THE LATE SHAH OF PERSIA.

In one of the handsomest rooms of the suite, he had even slaughtered a live sheep for sacrificial purposes. His manner at table, at receptions, and at the various public functions to which he was invited, were such as to astound all Europe. His tours, however, resulted in the introduction of many modern improvements into Persia, which added largely to the national resources. Among these were gas, electric lighting, improved machinery, telegraphs, a system of railways, and a coinage system. He also readjusted the tax laws and adopted many western ideas in connection with local and general administration. During his whole reign, Persia was comparatively prosperous and the population increased. Surrounded by intrigues, he had sufficient force of character to carry out his own policy and override all interference. So well had he his governmental affairs under control that there were no outbreaks even during his absences abroad; yet his predecessor had never dared to venture beyond the palace gates.

Persia is Mohammedan, the ruling sect being known as the Shiah, which represents a following of about 8,000,000 souls. Their priest, the ulemas, are very powerful, and are steadfastly opposed to all schemes for national progress. Their religious centre is Kerbela, near Bagdad, where the chief priest or Mujtahid resides. On several occasions the ulemas or the mollahs (minor Shiah priests), have accused the Shah of too great partiality for foreigners.

The new coinage system and other recent innovations revived the opposition to Nasr-ed-Deen's progressive policy, and it is supposed that the assassination was the result of a plot in which the Shiah leaders may prove to have been implicated.

The late Shah (who was born in 1831), had five sons and thirteen daughters, the Valiah, or heir to the throne, being Muzaffer-Ed-Deen, the second son. Masud, the eldest son, is not of the royal tribe of Kajar and is therefore ineligible as the Shah's successor. He is at present Governor of Ispahan and is of such an ambitious and resolute character that it is not improbable he may cause trouble to Muzaffer. The latter, however, is recognized by both England and Russia as the rightful heir to the Persian throne.

One of the brightest features of the late Shah's long reign has been his kindness to the Armenians, who enjoy equal privileges with the Mussulmans in Persia. This is in striking contrast with the policy of the bloodthirsty Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Hamid, who has made himself infamous as the Nero of the present age.

Miss Sarah Sinclair.

There is a happy land
Far, far away,
Where saints in glory stand,
Bright, bright as day.

ICAN shut my eyes and after forty years have come and gone, see Miss Sarah sitting at the wheezy old piano, playing the hymn-tunes she loved, and leading the school-room singing. Her voice was a thin, reedy soprano, very lightly in contrast with her plump, short, full chest and long arms. Miss Sarah taught school and boarded round, two weeks at a time, in the families of her pupils. She was nearly fifty years old when she took it into her head to learn to play the instrument, and she always called the piano, and she never got much beyond the simplest airs and exercises, so, you may imagine my surprise when, returning to my old home, after an absence of several years, I saw posted in a window on the main street, this notice in large letters, "Piano lessons given here. For terms, apply to Sarah Sinclair. Pains taken with beginners especially."

"What does this mean, Miss Sarah?" I asked, stepping in to make a call.

"Mean, my lamb? It means what it says. I'm the best music teacher in this town for beginners, and people are finding it out."

Just then a little girl came for a lesson, and I took my leave. Presently I met my old pastor, Dr. Furness, and knowing that he took a fatherly interest in everybody, old and young, I ventured to ask him if Miss Sarah could really teach.

"Well, yes," the dear old gentleman said, "she has a gift that better players lack. They do not set her nerves on edge when they strike a false note, she isn't sensitive about such trifles as flats and sharps, and she has inexhaustible patience. The more surprising thing is that Miss Sarah has learned to play hymns so well that she officiates in prayer-meeting, and does it well, too. You should hear her say 'O, Paradise,' or 'Jerusalem the golden.'"

I laughed to myself, thinking of Miss Sarah's queer figure, and her shrill voice, and she hadn't even a moderately strong and tuneful one, leading the public in that way, but when night came and I went to the meeting myself, I did not feel like laughing.

Do you know the sweet, solemn, brooding hush which falls on a company of worshippers when the Spirit of God is evidently in their midst? One cannot define it, but it is an influence from heaven, so true, so hallowed, that it flows from soul to soul, sweeping in as a tide, the most antagonistic and the most trifling alike. Revival, quickening, what a beautiful experience it is, straight from the Divine throne.

Still there's more to follow,
Always more to follow, and one and all, with Miss Sarah Sinclair sounding the accompaniment with the energy of love. The hymn ceased, there were prayers, and talks, and at last there came a pause, longer than any, and in its quiet interval Miss Sarah rose to her feet. "There are those," she said, "who don't believe in answers to prayer. Some of them are here now. I just want to tell them how the dear Lord has dealt with me. For years I was of them that wanted a sign, and it seemed as if the Master said, 'Daughter, there shall no sign be given thee.' But at last I said, 'Lord Jesus, sign or no sign, I believe thee, I love thee, I serve thee. But, please Lord, before I die, let me play the piano.' I'd been studying and practicing and makin' no headway, only one, two, three, four, and never a tune, do my best, just drum, drum, and I was near clean beat out. But, comin' as I do of stock that fit the Indians fast, and fit in the Revolution afterwards, I couldn't let an old piano conquer me, so I prayed an' I practiced, and one day sure enough, I found out that I knew how. The notes not being ever in practice, and acting as if folks expected them to be Paderewskis or Joseffys, I think of dear old Miss Sarah. The lesson of her life is to me at least: do the best you can, and, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

HOW TO INVEST MONEY.

AN experience with which investors are familiar is mentioned by an exchange, which calls attention to the large proportion of Trust Companies which have paid no dividends to the stock-holders. It adds that usually it is the people who organize the Trusts and sell the stock who make the money, while investors get the experience and learn not to do so again.

There is one Trust which never fails to enrich its members. "Give and it shall be given you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." In view of such a promise, why are there so many members of churches miserably towards the Lord's work?

Soon or late every true confessor of Christ has to face him in the duty of Christian trusteeship. Giving money is not optional: it is specifically commanded by Christ and the apostles with special

A Nassau Sponge Warehouse.

How the Bahama Islanders Cultivate the Sponge and Prepare it for Export—A Baptist Preacher's Work on the Islands.

DESCRIBING in a former article the noble Christian work done in the Bahamas by the Rev. Daniel Wilshire and his devoted wife, reference was made to the varied occupations of the people of those beautiful islands. One of these forms the subject of an illustration on this page. The collection of sponges and the treatment of them to fit them for the foreign market, is an industry that finds employment for a large number of the natives of the islands. That fact is obvious when it is stated that the value of the sponges exported every year from Nassau, New Providence, the capital of the group, is nearly three hundred thousand dollars. The work of gathering the sponges from the rocks at the bottom of the sea on which they grow, is one of no little difficulty. In some districts it is done by divers, who go down at the risk of their lives and tear the sponges from the rocks. In other districts the sponge gatherers go out in boats, armed with a harpoon, which in this case is a long pole, to the end of which a hooked knife is attached, and detach the sponges without diving. The chief difficulty in this method is to see the sponges through the troubled surface. An ingenious device originally used by the Greek sponge-fishers is employed extensively in the Bahamas. It consists of a zinc cylinder about a foot and a half long and a foot wide, the lower extremity of which is closed by a glass plate. This is sunk below the level of the sea, and looking through it the boatman can see the bottom at the depth of many fathoms. After the sponges have been brought up, they are exposed to the air until decomposition sets in, and are then either beaten or trodden with the feet in a stream of running water until the skin and other soft tissues are completely removed. They are then hung up to dry, and are afterwards packed in bales for shipment.

It is estimated that fully five thousand men and boys are employed in the Bahamas in this industry. The whole population of the nineteen inhabited islands is about fifty thousand. Christian work is carried on there by the Church of England Missionary Society, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Baptists. As our readers are aware, the native Baptist churches have recently organized a Union under the Presidency of the Rev. Daniel Wilshire, who has devoted himself to the cause of Christ in these islands for the past eighteen years with rare self-denial and zeal. In a recent letter from Mr. Wilshire, he says that there are now thirty-two of these Union Churches scattered among seven islands, all self-supporting and each with its native pastor. The total membership is about twenty-six hundred and the Sunday Schools contain about twenty-five hundred children. Mr. Wilshire's functions are almost of an Episcopal character. Through the kindness of a Baltimore lady who spent a winter at the islands and saw how valuable was the work done, he was furnished with a sloop on which he visits the outlying districts of his island diocese, and encourages the workers and supervises the work. The poverty of the people is almost pathetic, but they give with surprising liberality according to their means and they occasionally receive a little help from Baptist friends in this country, for which they are profoundly grateful. The Second Baptist Church of Chicago has been a specially helpful friend to the work. Through the assistance it rendered, the Union was able to secure a site in Nassau for its headquarters. The Baptist work was originally under the auspices of the English Missionary Society, but since 1892 it has been independent, and Mr. Wilshire has lived a life of faith, trusting in God instead of the Missionary Society for support of himself and his family.

Sponges waiting export at Nassau, N. P., Bahama Islands.

under my fingers grew to be alive, I was playing! Not like any of the great musicians, Chopin, or Bach, or Mendelssohn, but playing this way." She stopped, turned to the piano, and ran over the keys, then began:

Jesus my all to heaven has gone
He whom I fixed my hopes upon.

And as she sang, everybody joined in, and sang, and sang! When the last words died into silence, Miss Sarah began, "I'm taking up too much time, but this is what I want to say finally: If I, stupid as I was, could learn the piano, there isn't one here so stupid that he can't find the way to faith in Christ. Faith's like piano-playing. It's a matter of usin' what you have, till it grows and gets holt of you, and you get a holt of it. The one that's got the teeniest bit of faith, like my one, two, three, on the keys, has enough to start with, and if he'll use that, God'll give him more."

She took her seat. The pastor prayed. I thought of Lord Tennyson's line, about the whole round world bound by gold chains about the feet of Christ, and "So knowledge grows from more to more." And then I recalled our Lord's word, "To him that hath shall be given."

This all happened long ago. Miss Sarah has been gathered to her fathers. Her old piano was sold at auction, and probably nobody in these days would have much pleasure in listening to her funny jerky music. But when I see how few girls can play to edification in a meeting, and how afraid most of them are to entertain you, blessings attached to it. "God loveth a cheerful" (or, as the Greek has it) "a laughing giver." The Ninth Chapter of II. Corinthians tells how the pocketbook must go into a full consecration, and God will prosper his people.

When the Holy Spirit rested on the first Christians, Luke writes in Acts 5:34, that they sold their possessions and came and laid the price at the apostle's feet. That evidenced that they were filled with the Spirit. The Holy Ghost alone can loosen the purse-strings and open a sordid heart. A Spirit-filled church never lacks for money. Giving is an essential part of spiritual worship and a means of joy. The lack of it tends to poverty. Do you want to be sure that God loves you, and that he will supply your need for time to come, and make you rich in his glory? then be a cheerful, liberal giver. A beautiful story is told of Baron Rothschild, who sat disguised as a beggar in the studio of the eminent painter, Ary Scheffer. A gentleman came in and had compassion on him, and put a gold piece in his hand. Ten years later the gentleman received this letter, inclosing an order for ten thousand francs: "Sir:—You one day gave a louis to Baron Rothschild in the studio of Ary Scheffer. He has employed it, and today sends you the little capital with which you entrusted him, together with its interest. A good action always brings its fortune." JAMES DE ROTHSCHILD.

Christian, how much will you put into Jesus' hands, by and by to receive the result of your investment in riches laid up where thieves cannot enter?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

LOUIS KLOPSCH, PROPRIETOR.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.B. J. FERNIE, G. H. SANDISON,
Associate Editors.

The Christian Herald is published every Wednesday. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, in advance.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Post-office and Express Money Orders are always safe and may be sent at our own risk.

Register your letter when you remit by cash.

Foreign Postage. Each copy to be mailed outside the United States, the Canadian and Mexican foreign postage at the rate of one dollar a year should be added to the regular subscription price.

Renewals. It is always best to renew two weeks before the date on your wrapper, to ensure uninterrupted service.

Back Numbers. We cannot undertake to supply back numbers nor to make good omissions caused by tardy renewals.

Change of Date. It takes two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of subscriptions. The date on the wrapper indicates when your paper will be stopped unless promptly renewed.

Change of Address. Always give both your old and your new address when you ask us to change your address.

The Name of your Post-office and of the State you live in should always follow your own name when writing to this office. We cannot find your name on our books unless this is done.

Letters should be addressed

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City.

Entered at the Post-office at New York, as Second-class Matter

What of Armenia?

IF the Christian people of every land under the sun were true to their professions of devotion to Christ and his cause, the sufferings of Armenia would be of short duration. France, Germany, England, Austria, and even Russia would recognize it as a paramount duty to take such action as should forever render impossible any repetition of the Turkish barbarities of the last two years. But the so-called "Christian Powers" have proved neither Christian nor civilized, for they have criminally permitted a continuance of inhumanities that are indescribable and a disgrace to the century. They have seen Armenia, their neighbor, waylaid, and robbed and beaten and slain by a race worse than savages, and have raised no helping hand, but have passed by as the Levite passed the wounded wayfarer. For all their sympathy and Christianity, Armenia might now be utterly exterminated.

What is to become of the Armenians? The good people of America and England have fed and clothed them for months, it is true; but they are still in the spoiler's hands. Prayers have ascended from countless altars and homes in their behalf and those prayers have been answered, for help has been sent and the massacres have ceased. But Moslem savagery and its hatred of Christianity are boundless, as all history shows, and until the power of Turkey over the Christians of Armenia is absolutely removed, the persecuted people will continue to suffer. The Christians of our own land, who have so nobly supplemented their prayers with their acts, will not cease to supplicate nor to labor for Armenia until the Almighty arm is stretched forth for the deliverance of the people of ancient Eden. For this end Christians everywhere should energetically strive, knowing that the Lord loves willing service and that he has many times done, in answer to the united prayers of his children, what great governments have been powerless to accomplish. Sooner or later, deliverance will come for Armenia, and it may come from the most unexpected quarter. Let us pray that it may come soon.

More Reading-rooms.

ONE of the best ways of warring against houses of dissipation is to open orderly and cheap reading-rooms. Intelligence and morality can be made as charming as ignorance and vice. In such rooms should be gathered good book and vivacious newspaper and piano well tuned and violin well strung and flute clear-voiced and bright faces. Men will go where they have the best time, and when we can, in the name of morality and intelligence, open places of entertainment where there is sweeter music, and more fascinating company, and more attractive literature, the death-blow will be given to demoralizing places of amusement.

You say, "People ought to be at home instead of spending their evenings in a public reading-room." We reply, there are unhappy homes, full of scolding and fretfulness. The mother spends her evenings talking about the unfaithfulness of servants, and the father mourning about family expenses, or complaining, "Oh, dear me! that arm, Joe!" and the son is expected to spend the evening bathing the rheumatism out of the old man's arm; so that when, later in the evening, he goes into the parlor, the ladies are obliged to put handkerchief to the face, because of the odor of the liniment. There are parents who are not satisfied till their child feels as badly as they do. For such young people you need a reading-room.

There is also a large class of young men in boarding-houses who need such a resort. In winter they have no fire in their rooms, and if they want to read in the parlor, they are hindered by groups of ladies talking spiritedly about new styles of fur, or three or four gentlemen paying their attentions to a lady, each one determined to stay till all the others are gone. Many of our young men need, for reading purposes, a room well warmed, well lighted, and quiet, and they can find it nowhere except in the public library. It is a matter of congratulation that, not only in our cities, but even in small villages, rooms are being opened where, with the most elevated surroundings, our young men can pass their evenings in mental and moral improvement. What grander thing can a man of wealth do for his neighborhood than to open a hall or build a house for such a purpose?

Cheer for Invalids.

SOME of the grandest and best work that has ever been done for God and humanity has been done by those who hardly ever saw a well day. Take from the world the work of the invalids, and you make an appalling subtraction. Robert Hall an invalid. Edward Payson an invalid. Richard Baxter an invalid. The men of Bryan in Ireland heard that the battle had gone against their country, and they said: "We are too weak to stand up and fight, but you drive some stakes into the ground, and then carry us out of the hospital and fasten us to the stakes, and then we will fight with the other arm." And so it was done. The stakes were driven into the ground, these wounded men were brought out of the hospital. Not able to stand alone, they were fastened to these stakes by the one side, and with the other arm they fought to desperation, and fought to death. The great victories for God and the truth have not been gained by those who have full equipment. John Milton saw further without eyes than thousands of men ever saw with them. Look out for the soldier's crutch and the old man's staff if they be wielded for patriotism or Christianity. In garrets, in cellars, in sick-rooms, in asylums, in hospitals, how many of the Lord's troops! Some in one way and some in another way efficient for good.

Consecrated Common Sense.

COMMON sense is as valuable in religion as in business. Many have "a zeal for God," but not "according to knowledge." They are earnest in their work, but lack tact in dealing with men. Someone has said that "common sense is the most uncommon kind of sense." Certainly, it is none too prevalent in our churches. The word "policy" has come to have a bad meaning with us, and to be associated largely with political trickery. Yet there is a place for sanctified policy in religious work. The Saviour surely taught this when he said, "Be ye wise as serpents." Paul both taught and practised the art of being "all things to all men." The very idea that Christians are "fishers" of men, implies that they are to regard the peculiarities of those whom they endeavor to save, and to temper their methods accordingly. A story is told of a theological professor who admonished his students somewhat as follows: "When I go fishing I first select a stream in which I think there are fish. Next I select a pole of proper size, and then suitable line and hook and bait. Then I wait patiently until a fish bites, and do what I can to pull it in." But some preachers, when they go fishing for men, take the same kind of tackle and bait for everybody. We cannot drive men to Christ. We may win them. For this end let us study patience and tact. Let us imitate the shrewdness of the business world. "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."

OUR MAIL-BAG.

M. J. M., Mealey, Oreg. Is Mr. Gladstone of England a Catholic?
No; he is an Episcopalian.

Subscriber, Chatham, N. J. What is meant (Prov. 26:17, by likening a man who meddles with strife to one who takes a dog by the ears)?

It means that the man in both cases needlessly runs into danger. There is an old saying that it is best to let sleeping dogs lie, which has a similar meaning. If you interfere, un-called for, in a quarrel, you may get yourself into trouble and do no good. You would be as foolish as a man who laid hold of a dog's ears and ran the risk of being bitten.

Subscriber, St. Augustine, Fla. What is the definition of usury? Why is it wrong?

The modern legal definition is interest in excess of a legal rate charged for the use of money. It is wrong because, in this sense, it is extortion. Any lender who takes advantage of a borrower's need to exact a rate higher than he would otherwise receive, is an usurer. Originally the term was applied to the whole custom of loaning money at interest but it is now applied only to the practice of demanding or receiving exorbitant interest, or a premium beyond the usual rate.

J. Parton, Altoona, Pa. Our Chautauqua Circle is to read up on the Armenian crisis. What book can you recommend for the purpose and where and at what price can it be obtained?

The best of all books for your purpose is The Rule of the Turk, by Rev. F. D. Greene, himself a missionary to Armenia and the son of a veteran missionary in that field. It is an accurate, comprehensive and stirring recital of the Armenian troubles, including the late massacres and all the frightful barbarities that have characterized Ottoman rule in recent years. It can be procured by sending fifty cents to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

E. C. H., Braceville, Ill. What is the law of Illinois in regard to a wife's property—does it go to the children or to the father; her husband, the father of the children, I mean?

In the State of Illinois a married woman may make a will the same as if she were single. She is mistress of her own property obtained by gift, or inheritance, or by purchase with her own means. At common law, if there are children, the husband has a life interest in any real estate belonging to the wife. These remarks apply to real property only; as a general rule, and unless there is a statute to the contrary, her personal property belongs to her husband.

Annie and Emily B., Schenectady, N. Y. Will work at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home be again resumed this year? The Christian Endeavor Society of our Sunday School are thinking of giving an entertainment for its benefit, and we hope to raise at least ten dollars.

Yes, the Home will be opened in June. We have already received intimations from a number of C. E. Societies, Sunday Schools, and Young Peoples' Unions, that they intend to hold bazaars, or give entertainments in aid of our Fresh Air work. We are glad to have the co-operation of all of our young friends in this Christian work, which has already proved a life-saving boon to thousands of the tenement children.

Searcher after Truth, Troy, N. Y. 1. Did any of the ancient heathen or pagan historians write anything about Jesus? What does the Talmud say about him? 2. Does any ancient historian outside of the Bible speak of St. Paul?

1. Yes; in that part of the ancient Talmud which was called Toledoth Yeshu ha Nossri ("The Generation of Jesus the Nazarene"), it was stated that Jesus was hanged at the direction of the Jewish sages, and that the body was taken down at sunset and buried outside the city. All mention of Jesus was with a view to depreciate him and his work. The Toledoth Yeshu was expunged from the Talmud in 1630, by order of the Jewish Assembly at Jaroslov in Little Poland, and all mention of Christ was directed to be suppressed in the Talmud thereafter. These circumstances are familiar to most Jewish scholars. Jesus is incidentally mentioned by several Greek and Roman secular authors, including Tacitus, Annals, XV, 44, 3; Pliny, Epistle X, 97; Lucian, Suetonius, Eusebius and others. 2. Paul is referred to by Clement of Rome, Eusebius, Jerome, Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth (A. D. 170), Tertullian, Caius of Rome (second century), and several others.

G. F. L., Brooklyn, N. Y. Were Mary Magdalen and Mary of Bethany the same woman?

Scholars differ in opinion on the subject. The only passage that implies identity is Luke 11:2. It is so plain and direct that Light and other eminent writers have no doubt the two Marys being one and the same. The other side, however, are other authors who think that there may have been anointings and that the Evangelist is not referring to the anointing described in his two chapters. These authorities contend that Mary of Bethany was distinct from Mary Magdalen. There is no way that we know of which the question can be positively decided.

C. A. C., New Britain, Ct. Where or to whom can I send my old copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD where they will be appreciated and do the most good? I have all of last year's subscription have treasured them as a miser does his gold, but I feel that I am doing wrong in so doing that they have a mission and should be out of my way.

In a recent issue we published a list of hospitals, prisons, reform schools, etc., where good literature might be sent. Select any from that list—preferably one near your neighborhood.

C. C. C., McMinnville, Tenn. Is a public confession of wrongdoing on the part of a Christian necessary when he is convinced that God has forgiven him?

Taking into account the circumstances described in your letter, we do not think a public confession is required of the person referred to. If another person has been wronged reparation is necessary. If there has been sincere repentance and if the pardon of God through Christ has been implored and the sin and its associations resolutely put away, we believe that is sufficient. We know that contrary opinion is held by many eminent teachers and in some cases we might urge confession. But in the circumstances you describe, it appears to us that confession would be liable to do harm and could do no good any one.

M. S. D., Leominster, Mass. When and where did the Plymouth Brethren originate?

John Darby, who is generally considered the founder was a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Ireland. He came to the conclusion that the doctrines and system of the Church were unscriptural and about 1830 finally separated himself from it. He held that any person who had a call to teach or preach had the right to do so, and that all true believers should unite together without ecclesiastical ceremony in simple brotherly fellowship for mutual edification and to watch for the Lord's return. A small band of like minded people gathered around him in Plymouth, England, which increased until the numbered over a thousand. Other bands were formed in London and other cities, but the Plymouth meeting was so much the largest in the early days as to give its name to the whole. It has, however, never been accepted by the believers, who prefer to be known simply as The Brethren.

Old Subscriber. Write to The Silver Star, New York City.—J. W. Hawkins, Passaic, N. J. We do not know of any one.—Mrs. E. W., Aurora, Ill. 1. She should follow the dictates of conscience, hesitatingly. A duty is none the less imperative because it meets human opposition. 2. Discretion will suggest how to proceed in such a case. Making a stand at the wrong time, is sometimes worse than making none at all.—R. P. Lamb, Davenport, Ia. Thanks for your letter.—F. M. C., Glen Falls, N. Y. 1. We do not know the volume. Better write to the publishers. 2. For the other matter write to Editor The Chautauqua, Meadville, Pa.

M. R., Emporia, Kan. Your only safe course is to consult a good lawyer.—C. Oakland, Cal. Mich. The Fulton Street Prayer-meeting is at 113 Fulton Street, and the Bowery Mission, 105 Bowery.

Mrs. R. B. C., North Lyndeboro, N. H. We do not know the concern.—A. H. C., Stoughton, Wis. In a general way, both questions can be answered in the affirmative. There are exceptional cases, of course, where the reverse may be true. Write to Rev. C. H. Mead, National Temperance Society, Reading street, New York, for data and statistical reports.

F. E. D., Clear Creek, Ont. Yes, it is still in chancery, we believe. Write to the Secretaries of the Board of Trustees, New York, for all particulars.—Mrs. W. A. S., Groton, Conn. All the letters are pronounced, the "ach" being soft.—Samaritan, Asheville, N. C. The reason has already been stated in a former issue.—E. M. T., North Chelmsford, Mass. That address in Boston will doubtless reach it.—M. F. B., Jackson, Mich. They have no guarantee whatsoever.—C. M. C., Bloomer, Wis. Almost any good newspaper almanac will supply the information you wish. It slightly outside the province of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.—J. S. Miller, Ireton, Ia. We cannot devote the necessary space.—W. T., Dorchester, Neb. There is no evidence that it does so.—John Herson, Lincoln, Neb. We have no details. Better write to some English newspaper for further information.—Ella Camp-ton, Wiota, Wis. Already repeatedly explained.—Subscriber, Carroll, N. H. You can purchase The World's Religions by writing to The Christian Literature Co., New York. It will give the information desired.—Brooklyn Reader, 1. You should take them to the hospital only. 2. He is not the same person.—Subscriber, Elkhorn, Wis. We cannot

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Transvaal Prisoners.

SARTLING news from the Transvaal caused a sensation here and in England a few days ago. A cable dispatch announced that the five leaders of the movement which, in January last, led to Dr. Jameson's raid, had been sentenced to death. They had entered the plea of guilty to the charge of high treason, and it was hoped that their submission would have averted the capital sentence, but Boer justice apparently left no alternative. One of the condemned men was John Hays Hammond, an American mining engineer who was the mining expert of the British South Africa Company. Mr. Hammond's offence consisted in his having been one of the signers of the invitation to Dr. Jameson to enter the Transvaal. He has many influential friends in this country who urged the State Department to interfere in his behalf. Mr. Olney, however, felt some delicacy about making a direct appeal to President Kruger, as Mr. Hammond was in the employ of a British company. He decided it wise therefore to make his appeal through the British Government and he is assured that its good offices would be employed for Mr. Hammond's benefit. The other condemned men were Charles Leard, George Farrar, Col. Francis Rhodes and Lionel Phillips, all English members of the Committee appointed by the Uitlanders of the Transvaal to argue for the redress of their grievances. When so prominent should be sentenced to death caused great excitement in Johannesburg, where they were well-known. Public meetings were held, and petitions were presented to President Kruger asking for clemency. The suspension was not prolonged. On the day following that of the sentence, the President announced that he had commuted the sentences in each case, and the State council is considering the punishment that should be substituted. That it will be a severe one seems probable. Facts recently disclosed show that the offence was more serious than was generally known. It was pleaded in defense of the raid that the English and American residents were in dread of an attack, in which their wives and children would be in peril, and that was to protect them that Dr. Jameson went at their entreaty. A number of diplomatic telegrams have, however, been sent and have been read by a key found among Dr. Jameson's baggage, which proved that there was a very different motive for the raid. Ill-feeling between the Uitlanders and the Boers did exist, and was growing, but there was no danger of violence unless it was provoked by the Uitlanders. The ill-feeling has been provoked by the apparent determination of the Boers to permanently exclude the foreigners from any share in the government and to add to the heavy burden of tax on which now falls chiefly upon the Boers. The Uitlanders lost patience, and believing that their grievances would never be redressed by peaceable means, invoked Dr. Jameson's help, hoping that through his raid the government might be transferred to the Chartered Company. The other telegrams prove this treasonable intent, and they also indicate that Cecil Rhodes, then Premier of Cape Colony, was a signatory of it. The Boers, therefore, have a right to deal with the men as rebels against the Government, if they choose to execute it. The prisoners now doubtless regret their appeal to force, and wish they had borne their grievances in patience, heeding the patriarch's warning:

Be afraid of the sword; for wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword. (Job 19: 29.)

Removing an Historical Stone.

A stone which has been an object of interest to several generations was removed last week from its site in front of the Sub-Treasury in New York. It bore the following inscription: "Standing on this stone in the balcony of Federal Hall, April 30, 1789, George Washington took the oath as first President of the United States of America." The order for its removal was given by the Secretary of the Treasury. Some months ago the Assistant Treasurer in New York noticed a crack in the stone, and a closer examination revealed the fact that it was crumbling. The effect of winds and rains and exposure for a century past had shown itself in decay. It was decided to take measures for the preservation of the relic. It was carefully taken up and carried inside the Sub-Treasury. A bronze frame for its support is to be provided, and it will repose against the south wall under a plate-glass covering which will keep the air from it. Every one must feel that the authorities are doing well to protect so interesting a relic. Its value, however, is purely sentimental. The real reverence for the memory of Washington and that which would have gratified him most if he could have foreseen it, is not associated with the stone on which his feet rested, but with fidelity to the principles of his life and work. So it is with reverence for Christ. He expects those who love him to show their love, not in regard for the land of his birth, or for crucifixes or relics, but by manifesting his spirit.

Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you. (John 15: 14.)

An Obstinate Tenant.

A business man in New York has been trying the patience of agents and contractors for a year past. In the Spring of 1895 the owner of several houses on a block in Sixth Avenue decided to erect a large building covering the Sixth Avenue frontage of the block and extending five hundred feet eastward. He bought all the houses there he did not own already and then began negotiations with the occupants who held leases to surrender them and move out. All agreed to do so, save one man who had occupied the house for more than thirty years. His lease had still one year to run. The contractors were anxious to begin their work on the new building and liberal offers were made to the one remaining tenant to pay him a large sum if he would vacate his premises, but he would not accept it. The houses on each side of him were demolished, and excavations were made for the basement of the new building. Still he stayed, though the house became so shaky that it had to be shored up to keep it from falling. New offers were made to him, as his staying delayed the work and caused great inconvenience, but the man clung to his holding to the last day of his lease, and he finally went out without a dollar of compensation. It is said that he might have obtained ten thousand dollars if he would have moved a year ago. It is seldom that a man is so blind to his own interests as to forego so large a sum, rather than leave a place to which he had become attached, but there are many who make an infinitely greater sacrifice in spiritual matters. Though they know that eventually they must leave the world and that the world itself will be destroyed, they cling to it though God offers eternal riches to those who are willing to renounce it. They show true wisdom who, like Moses:

Choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. (Heb. 11:25.)

A Mining Disaster.

A press dispatch from El Paso, Tex., reports a serious calamity which had just occurred at the Santa Eulalia Mines, near Chihuahua, Mexico. The roof of one of the mines had fallen in while sixty-seven miners and laborers were at work, and had crushed some and cut off the escape of the others. Gen. Ahumada had arrived with a large force of sappers and skilled workmen who were working day and night to rescue the entombed men but with no hope of saving any of them alive. It appears that the mine was considered one of the safest in the country and the catastrophe, therefore, occasioned much surprise. The cause of it, however, as explained by a miner who refused to work there, is easily understood. The

THE FIVE PRISONERS OF THE TRANSVAAL

Whose capital sentences for treason have been commuted by President Kruger.

Switzerland which is unique in its way. It is a bird's nest made entirely of steel springs. The neighborhood is noted for its clock and watch manufactories. In the yards of these factories there are heaps of fragments of wheels and springs which are worn out or defective. Broken springs are a large part of the refuse. One day a resident in the suburbs noticed that a pair of wagtails were building their nest in a tree in his yard. He paid no attention to them at the time, but after the nest was finished some peculiar glitter in it as the sun touched it after a shower, attracted him, and he examined it more closely. To his astonishment, he found that it was composed entirely of the broken clock and watch springs, which the birds must have picked from the rubbish in the factory yards. They had skillfully twined them together, and had made a perfectly comfortable nest of the usual shape. It was four inches across, and as commodious and firmly constructed as if made with twigs in the ordinary manner. The observer waited until the pair had raised their young brood, and then took the nest to the museum, where it attracts much notice. It is a curious evidence of the power of the birds to adapt themselves to their circumstances. They used the materials that were at hand, though they were not the materials that were generally used. If Christians would act so, many a man would be doing good service who is now idle because he thinks a college education, a pulpit, or a foreign missionary appointment essential to his working for Christ.

There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God who worketh all in all. (1 Cor. 12: 6.)

BRIEF NOTES.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Presses and Bindery have now been removed to the large Lexington Building, each floor of which is nearly an acre in area. Of course, for a time, the appearance of the beautiful colored plates on our first page will be more or less irregular, but the improvement in our facilities is so great that when we are fully prepared to resume the regular publication of the colored pictures, our readers will have an agreeable surprise. Our new system of color printing gives promise of results far surpassing in artistic excellence any effects yet attained.

Dr. A. T. Pierson is holding meetings in England "for the deepening of spiritual life," which are largely attended. This week he is preaching for Dr. Joseph Parker in the City Temple.

A Popular Preacher in a recent sermon on the sun, said that the Christian must not be like Hezekiah's sun that went backward, nor Joshua's sun that stood still, but like David's sun which rejoiced like a strong man to run a race.

The Eightieth Annual Meeting of the American Bible Society is to be held to-morrow, May 14, in the Folger House, New York City. Members of the societies and delegates from auxiliary societies are invited to be present.

The Annual Statement of English Financial Affairs to Parliament shows that the consumption of rum in the country had declined, but during the year 1,200,000 bottles of champagne had been sold. The consumption of tea had increased by ten million pounds.

Mr. Charles M. Crittenton has been doing good work in Montana. His meetings in Butte aroused widespread interest, and it is believed that a permanent work will grow out of them. Nearly eight hundred cards were signed by persons pledging themselves in Christ's strength to begin a Christian life.

The Representatives in Peru of the Grattan-Guinness Mission have reported recently a month's evangelizing tour on the coast. They say that they were generally welcomed by the people, and although frequent attempts were made to arrest them, they were able to pass on from place to place without great hindrance.

An Interesting Gavel has been sent as a present to the Moderator of a Presbytery in Alabama. Some years ago the Presbytery sent a missionary to China, and from him comes the gavel. It is made from the wood of a tree which for nearly three centuries shaded an idol temple, on the site of which now stands a Christian mission.

Mr. E. A. Vail of the Union Gospel Mission, New Orleans, La., asks us on his behalf to thank readers of this journal who have sent him boxes and packages of religious literature; also to acknowledge the receipt of the following contributions: L. A. C. S. Mrs. M. F. M. S. A. F. P. S. H. Zepher. S. S. H. W. S. H. W. S. H. W. S.

Rev. R. G. Pearson has had a time of blessing in Tampa, Fla. The Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational churches joined in holding united meetings while he was in the town. Not only were there a large number of conversions, but Christians were drawn into closer relations and were spurred up to greater activity.

The Association of Women Physicians in India, founded under the patronage of Queen Victoria, recently held a meeting in Calcutta. It was a most successful one, and the women who ministered to them in Calcutta were Major George H. Hilton and Rev. Grant C. Tuller have been holding meetings at Victor, Colo. The Daily Record of that town reports a strong religious movement in connection with them. The Presbyterian Church was not large enough to hold all who wanted to attend and the meetings were removed to the Opera House, which was filled Sunday and week-end evenings. A Bible reading was given each afternoon and was well attended.

A Bird's Nest of Metal.

A curiosity has recently been placed in the museum of history at Soleure in Woman's Work Abroad.

How it Appears to a Traveler who Contrasts Social Conditions in Different Countries. The Women of Sicily.

NOWHERE in the world is woman so honored or highly considered as in our own favored land. This fact is frankly admitted by foreigners who come here to observe our institutions and contrast our social conditions with those of older countries. Moreover, of the many thousands of women of all ages and degrees who come here as visitors or immigrants from Europe annually, a considerable proportion are doubtless attracted by the advantages that are here open to their sex. A thousand educational and business avenues are available for them here, which are still practically closed in the older lands.

Our photographic illustration on this page, shows the condition of the peasant-women is one of the most beautiful parts of Southern Europe—the island of Sicily. There, as in many parts of the European Continent, the women do a large part of the heavy work. In the culture of oranges, lemons and citrons, in the wheat and flax fields, among the cocoons, or in the great vineyards, it is the same—they have a generous share of the labor as their due. Flax-dressing, as seen in the photograph, is by no means the hardest of the work they undertake daily. It is not to be wondered at that the bloom of the roses fades early from their cheeks, and they grow haggard, weather-beaten and old before reaching maturity. The Sicilian peasant women are old at thirty-five. Yet their country is one possessing every advantage conducive to loveliness of face and figure. It has a fine, agreeable climate, if we except the brief prevalence of the sirocco (or dry wind.) But ignorance, especially in the rural districts, and the general absence of hygienic conditions, which is the result of that ignorance, rob it of much of its charm.

There is not a doubt that the status of woman in the United States is infinitely better than it is anywhere else. A writer in the Cambridge University Magazine, describing a tour through Europe, says: "In Normandy 'the garden of France,' . . . women were busily at work planting and weeding and digging for the next crop. They bore the brunt of all the work, and carried upon their heads, from point to point, enormous loads of grain or produce, or of material for fertilizing the ground—industrious, brown, and wrinkled women."

"When we reached Switzerland and began a study of this hardy, healthy people, a new problem had to be faced: Was it not a happy thing for the mother to take her place in the fields along with the father and the children, and there in the pure mountain air to assist in providing food for the long, cruel winter? In Italy, the women of the common people work in the blessed sunshine, and at sunset tramp contentedly home to prepare the simple evening meal. In German vineyards the vines are dressed and tended largely by women, and along the Rhine the earth is carried back in baskets upon the heads of women. We saw a tiny milk-cart drawn by a big dog, to which a woman was also fastened by a bit of harness. Shortly after some twenty-five carts assembled, some having two dogs, but each having a woman in harness. Everywhere in Europe there is a binding together of families through united labor."

Don't Borrow Trouble.

Lots of good people do, but they do it as the result of a lack of faith. Is not our trial in mourning the loss of friends, quite enough now, writes Dr. Cuyler, without overloading it with an imaginary one? And if our strength breaks down it will simply be because we are not satisfied with letting God afflict us; we torture ourselves with imagined afflictions of our own. If we could but take a short view, we would see the bright side. Then, instead of having two sorrows, we would have one great possession to set over again a great loss; our duty to the living would be not only a relief to our anguish, but the best tribute we could pay the dead.

Plainness in Dress.

It is a noteworthy fact that many people who have succeeded, through their own exertions, in pushing them-er simplicity in the dressing and rearing of children. A number of other ladies, all prominent and well known, have lately recorded their opinion on the girls' dress question, and all agree that simple dressing, with the view of economy and self-help, are greatly to be desired, instead of the absurd extravagance now so general.

A Zulu Wedding.

A missionary, writing from Natal some time ago, gave this interesting account of a wedding among the Zulus: "When the procession reached the gate of the bridegroom's kraal, the bride was closely veiled by her female attendants, nor was the veil removed till she had taken her place in the ring for the final dance. A hundred or more natives engaged in it with all the energy of which they were capable, their bodies covered with perspiration, but I could not see the bridegroom anywhere. On inquiring as to his whereabouts, I received the reply, 'Wait a few minutes and you will see.' It turned out that he was seated near myself among the spectators, and apparently as unconcerned as any of them. After a little, the bride left the ring, dancing and singing like the rest, but evidently in search of somebody or something. Suddenly she appeared and placed her hand on her lover's head, signifying her choice. Then her father selves socially and financially to the front, have simple tastes. Far from being the extravagant beings the world vulgarly believes, they find in the possession of wealth no valid reason for the indulgence of immoderate tastes or expensive notions, but are rather pleased with a plainness both in diet and dress, that many others might regard as bordering on severity. Their wealth is really a stewardship—a trust. Such persons as a rule, don't believe that a so-called "fashionable education" will help their children. Mrs. Rockefeller, for example, holds that daughters should be brought up as simply as possible and not indulged in ornaments, even though the parents have millions. Mrs. U. S. Grant coincides and deprecates the vanity of encouraging girls to outdress each other. Mrs. Armour longs for great-took a shield, and, standing in front of the dancers, who for the time kept quiet, made a speech in which he praised in no qualified terms his daughter, dilated on all he had done for her, said the number of cows he had received was too small, hoped she would meet with good treatment, prove a fruitful vine, etc. Occasionally he emphasized his words by jumping up and kicking his shield with violence. Then the father of the bridegroom appeared on the scene, also bearing a shield, lauding his son to the skies, complaining that he had paid too many cattle, that the girl was homely in appearance, not strong enough to do much work, emphasizing his remarks in the same manner as the bride's father had done. This, it is said, is done that the bride may not be unduly elated. The crowd then dispersed."

SICILIAN WOMEN DRESSING FLAX

To the Children.

CHILDREN, who read my lay,
Thus much I have to say:
Each day, and every day,
Do what is right!
Right things, in great and small;
Then, though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon, and stars, and all,
You should have light!
This further I would say:
Be you tempted as you may,
Each day, and every day,
Speak what is true!
True things, in great and small;
Then, though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon, and stars, and all,
Heaven would show through.
Life's journey, through and through
Speaking what's just and true;
Doing what's right to do
Unto one and all,
When you work and when you play
Each day, and every day;
Then peace shall gild your way,
Though the sky should fall.

—ALICE CARY

The Clock and the Cradle.

IT first took its place on the old hearthstead about seventy years ago. Grandfather and grandmother had just been married. That was a part of their old life. It called them to their first meal. There were the blue-edged dishes, and the handled knives, and homely fare, and an appetite sharpened on the wood-pile, over the snow-shoveling. As the clock struck twelve of noon, the rugged pair, in their made garments, took their position at the table, and keeping time to the rattling knives, and forks, and spoons, the clock went tick-tock, tick-tock!

One day, at a sale, grandfather was seen, with somewhat confused face, leaning on a high chair and a cradle. As the newly-purchased articles came into the house, the old clock in its excitement struck five, when it ought to have soiled four, but the pendulum cried, "Order!" and everything came back to its former composure, save, that as a dash of sunshine struck the face of the clock, it seemed to say, "Time-pieces are not fool!" Clocks sound the march of generation. A time to be born, as well as a time to die. Tick-tock! Tick-tock!

A mischievous child trying to catch the pendulum; a crying child held up to be quieted while listening to the motion of the works; a curious child standing in a chair trying to put his fingers among the cogs to see what they are made of; a child falling asleep in a cradle. Henceforth the clock has beautiful accompaniment. Old-time cradle with a mother's foot on it, going "Rickety-rack! rickety-rack!" All infantile trouble crushed under the rocker. Clock singing, "I started before you were born." Cradle responding, "That which I swing shall live after you are dead." Clock chanting, "I sound the passing of Time." Cradle answering, "I soothe an heir of Eternity." Music! cry to clock. Clock to cradle. More tender than harp, more stirring than huntsman's bugle.

The old time-piece kept account of the birthday of all the children. Eleven times it tolled the old year out, and the new year in. The hand that every Saturday night for forty years wound up was soon to be still. The iron pulse of the old time-piece seemed to flutter, though its own spirit was departing. Its tongue was thick; its face white as struck with death. Just as grandfather's heart, after running for eighty years ceased to tick, the old clock rallied as much as to say: "It is the last thing I do for him, and so I must toll the death-knell—one! two! three! four! five! six! seven! eight! nine! ten! eleven! twelve! With that it stopped.

Ingenious craftsmen attempted to repair it, and oiled the wheels, and swung the pendulum. But it would not go! Its life was run; its heart was broken.

A Breath of May.

There is a fine delicate aroma of the summer in some recent verses by Frank D. Sherman. He writes:

A magic touch transformed the fields,
Greener each hour than their crow,
Until they shone like burnished shields
All jeweled o'er with dew,
Scattered upon the forest floor
A million bits of bloom
Breathed fragrance forth thro' morning's
Into the day's bright room.
Glad flowers upspring amid the grass
And fling their banners gay,
And suddenly it came to pass—
God's miracle of May!

The Widening Kingdom.

Questions on the Christian Endeavor
for the Week Beginning May 24.
Leah 11: 1-10.

FROM the earliest times poets and seers have had a dream of a golden age of peace and prosperity, that was to come on this troubled, sorrowful world. How it would be brought about, they have not been agreed; but they have clung to the hope that in some way a blissful era would come when the curse and the perversity of undane things would be lifted, and universal happiness would be inaugurated. The Hebrew prophet had his vision, too, but with the peculiar genius and penetration of his race, he saw its realization was on righteousness. Men would be happy because they were good. They would cease to quarrel and contend because they had become subjects of the Prince of Peace. "They shall not hurt nor destroy... for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord." It was that knowledge that his dream was. It was no dream of power or force, but of a willing submission to God, a recognition of the fact that his ways were best for his creatures, and in knowing them they would lay for the transformation and development of the human race. When men came to know God, they would make it their highest ambition to be like him, then they would rise to the highest heights of their nature and the pain and sorrow would disappear. Thus peace and prosperity were to come, not from changed circumstances, but from changed character. There was a philosophy in the vision the prophet saw a vision of a God-like race, a world of peace, and, flowing from that source, a stream of universal beneficence.

Inspiration showed him how that result would come. It could not be produced by dogma or by philosophic speculation, but by a person. The vision of God revealed in human shape was the means to the end. The servant of the Lord, the stem growing out of the roots of Jesse, would be the agent in this redemption of the world. His words, the rod of truth and the breath of life, would work this marvelous change. Since he wrote his prophetic revelation which he saw in the far future, has appeared in the world, and now and painfully the transformation has been effected. In Jesus the guiding light and worth showing the path to the culmination. So it has proved. The steps that have been taken toward the universal happiness have been those of the path of life. In following him the only true way has been gained. They have taken weak and faltering steps, but they have been in the right direction. Eventually, every humanitarian effort, every philanthropic enterprise conceived and executed in the spirit of Christ has advanced. Kindness, benevolence, compassion, brotherly affection, have flowed slowly and feebly, out of the inlets of Christ, and the world has benefited by the development. Gradually and with many relapses, the spirit of Christ is creating a society. The beauty and nobility of his character are being recognized and the world is beginning to see that the production of such characters is the hope of the future. He is becoming, as the prophet foresaw, an ensign for the nations, a beacon around which men would gather for salvation for themselves and for the redemption of the world. The nations gathered around him, who call him Lord and learn of him, are growing in number in every generation. The stone at whose hands is becoming a great nation, and is yet to fill the whole earth. In the world come at last to its golden age and find rest in righteousness.

Conducted by IRA D. SANKEY.

ARE YOU DRIFTING?

L. E. JONES.

L. E. JONES.

1. Looking out on life's wide ocean, Many a bark is seen to-day, Some there are with favoring breezes,
2. Looking out on life's wide ocean, Where the tempest rages wild, Oh, how many souls are drifting
3. Looking out on life's wide ocean, See the billows and the shoals, See the tempest in its fury

Sailing on their homeward way, Some are only drift-ing, drift-ing, Swept by every wind and tide;
By the tempter's power beguiled! They are drift-ing, sure-ly drift-ing, To a dark and dis-mal shore,
As a-far and near it rolls! There are many drift-ing, drift-ing, Where the seas are roll-ing high;

Chorus.

They may never make the har-bor, Nev-er reach the oth-er side.
Where the night of sin has set-tled, And the life boat comes no more. } Brother is your ves-sel drift-ing, Rouse ye lost, and seek the har-bor! Hear the Gos-pel's warning cry.

Tempest toss'd and far a-way? While the har-bor lights are burning, Turn, O turn without de-lay.

Copyright, 1895, by The Biglow & Main Co.

From HIGHEST PRAISE for SABBATH SCHOOLS.

By Permission of the Publishers

At the Portals.

WILL they meet us, cheer, and greet us,
Those we loved who've gone before?
Shall we find them at the portals,
Find our beautified immortals,
When the reach that radiant shore?

Chorus: They will meet us, cheer, and greet us,
Those we loved who've gone before:
We shall find them at the portals,
Find our beautified immortals,
When we reach that radiant shore.

Hearts are broken for some token
That they live and love us yet!
And we ask, Can those who've left us,
Of love's look and tone bereft us:
Though in heaven, can they forget?

And we often, as days soften,
And comes out the evening star,
Looking westward, sit and wonder
Whether, when so far asunder,
They shall think how dear they are.

Past yon portals, our immortals,
Those who walk with him in white;
Do they 'mid their bliss recall us?
Know they what events befall us?
Will our coming wake delight?

—J. E. RANKIN.

Remember the Promise.

WHEN danger cometh near thee,
When cares beset thy way,
Let God's own promise cheer thee
And be the mighty stay.

CHORUS.

Remember the promise, remember the promise,
God's promise that never shall fail;
His promises plead, he is faithful indeed,
And you shall, believing, prevail.

O, precious is the promise
For sorrow and distress:
"I never will forsake thee."
"Nor leave thee comfortless."

Remember in temptation
To plead God's Word in prayer,
That "ye shall not be tempted"
Beyond what ye can bear.

In every time of trial,
Some promise is for thee,
And if the Lord thou lovest,
"All things for good" shall be.

Vineland, N. J. —MRS. FRANK A. BRECK.

Is this the Way?

Written in "The Christian Herald."

FATHER, is this the way?
Long have we traveled
Through the desert sands
And forests wild:
The way seems lone and drear,
With loved ones gone—
O, lead thy child!

It was not always so:
When life was young and fair,
And youth our hearts beguiled;
Then, guide us safely o'er
Life's awful sea,
Lead thou thy child!

And when, at last,
We reach the narrow sea
That lies between us
And the land to be,
We catch bright glintings
Of the land afar—
The blessed home
Where all our loved ones are
There, Father, lead thy child.

Evans Mills, N. Y. MRS. C. A. STRATTON.

A Chapter of Six Visions.

A Remarkable Series of Six Apocalyptic
Scenes Described by the Seer of Patmos.

BY REV. W. FRITH.

STANDING on the sea-girt
Isle, a captive in a land,
The great Apostle's vision was withdrawn from the scenes around him and winging its way into the very presence of God, saw the wonders that he describes in this book of Revelation. God shows him the future, that he may show it to his people. It is not history, it is not prophecy, but a series of emblematic, hieroglyphic pictures that pass before his gaze from which prophecy is deduced. The seer himself does not fully understand them, as they are disclosed to his view, one after another. He is lost in wonder, and only at occasional intervals, asks a question of his angel guide. Some of these visions are elaborate in their setting, and appear to have been long before his eyes. Others appear to have passed rapidly, as if of events quickly succeeding each other. In the fourteenth chapter of his book he gives six of them together, as if they were a series. Let us look at them in their order.

The first vision presents the 144,000 redeemed ones. The Mount Zion, we think, is used antitypically and imports the sphere of heavenly worship and glory, as contrasted with the earthly, which is its type. The Lamb is the central figure. This, without doubt, is the Lamb of God, the glorified Saviour. And this redeemed multitude are said to be with him—the place of dignity, destiny, and fellowship—for they are seen to be in glory—on Mount Zion, the centre of celestial worship. As to this number, we take the definite for the indefinite; and in the impress of his Father's name, may, perhaps, import that they are his redeemed property, bearing, in some sense, his image and superscription.

The voices of harpers heard from heaven, in the second verse, teach us that praise and psalmody are among the engagements of the celestial world, and that the harpers and songsters hold a distinguished position: for they are said to be "before the throne," the place of regal honor. But it is worthy of note that this song was peculiar; for none could learn this song but the 144,000. May this not be because only those who live in close communion with God can realize on earth those blessed experiences which can fit and qualify them to sing this song? a song only to be learned by those who "walk with God."

In verse four we learn that the character which they sustain in heaven is the result of the habits and character which they formed on earth, in the obedience of faith, devotedness of purpose, and consecration of work, while pilgrims and strangers in this world. But we must especially note why they are called the first fruits: there are, we conceive, at least two reasons:

Because they are taken out of the whole harvest field. The allusion, doubtless, is to the feast of the first fruits in the Hebrew Church. And by referring to Lev. 23: 10, we see that the sheaf of first fruits had to be cut out of the field of standing corn (and so represents the removal of living Christians, we think), while the remainder of the harvest corn is yet standing for some time longer in the field.

Because, apparently, they are taken up into glory before the residue are removed; as the sheaf of first fruits was taken up into the temple to be waved by the priest before the Lord, before the full harvest was reaped. This was the first of a series of six pictures thus grouped together like a cluster of gems in the field of glory spread before the seer's vision.

To be continued.

In His Hands.
(Continued from preceding page.)

He did not wish to talk. But Ned peisted. "Sandy."
"Well, what?"
"ed's face was pale and he looked haggard. Some shadow had fallen upon him, and his light-hearted manner was gone. "You know I had a talk with Janet. She said good things, Sandy. I was thinking of one that kinder settles a man's mind at a time like this. It does me good, maybe it will suit you."
"Well."
Janet said, we were all in God's hands. Things don't chance. God sees to everything. There ain't no use in forboding noworrying. We are safe in his hands. It's a good thing to think of when a man can't know one minute but what a ball will strike him the next minute."
"That's so," said Sandy. "We've got to our duty and leave the end to God."
Ned and Sandy were taking part in a dangerous movement as they talked. Their company had been assigned with others to duty suggested by Winthrop Melrose. A few days ago he had been engaged in a survey of the country where the armies were now in conflict. He had a very clear recollection of its conformation, and had refreshed his memory by that night walk which had led to his arrest. On his release he had suggested to his General a movement for outflanking the enemy, by which the Union troops could approach the enemy flank unseen. The General adopted the suggestion, and among the troops ordered to assist in executing it was the regiment in which Ned and Sandy were engaged.

The march proceeded in silence till the foot of a low hill was reached. Then there was a halt, while one man crawled up on his hands and knees and surveyed the field. He returned and gave his report. Then the men were quick formation, and with a hurrah! hurrah! the men swarmed up the hill and rushing down the declivity on the other side, were soon in hand-to-hand combat. It was a hard fight, and the height of the struggle Ned saw an officer fall. A few minutes before, he had caught a glimpse of Capt. Melrose at that point, and now a sad presentiment told him that it was the Captain who had been hit. His sole effort now was to reach that place. It was hard work, for he was in the thick of the fight, but as the men slowly retreated, followed by the Union troops, the way cleared and Ned found what he sought. He was not mistaken. At the foot of a clump of bushes a face white as the snow, the head at the body limp and huddled in a heap, all unconscious.

"Poor fellow!" murmured Ned savagely. "Now, hands off, every one of ye!" he cried as if addressing an attacking host. "I don't wish Sandy was here!" he cried more than once.

"Here they come!" he cried.

To men of the ambulance corps approached. They bore on a stretcher a wounded soldier.

"Get come quick as you can," shouted Ned, "and lend us a hand."
"We will," said one of the men, "but we must take this man now. There's a hostile just started in that house."
Ned's informant nodded with his head toward a farm-house that could just be seen in the rear of the battle ground.

"What of it?" asked Ned.

"Can't you get somebody to help you?" cried him far as you can, and we will wait for him soon."
"Unno!" muttered Ned. "I will get help I can."
The bearers of the stretcher hastened away, while Ned looked about him. Several other wounded wretches could be seen, but able-bodied men were on the spot. "It's dark and no help!" muttered the sentinel, faithfully guarding the unconscious heap at his feet.

"Allo, he's a-stirr'n!"
Melrose opened his eyes.

"I'll take a mouthful of that!" cried Ned, holding his canteen to the officer's lips. It was filled with strong coffee that had been made at the last camp-fire.

"Here, Cap'n! that helps your craft more than that point! Good for ye, good for ye! Does you good! Try some more! Give 'em a leetle more sail, all she'll bear." "Thank ye!" murmured Melrose. "I'll see I can't stand. We'll get away."

"Steer kerfully, Cap'n! Rocks ahead!" With Ned's help, Melrose tried to stand up. His strength was not equal to the effort. He did not fall, but he was compelled to sit down at the foot of the bush.

"Cap'n, another pull on this water-cask—I mean my canteen, for I git sea and land mixed up."

"My mind's mixed, too," said Melrose, "but it does not seem like sea and land. I don't quite know whether I belong to this land or the better one."

"You're in this world at present," said Ned, "and please God I'll try to keep you in it a little longer. I know somebody whom I think a good deal of who'd be mighty sorry if you were to quit yet."

"Whom do you mean, my friend? Why are you taking all this interest in me? You ought to be with your company; it is dangerous here. You had better leave me, and I'll take the chance of some of our hospital men coming up. You are risking your life for my sake. They won't fire at a wounded man like me, but a shot may take you off any minute. Now you go after your company."

"Shan't," said Ned bluntly, but kindly, "I'm going to get you safe into hospittle before I quit, if it is possible. That's my duty, and I'm going to do it for Jennet's sake. If a shot knocks me over, I can't help that. I'll take the risk. It's in the line of duty and that's what we're doing all the time. How'd I face Jennet when I get back, if I'd got to tell her I saw Capt. Melrose wounded on the ground and left him there to die or be took prisoner, or trod under foot as if he was of no account. No, sir; I know how she would look at me, and I couldn't stand it. I'm going to do my best to get you into hospittle whatever happens, for Jennet's sake."

"Say, my friend," said Melrose, "I know I'm weak and I suppose I'm a little light-headed, but I don't think I should understand you if I were well. Who is it you are talking about?"

"Jennet Morton," said Ned plainly.

"Oh, I know what you'll say. There's nothing between you and all that is buried and so on. But I know Jennet and though she wouldn't let on if her life depended on it, I know how she feels. I know the signs. I've seen her start when your name came up and I've seen her hand shake and her face flush. Oh, I understand. I don't know much about you, but any man who has ever loved Jennet and has had the sense to know her value is the right sort. He is not likely to go fooling around other girls. And, if Jennet cares for him, why that's a certificate. Things will all come out right yet. Never you fear. That's why I want to keep you in this world. It'll make Jennet happy, and between you and me I'd know but what that's worth dying to do. Hows'ever, if I knew I could buy happiness for her with my life, I'd pay it down. I think enough of her for that. Not as I'd ever have the impudence to run agen you."

"Give me your hand, my friend," said Melrose, holding out a very white thin hand, which Ned grasped. "You and I are brothers in one way I see. What you have told me does me more good than anything I ever expected."

As the two men clasped hands, a shot rang from the copse near which they were. Ned fell forward across the body of the wounded Captain and there was silence on the field.

(To be Continued.)

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

NOTICE
NAME TRUE LABEL
Shaw's Shade Rollers
AND GET THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

Architectural ...DRAWING
Architecture; Mechanical Drawing; Mechanical; Steam Engineers; Engineering (Local, State and Marine); Electric; Plumbing and Heating; Mining; Civil Engineering, etc. References Everywhere. Free Circular. State Subject you wish to Study.

TAUGHT BY MAIL
PRACTICE

To Carpenters,
Draft-men, Machinists, Steam Engineers, Electricians, Workers, Plumbers, Steam Fitters, Miners, Civil Engineers, and young men wishing to learn trades and professions.
The International Correspondence Schools
Box 541 Scranton, Pa.

A Painted Roof

is painted best with
DIXON'S Silica Graphite PAINT.
Best results at least cost—lasts 15 yrs. Tell you more about it if you'll write us.
Jos. Dixon Crucible Co., Jersey City, N. J.

A WHOLE LIBRARY OF BICYCLE INFORMATION

The Columbia Catalogue is not a mere price-list. It gives convincing reasons why all who love pleasure and comfort in bicycling should select

STANDARD OF THE WORLD

$100
to all alike

Your knowledge of bicycle making will grow by reading this interesting book.

Free from the Columbia agent or by mail from us for two 2-cent stamps.

POPE Mfg. Co., Hartford, Conn.

IN SUPPORT of well tried rules for health and comfort notice the straps of the Ferris Waist. The weight of heavy skirts, damaging to the strongest woman's constitution, is transferred from waist to shoulders leaving the body free and untrammelled.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE
CORSET WAIST
Is made to suit all tastes in high or low bust, long or short waist. Children's 25c to 50c. Misses' 50c to $1. Ladies' $1. to $2.
FOR SALE BY ALL RETAILERS

The Sharknits Half-Hose
Are so constructed as to Fit.
They contain NO BUNCHES,
They contain NO PERCEPTIBLE SEAMS,
They contain NOTHING to ANNOY and are made of
The BEST YARNS and in a Great Variety of Attractive Styles.

Look for the trade-mark on the toe.
Send for Descriptive Price-List.

SHAW STOCKING CO., Lowell, Mass.

Your Dinner
can be cooked all at one time on one burner of any kind of stove, if you use the
Peerless Steam Cooker
Prevents steam and odors. Whistle blows when cooker needs more water. Catalogue free. The agent's bonanza. Agents wanted.
PEERLESS COOKER CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

"Good wives grow fair in the light of their works," especially if they use

SAPOLIO

Waverley Bicycles

have grown more rapidly in popular favor than any others because they are sold at a fair price and

NEVER FAIL
We have always built thoroughly good bicycles of the finest material and with the most approved form of mechanical construction. They are light, graceful, strong, easy running, highly finished, fully guaranteed and the peer of any bicycle in the world

$85

ONE FAIR PRICE TO ALL

$85

INDIANA BICYCLE CO.
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
Eastern Wholesale Branch, 339 B'way, N. Y.
Catalogue free by mail

+AMOLIN+
the only
Odorless Antiseptic
Dress Shield
PAT. JAN. 26 1897

Destroys all Odor of Perspiration.
ALSO
Amolin Powder
(A new coal tar product.)
odorless, healthful, harmless and positive deodorant for Dress Shields, etc.
soothing, healing, antiseptic for scalding, chafing and all skin irritations of Infants or Adults.
Infinitely Superior to Talcum Preparations.

Shields and powder at all notion counters. All druggists keep the powder. Sample box of powder or pair of Shields mailed for 25c.

NEW YORK SHIELD CO., 166 Greene St., N. Y.

ONLY 10 CENTS.
Stamping (first, 91 patterns), outline designs, etc., conventional designs, etc. patterns for painting & embroidery - 4 to 11 high 2 alphabets, 1 a large forget-me-not pattern, and many others very desirable. All this and a 16-page story paper, with fashions and fancy work illustrated, sent for only 10c.
The Home, 141 Milk St Boston Mass.

SAPOLIO

Requests for Prayer.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on May 3, in accordance with the requests of many persons, among whom the following ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives. "Reader," Brooklyn, for a dear nephew, that he may soon be converted.—"Anxious Wife and Mother," Naples, Tex., for the conversion of her husband; also that three sons, one of whom has been six years away from home, may be brought to Christ; also that her daughters may be made humble, devoted Christians; also for the salvation of nephew and niece, who are sorely afflicted.—"Anxious Mother," who has passed through heavy trials, that her son, who has fallen under the power of the intoxicating cup and has lost a good position, and is neglecting wife and children, might be led to seek deliverance through Christ, and realize that so long as he trusts in his own strength he will never be reclaimed. His case is a very sorrowful one, and is presented in the hope that many prayers will go with those of the distressed mother to God who is able to save the lost.—E. M., New York, that her child might be brought to God in his youth, and that his evil temper may be eradicated.—"Reader," Kansas City, Mo., that a family of eight, once loving and united, but now estranged, might be united together in Christ, and the children become his loving and devoted followers.—S. G., New Orleans, La., for the conversion of a beloved daughter, who has fallen under evil influences and is being led astray by the wiles of an unprincipled woman.—E. J., Haigler, Neb., for the salvation of seven children who need God's grace to keep them from evil.—S. T., Ohio, that God would turn her husband's heart to himself, and that her four daughters and her son who is being led astray by evil associates might all be made God's children.—Mrs. —, Iowa, that a brother now over seventy-six years of age, who was once a professing Christian, might be restored and his backsliding forgiven and that he be made a true and sincere Christian.—W. W., Newport, R.I., for a father of a family who has renounced his drinking, dissipated ways and has reformed his life, that he may be converted and that his wife and children may feel that they are justified in returning to live with him.—"In His Name," Illinois, that God would touch the heart of an only son, and that he may find employment with honest men who will help him to do right; also for a daughter alone among strangers, that God would keep her and guide her aright.—"Anxious Wife and Mother," Wellington, Nev., that her aged husband, who is an unbeliever, might even at the eleventh hour give his heart to God; also for the conversion of a son and daughter.—"Anxious One," Ballston Centre, N. Y., that a dear child might go to Christ for salvation.

For the Conversion of Friends. "Christian," Milo, Me., that three friends who have been under conviction during the special meetings there, might be led to trust Christ fully for salvation, and might find peace and joy in him.—A. R. M., Sibley, Pa., that God would reveal himself to some loved ones who are in great spiritual darkness, also for the conversion of some pupils.—C., Eyata, Minn., for the salvation of one who is very dear, but who does not know Christ, nor the power of his salvation.

For the Restoration of Health. "Anxious Mother," Orange, Fla., that a dear little boy strangely and painfully afflicted might be healed of God and his strength restored.—J. C. H., Prairie, Ill., that God would grant recovery to a dear sister if it be in accordance with his will.—"One who believes," Huntingdon, Pa., that a severe affliction which precludes service for the Master might be removed.—J. A. McN., Houston, Tex., that his wife, who for nearly seven years has been an invalid and is now suffering

For Seasickness

Use Horstford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. J. FOURNESS-BRICE, of S. S. Tonic, says: "I have used Horstford's Acid Phosphate in many cases of seasickness, and in every case it has relieved the patient. If taken in time, it will, in a great many cases, prevent seasickness."

New Discovery for Kidneys and Bladder

We can give sufferers from kidney and bladder troubles a new and powerful remedy. It is called "The Golden Kidney Pills," and is sold by Dr. J. C. Horstford, New York. It is a new and powerful remedy, and will be found to be a great relief to you, and your name and address.

For more information, send your name and address to Dr. J. C. Horstford, New York. It is a new and powerful remedy, and will be found to be a great relief to you, and your name and address.

A new and powerful remedy for all kidney and bladder troubles. It is called "The Golden Kidney Pills," and is sold by Dr. J. C. Horstford, New York. It is a new and powerful remedy, and will be found to be a great relief to you, and your name and address.

from nervous prostration, may be raised up, and be restored to health; also that one of the Lord's servants may recover his sense of hearing.—"Believer," Calif. Creek, Ky., that a father and son may be restored to health.—E. J. M., Westernville, N. Y., that God recover one who is suffering from severe nervous debility, defective eyesight and other ills which are a hindrance to work.

For Special Blessings. R. L. Weil, La., for grace to bear patiently and cheerfully worldly trials, and to put complete and unwavering trust in God.—M. E. A., Kiowa, Kans., that a mind which has been clouded with doubts and evil suggestions and misgivings, may be kept clear and that the peace and love of God may reign in it to the exclusion of anger and malice and all evil.—"Anxious Mother," McZenia, O., that one who has long been anxious about his soul's salvation, may find Christ and be assured of acceptance.—L. E. C., Williamsburg, N. Y., who has recently lost a very dear friend, and feels that one-half of his being has been taken away, that God would give him strength to bear the loss, and, if it be the Lord's will, that he may be guided to some congenial soul similarly situated in whom he could find a friend in the Lord.

Not a Patent Medicine.

Paralysis,

partial or complete, locomotor-ataxia, epilepsy, all show a diseased or deficient condition of the brain, once considered incurable. We can show letters from hundreds of well-known physicians, telling of positive cures by

The Phosphorized Cerebro-Spinant,

Freligh's Tonic

The phosphorus is what does it. Absolutely pure. Positively harmless. Can be taken for any length of time.

Regular bottle $1.00, 100 doses. All druggists. Sample by mail, 25 cts. Concentrated, prompt, powerful. Descriptive pamphlet, formula, testimonials, etc., mailed to any address.

I. O. Woodruff & Co.,

Manufacturing Chemists,
106-108 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Formula on Every Bottle.

What is Your Weakness?

Is it Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Cystitis, Rheumatism, or any other diseases of the Kidney, Bladder, or Stomach? If so, send for

FREE PAMPHLET of the NEW and famous Stafford Mineral Springs

Water (near Vossburg, Miss.)

Astounding — Convincing Proof of Cures.

A letter from Rev. Dr. L. E. HALL, an eminent Baptist Divine: HATTIESBURG, MISS., Dec. 15, 1892. Gen. E. C. Walthall, U. S. Senator, Washington, D. C. DEAR GENERAL—I enclose you a pamphlet recently published by a company of gentlemen of New Orleans, who are developing the Stafford Mineral Springs Water. The wonderful efficacy of this water exceeds anything that I have ever known. If any of your friends are suffering from Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Cystitis, Dyspepsia, Nervous Prostration, Dropsy, etc., etc., kindly inform them of the water. If I had not seen with my own eyes the wonderful effect of it on parties who were on the very verge of the grave; if I had not seen their complete restoration to health after every available remedy had been exhausted and life had been utterly despaired of, I would not venture to hazard my reputation for integrity and truth on its virtue, as I have. Yours truly, L. E. HALL.

Stafford Mineral Springs & Hotel Co. Limited. Department A 2. New Orleans, La. NEW YORK OFFICE AND DEPOT: Department A 2. 256 & 257 Broadway. CATARRH. Send name for FREE package, sure cure, sent post paid to you. G. N. STODDARD, 223 Niagara street, Buffalo, N. Y.

ARMSTRONG & McKELVY Pittsburgh.
BEYMER-BAUMAN Pittsburgh.
DAVIS-CHAMBERS Pittsburgh.
FAHNESTOCK Pittsburgh.
ANCHOR } Cincinnati.
ECKSTEIN }
ATLANTIC }
BRADLEY } New York.
BROOKLYN }
JEWETT }
ULSTER }
UNION }
SOUTHERN } Chicago.
SHIPMAN }
COLLIER }
MISSOURI } St. Louis.
RED SEAL }
SOUTHERN }
JOHN T. LEWIS & BROS. CO Philadelphia.
MOXLEY Cleveland.
SALEM Salem, Mass.
CORNELL Buffalo.
KENTUCKY Louisville.

MONEY IS MADE by saving it, and there is no better way to save it than in preserving your building by having them well painted with Pure White Lead and Pure Linseed Oil. The cannot be well painted with anything else To be sure of getting examine the brand (see list genuine brands) For colors use NATIONAL LEAD CO.'s Pure White Lead Tinting Colors; they are the best and most permanent; prepared expressly for tinting Pure White Lead.

Pure White Lead

Pamphlet giving valuable information and card showing sample of colors free; also cards showing pictures of twelve houses of different designs painted in various styles or combinations of shades forward upon application to those intending to paint.

NATIONAL LEAD CO.,
1 Broadway, New York

THESE ARE NOT PATENT LEATHER BUT SIMPLY POLISHED WITH BROWN'S FRENCH DRESSING FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS

Sizes 32-34-36-38-40-42. Quantity of material required for a medium size 3 1-4 yards, 44 inch goods.

A PAPER PATTERN. Like this cut mailed for 10 cts. Fit guaranteed. Catalogue 500 designs 5c. Fashion Sheets FREE. THE NEW IDEA PATTERN CO., West Broadway and Leonard St., N. Y. City.

WEAK LUNGS and CONSUMPTION.

DR. ROBERT HUNTER, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, the oldest Lung specialist of this country—explains in popular lectures the germ nature of consumption; the condition of the throat and lungs that leads to it, and the wonderful success of its treatment by specific germicides discovered by him and applied directly to the lungs by inhalation.

Those having weak lungs or any lung complaint can obtain Dr. Hunter's books and full information, free of charge, by addressing him as above.

B&H LAMP
Always the Best
Our Little Book—mailed free—tells why, and will interest you in our line of Gas and Electric Fixtures, Fire-place Furniture, Wrought Iron and Brass Grille Work and Railing Art Metal Goods, B. & H. Heaters, Etc. Leading Dealer Sell Our Goods.
BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO., Meriden, Conn. NEW YORK, BOSTON, CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA

CUDAHY'S REX BRAND FOOD FLAVOR
For Soups, Gravies, Sauces, etc.
can always be depended upon to be the best when cooks use pure, rich Extract of Beef like Cudahy's Rex Brand
Write to The CUDAHY PHARMACEUTICAL CO., South Omaha, Neb., for free copy of "Hand Book" and enclose 4 cents in stamps for sample.

CRIPPLES
Men, Ladies and Childrens Hand- and Foot Power-TRICYCLES
SEND FOR CATALOGUE.
FAY MFG. CO., 80 Pine St. Elyria, O

KNICKERBOCKER
No more round shoulders. Shoulder Brace and Suspender combined. Easily adjusted. Worn with comfort. Sizes for men, women, boys and girls. Sold by druggists, appliance stores, general stores, etc. By mail $1.00 per pair ($1.50 silk). Send chest measure around body under arms. Circulars free. Address KNICKERBOCKER BRACE CO. EASTON PENN. U. S.

DIABETES
Also Gluten Dyspepsia Flour, Barley Cereal and Patent Biscuits and Pastry Flour. Unrivalled in America or Europe. Pamphlets and Baking Samples Free. Write Farwell & Rhine, W. L. Hartman, N. Y., U. S.

PRINTING OUTFIT
Sets any name in one minute, prints 600 lines a day. You can make money with it. A new type, also indelible ink. Type, plates and Toner. Best Linen Marker, worth $1.00. Mailed for 10c. stamps for postage on mail order of 1000 barons. Same outfit will be. Outfit for printing 20 lines 20c postage. Ingersoll & Bro., Dept. No. 111 66 Cortlandt St., New York.
FREE trial in your home. Cut this out and send to catalogue. Prices to suit you. Oxford Printing Machines awarded World's Fair Medal. ANY WILL DO. FULL SET OF ATTACHMENTS. OXFORD MUSE, CO., 240 Walnut Ave., CHICAGO.

Will the Sultan Let Them Go?

Armenians Now Looking to Emigration as their Only Hope—The Relief Work.

LETTERS TO THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from American missionaries in Asia Minor, received by the latest mails this week, indicate that a great change is taking place in the Armenian people to unheard-of oppression and barbarities, the Porte is at last disposed to relax its hold upon them, and Sulaiman Hamid, like Pharaoh of old in those of Israel, is willing to let them go. For some time past a sentiment in favor of wholesale immigration has been rapidly gaining in all the provinces, and we are assured on reliable authority that, contrary to all precedent, demands for passport to Armenians are being readily complied with.

This view of the situation is confirmed by letters from Aintab, Erzeroom, and Sinna — three extreme localities, which may be regarded as accurately showing the general feeling. The writer of the Aintab letter states that all the Armenians in that section are determined to get out of the country at all costs. From Smyrna comes this emphatic statement: "I have no hesitation in saying that the Armenians throughout all the interior provinces regard immigration as their only and most hope of deliverance." From Erzeroom, many hundreds of miles distant, comes this cry for assistance: "The only way we can see for the poor Armenians of these provinces is to get out of the country. Would that they had a Baron Himm, to transport them to America. Large numbers are leaving for Russia, with the hope that ultimately they may reach America or England."

L. Grace Kimball writes from Van (April 1), acknowledging receipt of the remittance of $2500 to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Fund work at that station. Shields:

If Armenians were not so utterly bewildered, they are afraid of any utterance of any kind, you can certainly receive some direct acknowledgment from them. For the present, however, you must be their mouth-piece and assure you not only their gratitude, but of the magnitude of relief you have afforded this poor, starving, persecuted people. I beg you also to accept my personal thanks for the confidence you have reposed in me. In the future I should find myself in need of a patron to help in some form of Christian benevolence. I warn you I should at once appeal to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

I led you of the return of the villagers to their homes under the strongest assurances of the Sultan's Commissioner. We sent over 500 of those who had wintered here, and were from villages considered the safest—being very near to the city. This year three of these villages have been sacked, and seven men killed and a number wounded. It is evident that the government wishes to carry out its threats, and thinks that things have gone far enough, and the chances are that it is not strong enough to do so.

The following contributions were received in the closing days of the Fund:

Preck $46,343.16	McHarry, Tena	1.00
Mr & Mrs	McLachey, Lavina	2.00
Mr & Mrs	McLellan, John	5.00
Mr & Mrs	McLeod, John	25.00
Mr & Mrs	McNab, John	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Magill, Mary	5.00
Mr & Mrs	Mandell, P O	5.00
Mr & Mrs	Mann, Jas	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Maresch, Chas	5.00
Mr & Mrs	Mason, F K	3.00
Mr & Mrs	Maynard, Mrs Wm U	5.00
Mr & Mrs	McHenry Harlow & family	5.00
Mr & Mrs	Mehring, Ada	5.00
Mr & Mrs	Mehring, Anna	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Mehring, Lavina	3.25
Mr & Mrs	Mehring, Upton	25.00
Mr & Mrs	Mendenhall, A M	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Mendenhall, Miss L	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Mendenhall, Miss RA	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Mendenhall, U	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Mendenhall, Mrs U	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Mendenhall, W R	1.00
Mr & Mrs	Messick, H Jas	5.00

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. It is really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Maryland, W. Va., writes that it cured him of his asthma, which has stood for three years. He writes: "I was standing, and Hon. L. G. Creely, Iowa, testifies that for three years he was sleep propped up, in a chair, being unable to lie down at night or day from Asthma. The Kola plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these three are of other cures are sworn to under oath by a notary public. So great is their faith in the wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., Broadway, New York, is sending out cure in cases of the Kola compound free to all suffering from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a large case by mail free. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it."

Millard, Mrs Emma	25	Friend, Geneva	2.00
Miller, Miss M A	1.00	" N H	1.00
Miller, Thos	1.00	" Park River	2.50
Miller, Wm	50	" Coventry	7.00
Mills, Mrs Caroline D	2.00	" St Remy	1.00
Mohr, W J	50	" E Millstone	50
Mohr, Erick	50	" Jefferson Valley	1.00
Moore, D C	2.00	" E Orange	5.00
Moore, Mrs & family	5.00	" Stevensville	1.00
Morgan, Miss T	1.00	" Hallows	5.00
Morris, G W	1.00	" Nashville	50
Moss, Matie	50	" Soudan	3.00
Mott, H H	1.00	" Marksboro	2.00
Mudge, Chas	2.50	" Parsons	1.00
Munn, John H, & Jno	2.00	" Haverhill	1.00
" Doollittle	2.00	" So Ohio	1.00
Murphy, M C	5.00	" Georgetown	50
Napp, Bert	25	" Somerworth	2.00
Napp, Miss Effie	50	" Germantown	25
Neher, E J & wife	5.00	" Spring Place	1.00
Neiger, A L	1.00	" Norristown	2.00
Nevius, Helen	1.00	" E Dixmont	4.00
Newman, Geo A	50	" Prospect Hill	1.00
Newton, Clarence R	50	" Chatsanoga	1.00
Nichols, John	1.00	" Hallows	5.00
Nixon, W E	25	" King's Point	2.00
Nollman, Chas	2.00	" Corinna	1.00
Norrell, A B	1.00	" Vail	1.00
Norris, Mrs R C	1.00	Friends, Ebbowoods	3.00
Nelson & Wyllie	10.00	" Canadice	10.00
Orcutt, Mr G S	1.00	" Fredonia	2.50
Orcutt, Mrs G S	1.00	" Danvers	3.00
Ortmann, Mrs H C	2.00	" H N Troy	1.00
Overson, Ed	50	" Woodhaven	2.00
Painter, Peter	5.00	" Lancaster	2.00
Parmley, Joseph	1.00	" Warren	1.00
Parsons, F A	1.00	" W Lebanon	1.00
Patterson, Mrs A P	2.50	" M C, Md	50
Patterson, Mr J H	5.00	" Goodings	75
Patterson, Mrs M E	2.00	" St Albans	50
Paxton, Anna	1.00	" Wawarsing	1.00
Peach, Dr	1.00	" Livermore Falls	50
Pearson, Mrs Ber ha	25	" Montg Co	11.00
Pedrick, Mrs Lizzie	50	" Beverly	1.00
Perkins, Mrs F O	1.00	" Hurdville	1.00
Perry, A	1.00	" Ga	10
Peterson, Mrs L	1.00	" Savannah	1.00
Peterson, Ellen J	1.00	" Earlville	50
Phillips, M	1.00	" Mt Airy	1.00
Phillips, Mrs M L	2.00	" H B G, Chicago	1.00
Potter, J D	5.00	In Jesus Name, Poul-	ney 5.00
Potts, Mrs I B	5.00	" Jericho	60
Powell, H C	1.00	" Greenland	1.00
Price, Mrs T A	1.00	" Lawrence	40
Prill, Chas	1.00	" Lawrence	2.00
Prince, Thos	1.00	In the name of Ch ist,
Prosser, Ida E	1.00	" Hackensack	1.00
Pyle, T E	40	" Reader, Spangle	1.00
Quirk, Miss M A	1.00	" Sunbury	1.00
Rea, Mrs S A	2.00	" Balto	1.00
Reed, Mrs J B	7.00	" Spencertown	50
Reed, Mrs O E	2.00	" Austenitz	50
Reed, Mrs O E	2.00	" No Sparta	4.00
For Christ's dear		" Brooksdale	50
sake, Oregon City	1.00	" Spring Creek	1.00
For the Dear Christ,		" Constant reader	32
W Berlin	1.00	" Sub'r, Meriden	50
For Jesus Sake, Wel-		" Turbotville	2.00
come	1.00	" Fortuna	50
For Jesus Sake, Clear		" Fairport	1.00
Creek	50	" Asbland	1.00
For Love's Sake, Clin-		" Milford	1.00
ton	4.00	" Brighton	1.00
For the Master, West		" Sinking Valley	1.00
Newbury	1.00	" Meriden	1.00
" Waterman	7	" Liberty	5.00
" Asheville	1.00	" N City	5.00
" York	1.00	" Athens	1.00
" Schenectady	10.00	Menonite S S	9.05
" Macon	5.00	Union U P Church,
" Peoria	10.00	Drennen	9.00
" Farmingdale	1.00	Total	$46,722.20
" Ansonia	2.00	and over 300 others to be
" Centreport	1.00	acknowledged next week.

THE MISSION OF THE

Steuben Sanitarium

At Hornellsville, N. Y.,

is to place at the disposal of the sufferer from disease —

The Best Surgical and Medical Skill,
The Best Remedial Appliances,

— INCLUDING —

ELECTRICITY, BATHS,
MASSAGE, ETC.

The best care; the best diet; the best atmosphere; the best conditions generally for his or her complete recovery.

Illustrated brochure on application to Superintendent.

Dr. J. E. WALKER, Hornellsville, N. Y.

FREE BIRTHDAY PINS.

Set with three fine stones; different designs for every month in the year. Send 10 Cents and write us what month your birthday comes in and we will send you this pin with our wholesale summer catalogue, (illustrated), free. AGENTS WANTED.

COURTIN JEWELRY COMPANY,
Attleboro, Mass.

FREE TO BALD HEADS.

We will mail on application, free information how to grow hair upon a bald head, stop falling hair and remove scalp diseases. Address, Altenheim Medical Dispensary, 127 East Third Street, Cincinnati, O.

DON'T BOIL

Whitman's INSTANTANEOUS Chocolate—doesn't need it. Made in a jiffy, with boiling water or milk. Sold everywhere.

Consumption

If you value your Life
Or the Lives of those nearest and dearest to you,
Read!

DEAR MR. CONGREVE.—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your Balsamic Elixir. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation. Yours heartily,

Spurgeon.

"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs and Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis; together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order for $1.00 bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

GEO. THOMAS CONGREVE, 367 Canal St., New York, and London, Eng.

This $75 "Maywood" Bicycle (complete) for $35 and Coupon

$40 is our Special Wholesale Price. Never before sold for less. To quickly introduce the "MAYWOOD" Bicycle, we have decided to make a Special Coupon Offer giving every reader of this paper a chance to get a first class wheel at the lowest price ever offered. On receipt of $35.00 and coupon, we will ship this Bicycle anywhere to anyone and guarantee safe delivery. Money refunded if not as represented after arrival and examination. We will ship C. O. D., for $35.00 and coupon, provided $5.00 cash is sent with order as a guarantee of good faith. The "Maywood" is the STRONGEST AND SIMPLEST BICYCLE ever made. Adapted to all kinds of roads and all kinds of riders; simple in construction, easily taken apart and put together again; has few parts; is of such wiry construction that its parts will hold together even in an accident; no hollow tubing to crush in at every contact; a frame that cannot be broken; so simple that its adjusting parts serve as its connecting parts; a one-piece crank in place of a dozen parts; always ready to give reliable and rapid transportation. FRAME—Improved Double Diamond, guaranteed for three years. Made of 3/4-inch cold rolled steel rods. Toughest and strongest metal for its weight known; joined together with aluminum bronze fittings in such a manner that it is impossible to break or any part to work loose. A marvel of novelty, simplicity and durability. Ball-bearings to every part, including wheels, crank-axle, steering-head and pedals. WHEELS: 28 inch; warranted wood rims; piano wire tangent spokes and brass nipples. HUBS: Large barrel pattern. TIRES: "Arlington" Hosiery, or Morgan & Wright Quick Repair. CUPS AND CONES: Best quality tool steel, carefully tempered and hardened. CHAINS: High grade; hardened centers; rear adjustment. REACH: 28 to 37 inches. GEAR: 64 or 72. FRONT-FORK: Indestructible. Fork crown made from gun-barrel steel. HANDLE-BAR: Reversible and adjustable, raised or dropped. SADDLE: P. & F. Gilliam. PEDALS: Rat-trap or rubber. FINISH: Black enamel; all bright parts nickel plated. Each bicycle complete with tool bag, pump, wrench and oiler. WEIGHT: According to size, 24 to 30 lbs.

If you prefer examination before paying, send for our large illustrated catalogue with testimonials explaining fully how we ship bicycles anywhere, to anyone at the lowest manufacturers' prices without asking one cent in advance. Over 27 different styles and kinds to select from. Boys' and girls' wheels, $10.75, $15.50 and $30.00. If you want a bicycle, now is the time to get one at a bargain direct from the manufacturers. It is a chance of a life-time and you cannot afford to let the opportunity pass. Order today, as you may be too late if you delay. This is the most remarkable offer ever made by a reliable firm. We refer to the First National Bank of Chicago, Dun or Bradstreet's Commercial Reports. The editor of this paper knows we are responsible and will do as we agree.

Address (in full) CASH BUYERS' UNION, 162 West Van Buren St., Dept. 18, Chicago, Ill.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERSEDES ELECTROLYSIS.

Recommended by all who have tested its merits.—Used by people of refinement. Whichever way with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out.

LOCAL AND GENERAL AGENTS MODENE MANUFACTURING CO., CINCINNATI, O., U. S. A. Manufacturers of the Highest Grade Hair Preparations. You can register your letter at any Post-office to insure its safe delivery.

We Offer $1,000 FOR FAILURE OR THE SLIGHTEST INJURY. EVERY BOTTLE GUARANTEED.

DEAFNESS

and Head Noises relieved by using Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums. New scientific invention; different from all other devices. The only safe, simple, comfortable and invisible Ear Drum in the world. Helps where medical skill fails. No wire or string attachment. Write for pamphlet.

WILSON EAR DRUM CO.,
Office: 1223 Trust Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
1123 Broadway, New York.

THE IMPROVED Elastic Truss

The Improved Elastic Truss is the only truss in existence that is worn with absolute comfort night & day, and it retains the figure under the heaviest exercise or severest strain, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure. Lady attendants & ladies. Examination free. Send for pamphlet.

IMPROVED ELASTIC TRUSS CO.,
822-824 Broadway, Cor. 12th Street, N. Y.

IVORY SOAP IT FLOATS

When you hear of "Spotless Linen" you can more than suspect that it was made "So cloudless, clear, and purely beautiful" by Ivory Soap.

THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO. CINTI.

Take a Combination Case of the LARKIN SOAPS
and a "Chautauqua"
Reclining Easy Chair or Desk

ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL.

CASE CONTAINS . . .

100 Bars Sweet Home Soap. 10 Bars White Woolen Soap.
9 Packages Boraxine. 18 Cakes Finest Toilet Soaps.
Perfumes, Cold Cream, Tooth-Powder, Shaving Soap.

If changes in contents desired, write.

The Soaps at retail would cost $10.00
Either Premium is worth . . . $10.00
Both if at retail . . . $20.00

From factory to family, Both $10.

AND ON THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL. IF SATISFIED, YOU REMIT $10.00;
IF DISAPPOINTED, HOLD GOODS SUBJECT TO OUR ORDER.

The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in The Christian Herald, Nov. 27th.

NOTE—The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. make our readers a wonderful offer. Not only do they give you a box of excellent laundry soap and toilet articles of great value, but they also give each purchaser a valuable premium, and we personally know they carry out what they promise.—The Independent, New York.
NOTE—We are glad to endorse the Larkin Co. of Buffalo. Personal trial of their goods has been made by members of the Herald staff. Our readers may take advantage of their offers without hesitation.—New York Herald.

PIANOS! ORGANS! FREE!

TEST TRIAL FOR 30 DAYS IN YOUR OWN HOME. NO MONEY REQUIRED
PIANOS-ORGANS FROM $25.00 UP
Including a Complete Musical Outfit. CASH or EASY PAYMENTS.
NEW SOUVENIR CATALOGUE
A work of art illustrated in 10 colors. Worth its weight in Gold. We pay charges on it and send it FREE, all you have to do is ask for it to-day please. Remember this is the old established house of CORNISH & CO., the only firm in the world selling exclusively from factory to family direct. A whole instrument at wholesale price. We save you from $25.00 to $250.00. Write at once to CORNISH & CO., Estab. 30 years, Washington, N. J.

Special Offers
Now Ready
ORGANS FROM $25.00

MENTON PAPER. $160.00 UP

DON'T BUY

A Carriage, Buggy, Phaeton or vehicle of any description without first getting our illustrated catalogue and price list (sent free). We sell only work manufactured in our factory.
GUARANTEED THOROUGHLY RELIABLE
At prices within reach of all. Capacity, 10,000 jobs per year.
THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE MFG. CO. Box 377 L Columbus, O.

CRITERION

J.B. COLT & CO.,
115-117 NASSAU ST.,
AND 59 FIFTH AVE.,
NEW YORK.
SEND FOR CATALOG.

STEREOPTICONS, MAGIC LANTERNS,
ELECTRIC
FOCUSING LAMPS, & C.

AGENCIES
20 BROADWAY, N.Y.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.
100 N. 3rd St., Phila.

